

THIS BOOK MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

REFERENCE ONLY

Mx. North Gallery.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

1 MAY 1991

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

(INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS
AND THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS)

OF CASES DECIDED IN

THE HOUSE OF LORDS

THE PRIVY COUNCIL

ALL DIVISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT

AND

COURTS OF SPECIAL JURISDICTION

1952
VOLUME 1

Consulting Editor :

Sir ROLAND BURROWS, Q.C.

Recorder of Cambridge.

Managing Editor of Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition.

Consulting Editor for Chancery Cases :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, ESQ., Q.C.

Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases :

CYRIL KING, ESQ., Q.C.

Bencher of the Middle Temple.

General Editor :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN, ESQ.

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[For list of Reporters see overleaf]

BUTTERWORTH & CO. (Publishers) LTD., 4, 5 & 6 BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.2.

REPORTERS.

House of Lords	J. D. PENNINGTON	Barrister-at-Law
Privy Council	J. D. PENNINGTON	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 1 ..	F. GUTTMAN	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 2 ..	J. D. PENNINGTON	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 3 ..	C. N. BEATTIE	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 4 ..	F. GUTTMAN	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Criminal Appeal	J. D. PENNINGTON	Barrister-at-Law
Chancery Division ..	R. D. H. OSBORNE	Barrister-at-Law
Queen's Bench Division	F. A. AMIES M. D. CHORLTON F. GUTTMAN GWYNEDD LEWIS CONRAD OLDHAM G. M. SMAILES	Barristers-at-Law
Revenue Cases	C. N. BEATTIE	Barrister-at-Law
Probate, Divorce and Admiralty	A. T. HOOLAHAN	Barrister-at-Law
Ecclesiastical Cases ..	A. T. HOOLAHAN	Barrister-at-Law

HOUSE OF LORDS

LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. The Rt. Hon. Lord Simonds

LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY

The Rt. Hon. Lord Porter	The Rt. Hon. Lord Radcliffe
The Rt. Hon. Lord Normand	The Rt. Hon. Lord Tucker
The Rt. Hon. Lord Oaksey	The Rt. Hon. Lord Asquith of
The Rt. Hon. Lord Morton of Henryton	Bishopstone
The Rt. Hon. Lord Reid of Drem	The Rt. Hon. Lord Cohen

COURT OF APPEAL

MASTER OF THE ROLLS. The Rt. Hon. Sir Raymond Evershed

The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Somervell	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Birkett
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Singleton	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Hodson
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Denning	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Morris
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Jenkins	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Romer

CHANCERY DIVISION

The Hon. Mr. Justice Vaisey	The Hon. Mr. Justice Harman
The Hon. Mr. Justice Roxburgh	The Hon. Mr. Justice Danckwerts
The Hon. Mr. Justice Wynn-Parry	The Hon. Mr. Justice Lloyd-Jacob
The Hon. Mr. Justice Upjohn

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND. The Rt. Hon. Lord Goddard

The Hon. Mr. Justice Hilbery	The Hon. Mr. Justice Finnemore
The Hon. Mr. Justice Oliver	The Hon. Mr. Justice Pritchard
The Hon. Mr. Justice Croom-Johnson	The Hon. Mr. Justice Streatfeild
The Hon. Mr. Justice Stable	The Hon. Mr. Justice Ormerod
The Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels	The Hon. Mr. Justice Slade
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hallett	The Hon. Mr. Justice Devlin
The Hon. Mr. Justice Pilcher	The Hon. Mr. Justice Parker
The Hon. Mr. Justice Lynskey	The Hon. Mr. Justice Gorman
The Hon. Mr. Justice Jones	The Hon. Mr. Justice Barry
The Hon. Mr. Justice Byrne	The Hon. Mr. Justice Donovan
The Hon. Mr. Justice Sellers	The Hon. Mr. Justice McNair
The Hon. Mr. Justice Pearson

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

PRESIDENT. The Rt. Hon. Lord Merriman

The Hon. Mr. Justice Wallington	The Hon. Mr. Justice Pearce
The Hon. Mr. Justice Barnard	The Hon. Mr. Justice Collingwood
The Hon. Mr. Justice Willmer	The Hon. Mr. Justice Karminski
The Hon. Mr. Justice Havers

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME I

	PAGE		PAGE
A.D.A.C., LTD., POCOCK v. [K.B.D.]	294	BRITISH THOMSON-HOUSTON CO., LTD., WATSON v. [Q.B.D.]	11
A.E.C., LTD., LATIMER v. [Q.B.D.]	443	BRIXTON PRISON (GOVERNOR), R. v. Ex parte	1
—, [C.A.]	1302	PAWEL SLIWA [C.A.]	1
ABBOTT v. SULLIVAN [C.A.]	226	BROMHAM, In the Estate of [PROB.]	1
ABSON v. ABSON [Div.]	370	BROWN v. BROWN [C.A.]	10
ABUBAKAR, TUNKU ARIS BENDAHARA, JOHORE (SULTAN of) v. [P.C.]	1261	BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. CALLINGHAM [C.A.]	110
AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES, LTD., Re [C.A.]	1188	BUCKLES, YOUNG v. [C.A.]	32
AINSCOUGH, MAHON v. [C.A.]	337	BURDEN, STROMDALE AND BALL, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	5
ALFORD v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD [H.L.]	754	BURGESS v. JARVIS [C.A.]	56
ALLIANCE BUILDING SOCIETY v. SHAVE [CH.D.]	1033	BURNELL v. DOWNHAM MARKET URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL [C.A.]	60
ALLIED IRONFOUNDERS, LTD. v. SMEDLEY (JOHN), LTD. [Q.B.D.]	1344	BURROWS, R. v. [C.C.A.]	5
AMEER RULER SADIQ MOHAMMAD ABBASI		BUTT (dec'd.), Re [C.A.]	16
BAHAWALPUR STATE, SAYCE v. [K.B.D.]	326	BYRNE, MCMASTER v. [P.C.]	136
ARAB BANK, LTD. v. ROSS [C.A.]	709	CALLINGHAM, BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. [C.A.]	116
ARMSTRONG v. STRAIN [C.A.]	139	CAMBRIDGE COFFEE ROOM ASSCOON., LTD., Re [CH.D.]	112
ASTORIA GARAGE (STREATHAM), LTD., READ v. [CH.D.]	922	CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES, LTD. v. R. [P.C.]	308
ASTOR'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	1067	CARMEL EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS, LTD., EAST INDIA TRADING CO., INC. v. [Q.B.D.]	1058
ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LEEDS CORPN. [CH.D.]	7	CARSLÖGIE, THE [H.L.]	20
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, STARKOWSKI v. [Div.]	495	CASBY v. CASBY [Div.]	453
B. AND B. VIENNESE FASHIONS v. LOSANE [C.A.]	909	CATT, GULLIVER v. [K.B.D.]	97
BAGLEY v. WINSOME (NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD., GARNISHEE) [C.A.]	637	—, [C.A.]	929
BAKER v. BAKER (P.D.A.)	297	CAULCUTT, LAWES v. [Q.B.D.]	748
BANK VOOR HANDEL EN SCHEEPVAART v. SLATFORD (SUED AS CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY) [K.B.D.]	314	CENTRAL LAND BOARD, THACKRAY v. [CH.D.]	1374
BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KOUPETSCHESKY), Re [CH.D.]	1269	CHELSTENHAM & HEREFORD BREWERIES, LTD., TAYLOR (FORMERLY RYAN) v. [C.A.]	1135
BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. v. BECK [C.A.]	549	CHILTERN STREET, ST. MARYLEBONE, Re 62-72 [C.A.]	1150
BARCLAYS BANK, LTD., TIGER v. [C.A.]	85	CHILTON v. CHILTON [Div.]	1322
BARKER v. BARKER [C.A.]	1128	CHIPPERFIELD v. CHIPPERFIELD [Div.]	1360
BARLOW, USHER v. [C.A.]	205	CHORLTON v. CHORLTON [Div.]	611
BATLEY (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	1036	CHRISTMAS v. GENERAL CLEANING CONTRACTORS, LTD. [C.A.]	39
BATTY (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	425	CHURCH COMMISSIONERS FOR ENGLAND, STACK v. [C.A.]	1352
BAYLIS v. BLACKWELL [K.B.D.]	74	CLARK (JAMES) (BRUSH MATERIALS), LTD., BRAUER & CO. (GREAT BRITAIN), LTD. v. [Q.B.D.]	981
BEAUCHAMP v. TURRELL [Q.B.D.]	719	CLARKE, UTOXETER URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. [CH.D.]	1318
BECK, BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. v. [C.A.]	549	COBB v. LANE [C.A.]	1199
BECKER v. CROSBY CORPN. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1350	COCKSEDGE & CO., LTD., HUTCHISON v. [SUFFOLK ASSIZES]	696
BELL, BLENKIN v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1258	COHEN (DAVIS) & SONS, LTD. v. HALL [C.A.]	157
BELL & NICOLSON, LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [CH.D.]	428	COLCLOUGH, WILBRAHAM v. [BIRMINGHAM WINTER ASSIZES]	979
BENDALL v. MCWHIRTER [C.A.]	1307	COLIN & SHIELDS v. WEDDEL (W.) & CO., LTD. [Q.B.D.]	1021
BENN v. KAMM & CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	56	COMPAGNIE D'ASSURANCES GENERALES L'HELVETIA OF ST. GALL, MACLEOD ROSS & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	331
—, [C.A.]	833	CONWAY v. WINGATE [C.A.]	782
BENNETT v. BENNETT [C.A.]	413	COPELAND v. GREENHALE [CH.D.]	809
BERTHELEMY v. NEALE [C.A.]	437	CORK v. KIRBY MACLEAN, LTD. [Q.B.D.]	1064
BIRKENHEAD CORPORATION'S RESOLUTIONS, Re [CH.D.]	262	COTTAGES, LTD. v. MINISTER OF FUEL AND POWER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	80
BLACKWELL, BAYLIS v. [K.B.D.]	74	COTCHMAN'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	439
BLANCHARD, R. v. [LEEDS ASSIZES]	114	Craven, Pegler v. [C.A.]	685
BLANKLEY v. GODLEY [NOTTINGHAM ASSIZES]	436	Craven, Tymans, Ltd. v. [C.A.]	613
BLENKIN v. BELL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1258	CROMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. REYNOLDS and GIBSON [H.L.]	888
BOON v. BOON [Div.]	760	CROSBY CORPN., BECKER v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1350
BOTTOMLEY v. HARRISON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	368	Cummings v. LONDON BULLION CO., LTD. [C.A.]	383
BOUVIERE (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	408	CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD., HAMER v. THE QUEEN MARY [ADM.]	787
BRADFORD, WHITEHILL v. [C.A.]	115	CURTIN v. CURTIN [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1348
BRADSHAW v. DAVEY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	350	CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY, VAMVAKAS v. [Q.B.D.]	629
BRAND (R. A.) & CO., LTD., Ex parte R. v. MANCHESTER LEGAL AID COMMITTEE [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	480	CUSTOMS AND EXCISE COMRS. v. POOLS FINANCE (1937), LTD. [C.A.]	775
BRAUER & CO. (GREAT BRITAIN), LTD. v. CLARK (JAMES) (BRUSH MATERIALS), LTD. [Q.B.D.]	981
BRIERLEY, WINDLE (JACK), LTD. v. [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	398
BRISFORD ENTERTAINMENTS, LTD., STRAND ELECTRIC AND ENGINEERING CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	796
BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. v. MCILROY (WILLIAM), LTD. [K.B.D.]	12
BRITISH CELENESE, LTD., PRIDE OF DERBY & DERBYSHIRE ANGLING ASSCOON., LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1326
BRITISH ELECTRICITY AUTHORITY, STREET v. [C.A.]	679

	PAGE		PAGE
DANUBIAN TRADING CO., LTD., TRANS TRUST S.P.R.L. v. [K.B.D.]	89	HAYLAND v. LONG. DUNN TRUST, LTD., THIRD PARTY [C.A.]	463
—, [C.A.]	970	HAYWARD v. MARSHALL [C.A.]	663
DAYEY, BRADSHAW v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	350	HILLINGDON ESTATES CO. v. STONEFIELD ESTATES, LTD. [CH.D.]	853
DAYEY ESTATES, LTD., THIRD PARTIES, GARRARD v. SOUTHEY & CO. [Q.B.D.]	597	HODGSON (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	769
DAVIES v. FORTIOR, LTD. [Q.B.D.]	1359	HOLLOWAY BROTHERS, LTD., IBBS v. [K.B.D.]	220
DEBTOR (No. 41 of 1951), Re A, Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. HUNTER (LIQUIDATOR OF MARVEL PAPER PRODUCTS, LTD.) [CH.D.]	107	HOLSWORTHY JUSTICES, R. v., Ex parte ED- WARDS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	411
DEBTOR (No. 360 of 1951), Re A, Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. [C.A.]	519	HOWELL (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	363
DICKINSON (JOHN) & CO. (BOLTON), LTD., JACKSON v. [C.A.]	104	HUNWICK v. ESSEX RIVERS CATCHMENT BOARD [CHELMSFORD ASSIZES]	765
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS, HARRIS v. [H.L.]	1044	HUTCHISON v. COCKEDGE & CO., LTD. [SUFFOLK ASSIZES]	696
DIXON v. TOMMIS [C.A.]	725	IBBS v. HOLLOWAY BROTHERS, LTD. [K.B.D.]	220
DOLFFUS MIEG ET COMPAGNIE S.A., UNITED STATES OF AMERICA v. [H.L.]	572	INDIA (GOVERNMENT OF) AND MUBARAK ALI AHMED, Re [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1060
DONALDSON v. MCNIVEN [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	1213	INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte PRACTICAL BANKING, LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1370
DOWELL O'MAHONEY & CO., LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [H.L.]	531	INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BELL & NICOLSON, LTD. [CH.D.]	428
DOWNHAM MARKET URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, BURNELL v. [C.A.]	601	INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. DOWDELL O'MAHONEY & CO., LTD. [H.L.]	531
DRINKWATER v. KIMBER [C.A.]	701	INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. GORDON [H.L.]	866
DUNDEE GENERAL HOSPITALS BOARD OF MANAGEMENT v. WALKER [H.L.]	896	INLAND REVENUE COMRS., JOHANNESBURGH CONSOLIDATED INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	646
DUNN TRUST, LTD., THIRD PARTY. HAVILAND v. LONG [C.A.]	463	INLAND REVENUE COMRS., NESTLE CO., LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1388
DUPLEX SETTLED INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD. v. WORTHING BOROUGH COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	545	INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. REYNOLDS AND GIBSON [H.L.]	883
DURHAM QUARTER SESSIONS, R. v. Ex parte VIRGO [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	466	INLAND REVENUE COMRS., TRINIDAD LEASE- HOLDS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	646
EAST INDIA TRADING CO., INC. v. CARMEL EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS, LTD. [Q.B.D.]	1053	INLAND REVENUE COMRS., UNION CORPN., LTD. v. [C.A.]	646
EDWARDS, Ex parte. R. v. HOLSWORTHY JUSTI- CES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	411	INLAND REVENUE COMRS., WILKIE v. [CH.D.]	92
ELECTRICAL YARNS, LTD., TOWNSEND (INSPEC- TOR OF TAXES) v. [CH.D.]	918	JACKSON v. DICKINSON (JOHN) & CO. (BOLTON), LTD. [C.A.]	104
ELLIOTT (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	145	JACKSON v. MAYFAIR WINDOW CLEANING CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	215
ENFIELD ROLLING MILLS (ALUMINIUM), LTD., WATTS v. [C.A.]	1013	JACKSON v. RODGER [C.A.]	16
ERRINGTON v. ERRINGTON [C.A.]	149	JAMIESON v. JAMIESON [H.L.]	875
ESSEX RIVERS CATCHMENT BOARD, HUNWICK v. [CHELMSFORD ASSIZES]	765	JARVIS, BURGESS v. [C.A.]	592
EVERETT v. RIBBANDS [C.A.]	823	JEFFERY v. JOHNSON [C.A.]	450
FEYEREISEL v. PARRY [C.A.]	728	JEFFREY v. JEFFREY [C.A.]	790
FINSBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL, SIDNEY TRADING CO., LTD. v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	460	JENION (dec'd.), Re [C.A.]	1228
FITZWILLIAM'S (EARL) WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT [H.L.]	509	JOHANNESBURG CONSOLIDATED INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	646
FOOT, KEMSLEY v. [H.L.]	501	JOHNSON, JEFFERY v. [C.A.]	450
FORTIOR, LTD., DAVIES v. [Q.B.D.]	1359	JOHNSON v. JOHNSON [C.A.]	250
FRIDENTAG, TIDEWAY INVESTMENT AND PRO- PERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1142	JOHORE (SULTAN OF) v. ABUBAKAR, TUNKU ARIS BENDAHARA [P.C.]	1261
GALLOWAY (dec'd.), Re [CHANCERY COURT, COUNTY PALATINE OF LANCASTER]	1379	JONES v. PROTHERO [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	434
GAPE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	827	JONES, TIDEWAY INVESTMENT AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1142
GARRARD v. SOUTHEY & CO. DAVEY ESTATES, LTD., THIRD PARTIES [Q.B.D.]	597	KAMM & CO., LTD., BENN v. [K.B.D.]	56
GENERAL CLEANING CONTRACTORS, LTD., CHRISTMAS v. [C.A.]	39	—, [C.A.]	833
GIBBS v. GIBBS [Div.]	942	KAY (JOHN), LTD. v. KAY [C.A.]	813
GILLET v. GILLET [C.A.]	1399	KEELE ESTATES, Re [CH.D.]	44
GODLEY, BLANKLEY v. [NOTTINGHAM ASSIZES]	436	KEINER v. KEINER [Q.B.D.]	643
GOLDER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. GREAT BOULDER PROPRIETARY GOLD MINES, LTD. [CH.D.]	360	KEMSLEY v. FOOT [H.L.]	501
GORDON, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [H.L.]	866	KENT JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte MACHIN [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1123
GRAY, REED v. [CH.D.]	241	KIMBER, DRINKWATER v. [C.A.]	701
GREAT BOULDER PROPRIETARY GOLD MINES, LTD., GOLDER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [CH.D.]	360	KIRBY MACLEAN, LTD., CORK v. [Q.B.D.]	1064
GREENHALF, COPELAND v. [CH.D.]	809	KNAPP'S SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	458
GULLIVER v. CATT [K.B.D.]	97	KUSHNER v. LAW SOCIETY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	404
—, [C.A.]	929	LAMBTON'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	162
GYPSUM MINES, LTD., STAPLEY v. [C.A.]	1092	LANE, COBB v. [C.A.]	1199
HALL, COHEN (DAVIS) & SONS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	157	LANE v. LANE [C.A.]	223
HALL, R. v. [C.C.A.]	66	LATIMER v. A.E.C., LTD. [Q.B.D.]	443
HAMER v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. THE QUEEN MARY [ADM.]	787	—, [C.A.]	1302
HAND, MIDLEY ESTATES, LTD. v. [C.A.]	1394	LAW SOCIETY, KUSHNER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	404
HANLY v. MINISTER OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT AND PLANNING [Q.B.D.]	1293	LAWES v. CAULCOTT [Q.B.D.]	748
HARRIS v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS [H.L.]	1044	LAWSON, R. v. [DURHAM ASSIZES]	804
HARRIS v. HARRIS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	401	LEE v. LEE [C.A.]	1299
HARRISON, BOTTOMLEY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	368	LEE v. SHOWMEN'S GUILD OF GREAT BRITAIN [C.A.]	1175
HARVEY (R. E.), BRAY & CO., UNITED MILLS AGENCIES, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	225	LEEDS CORPN., ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. [CH.D.]	7
HATTON (R. S.) (BRADFORD), LTD., TURNER (L. D.), LTD. v. [LEEDS ASSIZES]	1286	LEWIS (JOHN) & CO., LTD. v. TIMS [H.L.]	1203
		LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE [C.A.]	1248
		LONDON BULLION CO., LTD., CUMMINGS v. [C.A.]	383
		LONG, HAVILAND v. DUNN TRUST, LTD., THIRD PARTY [C.A.]	463
		LOSANE, B. AND B. VIENNESE FASHIONS v. [C.A.]	909
		LOVEGROVE, MOSES v. [C.A.]	1279
		LUCAS (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	102
		LYONS, Re [C.A.]	34
		MACHIN, Ex parte. R. v. KENT JUSTICES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1123
		MOILEY (WILLIAM), LTD., BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	12

	PAGE
McINTOSH (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MANCHESTER CORPN. [CH.D.]	763
MACLEOD ROSS & CO., LTD. v. COMPAGNIE D'ASSURANCES GENERALES L'HELVETIA OF ST. GALL [C.A.]	331
McMASTER v. BYRNE [P.C.]	1362
McNIVEN, DONALDSON v. [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	1213
McWHIRTER, BENDALL v. [C.A.]	1307
MAHON v. AINSWORTH [C.A.]	337
MANCHESTER CORPN., MCINTOSH (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [CH.D.]	763
MANCHESTER LEGAL AID COMMITTEE, R. v. Ex parte R. A. BRAND & Co., LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	480
MARJORIBANKS' INDENTURE, Re [C.A.]	191
MARLY LABORATORY, LTD., Re AN APPLICATION BY [C.A.]	1057
MARSDEN, MORRIS v. [Q.B.D.]	925
MARSHALL, HAYWARD v. [C.A.]	663
MARSHALL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), THOMAS v. [CH.D.]	173
MARTIN v. SCOTTISH TRANSPORT AND GENERAL WORKERS UNION [H.L.]	691
MASLIN v. MASLIN [DIV.]	477
MATALON v. MATALON [C.A.]	1025
MAYFAIR WINDOW CLEANING CO., LTD., JACKSON v. [K.B.D.]	215
MEEK v. POWELL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	347
MELDRUM'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	274
MIDGLEY ESTATES, LTD. v. HAND [C.A.]	1394
MIDLANDS ELECTRICITY BOARD, NATIONAL TRUST FOR PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR NATURAL BEAUTY v. [CH.D.]	298
MINISTER OF FUEL AND POWER, COTTAGES, LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	80
MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT, FITZWILLIAM'S (EARL) WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. [H.L.]	509
MINISTER OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT AND PLANNING, HANLEY v. [Q.B.D.]	1293
MINISTER OF MATERIALS v. STEEL BROTHERS & Co., LTD. [C.A.]	522
MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. STAFFORD CORPN. [CH.D.]	744
MINISTRY OF TRANSPORT, RODGERS v. [Q.B.D.]	634
MOODY, SHERWOOD (BARON) v. [K.B.D.]	389
MORAN, R. v. [C.C.A.]	803
MORRIS v. MARSDEN [Q.B.D.]	925
MORTON MACHINE CO., LTD., PARVIN v. [H.L.]	670
MOSES v. LOVEGROVE [C.A.]	1279
MOVE v. PERRATON [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	423
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, Re AN APPLICATION BY THE [CH.D.]	678
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, ALFORD v. [H.L.]	754
NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD., ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS OF ENGLAND v. [H.L.]	984
NATIONAL TRUST FOR PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR NATURAL BEAUTY v. MIDLANDS ELECTRICITY BOARD [CH.D.]	298
NEALE, BERTHELEMY v. [C.A.]	437
NESTLE CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	1388
NEWLAND, In the Estate of [PROB.]	841
NEWSOM v. ROBERTSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [CH.D.]	1290
NEWTON ABBOT CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. WILLIAMSON AND TREADGOLD, LTD. [CH.D.]	279
NORRIS v. SYNDI MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. [C.A.]	935
NORTH (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	609
NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte SHAW [C.A.]	122
ORTON, TIDEWAY INVESTMENT AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1142
OWEN, R. v. [C.C.A.]	1040
PADDINGTON STREET, ST. MARLYBONE, Re 42-48 [C.A.]	1150
PAGET PUBLICATIONS, LTD. v. WATSON [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1256
PAPA CHRISTOFOROS DEMETRIU, THRASYVOULOS IOANNOU v. [P.C.]	179
PARRY, FEYEREISEL v. [C.A.]	728
PARVIN v. MORTON MACHINE CO., LTD. [H.L.]	670
PAVIA & Co., S.P.A. v. THURMANN-NIELSEN [C.A.]	492
PEAT, SIMPSON v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	447
PEDLEY, QUALITY DAIRIES (YORK), LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	380
PEGLER v. CRAVEN [C.A.]	685
PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCN., WATSON v. [K.B.D.]	289
PERRATON, MOVE v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	423
PERRY v. PERRY [C.A.]	1076

	PAGE
PICKAVANCE, Ex parte . R. v. ST. HELENS AND AREA RENT TRIBUNAL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	455
PLANT (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	78
POCOCK v. A.D.A.C. LTD. [K.B.D.]	294
POOLEY v. POOLEY [DIV.]	395
POOLS FINANCE (1937), LTD., CUSTOMS AND EXCISE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	775
POWELL, MEEK v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	347
POZOZ'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [C.A.]	1107
PRACTICAL BANKING, LTD., Ex parte . R. v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1370
PRIDE OF DERBY & DERBYSHIRE ANGLING ASSOCN., LTD. v. BRITISH CELANESE, LTD. [CH.D.]	1326
PROTHERO, JONES v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	434
PROVED TIN & GENERAL INVESTMENTS, LTD., RAMA CORPN., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	554
QUALITY DAIRIES (YORK), LTD. v. PEDLEY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	380
QUEEN MARY, THE. HAMER v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. [ADM.]	787
R. v. BLANCHARD [LEEDS ASSIZES]	114
R. v. BRIXTON PRISON (GOVERNOR), Ex parte PAWEL SLIWA [C.A.]	187
R. v. BURROWS [C.C.A.]	58
R., CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES, LTD. v. [P.C.]	305
R. v. DURHAM QUARTER SESSIONS. Ex parte VIRGO [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	466
R. v. HALL [C.C.A.]	66
R. v. HOLSWORTHY JUSTICES, Ex parte EDWARDS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	411
R. v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL. Ex parte PRACTICAL BANKING, LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1370
R. v. KENT JUSTICES. Ex parte MACHIN [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1123
R. v. LAWSON [DURHAM ASSIZES]	804
R. v. MANCHESTER LEGAL AID COMMITTEE. Ex parte R. A. BRAND & Co., LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	480
R. v. MORAN [C.C.A.]	803
R. v. NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SHAW [C.A.]	122
R. v. OWEN [C.C.A.]	1040
R. v. R. (OTHERWISE F.) [DIV.]	1194
R. v. ST. HELENS AND AREA RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte PICKAVANCE [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	455
R. v. SUMMERS [C.C.A.]	1059
R. v. TIRONH MINES, LTD. [C.C.C.]	697
RAILWAY EXECUTIVE, LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. [C.A.]	1248
RAMA CORPN., LTD. v. PROVED TIN & GENERAL INVESTMENTS, LTD. [K.B.D.]	554
READ v. ASTORIA GARAGE (STREATHAM), LTD. [CH.D.]	922
REAVELL'S GARAGE, STEWART v. [Q.B.D.]	1191
REED v. GRAY [CH.D.]	241
RELANCE CAR FACILITIES, LTD. v. RODING MOTORS (A FIRM) [C.A.]	1355
REYNOLDS AND GIBSON, CROMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [H.L.]	888
REYNOLDS AND GIBSON, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [H.L.]	888
RIBBANDS, EVERETT v. [C.A.]	823
RICHARDS v. RICHARDS [C.A.]	1384
RICHMOND v. RICHMOND [DIV.]	838
ROBERTSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), NEWSOM v. [CH.D.]	1290
RODGER, JACKSON v. [C.A.]	16
RODGERS v. MINISTRY OF TRANSPORT [Q.B.D.]	634
RODING MOTORS (A FIRM), RELANCE CAR FACILITIES, LTD. v. [C.A.]	1355
ROSE (decd.), Re [C.A.]	1217
ROSS, ARAB BANK, LTD. v. [C.A.]	709
ROWLAND, WATES v.	470
ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS OF ENGLAND v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. [H.L.]	984
RUDD'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	254
ST. GEORGE'S, SOUTHALL, Re [CONSIS. COURT OF THE DIOCESE OF LONDON]	323
ST. HELENS AND AREA RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte PICKAVANCE [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	455
ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL, TARBOX v. [C.A.]	1306
SAYON v. AMEER RULER SADIQ MOHAMMAD ABBASI BAHAWALPUR STATE [K.B.D.]	326
SCOTTISH TRANSPORT AND GENERAL WORKERS UNION, MARTIN v. [H.L.]	691
SHARPE, WINCHESTER v. [C.A.]	663
SHAVE, ALLIANCE BUILDING SOCIETY v. [CH.D.]	1033
SHAW'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	49
SHELLEY v. SHELLEY [P.D.A.]	70
SHERWOOD (BARON) v. MOODY [K.B.D.]	389

	PAGE		PAGE
SHOTT v. SHOTT [C.A.]	735	TMS, LEWIS (JOHN) & Co., LTD. v. [H.L.]	1203
SHOWMEN'S GUILD OF GREAT BRITAIN, LEE v. [C.A.]	1175	TOMMIS, DIXON v. [C.A.]	725
SIDNEY TRADING CO., LTD. v. FINSBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	460	TOWNSEND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. ELECTRICAL YARNS, LTD. [CH.D.]	918
SIMPSON v. PEAT [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	447	TRANS TRUST S.P.R.L. v. DANUBIAN TRADING CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	89
SIMPSON, THOMPSTONE v. [NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE ASSIZES]	431	—, [C.A.]	970
SIMPSON'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	963	TRINIDAD LEASEHOLDS, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	646
SLATER v. SLATER [Div.]	1343	TRONOH MINES, LTD., R. v. [C.C.C.]	697
SLATFORD (SUED AS CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY), BANK VOOR HANDEL EN SCHEEP-VAART v. [K.B.D.]	314	TURNER (L. D.), LTD. v. HATTON (R. S.) (BRADFORD), LTD. [LEEDS ASSIZES]	1286
SLIWA (PAWEL), Ex parte , R. v. BRIXTON PRISON (GOVERNOR) [C.A.]	187	TURRELL, BEAUCHAMP v. [Q.B.D.]	719
SMEDLEY (JOHN), LTD., ALLIED IRONFOUNDERS, LTD. v. [Q.B.D.]	1344	TYMANS, LTD. v. CRAVEN [C.A.]	613
SMITH v. SMITH (W. H.) & SONS, LTD. [C.A.]	528	UNION CORPN., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	646
SMITH (A.) & SON (BOGNOR REGIS), LTD. v. WALKER [C.A.]	1008	UNITED MILLS AGENCIES, LTD. v. HARVEY (R. E.), BRAY & Co. [K.B.D.]	225
SNEYD'S SETTLEMENTS, Re [CH.D.]	44	UNITED STATES OF AMERICA v. DOLLEFUS MIEG ET COMPAGNIE S.A. [H.L.]	572
SNOWDEN, TEMPEST v. [C.A.]	1	USHER v. BARLOW [C.A.]	205
SOLICITOR (1951 M. No. 234), Re A [CH.D.]	133	UTTOXETER URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. CLARKE [CH.D.]	1318
SOUTHEY & CO., GARRARD v. DAVEY ESTATES, LTD., THIRD PARTIES [Q.B.D.]	597	VAMVAKAS v. CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY [Q.B.D.]	629
STACK v. CHURCH COMMISSIONERS FOR ENGLAND [C.A.]	1352	VIRGO, Ex parte , R. v. DURHAM QUARTER SESSIONS [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	466
STAFFORD CORPN., MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. [CH.D.]	744	W. v. W. [C.A.]	858
STAMP DUTIES COMR. OF NEW SOUTH WALES v. WAY [P.C.]	198	WALKER, DUNDEE GENERAL HOSPITALS BOARD OF MANAGEMENT v. [H.L.]	896
STAPLEY v. GYPSUM MINES, LTD. [C.A.]	1092	WALKER, SMITH (A.) & SON (BOGNOR REGIS), LTD. v. [C.A.]	1008
STARKOWSKI v. A.-G. [Div.]	495	WALLIS v. WALLIS (QUEEN'S PROCTOR SHOWING CAUSE) [Div.]	915
STEEL BROTHERS & CO., LTD., MINISTER OF MATERIALS, v. [C.A.]	522	WATES v. ROWLAND [C.A.]	470
STEVENS (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	674	WATSON v. BRITISH THOMSON-HOUSTON CO., LTD. [Q.B.D.]	1125
STEWART v. REAVELL'S GARAGE [Q.B.D.]	1191	WATSON, PAGET PUBLICATIONS, LTD. v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1256
STONEFIELD ESTATES, LTD., HILLINGDON ESTATES CO. v. [CH.D.]	853	WATSON v. PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCN. [K.B.D.]	289
STRAIN, ARMSTRONG v. [C.A.]	139	WATTS v. ENFIELD ROLLING MILLS (ALUMINIUM), LTD. [C.A.]	1013
STRAND ELECTRIC AND ENGINEERING CO., LTD. v. BRISFORD ENTERTAINMENTS, LTD. [C.A.]	796	WAY, STAMP DUTIES COMR. OF NEW SOUTH WALES v. [P.C.]	198
STREET v. BRITISH ELECTRICITY AUTHORITY [C.A.]	679	WEBB v. WEBB [Div.]	527
STRINGER v. STRINGER [Div.]	373	WEDDEL (W.) & CO., LTD., COLIN & SHIELDS v. [Q.B.D.]	1021
STROMDALE and BALL, LTD. v. BURDEN [CH.D.]	59	WELLWOOD, TIDEWAY INVESTMENTS AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1142
SULLIVAN, ABBOTT v. [C.A.]	226	WHITEHILL v. BRADFORD [C.A.]	115
SUMMERS, R. v. [C.C.A.]	1059	WILBRAHAM v. COLCLOUGH [BIRMINGHAM WINTER ASSIZES]	979
SYNDI MANUFACTURING CO., LTD., NORRIS v. [C.A.]	935	WILKIE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	92
TARBOX v. ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL [C.A.]	1306	WILLIAMSON AND TREADGOLD, LTD., NEWTON ABBOT CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	279
TAYLOR (FORMERLY RYAN) v. CHELTENHAM & HEREFORD BREWERIES, LTD. [C.A.]	1135	WILSON, In the Estate of [PROB.]	852
TEMPEST v. SNOWDEN [C.A.]	1	WINCHESTER v. SHARPE [C.A.]	663
THACKRAY v. CENTRAL LAND BOARD [CH.D.]	1374	WINDLE (JACK), LTD. v. BRIERLEY [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	398
THOMAS v. MARSHALL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [CH.D.]	173	WINGATE, CONWAY v. [C.A.]	782
THOMPSTONE v. SIMPSON [NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE ASSIZES]	431	WINSOME, BAGLEY v. (NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD., GARNISHEE) [C.A.]	637
THORNILEY, TIDEWAY INVESTMENT AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1142	WOOD'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	740
THRASYVOULOS IOANNOU v. PAPA CHRISTOFOROS DEMETRIOU [P.C.]	179	WORTHING BOROUGH COUNCIL, DUPLEX SETTLED INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	545
THURMANN-NIELSEN, PAVIA & Co., S.P.A. v. [C.A.]	492	WYATT (dec'd.), Re [PROB.]	1030
TIDEWAY INVESTMENTS AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. WELLWOOD. SAME v. ORTON. SAME v. JONES. SAME v. FRIEDENTAG. SAME v. THORNILEY [CH.D.]	1142	WYNN'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	341
TIGER v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. [C.A.]	85	YOUNG v. BUCKLES [C.A.]	864

INDEX

PAGE

ABATEMENT
Nuisance. See PUBLIC HEALTH.
ACCIDENT
Duty to report. See STREET TRAFFIC.
ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES
Assent— Benefit of restrictive covenant—No express assent to vesting—Assignment by beneficiary [NEWTON ABBOT CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. WILLIAMSON AND TREADGOLD, LTD.] ..	279
Deficiency— Relative priorities of jointure and portioners [Re KEELE ESTATES. Re SNEYD'S SETTLEMENTS. Re SNEYD (WALTER) WILL TRUSTS] ..	44
Jurisdiction of court to control administration— Trustee authorised to determine all questions—Determination to be conclusive and binding on all beneficiaries [Re WYNN'S WILL TRUSTS] ..	341
Order of application of assets— Variation of statutory order—Indication in will of intention to vary—Request of "residue of my deposit account... after all... debts... have been liquidated"—Separate gift of residuary estate—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), sched. I, Part II, para. 8 (a) [Re MELDRUM'S WILL TRUSTS] ..	274
ADULTERY
See DIVORCE.
ADVANCEMENT
See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.
AFFIDAVIT
Certiorari— Affidavit evidence to show record incomplete [R. v. NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SHAW] ..	122
Evidence by affidavit— Cross-examination of deponent—Service of notice—Deponent out of jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 38, r. 28 [Re LUCAS (dec'd.)] ..	102
AGENT
Estate Agent— Commission—Agreement to pay commission on purchaser signing legally binding contract—Contract signed, but purchaser unable to complete [MIDGLEY ESTATES v. HAND] ..	1894
Estate agent— Commission—Introduction of purchaser—Purchaser unable to raise purchase price—Agency terminated by agreement—Sale subsequently effected to same purchaser—Agent's right to commission [JACK WINDLE, LTD. v. BRIERLEY] ..	398
Liability of principal for misrepresentation of agent— Innocent misrepresentation by agent—Knowledge of true facts by principal—No fraud on part of principal [ARMSTRONG v. STRAIN] ..	139
See also SOLICITOR.
AGRICULTURAL CHARGE
See AGRICULTURE.
AGRICULTURAL HOLDING
See AGRICULTURE.
AGRICULTURE
Agricultural charge— Covenant to pay to bank "all moneys now or hereafter due"—Previous simple contract to repay overdraft—Merger of simple contract in charge [BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. v. BECK] ..	549
Agricultural holding— Claim by landlord for compensation for breach of covenant—Jurisdiction of court to entertain—Notice to quit given before Mar. 1, 1948—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 57 (3), s. 70 (1) (b), s. 99 [GULLIVER v. CATR] ..	97, 929
Notice to quit— Protection of sub-tenant—Tenant's counter-notice—Minister's consent to operation of notice to quit—Notice to quit by tenant to sub-tenant—Minister's consent to operation of tenant's notice to quit revoked on appeal—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 24 (1) [SHERWOOD (BARON) v. MOODY] ..	389
Resumption of occupation by landlord—Occupation by landlord for twelve months immediately before tenancy—Need of personal occupation—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 24 (3) (a) [LAWES v. CAULCUTT] ..	748
Service—Service on agent of tenant—Person responsible for farming in occupation with knowledge of tenant—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 92 (3) [WILBRAHAM v. COLCLOUGH] ..	979
AIR GUN
Negligent use by child— Liability of parent [DONALDSON v. MCNIVEN] ..	1213
AIR TRAFFIC
Damage caused by aircraft "taking off"— Aircraft about to "taxi" to "take off" position—Air Navigation Act, 1920 (c. 80), s. 9 (1) [BLANKLEY v. GODLEY] ..	436
AIRMAN
Exemption from civil process. See EXECUTION.
ALIEN
Deportation— Order that alien "shall be deported"—Validity—Aliens Order, 1920 (S.R. & O., 1920, No. 448), art. 12 (1) [R. v. GOVERNOR OF BRINGTON PRISON. Ex parte PAWEL SLIWA] ..	187
ANNUITY
Annuity free of income tax— Business loss by annuitant—Relief under Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 34 (2)—Repayment to annuitant of tax paid on annuity—Liability of annuitant to account to trustees [Re LYONS] ..	34
See also INCOME TAX.
ANSWER
Divorce petition, to. See DIVORCE (Pleading) APPEAL
Court of Appeal, to. See COURT OF APPEAL.

APPOINTMENT	PAGE
Power of. See POWER OF APPOINTMENT.
APPROBATION
Of unconsummated marriage— Adoption of child by spouses [W. v. W.]	858
ARBITRATION
Agricultural Holdings Acts, under. See AGRICULTURE.
ARCHITECT
Remuneration— Supervision of work to amount in excess of licence—Recovery of fees [YOUNG v. BUCKLES]	354
ARREST
Wrongful arrest. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT.
ASSAULT
Liability of person of unsound mind— Knowledge of nature and quality of act—No knowledge that act wrongful [MORRIS v. MARSDEN]	925
See also JUSTICES.
ASSISTED PERSON
See LEGAL AID.
BAILIFF
See COUNTY COURT.
BANK
Trustee— Right to withhold inter-departmental documents relating to estate from successors as trustees [TIGER v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD.]	85
BANKRUPTCY
Act of bankruptcy— Remaining out of England with intent to defeat or delay creditors—Standard of proof—Fraudulent preference—Payments to some creditors—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 1 (1) (c) (d) [Re A DEBTOR (No. 360 of 1951). Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD.]	519
Bankruptcy notice— Validity—Debt due to company in liquidation—Notice served and petition presented in name of liquidator and not in name of company in liquidation—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 147 (1) [Re A DEBTOR (No. 41 of 1951). Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. HUNTER (LIQUIDATOR OF MARVEL PAPER PRODUCTS, LTD.)]	107
Property available for distribution— Matrimonial home—Deserted wife of bankrupt in occupation—Right of trustee to possession [BENDALL v. MCWHIRTER]	1307
Solicitor— Clients' account—Bankruptcy of solicitor—Account not to vest in trustee in bankruptcy—Removal of solicitor from trusteeship of account—Appointment of new trustee [Re A SOLICITOR (1951) M.No. 234]	133
BASTARDY
Evidence— Corroboration—Proof by complainant of handwriting of letter alleged to be written by putative father—Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (c. 65), s. 4 [JEFFERY v. JOHNSON] ..	450
BILL OF EXCHANGE
Indorsement— Promissory note—Payable to "F. and F.N. Co."—Indorsement, by partner of firm, "F. and F.N."—Incomplete and irregular on its face—Plaintiffs suing as holders in due course—Entitled to succeed as holders for value—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 29 (1) [ARAB BANK, LTD. v. ROSS]	709
"BLACKMAIL"
See CRIMINAL LAW (Demanding money with menaces).
BRITISH NATIONALITY
Citizenship— Person born in Pakistan [SAYCE v. AMEER RULER SADIQ MOHAMMAD ABBASI BAHAWALPUR STATE]	326
BROKER
See INSURANCE.
BUGGERY
See CRIMINAL LAW.
BUILDING
Factory. See FACTORY.
Installation of plant in factory—"Working platform"— Steel platform of plant—"Construction, structural alteration, repair or maintenance of a building"—Installation of plant by contractors—Safe system of working—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1145), reg. 2 (1), reg. 22 [HUTCHISON v. COCKSEDDGE & Co., LTD.] ..	696
Safety regulations— Working platform—"Used for deposit of material"—"Material"—Painter's bucket of distemper and brush—Failure to provide guard-rails or toe-boards—Workman's fall through epileptic fit—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, S.I., 1948, No. 1145), reg. 22 (c), reg. 24 (1) [CORR v. KIRBY MACLEAN, LTD.]	1064
BUILDING CONTROL
Licence— Inclusion of architect's fees in amount authorised by licence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 56A (4) (6) [YOUNG v. BUCKLES]	354
Licensed and unlicensed work carried out—Allocation of payments to licensed work—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 502), reg. 56A (2) [A. SMITH & SON (BOGNOR REGIS), LTD. v. WALKER]	1008
BUILDING LAND
Compulsory purchase by Central Land Board— Power of board to acquire land for disposal for permitted development—Planning permission granted by local authority to prospective lessee—Owner unwilling to sell at existing use value [EARL FITZWILLIAM'S WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT]	509
BUSINESS
Covenant to protect. See SALE OF LAND (Restrictive covenant).
CANDLESTICKS
On church altar. See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.
CAPITAL PROFITS DIVIDEND
Capital or income— Notice by company of intention to declare dividend—Duty of trustees to sell cum dividend [Re RUDD'S WILL TRUSTS]	254
Profits tax—"Distribution" [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BELL & NICOLSON, LTD.]	423

CAR PARK
Construction on highway. See HIGHWAY (Trunk road).
CARELESS DRIVING
See STREET TRAFFIC.
CATCHMENT BOARD
Sea wall— Duty to repair —Footpath on wall—Collapse of wall—Injury to person on path [HUNWICK v. ESSEX RIVERS CATCHMENT BOARD]	765
CENTRAL LAND BOARD
Compulsory purchase powers. See COMPULSORY PURCHASE.
CERTIORARI
Legal aid—Decision of local committee granting certificate—Excess of jurisdiction [R. v. MANCHESTER LEGAL AID COMMITTEE. Ex parte R. A. BRAND & Co., LTD.]	480
Statutory tribunal—Error of law on face of decision—Form of record—Affidavit evidence—Admissibility—National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1475), reg. 12 [R. v. NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SHAW]	122
CHARGE
Agricultural. See AGRICULTURE.
CHARITY
Benefit to community—Promotion of surgery—Incidental benefits to individuals—Gift to Royal College of Surgeons [ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS OF ENGLAND v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD.]	984
Education—Gift for the teaching, promotion and encouragement of appreciation of the fine arts, and also of self-control, elocution, oratory, deportment, and the arts of personal contact, social intercourse, and public, private, professional and business life [Re SHAW'S WILL TRUSTS] ..	49
Perpetuities—Rule against. See PERPETUITIES.
CHILD
Custody. See DIVORCE.
CHOSE IN ACTION
Rights included in chose—Rights of party to apply for costs of action [Re AN APPLICATION BY MARLY LABORATORY, LTD.]	1057
CIRCULAR SAW
Duty to fence. See FACTORY (Dangerous machinery).
CLIENTS' ACCOUNT
See SOLICITOR.
CLINIC
Whether "hospital" under National Health Service Act, 1946. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (Hospital).
COAL
Nationalisation of industry—Valuation of transferred interests—Compensation unit of nine houses—Notional sale in open market—Notional sale of unit as a whole, not in separate lots—Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 13 (4) [COTTAGES, LTD. v. MINISTER OF FUEL AND POWER]	80
COAL MINE
See MINE (Coal mine).
COLLISION
At sea. See SHIPPING.
COMMISSION
Estate agent. See AGENT (Estate agent).
COMPANY
Capital profits dividend—Capital or income—Profit on sale of company's assets—Notice by company of intention to declare dividend—Duty of trustees to sell cum dividend [Re RUDD'S WILL TRUSTS]	254
Costs. See COSTS.
Director—Authority—Ostensible authority—Provision in article permitting delegation of powers to one director—Unauthorised agreement made by director—Ignorance of other party to agreement of provision in article—Company not estopped from setting up director's absence of authority [RAMA CORPN., LTD. v. PROVED TIN & GENERAL INVESTMENTS, LTD.]	554
Managing director—Removal—Notice required—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), Table "A", art. 68 [READ v. ASTORIA GARAGE (STREATHAM), LTD.]	922
Income tax—Residence—Dual residence—Residence in countries where sufficient part of "superior and directing authority" is found [UNION CORPN., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	646
Minutes—Memorandum or note of contract. See CONTRACT (Memorandum or note).
Registration—Restoration to register—Validation of acts done on its behalf before restoration—Application for new tenancy under Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 353 (6) [TYMANS, LTD. v. CRAVEN]	613
Share—Gift inter vivos—Date when completed [Re ROSE (dec'd.)]	1217
Shares held by trustees—Right of beneficiaries to inspect company's documents [Re BUTT (dec'd.)] ..	167
Stamp duty—Exemption—Capital duty—Increase of capital to acquire shares in Northern Ireland company—"Existing company"—Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 55 (1) (b) [NESTLE CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	1388
Winding-up—Contributory—Realisation of assets—Desirability of ascertaining views of contributories [Re AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES, LTD.]	1188
Foreign bank—Bank nationalised by foreign decree—Debt situated abroad—Claim by customer against English assets [Re BANQUE DE MOSCOU]	1269
Petition to wind-up dissolved company—Procedure—Effect of order to wind-up on title to company's property—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 352 (1), s. 353 (5) (6) [Re CAMBRIDGE COFFEE ROOM ASSOCIATION]	112
Services rendered—Claim for remuneration—Bank dissolved by Russian decree subsequently ordered to be wound-up by English court—Services rendered in relation to assets of bank after decree of dissolution, but before winding-up order [Re BANQUE DE MOSCOU]	1269

Coal industry assets—Transfer on nationalisation. See COAL.

Loss of employment owing to National Health Service Act, 1946. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE.

Loss of goodwill. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

COMPULSORY PURCHASE

Application to quash order—Expiration of time allowed for application—Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946 (c. 49), sched. I, para. 16. [UTTOXETER URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. CLARKE]

1818

Building land—Compulsory purchase by Central Land Board—Power of board to acquire land for disposal for permitted development—“Development for which permission has been granted”—Valid permission not obtained before purchase and confirmation orders—Owner unwilling to sell at existing use value—Acceptance of offer from prospective purchaser at owner's price—Function of board to prevent sales for more than existing use value—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 43 (1) (2) [HANLEY v. MINISTER OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT AND PLANNING]

1293

Housing Acts, under. See HOUSING.

Power of board to acquire land for disposal for permitted development—Planning permission granted by local authority to prospective lessee—Owner unwilling to sell at existing value—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 43 (1) [EARL FITZWILLIAM'S WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT]

509

Land subject to contract of sale—Frustration of contract [HILLINGDON ESTATES CO. v. STONEFIELD ESTATES, LTD.]

853

CONDITION

In will. See WILL.

CONDONATION

See DIVORCE.

CONDUCT CONDUCTING

See DIVORCE.

CONFIRMED CREDIT

See SALE OF GOODS (Payment).

CONFLICT OF LAWS

Contract—Law applicable—Deed executed by husband in United States—Husband resident in England—No assets in United States—Payments under deed in dollars—American law applied by deed to investment of funds—Rights of inspection exercisable in America [KEINER v. KEINER]

648

Impleading foreign sovereign States—Gold bars belonging to French company seized by Germans and carried off to Germany—Discovery by allied forces—In possession and under control of governments of United States, United Kingdom and France—Deposit with Bank of England for purpose of applying agreement by allied governments on restitution of monetary gold—Action by French company against bank claiming delivery of bars or damages for conversion [UNITED STATES OF AMERICA v. DOLLFUS MIEG ET COMPAGNIE S.A.]

572

Impleading independent sovereign—Immunity from legal process—Waiver—Submission to jurisdiction by institution of proceedings—Continuation of proceedings by way of appeal—Japanese Judgments and Civil Proceedings Ordinance, 1946 (Singapore Ordinance No. 37 of 1946), s. 3 [SULTAN OF JOHORE v. ABUBAKAR, TUNKU ARIS BENDAHARA]

1261

Legitimation—Validity of Austrian marriage—Retrospective effect of Austrian legislation—Determination according to Austrian law—Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 1 (1)—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 17 (1) [STARKOWSKI v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL (STARKOWSKI CITED)]

495

CONNIVANCE

See DIVORCE.

CONTINUOUS RECORD

Document being or forming part of—Admissibility in evidence. See DOCUMENT.

CONTRACT

Conflict of laws—Law applicable to contract. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Frustration—Sale of land—Compulsory purchase order relating to property made before completion [HILLINGDON ESTATES CO. v. STONEFIELD ESTATES, LTD.]

853

Implied term—Duty to supply good work and materials—Purpose made known to contractor—Reliance on skill and judgment—Execution by sub-contractor contemplated—Contractor's advice on materials and sub-contractor accepted—Contractor's liability for unsuitable materials and sub-contractor's faulty work [STEWART v. REAVELL'S GARAGE]

1191

Memorandum or note—Contract of service—“Consultant”—Need to specify nature of duties—Minute of company directors' meeting—Statute of Frauds, 1877 (c. 3), s. 4 [POCOCK v. A.D.A.C., LTD.]

294

Merger—Simple contract to repay bank overdraft—Subsequent agricultural charge under seal—Covenant to pay “all moneys now or hereafter due”—Agricultural Credits Act, 1928 (c. 43), s. 5 (1) [BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. v. BECK]

549

Negligence—Contracting out of liability. See NEGLIGENCE.

Non-performance—Excuse—“Force majeure”—Delivery of goods “subject to export licence”—Minimum export prices fixed in excess of contract prices [BRAUER & CO. (GREAT BRITAIN), LTD. v. JAMES CLARK (BRUSH MATERIALS), LTD.]

981

Sale of goods. See SALE OF GOODS.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

See NEGLIGENCE.

CONTROL OF GOODS

Sale of controlled goods—Omission to furnish invoice containing specified particulars—Contract rendered illegal—Utility Mark and Apparel and Textiles (General Provisions) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 2642), art. 10 (1) [B. AND B. VIENNESE FASHIONS v. LOSANE] ..

909

CONVERSION

Fraudulent. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Artistic work—Wall plaque produced before Jan. 1, 1950—Capable of registration under Patents and Designs Act, 1907—Exclusion from registration after Jan. 1, 1950—Copyright Act, 1911 (c. 46), s. 22 (1)—Registered Designs Act, 1949 (c. 88), s. 1 (4)—Designs Rules, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 2368), r. 26 (2) [USHER v. BARLOW] .. 205

CORPORATE TRUSTEE

See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

CORROBORATION

Bastardy cases. See BASTARDY (Evidence).

COSTS

Assisted person's right to. See LEGAL AID.

County court—Action commenced in High Court—Less than £100 recovered—Whether action founded on contract or on tort—Chandelier damaged by negligence of person contracting to clean it—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 47 (1) (b) (i) (ii) [JACKSON v. MAYFAIR WINDOW CLEANING CO., LTD.] .. 215

County court scale—Action brought in High Court. See Tort, post.

Deduction from profits for assessment to income tax. See INCOME TAX (Deduction against profits—Sum paid to settle action for fraud in conduct of trade.

Legal aid. See LEGAL AID.

Mines and minerals. See MINE (Coal mine).

Negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

Party not represented by counsel—Company—Jurisdiction to award costs. [Re AN APPLICATION BY MARLY LABORATORY, LTD.] .. 1057

Payment by solicitor personally—Error in estimate of length of trial—Transfer of case from short non-jury list to long non-jury list—R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 29 (6) [IBBS v. HOLLOWAY BROTHERS, LTD.] .. 220

Security for costs—Plaintiff an assisted person. See LEGAL AID.

Taxation—Money recovered by widow—Re-marriage after writ issued—R.S.C., Ord. 22 r. 14 (11) [THE QUEEN MARY] .. 787

Solicitor and client—Standard to be adopted—Solicitor-plaintiff consulting London agents—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29) [REED v. GRAY] .. 241

Tort—High Court action—Damages of £90—Chattel damaged by negligence of person under contract to clean it [JACKSON v. MAYFAIR WINDOW CLEANING CO., LTD.] .. 215

Witness fee—Married woman not gainfully employed [REED v. GRAY] .. 241

COUNTY COURT

Bailiff—Assaulted while serving summons—Jurisdiction of justice's to hear information [R. v. HOLSWORTHY JUSTICES. Ex parte EDWARDS] .. 411

Costs—Action brought in High Court. See COSTS (Tort).

COURT OF APPEAL

Fresh evidence—Variation of settlement—New circumstances arising after hearing in court below [JEFFREY v. JEFFREY] .. 790

Hearing in camera [Re AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES, LTD.] .. 1188

COVENANT

In restraint of trade. See TRADE.

Restrictive. See REAL PROPERTY; SALE OF LAND.

CREDIT

Confirmed credit. See SALE OF GOODS (Payment).

CRIMINAL LAW

Buggery—Offence alleged against wife—Competence of wife as witness [R. v. BLANCHARD] .. 114

Demanding money with menaces—Attempt—Larceny Act, 1916 (c. 50), s. 30 [R. v. MORAN] .. 803

Evidence—Criminal acts other than those charged—Proof of intention—Rebuttal of possible defence—Discretion of judge to exclude [HARRIS v. DIRECTOR OF PROSECUTIONS] .. 1044

Wife—Competence as witness—Husband charged with committing buggery with wife [R. v. BLANCHARD] .. 114

Witness called after summing-up at request of jury after retirement [R. v. OWEN] .. 1040

Fraudulent conversion—Indictment—Charge of conversion of general balance [R. v. LAWSON] .. 804

Gross indecency—Boy told to commit indecent act—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 11 [R. v. BURROWS] .. 58

Obscene publication—Cover of publication obscene—Destruction of whole publication—Obscene Publications Act, 1957 (c. 83), s. 1 [PAGET PUBLICATIONS, LTD. v. WATSON] .. 1256

Separate trials—Eight counts alleging gross indecency with three men—Evidence on all counts admissible on each count [R. v. HALL] .. 66

Trial—Direction to jury—Use of expression "reasonable doubt" [R. v. SUMMERS] .. 1059

CROWN

Servants—Custodian of Enemy Property—Liability for income tax—Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 7 (1)—Income Tax Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 42, sched. IV, Part I [BANK VOOR HANDEL EN SCHEEPVAART v. SLATFORD (sued as Custodian of Enemy Property)] .. 314

CRUELTY

See DIVORCE.

CURRENCY

See MONEY.

CURRENCY CONTROL

Debt in foreign currency—Rate of exchange—Creditor resident abroad outside scheduled territories—Date when debt became payable—Date when Treasury permission obtained—Exchange Control Act, 1947 (c. 14), s. 33 (1) [CUMMINGS v. LONDON BULLION CO., LTD.] .. 383

CUSTODY

Child. See DIVORCE; JUSTICES.

DAMAGE

Apportionment—Inquiry as to damages—Apportionment of damage by court prior to inquiry [PRIDE OF DERBY AND DERBYSHIRE ANGLING ASSOCIATION, LTD. v. BRITISH CELANESE, LTD.] .. 1326

	PAGE
DAMAGES
Deduction from profits for assessment to income tax. see INCOME TAX (Deduction against profits).
Detinue. See DETINUE.
Measure of damages— Foreseeable consequences of breach of contract—Sale of goods—Loss of profit—Payment by confirmed letter of credit—Failure to procure confirmation—Knowledge of parties that subject-matter of sale unobtainable by sellers without confirmation [TRANS TRUST S.P.R.L. v. DANUBIAN TRADING CO., LTD.]	89, 970
DANGEROUS MACHINERY
See FACTORY.
DEATH DUTY
See ESTATE DUTY.
DEBT
Testator, of. See ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES (Order of application of assets).
DEED
Execution— Sealing [STROMDALE AND BALL, LTD. v. BURDEN]	59
Unenforceability— Public policy—Divorce—Undertaking by wife petitioner not to take proceedings for maintenance [BENNETT v. BENNETT]	413
DELIVERY ORDER
Ship's. See SHIPPING.
DEMANDING WITH MENACES
See CRIMINAL LAW.
DEPORTATION
Alien, of. See ALIEN.
DE-RATING
See RATES.
DESERTION
See DIVORCE; JUSTICES.
DESIGN
Validity of Designs Rules, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 2368), r. 26 (2) [USHER v. BARLOW]	205
DETINUE
Damages— Measure—Detention of goods normally let out on hire—Owner entitled to reasonable hiring charge [STRAND ELECTRIC AND ENGINEERING CO., LTD. v. BRISFORD ENTERTAINMENTS, LTD.]	796
DEVELOPMENT
Land. See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.
DIRECTION
To jury. See CRIMINAL LAW (Trial).
DIRECTOR
See COMPANY.
DISCOVERY
Production of documents— Shares held by trustees—Right of beneficiaries to inspect company's documents [Re BUTT (decd.)]	167
DIVORCE
Adultery— Intercourse by unmarried woman with married man [ABSON v. ABSON]	370
Condonation— Sexual intercourse—No intention by petitioner to effect reconciliation [MASLIN v. MASLIN]	477
Conduct— conducting—Desertion by other spouse—Desertion by husband—Adultery of wife [RICHARDS v. RICHARDS]	1384
Connivance— Adultery by husband—No condonation by wife—Continuance of connivance—"Natural consequence" of wife's connivance—Husband's desertion and wilful neglect to maintain [RICHMOND v. RICHMOND]	838
Costs— Intervention—Legal aid certificate granted for suit [WALLIS v. WALLIS (Queen's Proctor showing cause)]	915
Cruelty— Mental cruelty—Evidence—Effect of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, on principles to be applied—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 176 (c), as substituted by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 2 [JAMIESON v. JAMIESON]	875
Custody— "Child the marriage of whose parents is the subject of the proceedings"—Child born during marriage, but not child of husband—Husband registered as father—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 26 (1) [WEBB v. WEBB]	527
Desertion— Condonation—Termination of desertion—Sexual intercourse during the statutory period—No intention by deserting wife to return—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 1 (1) (b) [PERRY v. PERRY]	1076
Parties living under same roof—House owned by both spouses—No allowance paid to wife—Provision of meals separately—Occupation of separate rooms—Other parts of house shared [BAKER v. BAKER]	297
Termination—Adultery by deserted spouse—Effect on deserting spouse's mind. [RICHARDS v. RICHARDS]	1384
Offer by deserting husband to resume cohabitation—Wife asked to return to look after children [CASEY v. CASEY]	453
Evidence— Undefended suit—Undesirability of leading questions [PERRY v. PERRY]	1076
Intervention— Costs—Legal aid certificate granted for suit [WALLIS v. WALLIS (Queen's Proctor showing cause)]	915
Judicial separation— Jurisdiction—Residence—Respondent husband temporarily in England for business and for proceedings to obtain custody of child—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 32 [MATALON v. MATALON]	1025
Maintenance— Application by wife for order and application by husband to vary settlement—Desirability of both applications being heard together [JEFFREY v. JEFFREY]	790

	PAGE
DIVORCE—continued.
Maintenance— continued.
Application for leave to apply for order eighteen years after decree absolute—No default in payment and deed not impeached—Discretion of court—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1) [SHOTT v. SHOTT]	735
Maintenance of wife—Secured maintenance—General charge on all husband's assets—Covenant under seal to pay annual sum—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 19 (2) [BARKER v. BARKER]	1128
Undertaking in deed by wife petitioner not to take proceedings for maintenance—Covenant by husband to pay annuity for wife—Unenforceability of wife's undertaking—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 19 (2) (3) [BENNETT v. BENNETT]	413
Petition—Petition within three years of marriage—Leave to present—Jurisdiction of commissioner to grant—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 70 (5)—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 2 (1) [JOHNSON v. JOHNSON]	250
Pleading—Answer—Sufficiency of bare denial—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1940), r. 17 (1) [SLATER v. SLATER]	1343
Petition—Allegation of condoned adultery—Relevancy—Amendment at a late stage [GILLETT v. GILLETT]	1399
DOCTOR
See MEDICAL PRACTITIONER.
DOCUMENT
Admissibility in evidence—Continuous record—Public document—Report of inquiry by surveyor of land registry as to rights of irrigation—Filing with documents of similar nature—Inquiry not held with object that report be made public—Report not at all times open to public inspection—Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) (i) (b) [THRASYVOULOS IOANNOU v. PAPA CHRISTOFOROS DEMETRIOU]	179
Inspection. See DISCOVERY (Production of documents).
Lost. See LOST DOCUMENT.
DOMESTIC TRIBUNAL
Excess of jurisdiction—Absence of malice—Liability for damage caused by ultra vires acts [ABBOTT v. SULLIVAN]	226
Review of decision—Jurisdiction of court [LEE v. SHOWMEN'S GUILD OF GREAT BRITAIN]	1175
EASEMENT
Use of land—Right to store vehicles for repair and repaired vehicles awaiting collection—Benefit to claimant's business [COPELAND v. GREENHALF]	809
ECCLESIASTICAL LAW
Ornaments—Candlesticks—Legality of six candlesticks on the Holy Table or retable—Exercise of discretion in grant of faculty [Re ST. GEORGE'S, SOUTHALL]	323
EDUCATION
Educational charity. See CHARITY.
ELECTIONS
Expenses—Advertisement "promoting...election of...candidate"—Criticism of political party in general—Representation of the People Act, 1949 (c. 68), s. 63 (1) (b) [R. v. TRONOH MINES, LTD.]	697
ELECTRICITY SUPPLY
Powers of undertakers—Erection of poles to carry supply line—Necessity for consent of local authority—Persons entitled to be heard—"Parties concerned"—Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899 (c. 19), schedule, s. 10 (b)—Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919 (c. 100), s. 21, s. 22 (1)—Electricity Act, 1947 (c. 54), s. 57 (2), sched. IV, Part III [NATIONAL TRUST v. MIDLANDS ELECTRICITY BOARD]	298
Right to abstract water from river—Water returned in heated condition—Injury to fish—Rights of Earl of Harrington "as riparian owner...upon the river"—Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power Act, 1929 (c. lxxxvii), s. 37 (1), s. 37 (2). [PRIDE OF DERBY AND DERBYSHIRE ANGLING ASSOCIATION, LTD. v. BRITISH CELANESE, LTD.]	1326
EMERGENCY LEGISLATION
Control of goods. See CONTROL OF GOODS.
ENEMY
Non-enemy alien resident in enemy territory—Residence not voluntary—Vesting of property by Board of Trade in Custodian of Enemy Property—Right to confer power of sale—Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 2 (1) (b), s. 7 (1) (b) (c) (d) [VAMVAKAS v. CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY]	629
ENEMY PROPERTY
See TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.
ENFORCEMENT NOTICE
See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.
ESTATE AGENT
Commission. See AGENT (Estate agent).
Unqualified person preparing legal instrument. See SOLICITOR.
ESTATE DUTY
Gift inter vivos—Date when made—Shares—Transfer before April 10, 1943—Transfer registered after that date [Re ROSE (dec'd.)]	1217
Incidence—Portions charged by will on property reversionary at date of testator's death—Duty exigible on death of life tenant—Liability of portioners to be charged with duty—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 14 (1) [Re KEELE ESTATES. Re SNEYD'S SETTLEMENTS. Re SNEYD (WALTER) WILL TRUSTS]	44
Real property settled by will—Direction that "all devises...shall be enjoyed free of death duties"—Payment out of property in respect of which charged [Re HOWELL (dec'd.)]	363
Passing—Cesser of wife's annuity on husband's death—Wife becoming entitled to whole income of trust fund—Allowance for annuity—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 5 (3) (as amended by Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 48) [Re LAMBTON'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT]	162
"Trust to take effect after death"—Reservation of benefit—New South Wales Stamp Duties Act, 1920-1949, s. 102 (2) (a) (c) (d) [COMR. OF STAMP DUTIES OF NEW SOUTH WALES v. WAY]	198

Company— Unauthorised agreement made by director—Ignorance of other party to agreement of provision in article—Company not estopped from setting up director's absence of authority [RAMA CORPN., LTD. v. PROVED TIN & GENERAL INVESTMENTS, LTD.]	554
Husband and wife— Maintenance of wife—Maintenance order discharged by continued residence of wife with husband—Subsequent application by husband for variation of order [HARRIS v. HARRIS]	401
EVIDENCE
Affidavit, by. See AFFIDAVIT.
Document. See DOCUMENT.
Legitimacy. See LEGITIMACY.
Res gestae— Fatal accident to workman—Statement by workman immediately after accident [DAVIES v. FORTIOR, LTD.]	1359
EXCESS PROFITS TAX
Deductions against profits— Deduction of Eire taxes against English profits—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Rules Applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, Part I, para. 5, para. 8—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 30 (1) (2) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. DOWDELL O'MAHONEY & Co., LTD.]	531
EXCESSIVE SPEED
See STREET TRAFFIC.
EXCHANGE
Rate. See MONEY.
EXCHANGE CONTROL
See CURRENCY CONTROL.
EXECUTION
Exemption from civil process— Airman—Debt exceeding £30—Costs of legal proceedings—Air Force Act, s. 144 (1) [BOON v. BOON]	760
Garnishee order— Debt "owing or accruing"—Deposit account—Money repayable only on production of deposit book—R.S.C., Ord. 45, r. 1—County Court Rules, Ord. 27, r. 1 [BAGLEY v. WINSOME (NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. (Garnishee))]	637
EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR
Discretion— Legacy conditional on being satisfied that hospital not taken over by State—Test of validity of executors' decision [DUNDEE GENERAL HOSPITALS BOARD OF MANAGEMENT v. WALKER]	896
Gift— Incomplete gift—Perfecting gift—Appointment of intended donee as executrix of intending donor—Intention to make future gift—Object of gift lent by intending donor to third person [JACKSON v. RODGER]	16
EXTRADITION
Fugitive offender— Fugitive from Republic of India—Operation of Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (c. 69), s. 5—Preservation of existing provisions of Imperial statutes—India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949 (c. 92), s. 1 (1) [Re GOVERNMENT OF INDIA AND MUBARAK ALI AHMED]	1060
Political offence—Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (c. 69), s. 10 [Re GOVERNMENT OF INDIA AND MUBARAK ALI AHMED]	1060
EYES
Protection of— Factory—"Cutting off of bolts from boilers or other plant"—"Plant" [WATTS v. ENFIELD ROLLING MILLS (ALUMINIUM), LTD.]	1013
FACTORY
Dangerous machinery— Circular saw—Riving knife—Arc of "radius not exceeding radius of largest saw used on bench"—Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 1196), reg. 10 (b) (i) [WATSON v. BRITISH THOMSON-HOUSTON CO., LTD.]	1125
Duty to fence—Horizontal milling machine—"Stop" at side of platform—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 14 (1)—Horizontal Milling Machines Regulations, 1928 (S.R. & O., 1928, No. 548), reg. 3 [BENN v. KAMM & Co., LTD.]	56, 833
Machinery manufactured in factory—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 14 (1), s. 16, s. 20 [PARVIN v. MORTON MACHINE CO., LTD.]	670
Safety guard not kept in position by workman—"Provision" of guard—Workman not instructed to use guard—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 16, s. 119 (1) [NORRIS v. SYNDI MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.]	935
Floor— Maintenance—Floor slippery from flood water and oil—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 25 (1) [LATIMER v. A.E.C., LTD.]	443
Openings in floors— Space for hoist at edge of floor—Safe means of access—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 25 (3), s. 26 (1) [STREET v. BRITISH ELECTRICITY AUTHORITY]	679
Place— "within the close, curtilage, or precincts forming a factory"—Part of factory building—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 151 (6) [STREET v. BRITISH ELECTRICITY AUTHORITY]	679
Protection of eyes— Obligation to provide goggles—"Cutting off of bolts from boilers or other plant"—"Plant"—Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 654), schedule [WATTS v. ENFIELD ROLLING MILLS (ALUMINIUM), LTD.]	1013
Statutory duty— Breach—Onus of proof—Injury to workman [WATTS v. ENFIELD ROLLING MILLS, LTD.]	1013
FAIR COMMENT
See LIBEL.
FALSE IMPRISONMENT
Arrest without warrant— Person arrested to be taken before justice or police officer as soon as reasonably possible—Right of detention for purpose of investigation [JOHN LEWIS & CO., LTD. v. TIMS]	1203
FATAL ACCIDENT
See NEGLIGENCE.
FEES
Of architect. See ARCHITECT.
FENCING
Dangerous machinery. See FACTORY.
FLAT
Conversion of house into. See HOUSING.

FLOOR

Factory, in—Maintenance. See FACTORY.

FOOD AND DRUGS

Milk—Unclean container—Milk bottled and delivered to customer by agent of distributor—Liability of distributor—Milk and Dairies Regulations, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 1588), reg. 26 (1) [QUALITY DAIRIES (YORK), LTD. v. PEDLEY] 380

FORCE MAJEURE

See CONTRACT (Non-performance).

FOREIGN CURRENCY

See CURRENCY CONTROL.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT

Enforcement—Rate of Exchange. See MONEY.

FOREIGN SOVEREIGN

Impleading. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

FOREIGN STATE

Impleading. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Ruler of—Liability to be sued—Partial dependency on another Power—State of fact to be taken as at date of decision by court—Conclusiveness of certificate of government department—British Nationality Act, 1948 (c. 56), s. 1 (1) (3) [SAYCE v. AMEER RULER SADIQ MOHAMMAD ABBASI BAHAWALPUR STATE] 326

FORFEITURE

Clause in will. See WILL.

Statutory tenancy. See RENT RESTRICTION.

FRAUD

Misrepresentation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

FRAUDULENT CONVERSION

See CRIMINAL LAW.

FRUSTRATION

See CONTRACT; SALE OF LAND.

FUGITIVE OFFENDER

See EXTRADITION.

GAMING

Pool betting—Duty—Collector appointed by promoters of pool to receive stake money from bettor and pay it to promoters less commission—Duty chargeable on gross amount of stake money received by collector—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1947 (c. 9), s. 6 (1) [CUSTOMS AND EXCISE COMRS. v. POOLS FINANCE (1937) LTD.] 775

GARNISHEE ORDER

See EXECUTION.

GIFT

Incomplete gift—Perfecting gift—Appointment of intended donee as executrix of intending donor—Object of gift lent by intending donor to third person [JACKSON v. RODGER] 16

Inter vivos—Liability to estate duty. See ESTATE DUTY.

GOGGLES

Provision of, for protection of eyes. See EYES.

GOODS

Control of. See CONTROL OF GOODS.

Sale of. See SALE OF GOODS.

GOODWILL

Compensation for loss. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Medical practice—Under National Health Service. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE.

GROSS INDECENCY

See CRIMINAL LAW.

GUARD

Dangerous machinery, to. See FACTORY.

HIGHWAY

Trunk road—Improvement—Widening and levelling—Construction of “lay-by”—Powers of Ministry of Transport—Right of driver to park vehicle on grass verge of highway—Highway Act, 1864 (c. 101), s. 48 [RODGERS v. MINISTRY OF TRANSPORT] 634

HIRE-PURCHASE

Recourse agreement—In event of termination of hiring agreement dealer to re-purchase hired car from finance company—“Termination of agreement”—Finance company requesting dealer to re-possess car, but not informing hirer that hiring was terminated [RELIANCE CAR FACILITIES, LTD. v. RADING MOTORS (a firm)] 1355

HOSPITAL

Medical school—Gift to. See WILL (Gift to medical school).

National Health Service, under. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE.

HOUSING

Accommodation of working classes—Recovery of possession—Notice to quit—“Notice proceeding from a local authority”—Signature by “clerk or lawful deputy”—Signature by housing manager—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), s. 164 (2) [BECKER v. CROSBY CORPN.] 1350

Compulsory purchase order—Acquisition of dwelling-house as part of estate—Duty of acquiring authority to convert house for housing purposes—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), s. 79 (4) [UTOXETER URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. CLARKE] 1318

Conversion of house into several tenements—“Conversion”—Structural alteration—Single-room “flats”—Effect on character of neighbourhood—Discretion of county court—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), s. 163 [STACK v. CHURCH COMRS. FOR ENGLAND] 1352

Limitation of rent—Flat constructed under building licence—Breach of condition of licence—Obligation to repair placed on tenant—Consideration other than the payment of a money rent—Expression in terms of money—Modification of rent—Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945 (c. 20), s. 7 (1), (4), (7) (b) [DUPLEX SETTLED INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD. v. WORTHING BOROUGH COUNCIL] 545

HUSBAND AND WIFE

Action by husband and wife for injury to wife—Husband's contributory negligence—Liability to contribute towards damages awarded to wife—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) [DRINKWATER v. KIMBER] 701

Legal proceedings—Right of husband to sue wife for tort committed before marriage—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 12—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 1 [BAYLIS v. BLACKWELL] 74

Maintenance—Discharge of order—Continued residence with husband for three months—Husband obtaining subsequent variation of order and remission of arrears under it—Husband not estopped from showing order had ceased to have effect—Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 1 (4) [HARRIS v. HARRIS] 401

Possession of property—Husband restrained from selling matrimonial home—Right of wife to reside in house until provision of alternative accommodation—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17 [LEE v. LEE] 1299

Matrimonial home—Deserted wife of bankrupt in occupation—Right of trustee to possession [BENDALL v. McWHIRTER] 1307

IMPLEADING

Foreign sovereign or state. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

IMPROVEMENT

Covenant in lease against making. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

IN CAMERA

Court of Appeal—Power to sit in camera [Re AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES, LTD.] 1188

INCAPACITY

Sexual incapacity. See NULLITY.

INCOME TAX

Annuity—Annuity free of income tax—Reliefs and allowances—Liability to account to trustees—Annuitant's husband assessed in respect of his and annuitant's joint incomes—Husband, and not annuitant, entitled to claim for relief [Re BATLEY (decd.)] 1036

Custodian of Enemy Property—Liability for tax on proceeds of property vested in him—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Miscellaneous Rules, r. 1 [BANK VOOR HANDEL EN SCHEEPVAART v. SLATFORD (sued as CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY)] 314

Deduction against profits—Sum paid to settle action for fraud in conduct of trade—Fraud not proved or admitted—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (a) [GOLDER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. GREAT BOULDER PROPRIETARY GOLD MINES, LTD.] 860

Travelling expenses—Barrister travelling between chambers and home where he did part of his professional work—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (a) [NEWSOM v. ROBERTSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] 1290

Wear and tear—Balancing charge—Assessment—No effect on amount of profit chargeable—Income Tax Act, 1945 (c. 32), s. 55 (3) [TOWNSEND v. ELECTRICAL YARNS, LTD.] 918

Foreign possessions—"Income arising from possessions out of United Kingdom"—Debts incurred in London and discharged in Ceylon—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Case V, r. 2 [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. GORDON] 866

Industrial building allowances—"Cutting"—Excavation of land by water undertaking—Income Tax Act, 1945 (c. 32), s. 14 (1) (b), and proviso [MCINTOSH v. MANCHESTER CORPN.] 763

Profits—Book debt—Profit on collection—Book debt included among assets acquired from predecessor—Purchase of debt at discount—Election to be treated as having set up new trade—Ultimate payment of debt in full—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Case I [CROMPTON v. REYNOLDS AND GIBSON] 888

Reliefs—Business loss by annuitant—Annuity free of income tax—Repayment to annuitant of tax paid on annuity—Liability of annuitant to account to trustees [Re LYONS] 84

Residence—Dual residence—Company—Residence in countries where sufficient part of "superior and directing authority" is found [UNION CORPN., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.; JOHANNESBURG CONSOLIDATED INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. SAME; TRINIDAD LEASEHOLDS, LTD. v. SAME] 646

Residence in United Kingdom—Six months in year of assessment—Calendar, not lunar, months—Fractions of days to be counted in hours—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Miscellaneous Rules, r. 2 [WILKIE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 92

Settlement—Transfer of assets—Deposits to child's account in Post Office Savings Bank and purchases of Defence Bonds for child—Absolute gift—Aggregation of settlements to determine whether income exceeds £5 a year—Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 21 (1), s. 21 (4), s. 21 (9) (b) [THOMAS v. MARSHALL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] 173

INDECENCY

Gross. See CRIMINAL LAW.

INDEMNITY

Lease—Clause providing indemnity for lessor against claims by third parties for damage to property leased or goods therein—Need of express language to provide indemnity in case of negligence—Evidence of other ground of damage [CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES, LTD. v. REGEN] 305

INDICTABLE OFFENCE

Triable summarily. See JUSTICES.

INDUSTRIAL BUILDING

Income tax allowance on construction expenditure. See INCOME TAX.

INDUSTRIAL HEREDITAMENT

See RATES (De-rating).

INFANT

Maintenance—Order of High Court—Enforcement—Summons by wife as infant's next friend—Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1940), r. 64 (1) [SHELLEY v. SHELLEY] 70

	PAGE
INJUNCTION
Local authority unable to comply with injunction without financial grant [PRIDE O DERBY AND DERBYSHIRE ANGLING ASSOCIATION, LTD. v. BRITISH CELANESE, LTD.]	1326
INN
Damage to guest's property— Extension of hospitium — Permission by innkeeper to park motor coach at petrol station—Petrol station owned by inn, but separated by public road—Garages and car park at inn [WATSON v. PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCN., LTD.]	289
INSPECTION
Of document. See DISCOVERY (Production of documents).
INSURANCE
Broker's duty— Delay in forwarding cover note to insured—No cover obtained against loss sustained before cover note received [UNITED MILLS AGENCIES, LTD. v. R. E. HARVEY, BRAY & Co.]	225
Open policy— Certificate of insurance issued in respect of particular goods—Condition in policy that claim be referred to local tribunal of commerce—Jurisdiction of English court [MACLEOD ROSS & Co., LTD. v. COMPAGNIE D'ASSURANCES GENERALES L'HELVETIA OF ST. GALL]	331
INTERIM DEVELOPMENT
See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.
INVITEE
See NEGLIGENCE.
JOINTURE
Deficiency in estate— Jointress and portioners to rank pari passu [Re KEELE ESTATES. Re SNEYD'S SETTLEMENTS]	44
JUDGMENT
Foreign. See FOREIGN JUDGMENT.
Negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.
Order— Correction—Accidental slip or omission of any party to proceedings—Right to apply for correction—R.S.C., Ord. 28, r. 11 [Re AN APPLICATION BY MARLY LABORATORY, LTD.]	1057
JUDICIAL SEPARATION
See DIVORCE.
JURY
Direction to. See CRIMINAL LAW (Trial).
JUSTICES
Common assault— "Execution under the process of any court of justice"—Service of summons by county court bailiff—Jurisdiction of justices—Procedure to be followed—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 46—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 31 [R. v. HOLSWORTHY JUSTICES. Ex parte EDWARDS]	411
Custody— Revocation of order in wife's favour—No misconduct by wife—Welfare of child paramount consideration—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 1 [CHIPPERFIELD v. CHIPPERFIELD]	1360
Desertion— Evidence—Notes of proceedings on earlier summons [LANE v. LANE]	223
Husband and wife— Maintenance—Discharge of order—Adultery—Sexual intercourse by former wife after dissolution of marriage—No evidence that alleged intercourse occurred with married man—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 7 [CHORLTON v. CHORLTON]	611
Discharge of order—Adultery by wife after dissolution of marriage—Preferable jurisdiction of Divorce Court—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 7 [ABSON v. ABSON]	370
Enforcement of order—Wife "residing with" husband—Husband living in wife's house—Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 1 (4) [CURTIN v. CURTIN]	1348
Petition for divorce—Application for alimony pendente lite [POOLEY v. POOLEY]	395
Wilful neglect to maintain—Consensual separation—No agreement as to maintenance—Liability of husband [STRINGER v. STRINGER]	373
Wilful neglect to maintain—Reasonable and honest belief of wife's adultery [CHILTON v. CHILTON]	1322
Indictable offence triable summarily— Need to explain to defendant liability to be committed to quarter sessions for sentence—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 17 (2) and Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 24 (2), as amended by Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), sched. IX [R. v. KENT JUSTICES. Ex parte MACHIN]	1123
Jurisdiction— Claim of right—Letting house in excess of permitted rent—Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945 (c. 20), s. 7 (1) [DUPLEX SETTLED INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD. v. WORTHING BOROUGH COUNCIL]	545
LAND
Building. See BUILDING LAND.
Recovery of possession— Limitation of action. See LIMITATION OF ACTION. Sale. See SALE OF LAND.
LANDLORD AND TENANT
Compensation for goodwill— Failure by tenant to state amount of compensation claimed—Validity of claim—Amendment of claim—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 4 (1)—R.S.C., Ord. 53D, r. 1 [BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. v. WILLIAM MCLROY, LTD.]	12
"Improvement"— Installation of individual hot water system—Trespass to landlord's property—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 19 (2) [TIDEWAY INVESTMENT AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. WELLWOOD. SAME v. ORTON. SAME v. JONES. SAME v. FRIEDENTAG. SAME v. THORNILEY]	1142
Lease— Agreement not under seal—Validity—Term of fourteen years determinable by tenant at end of any year—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 52 (1), s. 52 (2) (d), s. 54 (2) [KUSHNER v. LAW SOCIETY]	404
Clauses exempting lessor from liability for damage to property leased or goods therein and providing indemnity against claims by third parties—Need of express language to exempt from liability for negligence—Existence of other ground of damage [CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES, LTD. v. REGEM]	305
Rent book—Evidence of terms of tenancy [MOSES v. LOVEGROVE]	1279

LANDLORD AND TENANT—continued.	PAGE
New lease—Claim for compensation bad—Effect on claim for new lease—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (1) [BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. v. WILLIAM MCILROY, LTD.]	12
Sub-tenancy—Time for giving notice and making claim—Expiration of head lease by effluxion of time—Sub-lease terminable by notice—Notice given to operate expiration of after head lease—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (1) (2) [ALLIED IRONFOUNDERS, LTD. v. JOHN SMEDLEY, LTD.]	1344
Rent restriction. See RENT RESTRICTION.
Repair—Breach of covenant—Measure of damages—Determination of lease—Repairs borne by new tenant—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 18 (1) [HAVILAND v. LONG. DUNN TRUST, LTD., THIRD PARTY]	463
Shop—New tenancy—Reasonableness of grant—Matters for consideration of court—Rent—Quantum—Hardship—Financial disadvantage to landlord—Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951 (c. 38), s. 12 (1), (3) (e) [JOHN KAY, LTD. v. KAY]	813
Renewal of tenancy—Occupation “wholly or mainly for purposes of retail trade or business”—Nine-tenths of products sold wholesale—Whole premises used from time to time for production for retail sale—Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951 (c. 38), s. 10 (1) (a), s. 20 (1) [BERTHELEMY v. NEALE]	437
“Occupier” of premises—Company carrying on business—Tenancy held by managing director—Application for renewal by managing director—Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951 (c. 38), s. 10 (1) [PEGLER v. CRAVEN]	685
Tenancy—Tenancy at will—Exclusive occupation of premises—Need to consider intention of parties [COBB v. LANE]	1199
Permission to occupy premises conditional on payments being made to third party [ERRINGTON v. ERRINGTON]	149
LEASE See LANDLORD AND TENANT.
LEGACY
See WILL.
LEGAL AID
Assisted person—Trustee in bankruptcy—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), s. 2 (1)—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1359), reg. 4 (1) (3) [R. v. MANCHESTER LEGAL AID COMMITTEE. Ex parte R. A. BRAND & Co., LTD.]	480
Costs—Queen’s Proctor’s intervention—Certificate granted for divorce suit—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1359), reg. 5 (2) [WALLIS v. WALLIS (Queen’s Proctor showing cause)]	915
Security for costs—Plaintiff assisted person resident out of jurisdiction—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), s. 1 (7) (b) [JACKSON v. JOHN DICKINSON & Co. (BOLTON), LTD.]	104
Taxation—No order made as to costs—Need of order for taxation—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), sched. III, para. 4 (1)—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1359), reg. 18 (3). [BROWN v. BROWN]	1018
Principles to be applied—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), sched. III, para. 4 (1)—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29) [GIBBS v. GIBBS]	942
LEGITIMACY
Presumption of legitimacy—Rebutting evidence—Statements by mother during lifetime—Statements by natural father—Admissibility—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 32 (1) (2) [Re JENION (dec’d.)]	1228
LEGITIMATION
Legitimation per subsequens matrimonium—Validity of Austrian marriage—Retrospective effect of Austrian legislation—Determination according to Austrian law [STARKOWSKI v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL (STARKOWSKI cited)]	495
LEVEL CROSSING
See RAILWAY.
LIBEL
Fair comment—Need for facts on which comment made to be stated in alleged libel—Article criticising conduct of newspaper—Proof of truth of facts stated in particulars [KEMSLEY v. FOOT]	501
LICENCE
Building. See BUILDING CONTROL.
Licence to occupy premises—Exclusive occupation [COBB v. LANE]	1199
Occupation conditional on payments being made to third party [ERRINGTON v. ERRINGTON]	149
LICENSED PREMISES
Damage to customer’s property—Extension of hospitium of inn—Permission by innkeeper to park motor coach at petrol station—Petrol station owned by inn, but separated by public road—Garages and car park at inn [WATSON v. PEOPLE’S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCIATION, LTD.]	289
LIMITATION OF ACTION
Land—Adverse possession—De-controlled dwelling-house—No rent paid by tenant—Accrual of right of action—House again controlled—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 9 (2), s. 10 (1), s. 16 [MOSES v. LOVEGROVE]	1279
LIMITATION OF LIABILITY
Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. See SHIPPING.
LOCAL AUTHORITY
Injunction—Local authority unable to comply with injunction without financial grant. See INJUNCTION.
LOST DOCUMENT
Settlement—Implication of provisions [Re KNAPP’S SETTLEMENT]	458
MACHINERY
Dangerous. See FACTORY.
MAINTENANCE
Infant. See INFANT.
Wife. See DIVORCE ; HUSBAND AND WIFE ; JUSTICES.

	PAGE
MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
Honest belief of defendant in plaintiff's guilt— Form of question for jury [TEMPEST v. SNOWDEN]	1
Plaintiff bound over by court of summary jurisdiction— Competency of action—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 25 [EVERETT v. RIBBANDS]	823
MANAGING DIRECTOR
See COMPANY.
MARRIAGE
Approval of. See APPROBATION.
MARRIED WOMAN
Witness— Fee for attending to give evidence—Married woman not gainfully employed [REED v. GRAY]	241
MASTER AND SERVANT
Duty of master— Provision of safe appliances—Servant "lent" by employers to occupiers of factory—Materials, tools and equipment provided by occupiers—Work controlled by factory foreman [GARRARD v. SOUTHEY & CO. DAVEY ESTATES, LTD., THIRD PARTIES]	597
Trade dispute— Jurisdiction of National Arbitration Tribunal—Dispute between workman and employers arising out of interpretation of workman's contract of service—Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940 (S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1305), art. 7 [Re BIRKENHEAD CORPORATION'S RESOLUTIONS]	262
Recognised terms and conditions of employment— Observance by employer not member of negotiating trade organisation—Industrial Disputes Order, 1951 (S.I., 1951, No. 1376), art. 2. [R. v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL. Ex parte PRACTICAL BANKING, LTD.]	1370
MEASURE OF DAMAGES.
See DAMAGES
MEDICAL PRACTITIONER
National Health Service. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE.
Partnership or "assistantship" agreements— Covenants in restraint of trade. See TRADE.
MEDICAL SCHOOL
Bequest to. See WILL (Gift to medical school).
MEMORANDUM
Contract for sale of goods. See SALE OF GOODS.
MENACES
Demanding with menaces. See CRIMINAL LAW.
MERGER
Simple contract in specialty. See CONTRACT.
MILK
See FOOD AND DRUGS.
MINE
Coal mine— Shot-firing—Shot fired by unqualified miner—Apparatus operated by pair of pliers—Cable left in wrong position by authorised shot-firer—General Regulations, 1913 (S.R. & O., 1913, No. 748), reg. 28, made under Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 86—Explosives in Coal Mines Order, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 6), cl. 2 (h), cl. 2 (i) [ALFORD v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD]	754
Working of mine— Application to let down surface—"Hampering" of working—Evidence—Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923 (c. 20), s. 3 (1)—Costs—General rule [Re AN APPLICATION BY THE NATIONAL COAL BOARD]	678
MINIATURE RACECOURSE
"Works on land" within Town Planning Acts [BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. CALLINGHAM]	1166
MISREPRESENTATION
Principal and agent— Liability of principal for misrepresentation of agent—Innocent misrepresentation by agent—Knowledge of true facts by principal—No fraud on part of principal [ARMSTRONG v. STRAIN]	139
MISTAKE
Order of court— Correction. See JUDGMENT.
MODEL RAILWAY
"Works on land" within Town Planning Acts [BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. CALLINGHAM]	1166
MODEL VILLAGE
"Building" within Town Planning Acts [BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. CALLINGHAM]	1166
MONEY
Currency— Rate of exchange—Damages for breach of contract—Foreign judgment sued on in the United Kingdom—Rate at date of judgment [EAST INDIA TRADING CO., INC. v. CARMEL EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS, LTD.]	1053
MONTH
Income tax— Residence in United Kingdom for six months in year of assessment—Calendar, not lunar, months WILKIE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	92
MORTGAGE
Possession of mortgaged property— Mortgagor not in occupation—Order for possession against occupier although mortgagor not joined in proceedings—R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A, r. 8A [ALLIANCE BUILDING SOCIETY v. SHAVE]	1033
MOTOR VEHICLE
See STREET TRAFFIC.
Washing— Charge for water—Levy on registered owners of all vehicles in supply area—Burden on owner to show that no water supplied by undertakers used in respect of his vehicle [ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LEEDS CORPN.]	7
NAME AND ARMS CLAUSE
See WILL (Condition).
NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL
See MASTER AND SERVANT.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE

PAGE

Compensation for loss of employment—Clerk to hospita iboard —Also clerk to local authority— Consideration of service with local authority—National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1475), reg. 2 [R. v. NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SHAW] ..	122
"Hospital"— "Institution for the reception and treatment of persons" —Clinic "... maintained in connection with any such institution"—Clinic maintained for treatment of out-patients—Not confined to ex-patients of any particular hospital—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 79 (1) [Re COUCHMAN'S WILL TRUSTS] ..	439
Transfer of property—"Held by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital"—Power of trustees to sell property and apply proceeds of sale to other charitable purposes—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 6 (1) [Re MARJORIBANKS' INDENTURE] ..	191
Property held by local authority—Two local authorities respectively owning freehold and leasehold interests in hospital premises—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 6 (2) [MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. STAFFORD CORPN.] ..	744
Transfer of property and endowment—"Held by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital"—Trustees having liberty to pay or apply income of fund to or for a hospital until further order of court—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 7 (4) (10) [Re GALLOWAY (dec'd.)] ..	1379
Medical practitioner—Partnership—Goodwill—Clause in partnership agreement prohibiting retiring partner from carrying on practice within ten-mile radius—Validity—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 35 (1)—National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949 (c. 93), s. 1 (1) [WHITEHILL v. BRADFORD] ..	115

NATIONALISATION

Coal industry. See COAL.

NATIONALITY

British. See BRITISH NATIONALITY.

NEGLIGENCE

Air rifle—Liability of parent [DONALDON v. MCNIVEN] ..	1213
Breach of statutory duty—Breach fault of deceased jointly with fellow workman—Liability of employers in respect of death of deceased [STAPLEY v. GYPSUM MINES, LTD.] ..	1092
Contracting out of liability—Lease containing clauses exempting lessor from liability for damage to property leased or goods therein and providing indemnity against claims by third parties—Need of express language to exempt from liability for negligence—Existence of other grounds of damage [CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES, LTD. v. REGEN] ..	305
Contributory negligence—Action by two plaintiffs—Wife and husband—Judgment for first plaintiff against defendant—Second plaintiff one third to blame—Right of defendant to recover from second plaintiff one third of damages payable to first plaintiff—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) [DRINKWATER v. KIMBER] ..	701
Costs—Both parties to blame [SMITH v. W. H. SMITH & SONS, LTD.] ..	528
Evidence—Res gestae—Fatal accident to workman—Subsequent death—Statement by workman immediately after accident [DAVIES v. FORTIOR, LTD.] ..	1359
Fatal accident—Damages recovered by widow paid into court—Re-marriage—Right of widow to payment out [TAYLOR (formerly RYAN) v. CHELTENHAM & HEREFORD BREWERIES, LTD.] ..	1135
Husband and wife—Action by husband and wife for injury to wife—Contributory negligence. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Invitee—Duty of occupier—Protection against unusual danger—Window cleaner—Defective window sash—Window safe for ordinary purposes [CHRISTMAS v. GENERAL CLEANING CONTRACTORS, LTD.] ..	39
Judgment—Both parties to blame—Judgment on claim and counterclaim for damages in proportion to responsibility for damage—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) [SMITH v. W. H. SMITH AND SONS, LTD.] ..	528
Licensed premises—Damage to customer's property—Extension of hospitium of inn—Permission by innkeeper to park motor coach at petrol station—Petrol station owned by inn, but separated by public road—Garages and car park at inn [WATSON v. PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCIATION, LTD.] ..	129
Sea wall—Duty of catchment board to repair—Footpath on wall—Collapse of wall—Injury to person on path [HUNWICK v. ESSEX RIVERS CATCHMENT BOARD] ..	765

NEW LEASE

Under Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

NEW TENANCY

Shop. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Shop).

NOTE

Of contract for sale of goods. See SALE OF GOODS.

NOTICE TO QUIT

See AGRICULTURE (Agricultural holding); HOUSING (Accommodation of working classes).

NUISANCE

Abatement. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

Pollution of river—Nuisance arising from acts of several persons—Action against three defendants—Actionable wrong committed by one defendant—Liability of remaining defendants [PRIDE OF DERBY AND DERBYSHIRE ANGLING ASSOCIATION, LTD. v. BRITISH CELENESE, LTD.] ..	1326
---	------

NULLITY

Approbation of unconsummated marriage—Adoption of child by spouses [W. v. W.] ..	858
Incapacity of husband—"Consummation"—Erectio and intromissio without ejaculatio [R. v. R. (otherwise F.)] ..	1194

OBSCENE PUBLICATIONS

See CRIMINAL LAW

OCCUPIER

Duty to invitee—Protection against "unusual danger" See NEGLIGENCE (Invitee)

OPEN SPACE

Playing field—Rateability. See RATES (Rateable occupation).

OPTION

Option to purchase leasehold reversion expectant on terms of years granted by tenancy agreement—"Agreement respecting land"—"Interest in land"—Option contained in deed of licence to assign term and exercisable only by assignee—Assignee not party to deed [STROMDALE & BALL, LTD. v. BURDEN] 59

ORDER

Judgment. See JUDGMENT.

ORNAMENT

Church. See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

PARTICULARS

See PRACTICE.

PARTIES

To action. See PRACTICE.

PARTNERSHIP

Medical. See TRADE (Covenant in restraint of trade).

PAYMENT OUT OF COURT

See PRACTICE.

PERPETUITIES

Rule against perpetuities—Gift over from one charity to another—Second charity incorporated by royal charter [ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS OF ENGLAND v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD.] 984

PETITION

Divorce. See DIVORCE.

PLANNING

See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

PLATFORM

Working platform—Requirements of Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948. See BUILDING.

PLAYING FIELD

Rateability. See RATES (Rateable occupation).

PLEADING

Divorce. See DIVORCE.

POLLUTION

See NUISANCE.

POOL BETTING DUTY

See GAMING.

PORTIONS

Deficiency in estate—Jointress and portioners to rank pari passu [Re KEELE ESTATES. Re SNEYD'S SETTLEMENTS] 44

POSSESSION

Adverse. See LIMITATION OF ACTION.

POWER OF ADVANCEMENT

See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

POWER OF APPOINTMENT

Fraudulent exercise—Exercise to further some purpose other than benefit of object—Special power of appointment among children and remoter issue—Power, contained in appointor's marriage settlement, exercised by will in favour of appointor's surviving children—Condition directing forfeiture of appointee's share of appointor's residuary trust funds unless appointee's share under settlement settled as directed [Re SIMPSON'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT] 963

PRACTICE

Estimated length of trial—Duty of solicitors—Substantial error in estimate—Transfer of case from short non-jury list to long non-jury list—Solicitors of both parties ordered to pay costs thrown away—R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 29 (6) [IBBS v. HOLLOWAY BROTHERS, LTD.] 220

Particulars—Particulars given by reference to plan [TARBOX v. ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL] 1306

Parties—Foreign sovereign—Liability to be sued—Partial dependency on another Power—State of fact to be taken as at date of decision by court—Conclusiveness of certificate of Government department [SAYCE v. AMEER RULER SADIQ MOHAMMAD ABBASI BAHAWALPUR STATE] 326

Payment out of court—Fatal accident—Damages recovered by widow paid into court—Re-marriage—Right of widow to payment out—R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (9) [TAYLOR (formerly RYAN) v. CHELTENHAM & HEREFORD BREWERIES, LTD.] 1135

PRESUMPTION

Legitimacy. See LEGITIMACY.

PROFITS TAX

Distribution—Capital profits dividend—Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35), s. 36 (1) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BELL & NICOLSON, LTD.] 423

Relief—Non-distribution relief—Companies ordinarily resident both within and outside the United Kingdom—Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35), s. 39 (1) [UNION CORPN., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. JOHANNESBURG CONSOLIDATED INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. SAME; TRINIDAD LEASEHOLDS, LTD. v. SAME] 646

PROMISSORY NOTE

See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

PUBLIC DOCUMENT

Admissibility in evidence. See DOCUMENT.

PUBLIC HEALTH

Statutory nuisance—Abatement notice—"Owner"—Person "receiving the rackrent... as agent"—Servant of owner receiving cheques for rent and paying them into owner's account—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 93, s. 343 (1) [BOTTOMLEY v. HARRISON] 368

PUBLIC POLICY

Deed—Covenant contrary to public policy. See DEED (Unenforceability).

Appeal to—Conviction by court of summary jurisdiction under repealed statute—Power of quarter sessions to amend summons—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 31 (1) (vii), as substituted by Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (c. 38), s. 1—Food and Drugs (Milk, Dairies and Artificial Cream) Act, 1950 (c. 35), s. 36 (3) [MEEK v. POWELL]	347
Jurisdiction to entertain question of what plea should have been entered at trial—Plea of Guilty accompanied by statement indicating innocence—Remission of case to court of summary jurisdiction—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49, s. 31 (1) (as substituted by Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (c. 38), s. 1) [R. v. DURHAM QUARTER SESSIONS. Ex parte VIRGO]	466
QUIT
Notice to. See AGRICULTURE (Agricultural holding).
RACECOURSE
Miniature. See MINIATURE RACECOURSE.
RAILWAY
Level crossing—Duty to provide gate-keeper and lodge—Crossing originally accommodation crossing—Road taken over by local authority—Construction of additional line under private Act—Common law duty to take care—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 47—Railways Clauses Act, 1863 (c. 92), s. 6 [LLOYDS BANK v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE]	1248
Model. See MODEL RAILWAY.
RATE OF EXCHANGE
See CURRENCY CONTROL ; MONEY.
RATES
De-rating—Industrial hereditament—Adapting for sale—Wholesale distributive business—Sorting, identification and arrangement of goods—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (1) (c) (iii)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1) [DAVIS COHEN & SONS, LTD. v. HALL]	157
Rateable occupation—Playing field vested in local authority—Acquisition by deed—Trust for perpetual use by public—Restriction on user by public ancillary to management—Cricket and football pitches and tennis courts let to clubs—Temporary exclusion of public [BURNELL v. DOWNHAM MARKET URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL]	601
Yacht mooring [BRADSHAW v. DAVEY]	350
REAL PROPERTY
Restrictive covenant—Restriction of matters "which shall injure prejudice affect or destroy the natural aspect and condition of the land"—Validity [NATIONAL TRUST FOR PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR NATURAL BEAUTY v. MIDLANDS ELECTRICITY BOARD]	298
RECORD
Continuous record—Document being or forming part of—Admissibility in evidence. See DOCUMENT.
RECOURSE AGREEMENT
See HIRE-PURCHASE.
RENT
Limitation. See HOUSING (Limitation of rent).
Rent Restrictions Acts, for purposes of. See RENT RESTRICTION.
RENT BOOK
As lease. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Lease).
RENT CONTROL
Security of tenure—Power to extend period—Notice to quit given more than three months after decision of tribunal—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 5—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 11 (1) [R. v. ST. HELENS AND AREA RENT TRIBUNAL Ex parte PICKAVANCE]	455
RENT RESTRICTION
Costs—Action in High Court—Claim for possession for breach of covenant imported into statutory tenancy—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 17 (2) [TIDEWAY INVESTMENT AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. WELLWOOD. SAME v. ORTON. SAME v. JONES. SAME v. FRIEDENTAG. SAME v. THORNILEY]	1142
"Dwelling-house let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house"—Camping site and bungalow—Dominant purpose of lease the carrying on of business of letting out camping sites—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (3) [FETTEREISEL v. PARRY]	728
Garage business and dwelling-house—Premises divisible into separate entities—Dominant purpose of letting the carrying on of business—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (3) [THOMPSTONE v. SIMPSON]	431
Permitted increase—"Improvement" of house—Structural alteration—Repairs—Replacement of defective floor—Laying of additional concrete bed—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 2 (1) (a) s. 2 (5) [WATES v. ROWLAND]	470
Possession—Reasonableness—Breach of covenant—Installation of gas water heater—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. I, para. (a) [TIDEWAY INVESTMENT AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. WELLWOOD. SAME v. ORTON. SAME v. JONES. SAME v. FRIEDENTAG. SAME v. THORNILEY]	1142
Rent—Total of rent and rates paid by tenant—Agreement under Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869, s. 3, by landlords with rating authority to be liable for rates—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (7)—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (1) [SIDNEY TRADING CO., LTD. v. FINSBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL]	460
"Separate dwelling"—Sole use of unfurnished rooms—Sharing of other living rooms—Right to draw water and boil clothes in kitchen—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2) [HAYWARD v. MARSHALL. WINCHESTER v. SHARPE]	508
Statutory tenant—Forfeiture of tenancy—"Non-occupying" tenant—Animus revertendi—Tenant leaving with intent to live elsewhere for three years [DIXON v. TOMMIS]	725
Tenancy within the Acts—Breach of covenant—Failure by landlord to serve notice requiring tenant to remedy breach before expiration of contractual tenancy—Tenant continuing in possession [TIDEWAY INVESTMENT AND PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. WELLWOOD. SAME v. ORTON. SAME v. JONES. SAME v. FRIEDENTAG. SAME v. THORNILEY]	1142

REPAIR

Liability of tenant. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

RES GESTAE

Evidence of fact as part of—Fatal accident to workman—Statement by workman immediately after accident [DAVIES v. FORTIOR, LTD.] .. 1359

RESIDENCE

Income tax. See INCOME TAX.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE

See TRADE.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANT

See REAL PROPERTY; SALE OF LAND.

RIVER

See WATER AND WATERCOURSES

SAFE SYSTEM OF WORK

Factory flooded in exceptional storm—Water mixed with oil—Floor rendered dangerously slippery—No want of care by occupiers—Accident through workman slipping—Liability of occupiers [LATIMER v. A.E.C., LTD.] .. 443, 1302

SALE

Adapting for—Industrial hereditament. See RATES (De-rating).

SALE OF GOODS

Damages for breach of contract. See DAMAGES (Measure of damages).

Note or memorandum in writing—Particulars of transaction in document not signed by party to be charged—Letter signed by that party to third person referring to transaction—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 4 (1) [L. D. TURNER, LTD. v. R. S. HATTON (BRADFORD), LTD.] .. 1286

Payment—Confirmed credit—Time for opening credit [PAVIA & CO., S.P.A. v. THURMANN-NIELSEN] .. 492

Quality—Clause regulating buyer's claim for inferior quality—Application to deterioration owing to defective packing [MINISTER OF MATERIALS v. STEEL BROTHERS & CO., LTD.] .. 522

SALE OF LAND

Contract—Frustration—Compulsory purchase order made before completion [HILLINGDON ESTATES v. STONEFIELD ESTATES] .. 853

Option to purchase leasehold reversion expectant on term of years granted by tenancy agreement—"Agreement respecting land"—"Interest in land"—Option contained in deed of licence to assign term and exercisable only by assignee—Assignee not party to deed—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 56 (1) [STROMDALE AND BALL, LTD. v. BURDEN] .. 59

Restrictive covenant—Covenant running with the land—Identification of dominant tenement—Enforcement by assignee—Covenant to protect covenantee's business—Benefit of land—Death of covenantee—No assent to vesting of benefit in beneficiary entitled—Power of beneficiary to assign benefit [NEWTON ABBOT CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY v. WILLIAMSON AND TREADGOLD, LTD.] .. 279

Warranty—Preliminary inquiry before contract—War damage—Untrue reply [MAHON v. AINSCOUGH] .. 337

SAW

Circular—Duty to fence. See FACTORY (Dangerous machinery).

SEA WALL

Duty of catchment board to repair—Footpath on wall—Collapse of wall—Injury to person on path [HUNWICK v. ESSEX RIVERS CATCHMENT BOARD] .. 765

SEALING

Deed—Execution [STROMDALE & BALL, LTD. v. BURDEN] .. 59

SEAMAN

Will. See WILL (Seamen at sea).

SETTLEMENT

Application of income of trust funds to be applied during specified period for all or any of certain public, but non-charitable, purposes—Application in discretion of trustees, subject to directions of settlors—Person entitled to fund at end of specified period not at present ascertainable [Re ASTOR'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS] .. 1067

Capital or income—Tenant for life and remainderman—Apportionment—Capital profits dividend—Profit on sale of company's assets—Notice by company of intention to declare dividend—Duty of trustees to sell cum dividend [Re RUDD'S WILL TRUSTS] .. 254

Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Settlement).

Lost settlement—Implication of provisions [R KNAPP'S SETTLEMENT] .. 458 Variation. See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT.]

SHARE

See COMPANY.

SHIPPING

Collision—Damages—Detention in port to repair collision damage—Ship rendered unseaworthy by weather damage while proceeding to port for repair [THE CARSLÖGIE] .. 20

Limitation of liability—Loss of life—"Actual fault or privity of shipowner"—Negligence of shipowner's servants—Failure to provide safe system of work—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (c. 60), s. 503 (1) [BEAUCHAMP v. TURRELL] .. 719

"Ship's delivery order"—Request to ship to deliver goods to buyers—Order addressed by shipowner to dock master porter—Master porter not in possession of goods—Buyer's right to reject [COLIN & SHIELDS v. W. WEDDEL & CO., LTD.] .. 1021

SHIP'S DELIVERY ORDER

See SHIPPING.

SHOP

New tenancy. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Shop).

SLIP

In order of court—Correction. See JUDGMENT

	PAGE
SOLICITOR
Breach of duty—Purchase from client of shares in company—Failure to disclose negotiations for sale of controlling interest in company [MCMASTER v. BYRNE]	1362
Clients' account—Bankruptcy of solicitor—Account not to vest in trustee in bankruptcy—Removal of solicitor from trusteeship of account—Appointment of new trustees—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 18 (1), s. 38 (1)—Trustee Act 1925 (c. 19), s. 41 (1) [Re A SOLICITOR (1951 M. No. 234)]	133
Costs—Payment by solicitor personally—Error in estimate of length of trial—Transfer of case from short non-jury list to long non-jury list [IBBS v. HOLLOWAY BROTHERS, LTD.]	220
Unqualified person preparing instrument—Estate agent—Lease for fourteen years determinable by tenant at end of any year—Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 47 (1), s. 47 (4) (b) [KUSHNER LAW SOCIETY]	404
SOVEREIGN
Foreign—Impleading. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.
SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE
Option to purchase land [STROMDALE AND BALL, LTD. v. BURDEN]	59
SPEED LIMIT
See STREET TRAFFIC.
STAMP DUTY
Company—Exemption—Capital duty—Increase of capital to acquire shares in Northern Ireland company—"Existing company" [NESTLÉ & Co., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	1388
STATE
Foreign. See FOREIGN STATE.
STATUTE
Repealed statute—Conviction under—Power of quarter sessions to amend summons on appeal from court of summary jurisdiction [MEEK v. POWELL]	347
STATUTORY DUTY
See NEGLIGENCE.
STATUTORY NUISANCE
See PUBLIC HEALTH.
STATUTORY TENANCY
Forfeiture—"Non-occupying" tenant—Animus revertendi—Tenant leaving with intent to live elsewhere for three years [DIXON v. TOMMIS]	725
STATUTORY TRIBUNAL
Certiorari to quash decision—Error on face of order. See CERTIORARI.
STREET TRAFFIC
Accident—Duty to report—"Driver"—Vehicle stationary at time of accident—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 22 (2) [JONES v. PROTHERO]	434
Careless driving—Error of judgment—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 12 (1) [SIMPSON v. PEAT]	447
Excessive speed—Shooting-brake with "C" licence—Use solely for carrying passengers—Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (c. 53), s. 9 (2) [BLENKIN v. BELL]	1258
Taking motor vehicle without owner's consent—Driver using employer's van for own purposes—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 28 (1) [MOWE v. PERRATON]	423
SUMMONS
Power of quarter sessions to amend on appeal from court of summary jurisdiction [MEEK v. POWELL]	347
SURGERY
Promotion of—Charitable object. See CHARITY.
SURTAX
Inclusion in "income tax"—Covenant by partners to discharge outgoing partner's liability for "income tax" [CONWAY v. WINGATE]	782
TAXATION
Costs. See COSTS; LEGAL AID.
TENANCY
At will. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.
New tenancy of shop. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Shop).
TENANCY IN COMMON
Will—Bequest—Gift of specified property to testator's two sons "on condition that they agree to pay in equal shares" to testator's widow "for the remainder of her life... 10s. a week" [Re NORTH (dec'd.)]	609
TIME
Month—Income tax—Residence in United Kingdom for six months in year of assessment—Calendar, not lunar, months—Fractions of days to be counted as hours [WILKIE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	92
TORT
Assault—Liability of person of unsound mind—Knowledge of nature and quality of act—No knowledge that act wrongful [MORRISS v. MARSDEN]	925
Costs—High Court action—Damages of £90—Chatel damaged by negligence of person under contract to clean it [JACKSON v. MAYFAIR WINDOW CLEANING CO., LTD.]	215
TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING
Compulsory acquisition. See COMPULSORILY PURCHASE.
Development—"Building"—"Works on land"—Construction of model village, railway and racecourse—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 12 (2), s. 75 (9), s. 119 (1) [BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. CALLINGHAM]	1166
Enforcement notice—Need to specify both date on which notice takes effect and period within which restoration must be carried out—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 23 (2) (3) [BURGESS v. JARVIS]	592

	PAGE
TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING—continued.
Enforcement of planning control— Land subject to resolution to prepare planning scheme—Development carried out, without permission, before interim development order made—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 75 (9) [BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. CALLINGHAM]	1166
Interim development— Conditional permission—Limitation of time for commencement and completion of work—No reason given for imposing condition—Validity of condition—Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), s. 10 (3) [Re 42-48 PADDINGTON STREET AND 62-72 CHILTERN STREET, ST. MARYLEBONE]	1150
Permission for development— Consent in agreement made under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, s. 34 (1)—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 12 (1) [THACKRAY v. CENTRAL LAND BOARD]	1374
Person hoping to acquire interest in the land—Obligation of authority to notify owner of application—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 14 (1) [HANILY v. MINISTER OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT & PLANNING]	1292
"Works for the erection of a building"— Clearance of site—Erection of new building not begun—Separate contracts for clearance and building—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 78 (1) [Re 42-48 PADDINGTON STREET AND 62-72 CHILTERN STREET, ST. MARYLEBONE] ..	1150
TRADE
Covenant in restraint of trade—Medical practice—Retiring partner prohibited from "directly or indirectly carrying on or being interested or concerned in carrying on the business or profession of medicine . . . within a radius of ten miles"—Reasonableness [WHITEHILL v. BRADFORD] ..	115
TRADE DISPUTE
See MASTER AND SERVANT.
TRADE UNION
Disciplinary action against member—Review of decision—Jurisdiction of court [LEE v. SHOWMEN'S GUILD OF GREAT BRITAIN]	1175
Membership—Temporary membership for the duration of the war—No position for temporary membership in union's rules [MARTIN v. SCOTTISH TRANSPORT AND GENERAL WORKERS UNION]	691
TRADING WITH THE ENEMY
Custodian of Enemy Property—Liability for income tax on proceeds of property vested in him [BANK VOOR HANDEL EN SCHEEPVAART v. SLATFORD (sued as CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY)]	314
Sale of enemy property by Custodian—Property vested in Custodian by Board of Trade [VAM- VAKAS v. CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY]	629
TRAVELLER
Guest at inn—Liability of innkeeper for damage to property—Extension of hospitium—Permission by innkeeper to park motor coach at petrol station—Petrol station owned by inn, but separated by public road—Garages and car park at inn [WATSON v. PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCIATION, LTD.]	289
TRAVELLING EXPENSES
Deduction for assessment to income tax. See INCOME TAX.
TRIAL
See CRIMINAL LAW.
TRIBUNAL
Domestic. See DOMESTIC TRIBUNAL.
TRUNK ROAD
See HIGHWAY.
TRUST AND TRUSTEE
Administration of trust—Capital profits dividend. See CAPITAL PROFITS DIVIDEND.
Natural trustee—Corporate trustee—Bank—Right to withhold documents relating to estate from successors in office [TIGER v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD.]	85
Power of advancement—Trusts arising on exercise of special power of appointment—Power conferred by testamentary instrument—Death of testator before Jan. 1, 1926—Power exercised after Jan. 1, 1926—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 32 (3) [Re BATTY (dec'd.)]	425
Shares in limited company—Trustees shareholders and directors—Rights of beneficiaries to inspect company's documents [Re BUTT (dec'd.)]	167
VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT
Application by wife for maintenance—Desirability of both applications being heard together—New circumstances arising after hearing in court below—Consideration by Court of Appeal [JEFFREY v. JEFFREY]	790
VILLAGE
Model. See MODEL VILLAGE.
WAGES
See MASTER AND SERVANT (Trade dispute).
WARRANTY
See SALE OF LAND.
WATER AND WATERCOURSES
Pollution of river—Untreated sewage matter—Action by riparian owners against local authority—Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (c. 75), s. 3—Derby Corporation Act, 1901 (c. cclxvii), s. 109 (1), s. 113. [PRIDE OF DERBY AND DERBYSHIRE ANGLING ASSOCIATION, LTD. v. BRITISH CELANESE, LTD.]	1326
WATER SUPPLY
Non-domestic purposes—Washing motor cars—Charge levied on registered owners of all cars in supply area—Burden on owner to show that no water supplied by undertakers used in respect of his car—Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Act, 1905 (c. 1), s. 24 [ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LEEDS CORPN.]	7
WIDOW
Fatal accident to husband—Damages recovered by widow paid into court—Re-marriage—Right of widow to payment out— [TAYLOR (formerly RYAN) v. CHELTENHAM & HEREFORD BREWERIES, LTD.]	1135
Recovery of money in Admiralty action—Re-marriage after writ issued—Taxation of costs [THE QUEEN MARY]	787

WIFE	PAGE
Action by husband against. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Witness—Competence—Husband charged with buggery with wife [R. v. BLANCHARD]	114
WILFUL NEGLECT TO MAINTAIN
See JUSTICES (Husband and Wife).
WILL
Charity. See CHARITY.
Condition—Condition precedent—Illegal condition—Gift of personality subject thereto— Malum prohibitum and not malum in se —Validity of gift [Re ELLIOTT (dec'd.)]	145
Condition subsequent—Certainty—Name and arms clause—"Discontinue to bear and use" [Re WOOD'S WILL TRUSTS]	740
Certainty—Name and arms clause—"Disuse" [Re BOUVERIE (dec'd.)]	408
"Take up permanent residence in England" [Re GAPE'S WILL TRUSTS]	827
Dependent relative revocation—Expressed intention to alter will—Delay in carrying out intention [In the Estate of BROMHAM]	110
Forfeiture clause—Income payable until vested in some other person—Beneficiary an enemy—Payment of income to Custodian of Enemy Property—Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 7 (1)—Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 1198), art. 1 (i) (ii) [Re POZOT'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS]	1107
Gift to medical school of hospital—Gift over if hospital nationalised or passes into public ownership—Medical school not nationalised [ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS OF ENGLAND v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD.]	984
Incomplete will—No appointment of executor—No reference to property or extent of interest—"I give devise and bequeath unto" three named persons [Re STEVENS (dec'd.)]	674
Joint tenancy or tenancy in common—Gift of specified property to testator's two sons "on condition that they agree to pay in equal shares" to testator's widow "for the remainder of her life ... 10s. per week" [Re NORTH (dec'd.)]	609
Legacy—Condition—Executors to be satisfied that hospital not taken over by State—Validity of executor's decision [DUNDEE GENERAL HOSPITALS BOARD OF MANAGEMENT v. WALKER]	896
Revocation—By oral evidence—Standard of proof required [Re WYATT (dec'd.)]	1030
Seaman at sea—Deceased in service of shipowner—Document made in contemplation of voyage—Alteration—Presumption of alteration while "at sea"—Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 11 [In the Estate of NEWLAND]	841
Deceased in service of shipowner—Nuncupative will made in contemplation of voyage—Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 11 [In the Estate of WILSON]	852
"Survive"—Gift to such of children of son as shall survive testator—Son unmarried at date of will and date of death of testator [Re HODGSON (dec'd.)]	769
Trustee empowered to determine all matters of doubt arising in execution of will—Determination to be binding on all persons interested under the will—Validity of provision [Re WYNN'S WILL TRUSTS]	341
Two wills admitted to probate—Principles of construction [Re PLANT (dec'd.)]	78
WINDING-UP
Of company. See COMPANY.
WINDOW CLEANER
Invitee—Duty of occupier—Protection against unusual danger—Defective window sash—Window safe for ordinary purposes [CHRISTMAS v. GENERAL CLEANING CONTRACTORS, LTD.]	39
WITNESS
Fee for attending to give evidence—Married woman not gainfully employed [REED v. GRAY]	241
WORK AND LABOUR
Duty to supply good work and materials—Implied term in contract [STEWART v. REAVELL'S GARAGE]	1191
WORKING PLATFORM
Requirements of Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948. See BUILDING.

CASES REFERRED TO

	PAGE
A.B. v. C.B., (1906), 8 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 603; 43 Sc. L.R. 411; 13 S.L.T. 923; 27 Digest 269, 2371, i	1194, 1198
Abbott v. Sullivan, [1952] 1 All E.R. 226	1176, 1180
Abercrombie v. Abercrombie, [1943] 2 All E.R. 465; 169 L.T. 340; 107 J.P. 200; 2nd Digest Supp.	1076, 1077, 1083
Abrath v. North Eastern Ry. Co., (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 440; 52 L.J.Q.B. 620; 49 L.T. 618; 47 J.P. 692; affd. H.L., (1886), 11 App. Cas. 247; 55 L.J.Q.B. 457; 55 L.T. 63; 50 J.P. 659; 33 Digest 500, 418	1, 3
Abson v. Abson, [1952] 1 All E.R. 370	611, 612
Acanthus, The, [1902] P. 17; 71 L.J.P. 14; 85 L.T. 696; 41 Digest 807, 6679	21, 24, 30
Adams & Kensington Vestry, Re , (1884), 27 Ch.D. 394; 54 L.J.Ch. 87; 51 L.T. 382; 20 Digest 357, 961	60, 63
Admiralty Comrs. v. Chekiang (S.S.), [1926] A.C. 637; 95 L.J.P. 119; sub nom. The Chekiang, 135 L.T. 450; 41 Digest 805, 6663	21, 24, 25, 30
Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland & Orkney & Shetland Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 350; sub nom. Boy Andrew (Owners), Ltd. v. St. Rognvald (Owners), Ltd., [1948] A.C. 140; [1948] L.J.R. 768; 2nd Digest Supp.	1093, 1106
Admiralty Comrs. v. Susquehanna (Owners). The Susquehanna, [1926] A.C. 655; 95 L.J.P. 128; 135 L.T. 456; 41 Digest 802, 6624	796, 799, 801, 802
Admiralty Comrs. v. Valeria (S.S.). The Valeria (No. 2), [1922] 2 A.C. 242; 92 L.J.K.B. 42; 128 L.T. 97; 41 Digest 803, 6635	796, 799
Adoption Application No. 52/1951, Re , [1951] 2 All E.R. 931; [1952] Ch. 16; 115 J.P. 625	1026, 1030
Aganoor's Trusts, Re , (1895), 64 L.J.Ch. 521; 11 Digest 366, 459	496, 499
Agra & Masterman's Bank v. Leighton, (1866), L.R. 2 Exch. 56; 36 L.J.Ex. 33; 6 Digest 165, 1052	709, 713, 714 875, 877, 885
Aitchison v. Aitchison, (1902), 10 S.L.T. 331	1270, 1273
Aksionainmoye Obschestvo A.M. Luther v. Sagor (James) & Co., [1921] 3 K.B. 532; 90 L.J.K.B. 1202; 125 L.T. 705; 11 Digest 309, 17	305, 309, 310, 313
Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 244; [1945] K.B. 189; 114 L.J.K.B. 196; 172 L.T. 153; 2nd Digest Supp.	1322, 1324
Allen v. Allen, [1951] 1 All E.R. 724; 115 J.P. 229	942, 946
Allen v. Allen & D'Arcy, (1860), 2 Sw. & Tr. 107; 30 L.J.P.M. & A. 9; 3 L.T. 480; 164 E.R. 933; 27 Digest 538, 5861	922, 924
Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, Ltd., [1900] 1 Ch. 656; 69 L.J.Ch. 266; 82 L.T. 210; 9 Digest 344, 2174	342, 345
Allhusen v. Whittell, (1867), L.R. 4 Eq. 295; 36 L.J.Ch. 929; 16 L.T. 695; 23 Digest 464, 5358	1033, 1035
Alliance Building Society v. Varma, [1949] 2 All E.R. 261; [1949] Ch. 724; [1949] L.J.R. 1452; 2nd Digest Supp.	460, 461, 462
Alliance Property Co., Ltd. v. Shaffer, [1949] 1 All E.R. 312; [1949] 1 K.B. 367; [1949] L.J.R. 998; 2nd Digest Supp.	1175, 1179, 1183, 1185
Allinson v. General Council of Medical Education & Registration, [1894] 1 Q.B. 750; 63 L.J.Q.B. 534; 70 L.T. 471; 58 J.P. 542; 34 Digest 544, 24	1363, 1366, 1368, 1369
Allison v. Clayhills, (1907), 97 L.T. 799; 42 Digest 85, 765	227, 238
Amalgamated Society of Carpenters, Cabinet Makers & Joiners v. Braithwaite. General Union of Operative Carpenters and Joiners v. Ashley, [1921] 2 Ch. 399; affd. H.L., [1922] 2 A.C. 440; 91 L.J.Ch. 688; 123 L.T. 65; 43 Digest 100, 1743; 1176, 1179, 1180, 1182, 1186	1061, 1063
Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A.C. 87; 79 L.J.Ch. 87; 101 L.T. 787; affg. S.C. sub nom. Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163; subsequent proceedings , [1911] 1 Ch. 540; 43 Digest 93, 963	250, 251, 252, 254
Amand v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs, [1942] 2 All E.R. 381; sub nom. Amand v. Home Secretary & Minister of Defence of Royal Netherlands Government, [1943] A.C. 147; sub nom. R. v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs & Minister of Defence of the Royal Netherlands Government. Ex p. Amand, 111 L.J.K.B. 657; 167 L.T. 177; 2nd Digest Supp.	647, 655
Ambler v. Ambler, [1951] 1 All E.R. 980	574, 584
American Thread Co. v. Joyce, (1913), 108 L.T. 353; 6 Tax Cas. 163; 28 Digest 30, 167	909, 912, 913, 914
Ancona v. Rogers, (1876), 1 Ex.D. 285; 46 L.J.Q.B. 121; 35 L.T. 115; 37 Digest 158, 34	1308, 1313
Anderson, Ltd. v. Daniel, [1924] 1 K.B. 138; 93 L.J.K.B. 97; 130 L.T. 418; 88 J.P. 53; 2nd Digest Supp.	1077, 1084
Andrew v. Aitken, (1882), 22 Ch.D. 218; 52 L.J.Ch. 294; 48 L.T. 148; 35 Digest 108, 131	500, 912, 913, 914
Andrews v. Andrews, [1938] Queensland Reports 72	1308, 1313
Andrews v. Barnes, (1888), 39 Ch.D. 133; 57 L.J.Ch. 694; 58 L.T. 748; 53 J.P. 4; Digest. Practice, 899, 4398	241, 242, 245, 942, 946, 955, 958
Anderson, In the Estate of , [1916] P. 49; 85 L.J.P. 21; 114 L.T. 519; 39 Digest 332, 183 841, 846, 848, 849	502, 507
Andrews v. Chapman, (1853), 3 Car. & Kir. 286; 21 L.T.O.S. 108; 175 E.R. 558; 32 Digest, 140, 1707	139, 141, 142, 143, 144
Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corp'n., Ltd. v. Spalding Urban District Council, [1937] 3 All E.R. 335; [1937] 2 K.B. 607; 106 L.J.K.B. 885; 157 L.T. 450; Digest Supp.	123, 131
Anon., (1697), 2 Salk. 479; 91 E.R. 412; 33 Digest 390, 1011	925, 926
Anon., (1807), 13 Ves. 590; 33 E.R. 415; 4 Digest 30, 240	111
Appelbee, In the Goods of , (1828), 1 Hag. Ecc. 143; 162 E.R. 536; 44 Digest 363, 1960	775, 779
Appleson v. Littlewood (H.), Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 464; Digest Supp.	123, 130
Apsley's Case, (1671), Sty. 85; 82 E.R. 549	327, 330, 573, 574, 581, 591
Arantzazu Mendi, The, [1939] 1 All E.R. 719; [1939] A.C. 256; 160 L.T. 513; sub nom. Spain Republic Government v. Arantzazu Mendi, 108 L.J.P. 55; Digest Supp.	1037, 1039
Argentino, The, (1888), 13 P.D. 191; 58 L.J.P. 1; 59 L.T. 914; affd. sub nom. H.L. Gracie (Owners) v. Argentino (Owners), The Argentino, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 519; 17 Digest 82, 26	180, 185
Armytage v. Armytage, [1898] P. 178; 67 L.J.P. 90; 78 L.T. 689; 27 Digest 264, 2321	123, 130
Arno, Re , [1947] 1 All E.R. 64; [1947] Ch. 198; [1947] L.J.R. 435; 176 L.T. 152; 2nd Digest Supp.	925, 928
Arnold v. Bath & Wells (Bp.), (1829), 5 Bing. 316; 7 L.J.O.S.C.P. 120; 130 E.R. 1083; 22 Digest 338, 3391	1229, 1246
Ashley's Case, (1697), 2 Salk. 479; 91 E.R. 412; 16 Digest 470, 3494	274, 278
Astle v. Astle, [1939] 3 All E.R. 967; [1939] P. 415; Digest Supp.
Atchley v. Sprigg, (1864), 33 L.J.Ch. 345; 10 L.T. 16; 3 Digest 360, 24
Atkinson, Re , [1930] 1 Ch. 47; 99 L.J.Ch. 35; 142 L.T. 129; Digest Supp.

Atkinson v. Bradford Thrd Equitable Benefit Building Society, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 377; 59 L.J.Q.B. 360; 62 L.T. 857; 7 Digest 437, 202	637, 640
Atlantic Shipping & Trading Co. v. Dreyfus (Louis) & Co., [1922] 2 A.C. 250; 91 L.J.K.B. 513; 127 L.T. 411; 16 Digest 116, 150	342, 346 647, 655
A.-G. v. Alexander, (1874), L.R. 10 Exch. 20; 44 L.J.Ex. 3; 31 L.T. 694; 28 Digest 30, 159	179, 180, 186
A.-G. v. Antrobus, [1905] 2 Ch. 188; 74 L.J.Ch. 599; 92 L.T. 790; 69 J.P. 141; 22 Digest 382, 3911	1068, 1071
A.-G. v. Brown, (1818), 1 Swan. 265 (36 E.R. 384); 1 Wils. Ch. 323 (37 E.R. 138); 8 Digest 257, 184	1328, 1336, 1337
A.-G. v. Dorking Guardians, (1882), 20 Ch.D. 595; 51 L.J.Ch. 585; 46 L.T. 573; 38 Digest 54, 310	162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167
A.-G. v. Glossop, [1906] 1 K.B. 284, affd. C.A., [1907] 1 K.B. 163; 76 L.J.K.B. 199; 95 L.T. 823; 21 Digest 14, 69	1249, 1252
A.-G. v. Great Northern Ry. Co., [1916] 2 A.C. 356; 85 L.J.Ch. 717; 115 L.T. 235; 80 J.P. 337; 26 Digest 582, 2719	809, 812
A.-G. v. Horner (No. 2), [1913] 2 Ch. 140; 82 L.J.Ch. 339; 108 L.T. 609; 77 J.P. 257; 26 Digest 304, 356	1388, 1391
A.-G. v. London Stadiums, Ltd., [1949] 2 All E.R. 1007; [1950] 1 K.B. 387; 2nd Digest Supp.	841, 845
A.-G. of Southern Nigeria v. Holt (John) & Co. (Liverpool), Ltd. [1915] A.C. 599; 84 L.J.P.C. 98; 112 L.T. 955; 19 Digest 19, 56	765, 766, 809, 810, 812
Austen, In the Goods of , (1853), 2 Rob. Eccl. 611; 21 L.T.O.S. 65; 163 E.R. 1431; 39 Digest 333, 185	814, 318, 321, 322
Austrian Property Administrator v. Russian Bank for Foreign Trade, (1932), 48 T.L.R. 37; Digest Supp.	1293, 1294, 1296
Ayles v. Romsey & Stockbridge Rural District Council, (1944), 108 J.P. 175; 88 Sol. Jo. 135; 2nd Digest Supp.	1229, 1232, 1233, 1239, 1241, 1245, 1246, 1247
Aylesford Peerage, The, (1885), 11 App. Cas. 1; 8 Digest 367, 80	227, 231
Bagg's Case, (1615), 11 Co. Rep. 93b; 77 E.R. 1271; 33 Digest 92, 624	158
Bailey (Stoke-on-Trent Revenue Officer) v. Potteries Electric Traction Co., Ltd., [1931] 1 K.B. 385; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 94 J.P. 177; reversd. H.L. sub nom. Potteries Electric Traction Co., Ltd. v. Bailey (Stoke-on-Trent) Revenue Officer, [1931] A.C. 151; 101 L.J.K.B. 153; 144 L.T. 410; 95 J.P. 64; Digest Supp.	1176, 1180 374, 376, 377, 378, 379 664, 666, 669
Baird v. Wells, (1890), 44 Ch.D. 661; 59 L.J.Ch. 673; 63 L.T. 312; 8 Digest 512, 39	1143, 1147
Baker v. Baker, (1949), 66 (pt. 1) T.L.R. 81; 2nd Digest Supp.	709, 716
Baker v. Turner, [1950] 1 All E.R. 834; [1950] A.C. 401	1270, 1274
Balls Bros., Ltd. v. Sinclair, [1931] 2 Ch. 325; 100 L.J.Ch. 377; 148 L.T. 800; Digest Supp.	842, 848
Banbury Peerage Case, (1811), 1 Sim. & St. 153; 57 E.R. 62; 3 Digest 358, 2	107, 109
Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers, [1891] A.C. 107; 60 L.J.Q.B. 145; 64 L.T. 353; sub nom. Vagliano v. Bank of England, 55 J.P. 676; 3 Digest 244, 703	674, 675, 676 1037, 1038
Bank of Montreal v. Exhibit & Trading Co., Ltd., (1906), 22 T.L.R. 722; 11 Com. Cas. 250; 6 Digest 376, 2475	1229, 1234, 1241, 1247
Bank Voor Handel en Scheepvaart v. Stafford, [1951] 2 All E.R. 779	1194, 1196, 1197, 1198
Barber v. Pigden, [1937] 1 All E.R. 115; [1937] 1 K.B. 664; 106 L.J.K.B. 858; 156 L.T. 245; Digest Supp.	1093, 1100
Barnard v. Birch, [1919] 2 I.R. 404; 44 Digest 304, c	223, 224
Bartram v. Bartram, [1949] 2 All E.R. 270; [1950] P. 1; [1949] L.J.R. 1679; 113 J.P. 422; 2nd Digest Supp.	1213, 1214
Bassett, Re, Ex p. Lewis , (1895), 43 W.R. 427; 4 Digest 134, 1229	979, 980
Bassett's Estate, Re , (1872), L.R. 14 Eq. 54; 41 L.J.Ch. 681; 44 Digest 837, 6912	1077, 1091
Batley, Re , [1951] Ch. 558	828, 831
Battle v. A.-G., [1949] P. 358; [1949] L.J.R. 1015; 2nd Digest Supp.	1143, 1148
Baxter v. Baxter, [1947] 2 All E.R. 886; [1948] A.C. 274; [1948] L.J.R. 479; 2nd Digest Supp.	735, 737, 738, 739
Beal v. Gomme (E.), Ltd., (1949), 65 T.L.R. 543; 2nd Digest Supp.	45, 46
Beard v. Beard, [1945] 2 All E.R. 306; [1946] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 33; 174 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	496, 498
Bebee v. Sales, (1916), 32 T.L.R. 413; 36 Digest 57, 367	876, 885
Bebbington's Tenancy, Re , [1921] 1 Ch. 559; 90 L.J.Ch. 269; 124 L.T. 661; 31 Digest, Replacement, 500, 6256	554, 559, 560, 566, 568
Beeby v. Beeby, (1799), 1 Hag. Ecc. 789; 162 E.R. 755; 27 Digest 338, 3181	1322, 1324
Bell v. Kennedy, (1868), L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 307; 11 Digest 312, 36	1270, 1278
Bell London & Provincial Properties, Ltd. v. Reuben, [1946] 2 All E.R. 547; [1947] K.B. 157; [1947] L.J.R. 251; 176 L.T. 92; 2nd Digest Supp.	709, 715
Bennett v. Bennett, [1951] 1 All E.R. 1088; [1951] 2 K.B. 572; 115 J.P. 355, affd. , C.A., [1952] 1 All E.R. 413	414, 421
Berry v. Gaukroger, [1903] 2 Ch. 116; 72 L.J.Ch. 435; 88 L.T. 521; 21 Digest 27, 155	1328, 1332
Berthiaume v. Dastous, [1930] A.C. 79; 99 L.J.P.C. 66; 142 L.T. 54; Digest Supp.	1089, 1091
Bethune v. Bethune, [1891] P. 205; 60 L.J.P. 18; 63 L.T. 259; 27 Digest 288, 2618	922
Biggerstaff v. Rowatt's Wharf, Ltd. Howard v. Rowatt's Wharf, Ltd., [1896] 2 Ch. 93; 65 L.J.Ch. 536; 74 L.T. 473; 9 Digest 530, 3502	981, 983
Biggs v. Burridge, (1924), 89 J.P. 75; 37 Digest 360, 1623	481, 488, 489
Binstead v. Buck, (1776), 2 Wm. Bl. 1117; 96 E.R. 660; 3 Digest 66, 83	1308, 1311
Bird & Co. (London), Ltd. v. Cook (Thomas) & Son, Ltd., & Cook (Thomas) & Son (Bankers), Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 227; 156 L.T. 415; Digest Supp.	39, 40
Bishop v. Kitchin, (1868), 30 L.J.Q.B. 20; 12 Digest, Replacement, 314, 2424	227, 232
Blair & Sumner v. Deakin, Eden & Thwaites v. Deakin, (1887), 57 L.T. 522; 52 J.P. 327; 44 Digest 38, 271	149, 154, 155, 1199, 1200, 1201
Blandford v. Blandford, (1883), 8 P.D. 19; 52 L.J.P. 17; 48 L.T. 238; 27 Digest 338, 3175	227, 234
Bluett v. Stutchbury's, Ltd., (1908), 24 T.L.R. 469; 9 Digest 529, 3491	740, 741, 742, 744
Blythe & Co. v. Richards, Turpin & Co., (1916), 85 L.J.K.B. 1425; 114 L.T. 753; 12 Digest, Replacement, 462, 3446
Board of Education v. Rice, [1911] A.C. 179; 80 L.J.K.B. 796; 104 L.T. 639; 75 J.P. 393; 19 Digest 602, 290
Bolton v. Prentice, (1744), 1 Selwyn's N.P. 233; 2 Stra. 1214; 93 E.R. 1136; 27 Digest 199, 1695
Bolton v. Stone, [1951] 1 All E.R. 1078; [1951] A.C. 850
Bonham's Case, (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 114a; 77 E.R. 646; 38 Digest 80, 578
Booker v. Palmer, (1922) 2 All E.R. 674; 2nd Digest Supp.
Boots v. Grundy, (1900), 82 L.T. 769; 43 Digest 117, 1217
Bouverie, Re , [1952] 1 All E.R. 408

	PAGE
Bowater v. Rowley Regis Corp., [1944] 1 All E.R. 465; [1944] K.B. 476; 113 L.J.K.B. 427; 170 L.T. 314; 108 J.P. 163; 2nd Digest Supp.	39, 43
Bowie (or Ransay) v. Liverpool Royal Infirmary, [1930] A.C. 588; 99 L.J.P.C. 134; 143 L.T. 388; Digest Supp.	828, 831
Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd., [1917] A.C. 406; 86 L.J.Ch. 568; 117 L.T. 161; 8 Digest 265, 270	1067, 1068, 1070
Bowring, Re, [1918] W.N. 265; 34 T.L.R. 575; 39 Digest 168, 593	782, 786
Bradbury v. English Sewing Cotton Co., [1923] A.C. 744; 92 L.J.K.B. 736; 129 L.T. 546; 8 Tax Cas. 481; 28 Digest 81, 445	647, 655
Bragg v. Bragg, [1925] P. 20; 94 L.J.P. 11; 132 L.T. 346; 27 Digest 565, 6242	370, 371, 372, 395, 396, 611, 612
Bramwell v. Bramwell, [1942] 1 All E.R. 137; [1942] K.B. 370; 111 L.J.K.B. 430; 2nd Digest Supp.	150, 155, 1308, 1310
Brandon, Ex p., Re Trench, (1884), 25 Ch.D. 500; 53 L.J.Ch. 576; 50 L.T. 41; 4 Digest 74, 632	520, 521
Bray v. Bray, (1828), 1 Hag. Ecc. 163; 162 E.R. 543; 27 Digest 291, 2662	876, 883
Braybrooke (Lord) v. A.-G., (1861), 9 H.L. Cas. 150; 31 L.J.Ex. 177; 4 L.T. 218; 25 J.P. 531; 11 E.R. 685; 21 Digest 94, 694	163, 165
Breull, Ex p., Re Bowie, (1880), 16 Ch.D. 484; 50 L.J.Ch. 384; 43 L.T. 580; 4 Digest 38, 322	1026, 1028, 1030
Brightman & Co. v. Tate, [1919] 1 K.B. 463; 88 L.J.K.B. 921; 120 L.T. 512; 11 Digest 551, 537	355, 359
Brimelow v. Casson, [1924] 1 Ch. 302; 93 L.J.Ch. 256; 130 L.T. 725; 43 Digest 115, 1194	227, 235
British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd. v. Federated European Bank, Ltd., [1932] 2 K.B. 176; 101 L.J.K.B. 690; 147 L.T. 345; Digest Supp.	554, 563, 565, 566, 569
Broad v. Ham, (1839), 5 Bing. N.C. 722; 8 L.J.C.P. 357; 132 E.R. 1278; 33 Digest 495, 362	1, 6
Broadmayne, The, [1916] P. 64; 85 L.J.P. 153; 114 L.T. 891; 1 Digest 109, 131	574, 583, 589
Bronage, Re, [1935] Ch. 605; 104 L.J.Ch. 299; 153 L.T. 313; Digest Supp.	1229, 1230, 1236, 1245
Bromley v. Tryon, [1951] 2 All E.R. 1053; affg. sub nom. Re Wilson's Will Trusts, [1950] 2 All E.R. 955	741, 742, 743, 744
Brown v. Brash & Ambrose, [1948] 1 All E.R. 922; [1948] 2 K.B. 247; [1948] L.J.R. 1544; 2nd Digest Supp.	725, 726
Brown v. Brown, (1858), 8 E. & B. 876; 27 L.J.Q.B. 173; 30 L.T.O.S. 273; 120 E.R. 327; 23 Digest 108, 1018	1030, 1032
Brown v. Davies, (1789), 3 Term Rep. 80; 100 E.R. 466; 6 Digest 199, 1226	710, 717
Brown v. Draper, [1944] 1 All E.R. 246; [1944] K.B. 309; 113 L.J.K.B. 196; 170 L.T. 144; 2nd Digest Supp.	1309, 1317
Brunswick (Duke) v. Hanover (King), (1844), 6 Beav. 1 (49 E.R. 724); 13 L.J.Ch. 107; affd. H.L., (1848), 2 H.L. Cas. 1 (9 E.R. 993); 1 Digest 50, 403	574, 589, 1262, 1268
Buchler v. Buchler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 319; [1947] P. 25; [1947] L.J.K. 820; 176 L.T. 341; 111 J.P. 179; 2nd Digest Supp.	223, 875, 881
Burfit v. Kille (A. & E.), [1939] 2 All E.R. 372; [1939] 2 K.B. 743; 108 L.J.K.B. 669; 160 L.T. 481; Digest Supp.	1213, 1214
Burford Corp. v. Lenthall, (1743), 2 Atk. 551; 26 E.R. 731; 8 Digest 412, 2516	942, 946
Burgess v. Cox, [1950] 2 All E.R. 1212; [1951] Ch. 383; 2nd Digest Supp.	1286, 1288, 1289
Burk v. Burk, (State of West Virginia) (1883) 21 West Virginia Reps. 445	1077, 1084
Burrell & Kinnaird v. A.-G., [1936] 3 All E.R. 758; [1937] A.C. 286; 106 L.J.K.B. 134; 156 L.T. 36; Digest Supp.	199, 201
Burton v. Holdsworth, [1951] 2 All E.R. 381; [1951] 2 K.B. 703	104
Butlins, Ltd. v. Fyche, [1948] 1 All E.R. 737; 2nd Digest Supp.	685, 689
Bwlfa & Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries (1891), Ltd. v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co., [1903] A.C. 426; 72 L.J.K.B. 805; 89 L.T. 280; 11 Digest 129, 186	21, 27
Bynoe v. Bank of England, [1902] 1 K.B. 467; 71 L.J.K.B. 208; 86 L.T. 140; 33 Digest 478, 120	823, 825
Cackett (otherwise Trice) v. Cackett, [1950] 1 All E.R. 677; [1950] P. 253; 2nd Digest Supp.	1194, 1196
Cairnbahn, The, (1914) P. 25; 83 L.J.P. 11; 100 L.T. 230; 41 Digest 799, 6597	701, 707, 708
Cakebread v. Hopping Bros. (Whetstone), Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 389; [1947] K.B. 641; [1948] L.J.R. 361; 177 L.T. 92; 2nd Digest Supp.	1093, 1097, 1100
Calder v. Halkett, (1839-40), 3 Moo. P.C.C. 28; 2 Moo. Ind. App. 293; 4 State Tr. N.S. 431; 13 E.R. 12; 38 Digest 84, 615	227, 232, 239
Callister v. Callister, (1947), 63 T.L.R. 503; 2nd Digest Supp.	1385, 1386
Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd. v. Manganese Bronze & Brass Co., Ltd., [1934] A.C. 402; 103 L.J.K.B. 289; 151 L.T. 142; Digest Supp.	1191, 1192
Campbell, Ex p., Re Wallace, (1885), 15 Q.B.D. 213; 54 L.J.Q.B. 382; 53 L.T. 208; 4 Digest 202, 1860	520, 521
Campbell v. Spottiswoode, (1863), 3 B. & S. 769; 32 L.J.Q.B. 185; 8 L.T. 201; 27 J.P. 501; 122 E.R. 288; 32 Digest 149, 1802	502, 506
Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co., [1951] 1 All E.R. 426; [1951] 2 K.B. 164	216, 219
Cardiff Corp. v. Cook, [1923] 2 Ch. 115; 92 L.J.Ch. 177; 128 L.T. 530; 87 J.P. 90; Digest Supp.	853, 856
Cardiffe Bridge Case, (1700), 1 Salk. 146; 91 E.R. 135; sub nom. R. v. Glamorganshire (Inhabitants), 12 Mod. Rep. 403; 88 E.R. 1409; 16 Digest 401, 2458	123, 130
Cargill v. Phillips, 1951 S.L.T. 110	728, 733
Carnegie Dunfermline Trustees v. Dunfermline Assessor, 1909 S.C. 678; 46 Sc. L.R. 451; 1 S.L.T. 286; 38 Digest 575 (b)	601, 602, 606
Carter v. Sharon, [1936] 1 All E.R. 720; 20 Tax Cas. 230; Digest Supp.	867, 871, 872
Castioni, Re, [1891] 1 Q.B. 149; 60 L.J.M.C. 22; 64 L.T. 344; 55 J.P. 328; 24 Digest 873, 36	1061, 1063
Castrique v. Behrens, (1861), 3 E. & E. 709; 30 L.J.Q.B. 163; 4 L.T. 52; 121 E.R. 608; 11 Digest 463, 1193	823, 825
Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; [1940] A.C. 152; 108 L.J.K.B. 779; 151 D.T. 374; 2nd Digest Supp.	1014, 1016, 1093, 1098, 1101, 1104
Cave v. Hastings, (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 125; 50 L.J.Q.B. 575; 45 L.T. 348; 46 J.P. 56; 12 Digest, Replacement, 159, 1022	1286, 1288
Cave v. Mountain, (1840), 1 Man. & G. 257; 9 L.J.M.C. 90; 4 J.P. 572; 133 E.R. 330; 38 Digest 93, 693	1203, 1211
Celia (S.S.) v. S.S. Volturmo, [1921] 2 A.C. 544; 90 L.J.P. 385; 126 L.T. 1; 17 Digest 159, 602; 35 Digest 174, 39	383, 384, 796, 801
Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic) v. Cannon Brewery Co., Ltd., [1919] A.C. 744; 88 L.J.Ch. 464; 121 L.T. 361; 83 J.P. 261; 11 Digest 548, 512	1270, 1273
Central Employment Bureau for Women & Students' Careers Assn. (Incorporated), Re, [1942] 1 All E.R. 232; 2nd Digest Supp.	50, 55
Cesena Sulphur Co. v. Nicholson. Calcutta Jute Mills Co. v. Nicholson, (1876), 1 Ex.D. 428; 45 L.J.Q.B. 821; 35 L.T. 275; 1 Tax Cas. 83, 88; 28 Digest 25, 136	647, 655, 658

Chamberlain v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 200; 25 Tax Cas. 317; 2nd Digest Supp.	173, 175, 176, 177
Chant v. Read, [1939] 2 All E.R. 286; [1939] 2 K.B. 346; 108 L.J.K.B. 547; 160 L.T. 462; Digest Supp.	74, 77
Chapman v. Chapman, unreported	374, 377
Charkieh, The, (1873), L.R. 4 A. & E. 59; 42 L.J. Adm. 17; 23 L.T. 513; 1 Digest 110, 142	1262, 1266
Chaytor, Re, [1905] 1 Ch. 233; 74 L.J.Ch. 106; 92 L.T. 290; 43 Digest 618, 586	255, 260
Chelsea & Walham Green Building Society v. Armstrong, [1951] 2 All E.R. 250; [1951] Ch. 853	60, 63
Christie v. Leachinsky, [1947] 1 All E.R. 567; [1947] A.C. 573; [1947] L.J.R. 757; 176 L.T. 443; 111 J.P. 224; 2nd Digest Supp.	1203, 1204, 1205, 1210
Christ's Hospital v. Grainger, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 460; 19 L.J.Ch. 33; 15 L.T.O.S. 497; 13 J.P. 778; 41 E.R. 1343; 8 Digest 324, 1060	985, 988, 990, 991, 1000, 1002, 1003
Churchman v. Churchman, [1945] 2 All E.R. 190; [1945] P. 44; 114 L.J.P. 17; 173 L.T. 108; 2nd Digest Supp.	374, 376
Cinema Press, Ltd. v. Pictures & Pleasures, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 440; [1945] K.B. 356; 114 L.J.K.B. 368; 172 L.T. 295; 2nd Digest Supp.	529, 530
Clark v. London School Board, (1874), 9 Ch. App. 120; 43 L.J.Ch. 421; 29 L.T. 903; 33 J.P. 101; 11 Digest 137, 233	299
Clark's Estate, Re, (1864), 3 De G.J. & Sm. 111; 46 E.R. 579; 44 Digest 1184, 10243 769, 771, 772, 773	773
Clarke v. Grant, [1949] 1 All E.R. 768; [1950] 1 K.B. 104; [1949] L.J.R. 1450; 2nd Digest Supp.	432
Clavering v. Ellison, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 707; 29 L.J.Ch. 761; 11 E.R. 282; affg. (1857), 8 De G.M. & G. 662; 44 E.R. 545; affg. (1856), 3 Drew 451; 61 E.R. 975; 44 Digest 440, 2667	409, 410, 828, 829
Clay Hill Brick & Tile Co., Ltd. v. Rawlings, [1938] 4 All E.R. 100; 159 L.T. 482; Digest Supp.	555, 570
Clayton v. Ramsden, [1943] 1 All E.R. 16; [1943] A.C. 320; 112 L.J.Ch. 22; 168 L.T. 113; 2nd Digest Supp.	409, 410, 828, 829, 830
Cliff v. Midland Ry. Co., (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 258; 22 L.T. 382; 34 J.P. 357; 38 Digest 313, 347	1249, 1253, 1255
Clifford v. Challen (Charles H.), Ltd., [1951] 1 All E.R. 72; [1951] 1 K.B. 495	936, 939
Clifford v. Clifford, [1948] 1 All E.R. 394; [1948] P. 187; [1948] L.J.R. 969; 2nd Digest Supp.	858, 859, 860
Clifford v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1896] 2 Q.B. 187; 65 L.J.Q.B. 582; 74 L.T. 699; 39 Digest 252, 372	646, 651
Clift v. Taylor, [1948] 2 All E.R. 113; [1948] 2 K.B. 394; [1948] L.J.R. 1822; 2nd Digest Supp.	685, 689
Clore v. Theatrical Properties, Ltd. and Westby & Co., Ltd., [1936] 3 All E.R. 483; 30 Digest, Replacement, 535, 1703	1307, 1309, 1314
Cobb v. Cobb, [1900] P. 145, 294; 69 L.J.P. 52; 82 L.T. 626; 64 J.P. 200; 27 Digest 563, 6201	223
Cobbe v. Cobbe, (1909), 73 J.P. 208; 27 Digest 566, 6251	1360, 1361, 1362
Cockayne, In the Goods of, (1856), Dea. & Sw. 177; 164 E.R. 541; 44 Digest 363, 1961	111
Cockram v. Tropical Preservation Co., Ltd., [1951] 2 All E.R. 520; [1951] 2 K.B. 827; 115 J.P. 459	157, 158, 160
Cokayne v. Manyngham, (1470), 47 Selden Society 156	1203, 1210
Cole v. Harris, [1945] 2 All E.R. 146; [1945] K.B. 474; 114 L.J.K.B. 481; 173 L.T. 50; 2nd Digest Supp.	663, 665, 666, 668
Collett v. Collett, (1843), 3 Curt. 726; 163 E.R. 881; 27 Digest 392, 3866	1025, 1027
Colquhoun v. Heddon, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 129; 59 L.J.Q.B. 465; 62 L.T. 853; 2 Tax Cas. 621; 42 Digest 687, 1007	1388, 1391
Combe v. Combe, [1951] 1 All E.R. 767; [1951] 2 K.B. 215	414, 422, 735, 737, 738
Commins v. Massam, (1666), March. N.R. 196; 82 E.R. 473	123, 130
Compania Naviera Vascongado v. Cristina S.S., [1938] 1 All E.R. 719; [1938] A.C. 485; 107 L.J.P. 1; 159 L.T. 394; Digest Supp.	574, 579, 580, 582, 585, 586, 587, 588, 591, 1262, 1268, 1269
Comptoir Commercial Anversoais and Power, Son & Co., Re, [1920] 1 K.B. 863; 89 L.J.K.B. 849; 122 L.T. 567; 12 Digest, Replacement, 449, 3389	981, 983
Comptoir D'Achat et de Vente du Boerenbond Belge S/A v. Luis de Ridder, Limitada (The Julia), [1949] 1 All E.R. 269; [1949] A.C. 293; [1949] L.J.R. 513; 2nd Digest Supp.	1022, 1024
Congreve v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1948] 1 All E.R. 948; [1948] L.J.R. 1229; 30 Tax Cas. 163; 2nd Digest Supp.	646, 651
Conqueror, The, (1896), 166 U.S. (S.C.) 110	21, 23
Constantine (Joseph) S.S. Line, Ltd. v. Imperial Smelting Corp., Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 165; [1942] A.C. 154; 110 L.J.K.B. 433; 165 L.T. 27; 12 Digest, Replacement, 436, 3333	853, 857
Conway v. George Winney & Co., Ltd., [1951] 1 All E.R. 56	104, 105, 106
Cookson v. Harewood, [1932] 2 K.B. 478, n.; 101 L.J.K.B. 394, n.; 146 L.T. 550, n.; Digest Supp.	1176, 1180
Coomber v. Berks JJ., (1883), 9 App. Cas. 61; 53 L.J.Q.B. 239; 50 L.T. 405; 48 J.P. 421; 2 Tax Cas. 1; 28 Digest 14, 69	314, 319
Cooper v. Cadwalader, (1904), 5 Tax Cas. 101	647, 659
Cooper v. Cooper, [1950] W.N. 200	876, 884
Copps v. Payne, [1950] 1 All E.R. 246; [1950] 1 K.B. 611; 114 J.P. 118; 2nd Digest Supp.	1249, 1253
Corby, In the Goods of, (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 292; 23 L.T.O.S. 346; 164 E.R. 169; 39 Digest 332, 182	841, 843, 845
Corelli, Re, [1943] 2 All E.R. 519; [1943] Ch. 332; 112 L.J.Ch. 348; 169 L.T. 265; 2nd Digest Supp.	50, 54
Cornall v. Cornall, (1910), 74 J.P. 379; 27 Digest 557, 6123	875, 882
Cornfoot v. Fowke, (1840), 6 M. & W. 358; 9 L.J.Ex. 297; 151 E.R. 450; 1 Digest 589, 2255	139, 145
Cory v. Bristow, (1877), 2 App. Cas. 262; 46 L.J.M.C. 273; 36 L.T. 594; 41 J.P. 709; 38 Digest 451, 178	350, 352, 353, 354
Cory v. Greenwich (Churchwardens), (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 499; 41 L.J.M.C. 142; 27 L.T. 150; 36 J.P. 599; 38 Digest 480, 334	350, 352, 353, 354
Court v. Robinson, [1951] 1 All E.R. 209; [1951] 2 K.B. 60	728, 733, 1143, 1148
Coverdale v. Charlton, (1878), 4 Q.B.D. 104; 48 L.J.Q.B. 128; 40 L.T. 88; 43 J.P. 268; 43 Digest 336, 116	1108, 1111
Cow v. Casey, [1949] 1 All E.R. 197; [1949] 1 K.B. 474; [1949] L.J.R. 565; 2nd Digest Supp.	390, 395
Cowin, Re, (1886), 33 Ch.D. 179; 56 L.J.Ch. 78; 18 Digest 147, 973; 43 Digest 863, 3091	85, 168, 171
Cowley (Earl) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1899] A.C. 198; 68 L.J.Q.B. 435; 80 L.T. 361; 63 J.P. 436; 21 Digest 7, 27	162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167
Cox v. Cutler & Sons, Ltd. & Hampton Court Gas Co., [1948] 2 All E.R. 665; [1949] L.J.R. 294; 2nd Digest Supp.	680, 682

	PAGE
Cox-Sinclair, Re, Ex p. Jones , [1913] W.N. 263; 5 Digest 1033, 8449	70, 71
Coxen, Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 492; [1948] Ch. 747; [1948] L.J.R. 1590; 2nd Digest Supp.	827, 828, 831, 833
Cramp v. Cramp & Freeman, [1920] P. 158; 89 L.J.P. 119; 123 L.T. 141; 27 Digest 338, 3179	478, 479, 1076, 1080
Crawshaw, Re , [1947] 1 All E.R. 643; [1947] Ch. 356; affd. C.A. [1948] 1 All E.R. 107; [1948] Ch. 123; [1948] L.J.R. 586; 2nd Digest Supp.	964, 967
Crispin, Ex p. , Re Crispin , (1873), 8 Ch. App. 374; 42 L.J. Bey. 65; 28 L.T. 483; 37 J.P. 391; 4 Digest 72, 612	520, 521
Cristel v. Cristel, [1951] 2 All E.R. 574; [1951] 2 K.B. 725	1308, 1311
Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Veitch, [1942] 1 All E.R. 142; [1942] A.C. 435; 111 L.J.P.C. 17; 166 L.T. 172; 2nd Digest Supp.	227, 234
Croston v. Vaughan, [1937] 4 All E.R. 249; [1938] 1 K.B. 540; 107 L.J.K.B. 182; 158 L.T. 221; 102 J.P. 11; Digest Supp.	1327, 1238, 1342
Crozat v. Brogden, [1894] 2 Q.B. 30; 63 L.J.Q.B. 325; 70 L.T. 522; 40 Digest 433, 546	104
Cubitt & Terry v. Gower, (1933), 77 Sol. Jo. 732; Digest Supp.	436
Cumming v. Danson, [1942] 2 All E.R. 653; 112 L.J.K.B. 145; sub nom. Cumming v. Dawson	813, 815
168 L.T. 35; 2nd Digest Supp.	1053, 1056
Cummings v. London Bullion Co., Ltd., [1952] 1 All E.R. 383	897, 902
Cunningham v. Skinner, (1902), 4 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 1124
Curtis v. Wilcox, [1948] 2 All E.R. 573; [1948] 2 K.B. 474; [1949] L.J.R. 266; 2nd Digest Supp.	74, 77
Cutto v. Gilbert, (1854), 9 Moo. P.C.C. 131; 24 L.T.O.S. 193; 14 E.R. 247; 44 Digest 331, 1614	1030, 1031, 1032, 1033
Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co., [1922] 2 K.B. 478; 92 L.J.K.B. 81; 127 L.T. 824; 16 Digest 116, 151	342, 346, 414, 416, 417, 421, 1176, 1181, 1188
D—e v. A—g (falsely calling herself D—e), (1845), 1 Rob. Eccl. 279; 163 E.R. 1039; 27 Digest 267, 2350	1194, 1197
Daborn v. Bath Tramways Motor Co., Ltd. & Trevor Smithy, [1946] 2 All E.R. 333; 2nd Digest Supp.	443, 446
D'Aguiar v. D'Aguiar, (1794), 1 Hag. Ecc. 773; 162 E.R. 748; 27 Digest 406, 4064	876, 883
Danforth v. Danforth, (State of Maine) (1895), 33 Atlantic Reps. 731	1077, 1084
Darby, Re , (1943) 59 T.L.R. 418; 2nd Digest Supp.	425, 427
Davies v. Bristow, Penrhos College v. Butler, [1920] 3 K.B. 428; 90 L.J.K.B. 164; 123 L.T. 655; 31 Digest, Replacement, 510, 6349	432
Davies v. De Havilland Aircraft Co., Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 582; [1951] 1 K.B. 50; 2nd Digest Supp.	1302, 1305
Davies v. Owen (Thomas) & Co., [1919] 2 K.B. 39; 88 L.J.K.B. 887; 121 L.T. 156; 83 J.P. 193; 24 Digest 908, 63	833, 834, 835
Davies v. Swan Motor Co. (Swansea), Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 620; [1949] 2 K.B. 291; 2nd Digest Supp.	1093, 1102
Davy, Re , [1935] P. 1; sub nom. Davy v. A.—G., 103 L.J.P. 115; 151 L.T. 562; Digest Supp.	1229, 1234, 1241
Dawkins v. Antrobus, (1881), 17 Ch.D. 615; 44 L.T. 557; 8 Digest 507, 18	227, 1175, 1178, 1181
Dean, Re , (1889), 41 Ch.D. 552; 58 L.J.Ch. 693; 60 L.T. 813; 8 Digest 264, 259	1068, 1071, 1072, 1073
De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd. v. Howe, [1906] A.C. 455; 75 L.J.K.B. 858; 95 L.T. 221; 5 Tax Cas. 198; affg. [1905] 2 K.B. 612; 74 L.J.K.B. 934; 93 L.T. 63; 28 Digest 30, 155	646, 647, 655, 656, 657, 658, 660, 661
De Bode, In the Goods of , (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 189; 44 Digest 352, 1831	111
Debtor (No. 76 of 1929), Re A. , [1929] 2 Ch. 146; 98 L.J.Ch. 334; 141 L.T. 250; Digest Supp.	70
Debtor (No. 21 of 1950), Re A. Ex p. Debtor v. Bowmaker, Ltd. , [1950] 2 All E.R. 1129; [1951] Ch. 313; 2nd Digest Supp.	107, 109
De La Bere's Marriage Settlement Trusts, Re , [1941] 2 All E.R. 533; [1941] Ch. 443; 110 L.J.Ch. 194; 165 L.T. 393; 2nd Digest Supp.	425, 426
Delaney, Re , (1895), 39 Sol. Jo. 468; 44 Digest 1185, 10253	770, 772
De Lassalle v. Guildford, [1901] 2 K.B. 215; 70 L.J.K.B. 533; 84 L.T. 549; 35 Digest 14, 79	337, 340
De Mattos v. Gibson, (1858), 4 De G. & J. 276; 28 L.J.Ch. 165; 32 L.T.O.S. 268; 45 E.R. 108; 41 Digest 186, 266	1309, 1314
Dennis & Co., Ltd. v. Munn, [1949] 1 All E.R. 616; [1949] 2 K.B. 327; [1949] L.J.R. 857; 2nd Digest Supp.	355, 356, 359, 1008
De Noailles, Re , (1916), 85 L.J.Ch. 807; 114 L.T. 1089; 8 Digest 341, 1321	50, 53, 54
Derry v. Peek, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337; 58 L.J.Ch. 864; 61 L.T. 265; 54 J.P. 148; 9 Digest 125, 642	139, 141, 143, 144
De Trafford v. A.—G., [1935] A.C. 280; 104 L.J.K.B. 396; 153 L.T. 17; Digest Supp.	163, 164, 165
Devaynes v. Noble, Clayton's Case, (1816), 1 Mer. 529, 572; 35 E.R. 767, 781; 12 Digest, Replacement, 547, 4156	804
Dew v. United British S.S. Co., Ltd., (1928), 98 L.J.K.B. 88; 139 L.T. 628; Digest Supp.	1093, 1100
Dibbins v. Dibbins, [1896] 2 Ch. 343; 65 L.J.Ch. 724; 75 L.T. 137; 1 Digest 402, 1026	613, 626
Dickerson v. Dickerson, (State of Texas) (1919), 207 South Western Reps. 941	1077, 1084
Dickinson's Settlements, Re , [1939] Ch. 27; 103 L.J.Ch. 40; 159 L.T. 614; Digest Supp.	425, 426
Di Ferdinando v. Simon, Smits & Co., Ltd., [1920] 3 K.B. 409; 89 L.J.K.B. 1039; 124 L.T. 117; 35 Digest 175, 52	1053, 1055
Ditton's Case, (1701), 2 Salk. 490; 91 E.R. 421	123, 129
Dixon, Ltd., Re , [1947] 1 All E.R. 279; [1947] Ch. 251; [1947] L.J.R. 783; 177 L.T. 127; 2nd Digest Supp.	112, 113
Doe d. Breakey v. Breakey, (1845), 2 U.C.R. 349; 27 Digest 61, 1	496, 500
Doe d. Tomes v. Chamberlaine, (1839), 5 M. & W. 14; 9 L.J.Ex. 38; 151 E.R. 7; 31 Digest, Replacement, 36, 1927	149, 154
Doughty, Re , [1947] 1 All E.R. 207; [1947] Ch. 263; 176 L.T. 173; 2nd Digest Supp.	255, 261
Dowie's Will Trusts, Re , [1949] 1 All E.R. 968; [1949] Ch. 547; [1949] L.J.R. 1340; 2nd Digest Supp.	425, 427
D'Oyly, Re , [1917] 1 Ch. 556; 86 L.J.Ch. 373; 116 L.T. 442; 21 Digest 35, 225	364, 365
Dredge v. Dredge (otherwise Harrison), [1947] 1 All E.R. 29; 2nd Digest Supp.	858, 859, 862, 863
Drummond, Re , [1914] 2 Ch. 90; 83 L.J.Ch. 817; 111 L.T. 156; 8 Digest 244, 28	1068, 1074
Duff Development Co. v. Kelantan Government, [1924] A.C. 797; 93 L.J.Ch. 343; 131 L.T. 676; Digest Supp.	327, 330, 1262, 1267
Duffy v. Duffy, 1947 S.C. 54; 2nd Digest Supp.	876, 885
Dumpro's Case, (1603), 4 Co. Rep. 119 b; 76 E.R. 1110; sub nom. Dumper v. Syns, Cro. Eliz. 815; 78 E.R. 1042; 31 Digest, Replacement, 436, 5639	1355, 1357
Duncan v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd., [1942] 1 All E.R. 587; [1942] A.C. 624; 111 L.J.K.B. 406; 166 L.T. 366; 2nd Digest Supp.	180, 185
Dunlop v. Dunlop, 1950 S.C. 227; 2nd Digest Supp.	875, 879, 882, 884
Dunn v. Campbell, (1920), 4 Lloyd L.R. 36	436
Dyce v. Hay (Lady), (1852), 1 Macq. 305; 19 Digest 16, 42	809, 811

Edgington v. Fitzmaurice, (1884), 29 Ch.D. 459; 53 L.T. 369; affd. , C.A., 29 Ch.D. 476; 35 Digest 32, 240	478, 479
Edwards v. Meyrick, (1842), 2 Harc. 60; 12 L.J.Ch. 49; 67 E.R. 25; 42 Digest 82, 738	1363, 1369
Edwards v. Newland, [1950] 1 All E.R. 1072; [1950] 2 K.B. 534; 2nd Digest Supp.	1191, 1193
Edwards v. Porter, [1925] A.C. 1; 94 L.J.K.B. 65; 132 L.T. 496; affg. S.C. sub nom.
Eeles, In the Goods of , (1862), 2 Sw. & Tr. 600; 32 L.J.P.M. & A. 4; 7 L.T. 338; 27 J.P. 9; 164 E.R. 1130; 44 Digest 363, 1962	74, 76
Egerton v. Brownlow (Earl), (1853), 4 H.L. Cas. 1; 8 State Tr. N.S. 193; 23 L.J.Ch. 348; 21 L.T.O.S. 306; 10 E.R. 359; 44 Digest 460, 2806	111
Egerton v. Rutter, [1951] 1 K.B. 472	146, 147
Egyptian Delta Land & Investment Co., Ltd. v. Todd, [1929] A.C. 1; 98 L.J.K.B. 1; 140 L.T. 50; sub nom. Todd v. Egyptian Delta Land & Investment Co., Ltd., 14 Tax Cas. 119; Digest Supp.	979, 980
Ere (Earl) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1918] 2 K.B. 735; 88 L.J.K.B. 337; 119 L.T. 568; 21 Digest 24, 136	647, 654, 655, 656, 657, 659, 661
Ere v. Joicey, [1935] A.C. 209; 104 L.J.Ch. 111; sub nom. Re Joicey, 152 L.T. 398; Digest Supp.	80, 82
Embleton, Re, [1946] 2 All E.R. 542; [1947] K.B. 142; [1947] L.J.R. 423; 175 L.T. 451; 2nd Digest Supp.	769, 771, 773
Empire Meat Co., Ltd. v. Patrick, [1939] 2 All E.R. 85; Digest Supp.	787, 789, 1135, 1138, 1140, 1141
English Bank of the River Plate, Re. Ex p. Bank of Brazil, [1893] 2 Ch. 438; 62 L.J.Ch. 578; 69 L.T. 14; 10 Digest 932, 6383	116, 119, 120
Equitable Trust Co. of New York v. Dawson Partners Ltd., (1926), 25 Lloyd L.R. 90	89, 91
Ermen, Re, [1903] 2 Ch. 156; 72 L.J.Ch. 492; 88 L.T. 353; Digest, Practice, 947, 4873	492, 493
Errington v. Errington, [1952] 1 All E.R. 149	942, 948
Errington v. Minister of Health, [1935] 1 K.B. 249; 104 L.J.K.B. 49; 152 L.T. 154; 99 J.P. 15; Digest Supp.	1199, 1201, 1202, 1299, 1302, 1307, 1308, 1311, 1312, 1314, 1316
Euston (Earl) v. Lord Henry Seymour, (1802), cited in 2 Curt. 339; 163 E.R. 432	481, 487, 489
Evans v. Edmonds, (1853), 13 C.B. 777; 1 C.L.R. 653; 22 L.J.C.P. 211; 21 L.T.O.S. 155; 138 E.R. 1407; 35 Digest 32, 235	841, 844
Evans v. Evans, [1947] 2 All E.R. 656; [1948] 1 K.B. 175; [1948] L.J.R. 276; 112 J.P. 23; 2nd Digest Supp.	189
Evans (Joseph) & Co. v. Heathcote, [1918] 1 K.B. 418; 87 L.J.K.B. 593; 118 L.T. 556; 12 Digest, Replacement, 324, 2497	401, 402, 1348, 1349
Everitt v. Everitt, [1949] 1 All E.R. 908; [1949] P. 374; 113 J.P. 279; 2nd Digest Supp.	414, 421
Eves, Re, [1939] Ch. 969; 108 L.J.Ch. 374; 161 L.T. 270; Digest Supp.	1322, 1324
Fagernes, The, [1927] P. 311; 96 L.J.P. 183; 138 L.T. 30; Digest Supp.	1037, 1039
Fairclough v. Whipp, [1951] 2 All E.R. 834; 115 J.P. 612	327, 330
Fairey v. Fairey, [1947] South Australia Reports 69	58
Farnham, Re, [1895] 2 Ch. 799; 64 L.J.Ch. 717; 73 L.T. 231; 4 Digest 80, 243	1077, 1085
Fellows-Gordon v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 683; Digest Supp.	925, 926
Fenwick's Will Trusts, Re, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1096; [1936] Ch. 720; 105 L.J.Ch. 351; 155 L.T. 199; Digest Supp.	867, 871
Ferdinand (Ex-Tsar of Bulgaria), Re, [1921] 1 Ch. 107; 90 L.J.Ch. 1; 11 Digest 514, 152	842, 844
Finch v. Telegraph Construction & Maintenance Co., Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 425; 2nd Digest Supp.	314, 321, 322
Firebrace v. Firebrace, (1878), 4 P.D. 63; 47 L.J.P. 41; 39 L.T. 94; 27 Digest 392, 3368	985, 987
Fisher v. Fisher, [1942] 1 All E.R. 438; [1942] P. 101; 111 L.J.P. 28; 166 L.T. 225; 2nd Digest Supp.	1026, 1029
Fitch v. Dewes, [1921] 2 A.C. 158; 90 L.J.Ch. 436; 125 L.T. 744; 43 Digest 34, 276	414, 420, 735, 736, 738, 739, 740
Fitzgerald v. Firbank, [1897] 2 Ch. 98; 66 L.J.Ch. 529; 76 L.T. 534; 25 Digest 4, 4	116, 117
Fitzwilliam's (Earl) Wentworth Estates Co. v. Minister of Town & Country Planning, [1951] 1 All E.R. 982; affd. H.L. sub nom. Fitzwilliam's (Earl) Wentworth Estates Co. v. Minister of Housing & Local Government, [1952] 1 All E.R. 509	1323, 1331
Flanders v. Nicholls, (1737), Barnes 433; 94 E.R. 990	1294, 1296, 1297, 1298
Flower v. Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron & Coal Co., Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 182; 103 L.J.K.B. 465; 151 L.T. 87; reversd. on other grounds , [1936] A.C. 206; Digest Supp.	760, 762
Forbes v. Eden, (1867), L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 568; 8 Digest 506, 9	696, 1093, 1099, 1102
Forbes v. Marshall, (1855), 11 Exch. 166; 24 L.J.Ex. 305; 25 L.T.O.S. 147; 156 E.R. 788; 6 Digest 42, 309	227, 234
Forget v. Baxter, [1900] A.C. 467; 69 L.J.P.C. 101; 82 L.T. 510; 42 Digest 794, 32	709, 712, 716
Formby v. Barker, [1903] 2 Ch. 539; 72 L.J.Ch. 716; 89 L.T. 249; 40 Digest 306, 2626	450, 452
Forster v. Elvet Colliery Co., Ltd., Quinn v. Same, Seed v. Same, Morgan v. Same, [1908] 1 K.B. 629; affd. H.L. sub nom. Dyson v. Forster, Dyson v. Seed, Quinn, Morgan, etc., [1909] A.C. 98; 78 L.J.K.B. 246; 99 L.T. 942; 34 Digest 686, 799	280, 235, 287
Foster, Re, [1933] 3 All E.R. 357; 159 L.T. 279; Digest Supp.	60, 63
Foster v. Robinson, [1950] 2 All E.R. 342; [1951] 1 K.B. 149; 31 Digest, Replacement, 697, 7838; 2nd Digest Supp.	60, 65
Fountain v. Carmarthen Ry. Co., (1868), L.R. 5 Eq. 316; 37 L.J.Ch. 429; 10 Digest 1178, 3361	149, 152, 154, 155, 156, 1199, 1201
Fowler v. Bratt, [1950] 1 All E.R. 662; [1950] 2 K.B. 96; 2nd Digest Supp.	554, 569
Fox v. Newfoundland Government, [1898] A.C. 667; 11 Digest 582, c	1286, 1288, 1289
Fraenkel v. Whitty, [1947] 2 All E.R. 646; [1948] Ch. 65; [1948] L.J.R. 322; 2nd Digest Supp.	315, 322
Frankenburg v. Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd., [1931] 1 Ch. 428; 100 L.J.K.B. 187; 144 L.T. 534; Digest, Practice, 948, 4878	1107, 1108, 1111, 1115, 1116
Franklin v. Gramophone Co., Ltd., [1948] 1 All E.R. 353; [1948] 1 K.B. 542; [1948] L.J.R. 870; 2nd Digest Supp.	241, 245, 942, 953, 958
Franklin v. Minister of Town and Country Planning, [1947] 2 All E.R. 289; [1948] A.C. 87; [1947] L.J.R. 1440; 111 J.P. 497; 2nd Digest Supp.	56, 57, 833, 835
Friary, Holroyd & Healey's Breweries, Ltd. v. Singleton, [1899] 1 Ch. 86; reversed on the facts , [1899] 2 Ch. 261; 68 L.J.Ch. 622; 81 L.T. 101; 21 Digest 395, 1571	482, 490
Fry, Re, [1945] 2 All E.R. 205; [1945] Ch. 348; 115 L.J.Ch. 3; 173 L.T. 282; 2nd Digest Supp.	60, 63
Fry, Re, [1946] 2 All E.R. 106; [1946] Ch. 312; 115 L.J.Ch. 225; 175 L.T. 392; 2nd Digest Supp.	409, 410
Fuchs, Re, [1944] 1 All E.R. 338; [1944] Ch. 200; 113 L.J.Ch. 97; 170 L.T. 191; 2nd Digest Supp.	1217, 1223
G. v. G., [1924] A.C. 349; 131 L.T. 70; 27 Digest 266, 2347	44, 45, 46, 47
G. v. M., (1885), 10 App. Cas. 171; 53 L.T. 398; 27 Digest 351, 3339	1194, 1198
	858, 860, 864, 865, 866

	PAGE
Gagara, The, [1919] P. 95; 88 L.J.P. 101; 122 L.T. 498; Digest Supp.	574, 588
Gaisberg v. Storr, [1949] 2 All E.R. 411; [1950] 1 K.B. 107; 2nd Digest Supp.	414, 422
Galashiels Gas Co., Ltd. v. O'Donnell or Millar, [1949] 1 All E.R. 319; [1949] A.C. 275; [1949] L.J.R. 540; 113 J.P. 144; 2nd Digest Supp.	1302, 1306
Gallagher v. Dorman, Long & Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 38; 177 L.T. 142; 2nd Digest Supp.	1093, 1099
Gare, Re, [1951] 2 All E.R. 863	79
General Medical Council v. Spackman, [1943] 2 All E.R. 337; [1943] A.C. 617; 112 L.J.K.B. 529; 169 L.T. 226; 2nd Digest Supp.	124, 131
Gibby v. East Grinstead Gas & Water Co., [1944] 1 All E.R. 358; 170 L.T. 256; 2nd Digest Supp.	935, 937, 941
Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain & Ireland, [1903] 2 K.B. 600; 72 L.J.K.B. 907; 89 L.T. 386; 43 Digest 118, 1226	227, 231
Gibson v. Holland, (1865), L.R. 1 C.P. 1; 35 L.J.C.P. 5; 13 L.T. 293; 39 Digest 8	1286, 1288
Gilchester Properties, Ltd. v. Gomm, [1948] 1 All E.R. 493; 2nd Digest Supp.	235, 238
Giles v. Randall, [1915] 1 K.B. 290; 84 L.J.K.B. 786; 112 L.T. 271; Digest, P. 936, 4756, 948, 4881	241, 242, 244, 246, 248, 942, 950, 951, 953,
Glenfinlas, The, [1918] P. 363, n; 122 L.T. 655, n; 41 Digest 806, 6674
Glengoil S.S. Co. v. Pilkington, Glengoil S.S. Co. v. Ferguson, (1897), 28 S.C.R. 146; 41 Digest 200, 1	305, 310
Glenister v. Glenister, [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; 2nd Digest Supp.	1322, 1323, 1324, 1325
Glossop v. Heston & Isleworth Local Board, (1879), 12 Ch.D. 102; 40 L.J.Ch. 89; 40 L.T. 736; 44 J.P. 36; 38 Digest 42, 249	1328, 1335, 1336, 1337
Gloucester (County of) Bank v. Rudry Merthyr Steam & House Coal Colliery Co., [1895] 1 Ch. 629; 84 L.J.Ch. 451; 72 L.T. 375; 9 Digest 98, 410	555, 569
Godin, Re, 10 Clunet (1883), 61	496, 500
Godley, In the Goods of, (1907), 47 L.L.T. 160	842, 848
Goerz & Co. v. Bell, [1904] 2 K.B. 136; 73 L.J.K.B. 448; 90 L.T. 675; 28 Digest 81, 160	647, 655
Goldsoil v. Goldman, [1915] 1 Ch. 292; 17 Digest 85, 41	414, 416, 417, 421
Goodright d. Rolfe v. Harwood, (1775), 7 Bro. Parl. Cas. 489; 3 E.R. 318; 44 Digest 343, 1723	1031, 1032
Goodwin v. Storrar, [1947] 1 All E.R. 203; [1947] K.B. 457; [1947] L.J.R. 1013; 2nd Digest Supp.	241, 245, 942, 950, 953, 958
Gordon, Re, [1940] 3 All E.R. 205; [1940] Ch. 769; 109 L.J.Ch. 289; 163 L.T. 308; 2nd Digest Supp.	274, 277
Gordon Hill Trust, Ltd. v. Segall, [1941] 2 All E.R. 379; 2nd Digest Supp.	139, 140, 142, 145
Gorham (Contractors), Ltd. v. Field, (1952), unreported	1199, 1202
Gorst v. Gorst, [1951] 2 All E.R. 956; 115 J.P. 634	838, 839, 840
Gossage, In the Estate of, [1921] P. 194; 90 L.J.P. 201; 124 L.T. 770; 39 Digest 338, 245	841, 842, 851
Gottliffe v. Edelston, [1930] 2 K.B. 378; 99 L.J.K.B. 547; 143 L.T. 595; Digest Supp.	74, 75, 76, 77
Gourju's Will Trusts, Re, [1942] 2 All E.R. 605; [1943] Ch. 24; 112 L.J.Ch. 75; 168 L.T. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	629, 633, 1108, 1114, 1121
Grant v. Edmondson, [1931] 1 Ch. 1; 100 L.J.Ch. 1; 143 L.T. 749; Digest Supp.	60, 63
Grant v. Oxford Local Board, (1868), L.R. 4 Q.B. 9; 38 L.J.M.C. 39; 19 L.T. 378; 33 J.P. 228; 38 Digest 479, 382	350
Grant v. Sun Shipping Co., Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 238; [1948] A.C. 549; [1949] L.J.R. 727; 2nd Digest Supp.	1093, 1107
Great Central Ry. Co. v. Balby-with-Hexthorpe Urban Council, A-G. v. Great Central Ry. Co., [1912] 2 Ch. 110; 81 L.J.Ch. 596; 106 L.T. 413; 76 J.P. 205; 26 Digest 292, 240	1249, 1250
Greenwood, Re, [1901] 1 Ch. 887; 70 L.J.Ch. 326; 84 L.T. 118; 44 Digest 1234, 10665	1108, 1111
Greenwood v. Sketcher, [1951] 1 All E.R. 750	482, 491
Grenville v. College of Physicians, (1700), 12 Mod. Rep. 386 (88 E.R. 1398); sub nom. Groenvelt v. Burnell, Carth. 491 (90 E.R. 883); Holt, K.B. 184 (90 E.R. 1000); Holt, K.B. 536 (90 E.R. 1195); 1 Com. 76 (92 E.R. 967); 1 Salk. 144 (91 E.R. 134); 16 Digest 400, 2440	123, 130
Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop, [1902] A.C. 287; 71 L.J.K.B. 618; 86 L.T. 693; 66 J.P. 755; 4 Tax Cas. 464; 28 Digest 77, 422	867, 873, 874
Grimes (otherwise Edwards) v. Grimes, [1948] 2 All E.R. 147; [1948] P. 323; [1948] L.J.R. 1471; 2nd Digest Supp.	1194, 1196
Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Hannay & Co., [1918] 2 K.B. 623; 87 L.J.K.B. 1223; 119 L.T. 321; 6 Digest 161, 1037	492, 493
Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Van den Berghs, (1925), 22 Lloyd L.R. 447	492, 493
Guest v. Shipley (falsely calling herself Guest), (1820), 2 Hag. Con. 321; 161 E.R. 757; 27 Digest 325, 3036	858, 860
Gutierrez, Ex p., Re Gutierrez, (1879), 11 Ch.D. 298; 40 L.T. 355; 4 Digest 72, 613	520, 521
Gwinne v. Poole, (1692), 2 Lut. 935, App. 1560; 125 E.R. 522, 858; 38 Digest 69, 450	227, 232, 233
Hadden v. Hadden, (1919), The Times, Dec. 5	875, 881
Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 8 Digest 138, 910	970, 974
Hadley & Co. v. Henry, (1896), 22 V.L.R. 230; 6 Digest 210, d	709, 712, 715
Haigh v. Deudraeth Rural District Council, [1945] 2 All E.R. 661; 174 L.T. 243; 110 J.P. 97; 2nd Digest Supp.	1323, 1337
Hale, In the Goods of, [1915] 2 I.R. 362; 44 Digest 304, b	841, 842, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853
Hall, Re, [1943] 2 All E.R. 753; [1944] Ch. 46; 113 L.J.Ch. 76; 169 L.T. 387; 2nd Digest Supp.	1108, 1121
Hall v. Booth, (1834), 3 Nev. & M.K.B. 316; 14 Digest 175, 1531	1203, 1208, 1212
Hall v. Mariani, (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 148; Digest Supp.	867, 871
Hall v. Mariani, (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 582; Digest Supp.	866, 867, 870, 871, 872
Hall (Harry), Ltd. v. Barron, (1949), 30 Tax Cas. 451; 2nd Digest Supp.	889, 892, 894, 895
Hallett's Estate, Re, (1880), 13 Ch.D. 696; 49 L.J.Ch. 415; 42 L.T. 421; 12 Digest, Replacement, 554, 4195	804
Hallwood Estates, Ltd. v. Flack, (1950), 66 (pt. 2) T.L.R. 368; 2nd Digest Supp.	725, 727
Hamer v. Cunard White Star, Ltd. The Queen Mary, [1952] 1 All E.R. 787	1135, 1139
Hampshire, In the Estate of, [1951] W.N. 174	1031, 1033
Hanau v. Ehrlich, [1912] A.C. 39; 81 L.J.K.B. 397; 106 L.T. 1; 12 Digest, Replacement, 139, 869	405, 407
Hancock v. Smith, (1889), 41 Ch.D. 456; 58 L.J.Ch. 725; 61 L.T. 341; 43 Digest 1022, 4616	134, 136
Hancock v. Watson, [1902] A.C. 14; 71 L.J.Ch. 149; 85 L.T. 729; 43 Digest 644, 792	985, 989
Hanson v. Newman, [1934] Ch. 293; 103 L.J.Ch. 124; 150 L.T. 345; 31 Digest, Replacement, 373, 5039	463, 465
Harbin v. Gordon, [1914] 2 K.B. 577; 83 L.J.K.B. 322; 109 L.T. 794; 42 Digest 213, 2375	943, 962
Harland's Case, (1641), Clay. 97; 29 Digest 5, 42	289, 291
Harling v. Eddy, [1951] 2 All E.R. 212; [1951] 2 K.B. 739	775, 780

	PAGE
Harmony & Montague Tin & Copper Mining Co., Re , Spargo's Case, (1873), 8 Ch. App. 407; 42 L.J.Ch. 488; 28 L.T. 153; 9 Digest 92, 379	867, 873
Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corp., [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 74 L.J.Ch. 219; 92 L.T. 153; 69 J.P. 62; 44 Digest 58, 418	1328, 1337
Harrison, Re , (1885), 30 Ch.D. 390; 55 L.J.Ch. 799; 53 L.T. 799; 44 Digest 550, 3684	674, 675, 676
Harrison v. National Coal Board, [1951] 1 All E.R. 1102; [1951] A.C. 639	936, 939
Harrison v. Rutland (Duke), [1893] 1 Q.B. 142; 62 L.J.Q.B. 117; 68 L.T. 35; 26 Digest 317, 491	635
Harrison's Will Trusts, Re , [1949] Ch. 678; 2nd Digest Supp.	255, 261
Harrogate Corp. v. Mackay, [1907] 2 K.B. 611; 76 L.J.K.B. 977; 97 L.T. 689; 71 J.P. 458; 43 Digest 1081, 158	7, 9
Harte v. Williams, [1934] 1 K.B. 201; 103 L.J.K.B. 108; 150 L.T. 238; Digest Supp.	405, 406, 407
Hartell v. Blackler, [1920] 2 K.B. 161; 89 L.J.K.B. 838; 123 L.T. 171; 31 Digest, Replace- ment, 506, 6321	431
Harvey v. Road Haulage Executive, [1952] 1 K.B. 120	1093, 1102
Haswell v. Haswell & Sanderson, (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 502; 29 L.J.P. & M. 21; 1 L.T. 69; 23 J.P. 825; 164 E.R. 832; 27 Digest 373, 3609	1322, 1324
Hatch, Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 288; [1948] Ch. 592; [1948] L.J.R. 1393; 2nd Digest Supp.	629, 631, 827, 828, 829 21, 26, 28, 29, 32, 33
Hauk, The, (1927), 30 Lloyd L.R. 32; (1928), S.L.T. 71	21, 23, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33
Haversham Grange, The, [1905] P. 307; 74 L.J.P. 115; 93 L.T. 738; 29 Digest 246, 1982	796, 800
Haviland v. Long (Dunn Trust, Ltd., Third Party), [1952] 1 All E.R. 463	841, 844
Hayes, In the Goods of , (1839), 2 Curt. 338; 163 E.R. 431; 39 Digest 333, 191	853, 856
Haynes v. Haynes, (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 426; 30 L.J.Ch. 578; 4 L.T. 199; 62 E.R. 442; 11 Digest 175, 526	770, 772
Heath, Re , (1904), 48 Sol. Jo. 416; 44 Digest 1185, 10254	337, 338
Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton, [1913] A.C. 30; 82 L.J.K.B. 245; 107 L.T. 769; 35 Digest 54, 486	1031, 1032
Hellier v. Hellier, (1884), 9 P.D. 237; 53 L.J.P. 105; 49 J.P. 8; 44 Digest 342, 1721	78, 79
Hemming v. Gurrey, (1827), 1 Dow. & Cl. 35; 6 E.R. 438; 44 Digest 1010, 4684	133, 134, 136, 137
Henderson, Re , [1940] 3 All E.R. 295; [1940] Ch. 764; 109 L.J.Ch. 363; 2nd Digest Supp.	170 L.T. 84; 2nd Digest Supp. 477, 478, 479, 480, 1077, 1080, 1081, 1082, 1085, 1089, 1090, 1091
Henderson v. Henderson & Crellin, [1944] 1 All E.R. 44; [1944] A.C. 49; 113 L.J.P. 1; 170 L.T. 84; 2nd Digest Supp. 477, 478, 479, 480, 1077, 1080, 1081, 1082, 1085, 1089, 1090, 1091	305; 107 L.J.K.B. 225; Digest Supp.
Herniman v. Smith, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1377; affd. H.L., [1938] 1 All E.R. 1; [1938] A.C. 305; 107 L.J.K.B. 225; Digest Supp.	1, 2, 3, 5, 6
Herod v. Herod, [1938] 3 All E.R. 722; [1939] P. 11; 108 L.J.P. 27; 159 L.T. 530; Digest Supp.	1384, 1385, 1386
Hesketh v. Birmingham Corp., [1924] 1 K.B. 260; 93 L.J.K.B. 461; 130 L.T. 476; 88 J.P. 77; 38 Digest 48, 280	1328, 1336
Hewitson v. Sherwin, (1870), L.R. 10 Eq. 53; 22 L.T. 576; 5 Digest 1034, 8458	70, 71
Hicklin, Re , [1914] 2 Ch. 278; 86 L.J.Ch. 740; 117 L.T. 403; 21 Digest 28, 157	45, 46
Hicks v. Faulkner, (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 167; 51 L.J.Q.B. 268; 46 L.T. 127; 46 J.P. 420; 33 Digest 467, 18	1, 3
Hill v. Tupper, (1863), 2 H. & C. 121; 32 L.J.Ex. 217; 8 L.T. 792; 159 E.R. 51; 19 Digest 23, 91	809, 811
Hines (Ipswich Revenue Officer) v. Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Assocn., Ltd., [1931] 1 K.B. 385; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 94 J.P. 177; affd. H.L., [1931] A.C. 456; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; Digest Supp.	157, 158, 159, 161
Hiscock, In the Goods of , [1901] P. 78; 70 L.J.P. 22; 84 L.T. 61; 39 Digest 334, 202	842, 847, 848, 849 1031, 1032
Hitchins v. Basset, (1694), 2 Salk. 592; 91 E.R. 495; 44 Digest 343, 1729	123, 130
Hodgkinson v. Fernie, (1857), 3 C.B.N.S. 189; 27 L.J.C.P. 66; 140 E.R. 712; 2 Digest 527, 1645	350, 352, 354
Holland v. Hodgson, [1872], L.R. 7 C.P. 328; 41 L.J.C.P. 146; 26 L.T. 709; 35 Digest 304, 538	925, 928
Holmes v. Mather, (1875), L.R. 10 Exch. 261; 44 L.J.Ex. 176; 33 L.T. 361; 39 J.P. 567; 15 Digest 826, 9036	597, 599
Holt v. Rhodes (W. H.) & Son, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 478; 2nd Digest Supp.	809, 811
Home v. Young, (1846), Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 286	173, 174, 177, 178
Hood-Barrs v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1946] 2 All E.R. 768; 176 L.T. 283; 27 Tax Cas. 385; 2nd Digest Supp.	1068, 1071, 1073
Hooper, Re , [1932] 1 Ch. 38; 101 L.J.Ch. 61; 146 L.T. 208; Digest Supp.	297
Hopes v. Hopes, [1948] 2 All E.R. 920; [1949] P. 227; [1949] L.J.R. 104; 113 J.P. 10; 2nd Digest Supp.	414, 416
Hopkins v. Prescott, (1847), 4 C.B. 578; 16 L.J.C.P. 259; 9 L.T.O.S. 223; 11 J.P. 680; 136 E.R. 634; 15 Digest 665, 7175	1128, 1132
Houghton & Co. v. Nothard, Lowe & Wills, [1927] 1 K.B. 246; 96 L.J.K.B. 25; 136 L.T. 140; affd. H.L., [1928] A.C. 1; 97 L.J.K.B. 76; 138 L.T. 210; Digest Supp.	149, 154
554, 556, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 571	59, 62
Houlden v. Smith, (1850), 14 Q.B. 841; 19 L.J.Q.B. 170; 15 L.T.O.S. 64; 14 J.P. 687; 117 E.R. 323; 38 Digest 84, 616	227, 232, 235
House Property & Investment Co., Ltd. v. James Walker (Goldsmith & Silversmith), Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 789; [1948] 1 K.B. 257; [1948] L.J.R. 343; 2nd Digest Supp.	1143, 1149
Household Machines, Ltd. v. Cosmos Exporters, Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 622; [1947] K.B. 217; [1947] L.J.R. 578; 176 L.T. 49; 2nd Digest Supp.	89, 92, 970, 976
Howard v. Howard, [1945] 1 All E.R. 91; [1945] P. 1; 114 L.J.P. 11; 172 L.T. 38; 2nd Digest Supp.	1128, 1132
Howard v. Shaw, (1841), 8 M. & W. 118; 10 L.J.Ex. 334; 151 E.R. 973; 40 Digest 194, 1628	149, 154
Howatson v. Webb, [1907] 1 Ch. 537; affd. C.A., [1908] 1 Ch. 1; 77 L.J.Ch. 32; 97 L.T. 730; 35 Digest 632, 3646	59, 62
Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), Re Howe v. Aylesbury, (1802), 7 Ves. 137; 32 E.R. 56; 44 Digest 197, 265	342, 345
Howell v. Palmouth Boat Construction, Ltd., [1951] 2 All E.R. 278; [1951] A.C. 837 697, 699, 1008, 1010	107, 109
Howes, Re . Exp. Hughes, [1892] 2 Q.B. 628; 62 L.J.Q.B. 88; 67 L.T. 213; 4 Digest 96, 371	1258, 1259, 1260
Hubbard v. Messenger, [1937] 4 All E.R. 48; [1938] 1 K.B. 300; 107 L.J.K.B. 44; 157 L.T. 512; 101 J.P. 533; Digest Supp.	50, 53, 54
Hummeltnberg, Re , [1923] 1 Ch. 237; 92 L.J.Ch. 326; 129 L.T. 124; Digest Supp.	501, 502, 506, 507
Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co., Ltd., [1908] 2 K.B. 309; 77 L.J.K.B. 732; 98 L.T. 629; 32 Digest 139, 1702	30
Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd., [1915] 1 K.B. 1; 83 L.J.K.B. 1837; 111 L.T. 972; 30 Digest, Replacement, 540, 1742	1308, 1312
Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, [1947] 2 All E.R. 792; 2nd Digest Supp.	1308, 1310, 1311

	PAGE
Hydarnes S.S. Co. v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Assurance Co., [1895] 1 Q.B. 500; 64	775, 780
L.J.Q.B. 353; 72 L.T. 103; 29 Digest 69, 265
Hyman v. Hyman, [1929] P. 1; affd. H.L. [1929] A.C. 601; 98 L.J.P. 81; 141 L.T. 329;	735, 737, 738, 739
93 J.P. 209; Digest Supp.
Illingworth, Re , [1909] 2 Ch. 297; 78 L.J.Ch. 701; 101 L.T. 104; 37 Digest 426, 343	425, 427
Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsell, [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T.	985, 992
621; 55 J.P. 805; 3 Tax Cas. 53; 8 Digest 241, 1
Indermaur v. Dames, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 274; 35 L.J.C.P. 184; 14 L.T. 484; affd. Ex Ch. ,	765, 768
(1867), L.R. 2 C.P. 311; 36 L.J.C.P. 181; 16 L.T. 293; 31 J.P. 390; 36 Digest 35, 208
Indian & General Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Borax Consolidated, Ltd., [1920] 1 K.B. 539; 89	643, 645
L.J.K.B. 252; 122 L.T. 547; 11 Digest 387, 640
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Ayrshire Employers Mutual Insurance Assocn., Ltd., [1946]	532, 545
1 All E.R. 637; 175 L.T. 227; 27 Tax Cas. 331; 2nd Digest Supp.
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Cook, [1945] 2 All E.R. 377; [1946] A.C. 1; 114 L.J.P.C. 69;	34, 36, 37
173 L.T. 211; 26 Tax Cas. 489; 2nd Digest Supp.
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest, (1890), 15 App. Cas. 334; 60 L.J.Q.B. 281; 63 L.T. 36;	985, 995, 997, 1003, 1005
54 J.P. 772; 3 Tax Cas. 117; 39 Digest 299, 730
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Harrison, (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 1; 43 L.J.Ex. 138; 30 L.T. 274;	163, 165
21 Digest 110, 828
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Lysaght, [1928] A.C. 234; 97 L.J.K.B. 385; 139 L.T. 6; sub nom.	647, 654
Lysaght v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 13 Tax Cas. 511; Digest Supp.	173, 176
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Morton, 1941 S.C. 467; 24 Tax Cas. 259; 2nd Digest Supp.
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Scott, [1892] 2 Q.B. 152; 61 L.J.Q.B. 432; 67 L.T. 173; 56 J.P.	985, 999
632; 3 Tax Cas. 134; 8 Digest 264, 265
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Von Glehn, [1920] 2 K.B. 553; 89 L.J.K.B. 590; 123 L.T. 338;	1290, 1292
12 Tax Cas. 232; 28 Digest 46, 236
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Warnes & Co., [1919] 2 K.B. 444; 89 L.J.K.B. 6; 121 L.T. 125;	531, 533
12 Tax Cas. 227; 28 Digest 46, 235	255, 260
Inman, Re , [1915] 1 Ch. 187; 84 L.J.Ch. 309; 112 L.T. 240; 44 Digest 209, 373	16, 18
Innes, Re , [1910] 1 Ch. 188; 79 L.J.Ch. 174; 101 L.T. 633; 25 Digest 540, 275
Institution of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 100 L.J.K.B.	985, 987, 996, 1005
705; 145 L.T. 553; 16 Tax Cas. 158; Digest Supp.
International Ry. Co. v. Niagara Parks Commission, [1941] 2 All E.R. 456; [1941] A.C. 328;	314, 318
111 L.J.P.C. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	179, 185
Irish Society v. Derry (Bp.), (1846), 12 Cl. & Fin. 641; 8 E.R. 1561; 22 Digest 350, 3543	842
Iter, In the Goods of , [1950] 1 All E.R. 68; [1950] P. 130; 2nd Digest Supp.	280, 284, 285
Ives v. Brown, [1919] 2 Ch. 314; 88 L.J.Ch. 373; 122 L.T. 267; 40 Digest 322, 2728
J. v. J., [1947] 2 All E.R. 43; [1947] P. 158; [1947] L.J.R. 1468; 177 L.T. 157; 2nd Digest	1194, 1198
Supp.	78, 79
Jackson v. Jackson, (1788), 2 Cox, Eq. Cas. 35; 30 E.R. 17; 44 Digest 1010, 8678
Jacobs v. London County Council, [1950] 1 All E.R. 737; [1950] A.C. 361; 114 J.P. 204;	554, 558, 567
2nd Digest Supp.
James, Re , [1947] 1 All E.R. 402; [1947] Ch. 256; [1947] L.J.R. 735; 176 L.T. 370; 2nd	274, 276, 277, 278
Digest Supp.
James v. Smith, (1921), [1931] 2 K.B. 317, n; 100 L.J.K.B. 585, n; 145 L.T. 457, n;	1395, 1396
Digest Supp.	295, 296
James v. Thomas H. Kent & Co., Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 1099; 2nd Digest Supp.	355, 356, 359
Jamieson v. Watt's Trustee 1950 S.C. 265; 2nd Digest Supp.
Jarvis v. Moy, Davies, Smith, Vandervell & Co., [1936] 1 K.B. 399; 105 L.J.K.B. 309;	215, 216, 217, 218
154 L.T. 365; Digest Supp.	529, 530
Jay (William A.) & Sons v. Vevers, Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 646; 2nd Digest Supp.	876, 885
Jeapes v. Jeapes, (1903), 89 L.T. 74; 27 Digest 284, 2557
Jebara v. Ottoman Bank, [1927] 2 K.B. 254; 96 L.J.K.B. 581; 137 L.T. 101; reversd. H.L.	1270, 1278
sub nom. Ottoman Bank v. Jebara, [1928] A.C. 269; 97 L.J.K.B. 502; 139 L.T. 194;
Digest Supp.	1385, 1387
Jeffreys v. Jeffreys & Smith, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 493; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 84; 10 L.T. 309;	985, 1003
164 E.R. 1366; 27 Digest 356, 3404
Jenkin v. Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, [1921] 1 Ch. 392; 90 L.J.Ch. 47; 124	637, 639, 640, 641, 642
L.T. 309; 13 Digest 359, 944
Joachimson v. Swiss Bank Corpn., [1921] 3 K.B. 110; 90 L.J.K.B. 973; 125 L.T. 338; 21	157, 158, 161
Digest 639, 2188	790, 791, 794, 795
Jobling (James A.) & Co., Ltd. v. Sunderland County Borough Assessment Committee, [1944]	450, 451, 452
1 All E.R. 500; 2nd Digest Supp.
Johnson v. Johnson, [1949] 2 All E.R. 247; [1950] P. 23; 2nd Digest Supp.	1022, 1023
Johnson v. Pritchard, (1933), 97 J.P. 754; 176 L.T. Jo. 389; Digest Supp.
Johnson v. Taylor Brothers & Co., Ltd., [1920] A.C. 144; 89 L.J.K.B. 227; 122	1135, 1137, 1138, 1139, 1140
L.T. 130; 39 Digest 660, 2515	942, 954
Johnston v. Liston (H.) & Co., [1920] 1 K.B. 99; 88 L.J.K.B. 1152; 121 L.T. 626; 12	1279, 1282
B.W.C.C. 224; 34 Digest 448, 3676	34, 1037, 1039
Joint Stock Trust & Finance Corpn., Ltd., Re , (1927), 137 L.T. 630	942, 946
Jolly, Re , [1900] 2 Ch. 616; 69 L.J.Ch. 661; 83 L.T. 118; 32 Digest 484, 1467
Jones, Re , [1933] Ch. 842; 102 L.J.Ch. 303; 149 L.T. 417; Digest Supp.	1323, 1336
Jones v. Coxeter, (1742), 2 Atk. 400; 26 E.R. 642	775, 779
Jones v. Llanrwst Urban Council, [1911] 1 Ch. 393; 80 L.J.Ch. 145; 103 L.T. 751; 75 J.P.
68; 38 Digest 45, 263	289, 291, 292, 293
Jones v. Vernons Pools, Ltd., [1938] 2 All E.R. 626; Digest Supp.	502, 506, 507
Jones v. Tyler, (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 522; 3 L.J.K.B. 166; 110 E.R. 1307; 29 Digest 12, 151
Joynt v. Cycle Trade Publishing Co., [1904] 2 K.B. 292; 73 L.J.K.B. 752; 91 L.T. 155;	107, 109
32 Digest 149, 1805	574, 587, 588
Judgment Debtor (No. 530 of 1908), Re A , [1908] 2 K.B. 474; 77 L.J.K.B. 968; 99 L.T. 126;	1270, 1272
4 Digest 97, 874
Jupiter, Re , [1924] P. 236; 93 L.J.P. 156; 132 L.T. 624; Digest Supp.
Jupiter (No. 3), The , [1927] P. 250; 97 L.J.P. 33; 137 L.T. 333; Digest Supp.
Kahan v. Federation of Pakistan, [1951] 2 K.B. 1003	327, 331
Kaye (Dewsbury Revenue Officer) v. Burrows & Dewsbury Assessment Committee, [1931]
1 K.B. 385; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 94 J.P. 177; affd. H.L., [1931] A.C. 454;	157, 158, 159, 161
100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; Digest Supp.
Kearney v. Whitehaven Colliery Co., [1893] 1 Q.B. 700; 62 L.J.M.C. 129; 68 L.T. 690;	414, 421
57 J.P. 645; 12 Digest, Replacement, 330, 2553

	PAGE
Kelcey, Re , [1899] 2 Ch. 530; 68 L.J.Ch. 742; sub nom. Re Finn-Kelcey , 81 L.T. 354; 35 Digest 266, 251	1128, 1132
Kelly v. Glasgow Corp., 1949 S.C. 496; 2nd Digest Supp.	21, 27
Kelly v. Kelly, (1869-70), L.R. 2 P. & D. 31, 59; 39 L.J.P. & M. 28; 22 L.T. 308; 27 Digest 284, 2555	875, 881, 884, 885
Kelly v. Rogers, [1935] 2 K.B. 446; 104 L.J.K.B. 616; 153 L.T. 428; 19 Tax Cas. 692; Digest Supp.	314, 317
Kelner v. Kelner, [1939] 3 All E.R. 957; [1939] P. 411; 108 L.J.P. 138; Digest Supp.	1299, 1300
Kemphorne, Re , [1930] 1 Ch. 268; 99 L.J.Ch. 107; 142 L.T. 111; Digest Supp.	274, 277, 278
Kennedy v. Kennedy, (State of Illinois) (1877), 87 Ill. Repts. 250	1077, 1084
Kent v. Elstob, (1802), 3 East 18; 102 E.R. 502; 2 Digest 522, 1601	123, 130
Kenyon v. Walker. Stevenson v. Kenyon, [1946] 2 All E.R. 595; 2nd Digest Supp.	663, 666, 668
Kew v. Rouse, (1685), 1 Vern. 353; 23 E.R. 517; 44 Digest 977, 8330	609, 610
Kidd v. North, (1846), 2 Ph. 91; 16 L.J.Ch. 116; 41 E.R. 876; sub nom. Tidd v. North , 8 L.T.O.S. 289; 44 Digest 1010, 8689	79
King v. David Allen & Sons, Billposting, Ltd., [1916] 2 A.C. 54; 85 L.J.P.C. 229; 114 L.T. 762; 30 Digest, Replacement, 542, 1763	1309, 1314
King v. King, (1864), 15 L.Ch.R. 479; 20 Digest 429, 1590i	964, 967
Kingcombe, Re , [1936] 1 All E.R. 173; [1936] Ch. 566; 105 L.J.Ch. 209; 154 L.T. 462; Digest Supp.	34, 38, 1036, 1037, 1039
Kingsway, The, [1918] P. 344; 87 L.J.P. 162; 122 L.T. 651; 41 Digest 806, 6671	21, 23, 27
Kirby v. Harrogate School Board, [1896] 1 Ch. 437; 65 L.J.Ch. 376; 74 L.T. 6; 60 J.P. 182; 11 Digest 145, 297	299
Kirk v. Blurton, (1841), 9 M. & W. 284; 12 L.J.Ex. 117; 152 E.R. 120; 6 Digest 101, 709	709, 712, 716
Kirk v. Kirk, [1947] 2 All E.R. 118; 177 L.T. 151; 111 J.P. 435; 2nd Digest Supp.	370, 371
Kitchen's Trustee v. Madders, [1949] 2 All E.R. 1079; [1950] Ch. 134; 2nd Digest Supp.	728, 733
Kleinwort's Settlement Trusts, Re , [1951] 2 All E.R. 328; [1951] Ch. 860	255, 258, 259, 261
Kneen v. Martin, [1935] 1 K.B. 499; 104 L.J.K.B. 361; 152 L.T. 337; 19 Tax Cas. 33; Digest Supp.	867, 871
Koikaki Para Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Federal Commissioner of Taxation, (1940), 64 Commonwealth L.R. 15, 241	646, 647, 657, 658, 661
Koursk, The, [1924] P. 140; 93 L.J.P. 72; 131 L.T. 700; 41 Digest 798, 6591	701, 705
Kreditbank Cassel G.m.b.H. v. Schenkens, [1926] 2 K.B. 450; reversd. C.A. , [1927] 1 K.B. 826; 96 L.J.K.B. 501; 136 L.T. 716; Digest Supp.	554, 556, 560, 563, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571
Kushler (M.), Ltd., Re , [1943] 2 All E.R. 22; [1943] Ch. 248; 112 L.J.Ch. 194; 169 L.T. 17; 2nd Digest Supp.	520
Kydd v. Liverpool Watch Committee, [1907] 2 K.B. 591; reversd. H.L. , [1908] A.C. 327; 77 L.J.K.B. 947; 99 L.T. 212; 72 J.P. 395; 33 Digest 450, 1607	124, 132
L. v. L. (otherwise D.), (1922), 38 T.L.R. 697; 27 Digest 267, 2357	1194, 1197
L. v. L., [1949] 1 All E.R. 141; [1949] P. 211; [1949] L.J.R. 275; 2nd Digest Supp.	858, 859, 862, 863
L.C. Ltd. v. G. B. Oliviant, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 510; 2nd Digest Supp.	531, 533
Labouchere v. Wharnciffe (Earl), (1879), 13 Ch.D. 346; 41 L.T. 638; 8 Digest 509, 24	1176, 1181
Laidlaw, Re , [1930] 2 Ch. 392; 99 L.J.Ch. 463; 143 L.T. 761; Digest Supp.	363, 364, 366, 367
Laing (John) & Son, Ltd. v. Kingswood Assessment Area Assessment Committee, [1949] 1 All E.R. 224; [1949] 1 K.B. 344; 113 J.P. 111; 2nd Digest Supp.	350
Lambert v. Woolworth (F. W.) & Co., Ltd., [1938] 2 All E.R. 664; [1938] Ch. 883; 107 L.J.K.B. 554; 159 L.T. 317; Digest Supp.	1143, 1147
Lambeth, Kennington Division Case, Crossman v. Davis, (1886), 54 L.T. 628; 4 O'M. & H. 93; 20 Digest 117, 944	697, 700
Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council, [1897] A.C. 625; 66 L.J.Q.B. 806; 76 L.T. 795; sub nom. St. Mary, Lambeth (Churchwardens & Overseers) v. London County Council , 61 J.P. 580; 36 Digest 247, 12	601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608
Lamson Paragon Supply Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1951), 44 R. & I.T. 520; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 723	428, 430
Land Credit Co. of Ireland, Re , (1869), 4 Ch. App. 460; 39 L.J.Ch. 27; 20 L.T. 641; 9 Digest 641, 4232	555, 569
Lane v. Lane, [1952] 1 All E.R. 223; [1952] P. 34	1077, 1092
Langford Property Co., Ltd. v. Batten, [1950] 2 All E.R. 1079; [1951] A.C. 223	728, 731, 732, 733, 734
Lariviere v. Morgan, (1872), 7 Ch. App. 550; reversd. on the facts H.L. sub nom. Morgan v. Lariviere , (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 423; 44 L.J.Ch. 457; 32 L.T. 41; 1 Digest 43, 390	574, 588, 589, 1262, 1268
Lauder v. Lauder, [1949] 1 All E.R. 76; [1949] P. 277; 2nd Digest Supp.	876, 885
Lay, In the Goods of , (1840), 2 Curt. 375; 163 E.R. 444; 39 Digest 333, 189	841, 844, 845, 846, 850, 851
Lebeaupin v. Crispin (R.) & Co., [1920] 2 K.B. 714; 89 L.J.K.B. 1024; 124 L.T. 124; 12 Digest, Replacement, 430, 3307; 35 Digest 175, 51	981, 982, 1053, 1054, 1055
Lee v. Carter (K.), Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 690; [1949] 1 K.B. 85; [1949] L.J.R. 7; 2nd Digest Supp.	1143, 1149
Lee v. Lee, [1952] 1 All E.R. 1299	1308, 1310
Lee v. Nursery Furnishings, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 387; 172 L.T. 285; 2nd Digest Supp.	1013, 1016, 1017
Lees v. Dunkerley Brothers, [1911] A.C. 5; 80 L.J.K.B. 135; 103 L.T. 467; 4 B.W.C.C. 115; 34 Digest 496, 4096	1093, 1103
Leeson v. General Council of Medical Education & Registration, (1889), 43 Ch.D. 366; 59 L.J.Ch. 233; 61 L.T. 849; 34 Digest 544, 30	227, 1176, 1179, 1183, 1185
Legg v. Evans, (1840), 6 M. & W. 36; 9 L.J.Ex. 102; 4 J.P. 123; 151 E.R. 311; 21 Digest 480, 598	1308, 1313
Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, [1895] A.C. 517; 64 L.J.P.C. 97; 72 L.T. 873; 11 Digest 422, 885	1026, 1028
Lennard's Carrying Co., Ltd. v. Asiatic Petroleum Co., Ltd., [1914] 1 K.B. 419; affd., H.L. , [1915] A.C. 705; 84 L.J.K.B. 1281; 113 L.T. 195; 41 Digest 418, 2616	720, 723
Leonard v. Wilson, (1834), 2 Cr. & M. 589; 3 L.J.Ex. 171; 149 E.R. 895; 6 Digest 212, 1313	709, 712, 715, 716
Lester v. Garland, (1808), 15 Ves. 248; 33 E.R. 748; 42 Digest 947, 203	92, 96
Lewis v. Gilbertson & Co., Ltd., (1904), 91 L.T. 377; 68 J.P. 323; 24 Digest 898, 4	680, 682
Lewis' Will Trusts, Re , [1951] W.N. 591	409, 410, 411, 741, 742
Lewisham Borough Council v. Maloney, [1947] 2 All E.R. 36; [1948] 1 K.B. 50; [1947] L.J.R. 991; 177 L.T. 175; 111 J.P. 454; 2nd Digest Supp.	1309, 1314
Liesbosch, Dredger v. Edison S.S., [1933] A.C. 449; 102 L.J.P. 73; sub nom. The Edison , 149 L.T. 49; Digest Supp.	89, 91, 796, 800, 970, 975
Linnett v. Metropolitan Police Comr., [1946] 1 All E.R. 380; [1946] K.B. 290; 115 L.J.K.B. 513; 174 L.T. 178; 110 J.P. 153; 2nd Digest Supp.	380, 382
Littlewood, Re , [1931] 1 Ch. 443; 100 L.J.Ch. 243; 144 L.T. 718; Digest Supp.	274, 278

	PAGE
Liverpool Corp'n. v. West Derby Assessment Committee, [1908] 2 K.B. 647; 77 L.J.K.B. 1032; 99 L.T. 435; 72 J.P. 397; 36 Digest 248, 20	602, 607, 608
Lloyd v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Ltd., [1914] A.C. 733; 83 L.J.K.B. 1054; 111 L.T. 338; 7 B.W.C.C. 330; revers. sub nom. Ward v. Pitt (H.S.) & Co. Lloyd v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., [1913] 2 K.B. 130; 82 L.J.K.B. 533; 108 L.T. 201; 22 Digest 100, 700	1229, 1234, 1241
Local Government Board v. Arlidge, [1915] A.C. 120; 84 L.J.K.B. 72; 111 L.T. 905; 79 J.P. 97; 38 Digest 97, 708	481, 490
Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. v. M'Mullan, [1934] A.C. 1; 102 L.J.P.C. 123; 149 L.T. 526; 26 B.W.C.C. 463; Digest Supp.	720, 721, 722, 1093, 1103
Loescher v. Dean, [1950] 2 All E.R. 124; [1950] Ch. 491; 2nd Digest Supp.	134, 136
London & Globe Finance Corp'n., Ltd., Re , [1903] 1 Ch. 728; 72 L.J.Ch. 368; 88 L.T. 194; 10 Digest 985, 6819	1189
London & North Eastern Ry. Co. v. Berriman, [1946] 1 All E.R. 255; [1946] A.C. 278; 115 L.J.K.B. 124; 174 L.T. 151; 38 B.W.C.C. 109; 2nd Digest Supp.	936, 940
London & South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882), 20 Ch.D. 562; 51 L.J.Ch. 530; 46 L.T. 449; 11 Digest 286, 2141	60, 64
London, Chatham & Dover Ry. Co. v. South Eastern Ry. Co., [1893] A.C. 429; 63 L.J.Ch. 93; 69 L.T. 637; 58 J.P. 36; 17 Digest 239, 555	971, 977
London County Council v. Allen, [1914] 3 K.B. 642; 83 L.J.K.B. 1695; 111 L.T. 610; 78 J.P. 449; 40 Digest 302, 2602	280, 285, 286, 1309, 1314, 1374, 1375
London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 1039; 155 L.T. 190; Digest Supp.	139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 337, 338
London County Territorial & Auxiliary Forces Assoc'n. v. Nichols, [1948] 2 All E.R. 432; [1949] 1 K.B. 35; [1948] L.J.R. 1600; 2nd Digest Supp.	314, 320
London Graving Dock Co., Ltd. v. Horton, [1951] 2 All E.R. 1; [1951] A.C. 737	39, 41, 42, 43
London Playing Fields Society v. Essex (S.W. Area) Assessment Committee, (1930), 144 L.T. 233; 94 J.P. 241; Digest Supp.	601, 602, 605, 606, 607
London Scottish Benefit Society v. Chorley, (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 872; 53 L.J.Q.B. 551; 51 L.T. 100; 42 Digest 253, 2844	241, 247
Long v. Millar, (1879), 4 C.P.D. 450; 48 L.J.Q.B. 596; 41 L.T. 306; 43 J.P. 797; 12 Digest, Replacement, 158, 1017	1286, 1288, 1289
Lonnkvist v. Lonnkvist, [1952] W.N. 88	1018, 1020
Lopes, Re , [1931] 2 Ch. 130; 100 L.J.Ch. 295; 146 L.T. 8; Digest Supp.	985, 1003
Lord Strathcona S.S. Co. v. Dominion Coal Co., [1926] A.C. 103; 95 L.J.P.C. 71; 134 L.T. 227; 41 Digest 321, 1800	1309, 1314
Low's Trustees, (1871), 8 Sc. L.R. 638	897, 900, 904, 906
Lowther v. Cavendish, (1758), 1 Eden, 99; Amb. 356; 28 E.R. 621; 44 Digest 440, 2663	146, 148
Lowther v. Clifford, [1927] 1 K.B. 130; 95 L.J.K.B. 576; 135 L.T. 200; 90 J.P. 113; Digest Supp.	98, 101
Luck, Re , [1940] 3 All E.R. 307; [1940] Ch. 864; 109 L.J.Ch. 380; 164 L.T. 172; 2nd Digest Supp.	496, 499
Ludgater v. Love, (1881), 44 L.T. 694; 45 J.P. 600; 1 Digest 589, 2254	139
Lumsden v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1914] A.C. 877; 84 L.J.K.B. 45; 111 L.T. 993; 42 Digest 623, 238	1388, 1391
Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper, [1941] 1 All E.R. 33; [1941] A.C. 108; 110 L.J.K.B. 131; 164 L.T. 313; 2nd Digest Supp.	1395, 1396
Lynch v. Paraguay Provisional Government, (1871), L.R. 2 P. & D. 268; 40 L.J.P. & M. 81; 25 L.T. 164; 35 J.P. 761; 11 Digest 366, 453	496, 498
Lynes v. Snaith, [1899] 1 Q.B. 486; 68 L.J.Q.B. 275; 80 L.T. 122; 31 Digest, Replacement, 34, 1909	149, 153, 154, 155, 1199, 1201, 1202
Lyons, Re , [1952] 1 All E.R. 34; [1952] Ch. 129	1037, 1039
M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.	227, 238
M'Aulay v. Dunlop (James) & Co., [1926] A.C. 377; 95 L.J.P.C. 130; 135 L.T. 164; 19 B.W.C.C. 1; 34 Digest 301, 2499	754, 755, 756
McCarthy v. Coldair, Ltd., [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1226	936, 939
M'Donald v. M'Donald, 1959 S.C. 173	875, 879, 884
M'Dougal v. MacDougall, 1931 S.C. 102	875, 877
Macduff, Re , [1896] 2 Ch. 451; 65 L.J.Ch. 700; 74 L.T. 706; 8 Digest 296, 731	1068, 1075
McIver & Co., Ltd. v. Tate Steamers, Ltd., [1902] 2 K.B. 184; 71 L.J.K.B. 717; 87 L.T. 320; Digest, Practice, 948, 4879	942, 947, 949
Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, [1895] A.C. 384; 22 R. (H.L.) 32; 27 Digest 322, 3008	875, 877, 879, 881, 884
Maclaren's Settlement Trusts, Re , [1951] 2 All E.R. 414	255, 258, 259
Maclean v. Workers' Union, [1929] 1 Ch. 602; 43 Digest 101, 1046; 227, 230, 238, 1175, 1179, 1181, 1183	1037, 1039
MacLennan, Re , [1939] 3 All E.R. 81; [1939] Ch. 750; 108 L.J.Ch. 364; 160 L.T. 612; Digest Supp.	1037, 1039
McMillan v. Free Church of Scotland, (1861), 23 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.), 1314	226, 227, 231, 233, 240
M'Murdo, In the Goods of , (1868), L.R. 1 P. & D. 540; 37 L.J.P. & M. 14; 17 L.T. 393; 32 J.P. 72; 39 Digest 333, 188	841, 844, 845, 846
M'Naghten's Case, (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200; 8 E.R. 718; 14 Digest 56, 229	925, 927
Madeleine Vionnet et Cie v. Wills, [1939] 4 All E.R. 136; [1940] 1 K.B. 72; 109 L.J.K.B. 22; 161 L.T. 311; 2nd Digest Supp.	1053, 1056
Magor & St. Mellons Rural District Council v. Newport Corp'n., [1951] 2 All E.R. 839	496, 498
Mahony v. East Holyford Mining Co., (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 869; 33 L.T. 383; 9 Digest 642, 4239	554, 558, 559, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 567, 568, 569
Makin v. A.-G. for New South Wales, [1894] A.C. 57; 63 L.J.P.C. 41; 69 L.T. 778; 58 J.P. 148; 14 Digest 371, 3924	1044, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1049, 1050, 1052
Mallett v. Dunn, [1949] 1 All E.R. 973; [1949] 2 K.B. 180; [1949] L.J.R. 1650; 2nd Digest Supp.	74, 76
Manby v. Scot, (1663), 1 Keb. 482 (83 E.R. 1065); 1 Lev. 4 (83 E.R. 268); 1 Mod. Rep. 124 (86 E.R. 781); 1 Sid. 109 (82 E.R. 1000); 27 Digest 183, 1498	1308, 1311
Manchester Corp'n. v. Farnworth, [1930] A.C. 171; 99 L.J.K.B. 83; 94 J.P. 62; sub nom. Farnworth v. Manchester Corp'n., 142 L.T. 145; Digest Supp.	1328, 1339
Marcroft Wagons, Ltd. v. Smith, [1951] 2 All E.R. 271; [1951] 2 K.B. 496	150, 155, 432, 1199, 1201
Marjoribanks' Indenture, Re , [1952] 1 All E.R. 191; [1952] Ch. 181	1379, 1383
Markovitch v. Markovitch, (1934), 151 L.T. 139; 98 J.P. 282; Digest Supp.	373, 375
Marlborough (Duke) v. A.-G. (No. 2), [1945] 1 All E.R. 165; [1945] Ch. 145; 2nd Digest Supp.	192, 196
Marsden's Trust, Re , (1859), 4 Drew. 594; 28 L.J.Ch. 906; 33 L.T.O.S. 217; 62 E.R. 228; 37 Digest 513, 1048	964, 967

	PAGE
Marshalsea Case, (1612), 10 Co. Rep. 68b; 77 E.R. 1027; sub nom. Hall v. Stanley, 2 Brownl. 125; 123 E.R. 852; 38 Digest 68, 443	227, 232
Martins Bank, Ltd. v. Kavanagh, [1948] 2 All E.R. 448; 2nd Digest Supp.	1033, 1034, 1035, 1036
Maslin v. Maslin, [1952] 1 All E.R. 477; 116 J.P. 136	1077, 1081, 1091
Massy v. Rogers, (1883), 11 L.R.R. 409; 44 Digest 533b	342, 346
Matthews v. Smallwood, [1910] 1 Ch. 777; 79 L.J.Ch. 322; 102 L.T. 228; 30 Digest, Replacement, 467, 1088	775, 780
Maxwell v. Public Prosecutions (Director), [1935] A.C. 309; 103 L.J.K.B. 501; 151 L.T. 477; 98 J.P. 387; Digest Supp.	1044, 1050
Mayo v. Mayo, [1948] 2 All E.R. 869; [1949] P. 172; [1949] L.J.R. 48; 2nd Digest Supp.	1229, 1234
Meacher v. Meacher, [1946] 2 All E.R. 307; [1946] P. 216; [1947] L.J.R. 16; 175 L.T. 405; 110 J.P. 355; 2nd Digest Supp.	875, 882, 883, 885, 888
Mediana (Owners) v. Comet (Owners, etc.), The Mediana, [1900] A.C. 113; 69 L.J.P. 35; 82 L.T. 95; 41 Digest 811, 6733	796, 798, 799, 801
Medley v. Medley, (1882), 7 P.D. 122; 51 L.J.P. 74; 47 L.T. 556; 27 Digest 508, 5468	1128, 1133
Medway Oil & Storage Co. v. Continental Contractors, [1929] A.C. 88; 98 L.J.K.B. 148; 140 L.T. 98; Digest Supp.	529, 530
Mellor v. Thompson, (1885), 31 Ch.D. 55; 55 L.J.Ch. 942; 54 L.T. 219; 16 Digest 130, 282	1189
Mercer v. Denne, [1905] 2 Ch. 538; 74 L.J.Ch. 723; 93 L.T. 412; 70 J.P. 65; 22 Digest 382, 3907	179, 180, 186
Mersey Docks v. Cameron. Jones v. Mersey Docks, (1865), 11 H.L. Cas. 443; 35 L.J.M.C. 1; 12 L.T. 643; 29 J.P. 483; 11 E.R. 1405; 38 Digest 466, 286	314, 319
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Coggins & Griffith (Liverpool), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 345; [1947] A.C. 1; 115 L.J.K.B. 465; 175 L.T. 270; 2nd Digest Supp.	597, 598, 600
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Lucas, (1883), 8 App. Cas. 891; 53 L.J.Q.B. 4; 49 L.T. 781; 48 J.P. 212; 2 Tax Cas. 25; 28 Digest 21, 104	532, 540
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Marpessa (Owners), The Marpessa, [1907] A.C. 241; 76 L.J.P. 128; 97 L.T. 1; 41 Digest 808, 6690	21, 23
Messenger's Estate, Re, [1937] 1 All E.R. 355; Digest Supp.	674, 675, 676, 677
Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill, (1881), 6 App. Cas. 193; 50 L.J.Q.B. 353; 44 L.T. 653; 45 J.P. 664; 38 Digest 44, 256	299
Metropolitan Meat Industry Board v. Sheedy, [1927] A.C. 899; 137 L.T. 782; Digest Supp.	315, 322
Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Co., (1904), 20 T.L.R. 687; 43 Digest 1100, 294	7, 11
Meyers (decd.), Re, [1951] 1 All E.R. 538; [1951] Ch. 534	146
Mezger v. Mezger, [1936] 3 All E.R. 130; [1937] P. 19; 106 L.J.P. 1; 155 L.T. 491; 100 J.P. 475; Digest Supp.	370, 371
Michelham's Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs. Michelham (Executors of Dowager Lady) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1930), 144 L.T. 163; 15 Tax Cas. 737; Digest Supp.	35
Middleton v. Baldock, [1950] 1 All E.R. 708; [1950] 1 K.B. 657; 2nd Digest Supp. 150, 155	1308, 1310
Midland Bank, Ltd. v. Reckitt, [1933] A.C. 1; 102 L.J.K.B. 297; 148 L.T. 374; Digest Supp.	555, 570
Micklethwait, Re, (1855), 11 Exch. 452; 25 L.J.Ex. 19; 156 E.R. 908; 21 Digest 110, 824	867, 874
Miley v. A.-G., [1918] 1 I.R. 455	985, 998, 1002, 1004
Miller v. Boothman (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 333; [1944] K.B. 337; 113 L.J.K.B. 206; 170 L.T. 187; 2nd Digest Supp.	56, 57, 833, 834, 835, 836
Miller's Agreement, Re, [1947] 2 All E.R. 78; [1947] Ch. 615; [1948] L.J.R. 567; 177 L.T. 129; 2nd Digest Supp.	60, 63
Mills v. Mills, [1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124; 109 L.J.P. 86; 163 L.T. 272; 2nd Digest Supp.	414, 419, 422
Milroy v. Lord, (1862), 4 De G.F. & J. 264; 31 L.J.Ch. 798; 7 L.T. 178; 45 E.R. 1185; 40 Digest 533, 770	1217, 1221, 1223, 1224, 1227
Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries v. Matthews, [1949] 2 All E.R. 724; [1950] 1 K.B. 148; 2nd Digest Supp.	150, 154
Minister of Health v. Bellotti, [1944] 1 All E.R. 238; [1944] K.B. 298; 113 L.J.K.B. 436; 170 L.T. 146; 2nd Digest Supp.	149, 154
Ministry of Health v. Fox, [1950] 1 All E.R. 1050; [1950] Ch. 369; 192, 193, 196, 197, 1379, 1383
Mist v. Toleman & Sons, [1946] 1 All E.R. 139; 110 J.P. 149; 38 B.W.C.C. 150; 2nd Digest Supp.	1013, 1016, 1017
Mitcheson, In the Goods of, (1863), 32 L.J.P.M. & A. 202; 44 Digest 355, 1866	111
Mitford v. Reynolds, (1848), 16 Sim. 105; 17 L.J.Ch. 238; 10 L.T.O.S. 499; 60 E.R. 812; 8 Digest 320, 1025	1068, 1071, 1072
Mogul S.S. Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 598; 58 L.J.Q.B. 465; 61 L.T. 820; 53 J.P. 709; 42 Digest 968, 6	227, 232
Monarch S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Karlshamns Oljefabriker (A.B.), [1949] 1 All E.R. 1; [1949] A.C. 196; [1949] L.J.R. 772; 2nd Digest Supp.	89, 91, 970, 974, 975
Montesquieu v. Sandys, (1811), 18 Ves. 302; 34 E.R. 331; 42 Digest 84, 761	1363, 1369
Moody v. Steggles, (1879), 12 Ch.D. 261; 48 L.J.Ch. 639; 41 L.T. 25; 19 Digest 66, 381	809, 812
Moon (Lambeth Revenue Officer) v. London County Council, [1931] A.C. 151; 100 L.J.K.B. 153; 144 L.T. 410; 95 J.P. 64; Digest Supp.	158, 161
Moore, Re, (1888), 39 Ch.D. 116; 57 L.J.Ch. 936; 59 L.T. 681; 52 J.P. 596; 44 Digest 438, 2646	145, 146, 147, 148
Moore v. Hewitt, [1947] 2 All E.R. 270; [1947] K.B. 831; [1947] L.J.R. 1276; 177 L.T. 576; 111 J.P. 483; 2nd Digest Supp.	450, 451
Mordue v. Palmer, (1870), 6 Ch. App. 22; 40 L.J.Ch. 8; 23 L.T. 752; 35 J.P. 196; 2 Digest 530, 1667	942, 946
Moreland v. Richardson, (1856), 22 Beav. 596 (52 E.R. 1238); 25 L.J.Ch. 883; subsequent proceedings, (1857), 24 Beav. 33 (53 E.R. 269); 26 L.J.Ch. 690; 21 J.P. 741; 35 Digest 402, 1436	1308, 1313
Morgan v. Manser, [1947] 2 All E.R. 666; [1948] 1 K.B. 184; 12 Digest, Replacement, 435, 3325	853, 857
Morgan's Will Trusts, Re, [1950] 1 All E.R. 1097; [1950] Ch. 637; 2nd Digest Supp.	146
Morice v. Durham (Bp.), (1805), 10 Ves. 522; 32 E.R. 947; aff. (1804), 9 Ves. 399; 32 E.R. 656; 8 Digest 293, 705	1068, 1074, 1075
Morris v. Davies, (1837), 5 Cl. & Fin. 163; 7 E.R. 365; 3 Digest 359, 12	1229, 1236, 1237, 1241, 1245
Morris v. Edmunds, (1897), 77 L.T. 56; 37 Digest 358, 1609	1322, 1324
Morris v. Harris, [1927] A.C. 252; 96 L.J.Ch. 253; 136 L.T. 537; Digest Supp.
	613, 614, 615, 616, 619, 620, 624, 626, 628
Morris v. Wise, (1860), 2 F. & F. 51; 175 E.R. 955; 14 Digest 175, 1533	1203, 1208, 1211, 1212
Morton v. Morton, [1942] 1 All E.R. 273; 111 L.J.P. 33; 166 L.T. 164; 106 J.P. 139; 2nd Digest Supp.	374, 378
Moss v. Moss, [1916] P. 155; 85 L.J.P. 182; 114 L.T. 1147; 27 Digest 345, 3261	876, 885
Moussell Brothers v. London & North-Western Ry. Co., [1917] 2 K.B. 836; 87 L.J.K.B. 82; 118 L.T. 25; 81 J.P. 305; 8 Digest 207, 1323	380, 381, 382

	PAGE
Muhammad Issa el Sheikh Ahmad v. Ali, [1947] A.C. 414; [1948] L.J.R. 455; 2nd Digest Supp.	89, 91, 970, 975 425, 426
Muir v. Muir, [1943] A.C. 468; 112 L.J.P.C. 39	70, 71
Muirhead, Ex p. Re Muirhead, (1876), 2 Ch.D. 22; 45 L.J.Bey. 65; 34 L.T. 303; 4 Digest 124, 1127
Mummery v. Mummery, [1942] 1 All E.R. 553; [1942] P. 107; 111 L.J.P. 58; 166 L.T. 343; 2nd Digest Supp.	223, 1077, 1081, 1082, 1083, 1087, 1088, 1090, 1091
Münster, Re , [1920] 1 Ch. 268; 89 L.J.Ch. 138; 28 Digest 95, 561; Digest Supp.	314, 317, 1108, 1114
Murray v. Schwachman, Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 68; [1938] 1 K.B. 130; 106 L.J.K.B. 354; 156 L.T. 407; 30 B.W.C.C. 466; Digest Supp.	935, 937, 940 1, 5
Musgrove v. Newell, (1836), 1 M. & W. 582; 5 L.J.Ex. 227; 150 E.R. 567; 33 Digest 488, 267
Myers (G. H.) & Co. v. Brent Cross Service Co., [1934] 1 K.B. 46; 108 L.J.K.B. 123; 150 L.T. 96; Digest Supp.	1191, 1193
Mytton v. Mytton, (1886), 11 P.D. 141; 57 L.T. 92; 50 J.P. 488; 27 Digest 285, 2561	876, 885
Nanaimo Community Hotel, Ltd., Re , [1944] 4 D.L.R. 638; affd. , C.A., [1945] 3 D.L.R. 225; 2 W.W.R. 145; 2nd Digest Supp.	250, 251, 253
Napier v. Napier, [1915] P. 184; 84 L.J.P. 177; 113 L.T. 764; 27 Digest 268, 2370	1194, 1196
Nash v. High Duty Alloys, Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 363; [1947] K.B. 377; 2nd Digest Supp.	936, 939
National Association of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corp., [1942] 2 All E.R. 425; [1943] A.C. 166; 111 L.J.K.B. 674; 167 L.T. 312; 106 J.P. 255; 2nd Digest Supp.	263, 265
National Coal Board v. Evans (J. E.) & Co. (Cardiff), Ltd., [1951] 2 All E.R. 310; [1951] 2 K.B. 861	925, 928
Neale v. Del Soto, [1945] 1 All E.R. 191; [1945] K.B. 144; 114 L.J.K.B. 138; 172 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668
Neave, Re , [1938] 3 All E.R. 220; [1938] Ch. 793; 107 L.J.Ch. 395; 159 L.T. 210; Digest Supp.	964, 966
Nelson v. Nelson (James) & Sons, Ltd., [1914] 2 K.B. 770; 83 L.J.K.B. 823; 110 L.T. 888; 9 Digest 529, 3492	922, 924
New Zealand Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Thew, (1922), 8 Tax Cas. 208; 28 Digest 31, 164	647, 655
Newland, In the Estate of , [1952] 1 All E.R. 841	852
Newton v. Newton, (1885), 11 P.D. 1; 55 L.J.P. 13; 27 Digest 549, 6005	1026, 1029
Niboyet v. Niboyet, (1878), 4 P.D. 1; 48 L.J.P. 1; 39 L.T. 486; 43 J.P. 140; 11 Digest 423, 894	1026, 1029
Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 485; [1945] K.B. 50; affd. H.L., [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 2nd Digest Supp.	56, 57, 833, 835
Nicholls v. Ely Beet Sugar Factory, Ltd., [1936] Ch. 343; 105 L.J.Ch. 279; 154 L.T. 531; Digest Supp.	1328, 1331
Nichols v. Walker & Carter, (1635), Cro. Car. 394; 79 E.R. 944; 18 Digest 399, 1403	227, 232, 239
Nicholson v. Chapman, (1793), Hy. Bl. 254; 126 E.R. 536; 3 Digest 66, 89	1270, 1278
Nicoll v. Fenning, (1881), 19 Ch.D. 258; 51 L.J.Ch. 166; 45 L.T. 738; 40 Digest 324, 2737	280, 288
No. 7 Steam Sand Pump Dredger (Owners) v. Greta Holme (Owners). The Greta Holme, [1897] A.C. 596; 66 L.J.P. 166; 77 L.T. 231; 41 Digest 808, 6689	796, 798, 799
Nocton v. Ashbourne (Lord), [1914] A.C. 932; 83 L.J.Ch. 754; 111 L.T. 641; 35 Digest 55, 493	139, 144
Noor Mohamed v. R., [1949] 1 All E.R. 365; [1949] A.C. 182; 2nd Digest Supp.	67, 68, 1044, 1047, 1048, 1050, 1052
Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co., [1894] A.C. 535; 63 L.J.Ch. 908; 71 L.T. 489; affg. S.C. sub nom. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co. v. Nordenfelt, [1893] 1 Ch. 630; 36 Digest 671, 1546	74, 78
Norman v. Golder, [1945] 1 All E.R. 352; 114 L.J.K.B. 108; 171 L.T. 369; 26 Tax Cas. 293; 2nd Digest Supp.	1290, 1292
North, Re. Ex p. Hasluck, [1895] 2 Q.B. 264; 64 L.J.Q.B. 694; 59 J.P. 724; sub nom. Re North. Ex p. Parkinson, 72 L.T. 854; 42 Digest 946, 189	92, 96
North Central Wagon & Finance Co., Ltd. v. Graham, [1950] 1 All E.R. 780; [1950] 2 K.B. 7; 2nd Digest Supp.	1355, 1356, 1357, 1358
North Riding of Yorkshire County Valuation Committee v. Redcar Corp., [1942] 2 All E.R. 589; [1943] K.B. 114; 112 L.J.K.B. 97; 168 L.T. 81; 106 J.P. 11; 2nd Digest Supp.	602, 607
Northbourne (Lord) v. Johnston & Son, [1922] 2 Ch. 309; 92 L.J.Ch. 12; 128 L.T. 496; 40 Digest 321, 2722	279, 280, 284
Nothard v. Pepper, (1864), 17 C.B.N.S. 39; 144 E.R. 16; sub nom. Northard v. Pepper, 10 L.T. 782; 42 Digest 708, 1254	179, 180, 186
Nouvion v. Freeman, (1888), 37 Ch.D. 244; affd. H.L., (1889), 15 App. Cas. 1; 59 L.J.Ch. 337; 62 L.T. 189; 11 Digest 454, 1108	1053, 1055
O'Driscoll v. Manchester Insurance Committee, [1915] 3 K.B. 499; 85 L.J.K.B. 83; 113 L.T. 683; 79 J.P. 553; 21 Digest 634, 2156	637, 640, 641
Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Alexander, [1949] 2 All E.R. 822; [1950] 1 K.B. 311; 2nd Digest Supp.	150, 155, 156, 1308, 1310
Olive v. Paynter, [1932] 2 K.B. 666; 101 L.J.K.B. 786; 148 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.	98, 101
Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1911] 1 Ch. 540; 80 L.J.Ch. 315; 104 L.T. 267; 43 Digest 93, 972	1176, 1180
Osgood v. Nelson, (1872), L.R. 5 H.L. 636; 10 B. & S. 119; 41 L.J.Q.B. 329; 13 Digest 317, 507	1176, 1183, 1187
Ottaway v. Hamilton, (1878), 3 C.P.D. 393; 47 L.J.Q.B. 725; 38 L.T. 925; 42 J.P. 660; 27 Digest 207, 1796	942, 947
Ousey v. Ousey & Atkinson, (1874), L.R. 3 P. & D. 223; 43 L.J.P. & M. 35; 30 L.T. 911; subsequent proceedings (1875), 1 P.D. 56; 45 L.J.P. 33; 33 L.T. 789; 27 Digest 322, 3004	1322, 1324
Paddington Corp., v. A.-G., [1906] A.C. 1; 75 L.J.Ch. 4; 93 L.T. 673; 70 J.P. 41; 33 Digest 50, 303	299, 301
Paine v. Paine, [1903] P. 263; 73 L.J.P. 1; 86 L.T. 588; 27 Digest 347, 3285 223, 224, 1077, 1081, 1091	364, 365
Palmer, Re , [1916] 2 Ch. 391; 85 L.J.Ch. 577; 115 L.T. 57; 21 Digest 35, 220	241, 245, 943, 958
Palmer v. Walesby, (1868), 3 Ch. App. 732; 37 L.J.Ch. 612; 19 L.T. 1; 33 Digest 232, 1450	241, 245, 943, 958
Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corp., of New York, [1917] 2 K.B. 473; 86 L.J.K.B. 1325; 117 L.T. 330; 12 Digest 434, 3516	89
Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos, [1930] P. 55; 99 L.J.P. 1; 142 L.T. 237; 94 J.P. 39; Digest Supp.	373, 374, 376, 377, 378, 379
Pargeter v. Pargeter, [1946] 1 All E.R. 570; 2nd Digest Supp.	150, 155
Paris v. Stepney Borough Council, [1951] 1 All E.R. 42	443, 445
Parker, Re , (1917), 86 L.J.Ch. 766; 117 L.T. 422; 21 Digest 37, 233	364, 365, 366
Parlement Belge, The, (1880), 5 P.D. 197; 42 L.T. 273; 1 Digest 110, 140; 11 Digest 537, 394	574, 579, 588, 1262, 1268, 1269

	PAGE
Parry v. Parry, [1896] P. 37; 73 L.T. 759; sub nom. Parry v. Parry, Millis v. Millis & Brown, 65 L.J.P. 35; 27 Digest 359, 3433	1385, 1386
Pasley v. Freeman, (1789), 3 Term Rep. 51; 2 Smith, L.C., 12th ed., 71; 100 E.R. 450; 1 Digest 24, 194	139
Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council, [1893] A.C. 387; 67 L.J.Q.B. 635; 78 L.T. 569; 62 J.P. 628; 38 Digest 154, 38	1328, 1335
Paterson v. Gas Light & Coke Co., [1896] 2 Ch. 476; 65 L.J.Ch. 709; 74 L.T. 640; 60 J.P. 532; 25 Digest 476, 40	685, 689
Paterson S.S., Ltd. v. Robin Hood Mills, Ltd., (1937), 58 Lloyd L.R. 33; Digest Supp.	720, 723
Patterson, In the Goods of , (1898), 79 L.T. 123; 39 Digest 333, 186	841, 844
Pavia & Co., S.P.A. v. Thurmman-Nielsen, [1952] 1 All E.R. 492	970, 977
Peakin v. Peakin, (1895), 2 I.R. 359; Digest Supp.	149, 154
Pearson & Son, Ltd. v. Dublin Corp., [1907] A.C. 351; 77 L.J.P.C. 1; 97 L.T. 645; 1 Digest 588, 2250	139, 141, 143, 144, 145
Pécheres Ostendaises (Soc. Anon.) v. Merchants' Marine Insurance Co., [1928] 1 K.B. 750; 97 L.J.K.B. 445; 138 L.T. 532; Digest Supp.	942, 953, 954
Penang & General Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 1 All E.R. 514; [1943] A.C. 486; 112 L.J.K.B. 356; 169 L.T. 93; 25 Tax Cas. 219; 2nd Digest Supp.	918, 921
Pender v. Reid, 1948 S.C. 381; 2nd Digest Supp.	431, 432, 433, 434, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733
Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co., (1877), 5 Ch.D. 769; 46 L.J.Ch. 773; 37 L.T. 149; sub nom. Fennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co., 41 J.P. 753; 44 Digest 57, 410	1328, 1331, 1341
Percy & Kelly Nickel, Re, Cobalt, & Chrome Iron Mining Co., (1876), 2 Ch.D. 531; 45 L.J.Ch. 526; 10 Digest 862, 5813	104, 105
Perkins v. Jeffery, [1915] 2 K.B. 702; 84 L.J.K.B. 1554; 113 L.T. 456; 79 J.P. 425; 14 Digest 373, 3941	1044, 1047, 1048
Perring v. Perring & Simpson, [1949] 2 All E.R. 334; 113 J.P. 417; 2nd Digest Supp.	1229, 1234
Pettingall v. Pettingall, (1842), 11 L.J.Ch. 176; 8 Digest 264, 258	1068, 1071, 1073, 1074
Pettit, Re, [1922] 2 Ch. 765; 91 L.J.Ch. 732; 127 L.T. 491; 39 Digest 167, 597	34, 36, 1036, 1037, 1038, 1039, 1040
Pettit v. Lilley, [1946] 1 All E.R. 593; [1946] K.B. 401; 115 L.J.K.B. 385; 175 L.T. 119; 110 J.P. 218; 2nd Digest Supp.	180, 185
Pew v. Pew, (unreported), Jan. 30, 1951	223
Phillips v. Bury, (1696), Skin. 447 (90 E.R. 198); Carth. 180 (90 E.R. 709); Comb. 265, 314 (90 E.R. 468, 499); Holt K.B. 715 (90 E.R. 1294); 1 Ld. Raym. 5 (91 E.R. 900); 2 Term Rep. 346 (100 E.R. 186); 4 Mod. Rep. 106 (87 E.R. 289); 1 Show. K.B. 360 (89 E.R. 624); 21 Digest 238, 676	227, 233, 342, 345
Phillips v. Long, (1946), 63 T.L.R. 127; 2nd Digest Supp.	460
Phipps (P.) & Co. (Northampton & Towcester Breweries), Ltd. v. Rogers, [1925] 1 K.B. 14; 93 L.J.K.B. 1009; 132 L.T. 240; 89 J.P. 1; 31 Digest, Replacement, 496, 6221	979, 980
Phoenix Insurance Co. of Hartford v. De Monchy, (1929), 141 L.T. 439; 35 Com. Cas. 67; Digest Supp.	332, 334, 335, 336
Pillott v. Wilkinson, (1864), 3 H. & C. 345; 34 L.J.Ex. 22; 11 L.T. 349; 159 E.R. 564; 3 Digest 102, 293	796, 800
Pink, Re, [1912] 2 Ch. 528; 81 L.J.Ch. 753; 107 L.T. 241; 25 Digest 539, 270	16, 19
Pirbright v. Salwey, [1896] W.N. 86; 8 Digest 261, 230	1068, 1071, 1073
Plunkett v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 653; [1936] 2 K.B. 107; 105 L.J.K.B. 379; 154 L.T. 465; Digest Supp.	134, 136
Poole v. Clarke & Co., [1945] 2 All E.R. 445; 2nd Digest Supp.	1395, 1397
Popkin v. Popkin, (1794), 1 Hag. Ecc. 765, n; 162 E.R. 745; 27 Digest 283, 2544	876, 883
Porter v. Freudenberg, Kreglinger v. Samuel (S.) & Rosenfeld, Re Merten's Patents, [1915] 1 K.B. 857; 84 L.J.K.B. 1001; 112 L.T. 313; 2 Digest 140, 155	629, 631
Potts (or Riddell) v. Reid, [1942] 2 All E.R. 161; [1943] A.C. 1; 111 L.J.P.C. 65; 167 L.T. 301; 2nd Digest Supp.	1093, 1103
Powell v. Powell, (1866), L.R. 1 P. & D. 209; 35 L.J.P. & M. 100; 14 L.T. 800; 44 Digest 361, 1944	111
Prager v. Blatenspiel, Stamp & Heacock, Ltd., [1924] 1 K.B. 566; 93 L.J.K.B. 410; 130 L.T. 672; Digest Supp.	1270, 1278
Pratt v. Pratt, [1939] 3 All E.R. 437; [1939] A.C. 417; 108 L.J.P. 97; 161 L.T. 49; Digest Supp.	1076, 1080
Prehn v. Royal Bank of Liverpool, (1870), L.R. 5 Exch. 92; 39 L.J.Ex. 41; 21 L.T. 830; 17 Digest 78, 3	89, 91
Prest v. Prest, [1949] 2 All E.R. 790; [1950] P. 63; 114 J.P. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	370, 371
Preston v. Norfolk County Council, [1947] 2 All E.R. 124; [1947] K.B. 775; [1947] L.J.R. 1301; 177 L.T. 390; 2nd Digest Supp.	97, 98, 100, 101, 929, 934
Price, Re, [1943] 2 All E.R. 505; [1943] Ch. 422; 112 L.J.Ch. 273; 169 L.T. 121; 2nd Digest Supp.	50, 54, 1068, 1074
Price v. Green, (1847), 16 M. & W. 346; 16 L.J.Ex. 108; 9 L.T.O.S. 296; 153 E.R. 1222; 17 Digest 141, 448	414, 421
Price v. Midland, etc., Cleaning Co., Ltd., unreported, (1940), July 12	942, 949
Price v. Moulton, (1851), 10 C.B. 561; 20 L.J.C.P. 102; 138 E.R. 222; 12 Digest, Replacement, 581, 4480	549, 551, 552, 553
Princess Paley Olga v. Weisz, [1929] 1 K.B. 718; 98 L.J.K.B. 465; 141 L.T. 207; Digest Supp.	1270, 1272, 1273
Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark, [1948] 1 All E.R. 165; [1948] 1 K.B. 630; [1948] L.J.R. 1066; 2nd Digest Supp.	460, 461, 462
Pryor v. Pryor, (1864), 2 De G.J. & Sm. 205; 33 L.J.Ch. 441; 10 L.T. 360; 46 E.R. 353; 37 Digest 511, 1031	964, 967
Pulford v. Pulford, [1923] P. 18; 92 L.J.P. 14; 128 L.T. 256; 27 Digest 307, 2846	1077, 1087
Pye v. Mumford, (1848), 11 Q.B. 666; 5 Dow. & L. 414; 17 L.J.Q.B. 138; 11 L.T.O.S. 62; 116 E.R. 623; 19 Digest 77, 462	809, 810
Pytram, Ltd. v. Models (Leicester), Ltd., [1930] 1 Ch. 639; 99 L.J.Ch. 381; 143 L.T. 227; Digest Supp.	205, 210
R. v. Anon., (1816), 2 Chit. 137	124, 131
R. v. Armstrong, [1922] 2 K.B. 555; 91 L.J.K.B. 904; 127 L.T. 221; 86 J.P. 209; 14 Digest 378, 3988	1044, 1049
R. v. Bailey, [1924] 2 K.B. 300; 93 L.J.K.B. 989; 132 L.T. 349; 88 J.P. 72; Digest Supp.	1044, 1050
R. v. Ball, [1911] A.C. 47; 75 J.P. 180; sub nom. Public Prosecutions (Director) v. Ball (No. 2), 80 L.J.K.B. 691; 103 L.T. 73; 14 Digest 375, 3959	1044, 1046, 1047
R. v. Balls, (1871), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 328; 40 L.J.M.C. 148; 24 L.T. 760; 35 J.P. 820; 15 Digest 931, 10,267	804, 807, 808
R. v. Bolton, (1841), 1 Q.B. 66; 10 L.J.M.C. 49; 5 J.P. 370; 113 E.R. 1054; 16 Digest 418, 2775	123, 126

	PAGE
R. v. Bond , [1906] 2 K.B. 389; 75 L.J.K.B. 693; 95 L.T. 296; 70 J.P. 424; 14 Digest 371, 3921	1044, 1050
R. v. Boseley , [1937] 4 All E.R. 100; Digest Supp.	804
R. v. Boycott . Ex p. Keasley , [1939] 2 All E.R. 626; [1939] 2 K.B. 651; 108 L.J.K.B. 657; Digest Supp.	481, 489, 490
R. v. Briggs , (1883), 47 J.P. 615; 13 Digest 454, 53	412
R. v. Brighton & Area Rent Tribunal . Ex p. Marine Parade Estates (1936), Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 946; [1950] 2 K.B. 410; 114 J.P. 242; 2nd Digest Supp.	481, 490
R. v. Browne , (1943), 29 Cr. App. Rep. 106, 126; 2nd Digest Supp.	1040, 1042, 1043
R. v. Burnaby , (1703), 1 Com. 131 (92 E.R. 998); 3 Salk. 217 (91 E.R. 786); sub nom. R. v. Barnaby , (1704), 1 Salk. 181 (91 E.R. 166); 33 Digest 353, 632	123, 129
R. v. Bywaters , (1922), 17 Cr. App. Rep. 66; 14 Digest 226, 2101	1044, 1049
R. v. Chandler , (1702), 1 Ld. Raym. 551; 1 Salk. 377; 91 E.R. 1288; 33 Digest 350, 595	123, 129
R. v. Christie , [1914] A.C. 545; sub nom. Public Prosecutions (Director) v. Christie , 83 L.J.K.B. 1097; 111 L.T. 220; 78 J.P. 321; 14 Digest 360, 3311	1044, 1048
R. v. Cockshott , [1898] 1 Q.B. 582; 67 L.J.Q.B. 467; 78 L.T. 168; 62 J.P. 325; 14 Digest 130, 1032	1123, 1124
R. v. Cole , (1941), 165 L.T. 125; 105 J.P. 279; 2nd Digest Supp.	67, 68
R. v. Coles , (1845), 8 Q.B. 75; 15 L.J.M.C. 10; 6 L.T.O.S. 120; 10 J.P. 105; 115 E.R. 802; 16 Digest 413, 2725	481, 489
R. v. Crippen , [1911] 1 K.B. 149; 80 L.J.K.B. 290; 103 L.T. 704; 75 J.P. 141; 14 Digest 291, 3064	1040, 1042
R. v. Daman , (1819), 1 Chit. 147	123, 129
R. v. Devon JJ. , (1819), 1 Chit. 34; 33 Digest 440, 1495	123, 129
R. v. Dickinson , (1857), 7 E. & B. 831; 26 L.J.M.C. 204; 29 L.T.O.S. 180; 22 J.P. 243; 119 E.R. 1455; 33 Digest 450, 1605	124, 131
R. v. Dobbryn , (1696), 2 Salk. 474; 91 E.R. 408; 33 Digest 309, 285	123, 129
R. v. Electricity Comrs. Ex p. London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1920), Ltd., [1924] 1 K.B. 171; 93 L.J.K.B. 390; 130 L.T. 164; 88 J.P. 13; Digest Supp.	123, 125, 132, 481, 486, 487
R. v. Essex (Inhabitants) , (1792), 4 Term Rep. 591; 100 E.R. 1193; 33 Digest 110, 736	124, 131
R. v. Folkestone and Area Rent Tribunal . Ex p. Sharkey , [1951] 2 All E.R. 921; [1952] 1 K.B. 54; 116 J.P. 1	455, 456, 457
R. v. Frost , (1840), 9 C. & P. 129; 173 E.R. 771; 14 Digest 290, 3056	1040, 1041, 1042
R. v. Graham Campbell . Ex p. Ahmed Hamid Moussa , [1921] 2 K.B. 473; 90 L.J.K.B. 818; sub nom. R. v. Campbell . Ex p. Moussa , 125 L.T. 310; 85 J.P. 189; 33 Digest 891, 1021	466, 467
R. v. Grant , [1951] 1 All E.R. 28; [1951] 1 K.B. 500; 115 J.P. 36	1123
R. v. Hall , [1952] 1 All E.R. 66; 116 J.P. 43	1044, 1050
R. v. Harris , [1927] 2 K.B. 587; 96 L.J.K.B. 1069; 137 L.T. 535; 91 J.P. 152; Digest Supp.	1040, 1042
R. v. Hendon Rural District Council . Ex p. Chorley , [1933] 2 K.B. 696; 102 L.J.K.B. 658; 149 L.T. 535; 97 J.P. 210; Digest Supp.	1294, 1297
R. v. Home Secretary . Ex p. Bressler , (1924), 131 L.T. 386; 83 J.P. 89; Digest Supp.	187, 189
R. v. Home Secretary . Ex p. Chateau Thierry (Duke) , [1917] 1 K.B. 552; reversd. C.A. , 1 K.B. 922; 86 L.J.K.B. 923; 116 L.T. 226; 81 J.P. 125; 2 Digest 196, 552	187, 188
R. v. Howell , (1938), 160 L.T. 16; 103 J.P. 9; Digest Supp.	447, 448, 449
R. v. Ingleson , [1915] 1 K.B. 512; 84 L.J.K.B. 280; 112 L.T. 313; 14 Digest 256, 2568	466, 468, 469
R. v. Inhabitants of Audley , (1700), 2 Salk. 526; 91 E.R. 448	123, 129
R. v. Jellyman , (1838), 8 C. & P. 604; 14 Digest 451, 4770	114
R. v. Lapworth , [1931] 1 K.B. 117; 100 L.J.K.B. 52; 144 L.T. 126; 95 J.P. 2; Digest Supp.	114
R. v. Leake (Inhabitants) , (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 469; 110 E.R. 863; 26 Digest 290, 225	765, 767
R. v. Leary (unreported), Leeds Assizes, March, 1942	114
R. v. Levermore , (1700), 1 Salk. 146; 91 E.R. 135; 16 Digest 471, 3511	123, 130
R. v. Liddle , (1928), 21 Cr. App. Rep. 3; Digest Supp.	1040, 1042
R. v. London , (1703), 3 Salk. 261; 91 E.R. 814	123, 129
R. v. London County Council . Ex p. Entertainments Protection Assocn., Ltd. , [1931] 2 K.B. 215; 100 L.J.K.B. 760; 144 L.T. 464; 95 J.P. 89; Digest Supp.	123, 125, 132, 481, 487, 489
R. v. March , (1824), 4 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 260	123, 129
R. v. Middlesex Quarter Sessions . Ex p. Public Prosecutions Director , [1950] 1 All E.R. 916; [1950] 2 K.B. 589; 114 J.P. 276; 2nd Digest Supp.	1123
R. v. Minister of Health . Ex p. Davis , [1929] 1 K.B. 619; 98 L.J.K.B. 636; 141 L.T. 6; 93 J.P. 49; Digest Supp.	123, 125, 481, 487
R. v. Minister of Town & Country Planning . Ex p. Montague Burton, Ltd. , [1950] 2 All E.R. 282; 114 J.P. 411; 2nd Digest Supp.	205, 207, 213
R. v. Morris , (1933), 24 Cr. App. Rep. 105; Digest Supp.	804, 806, 807, 808
R. v. Mortimer , (1936), 25 Cr. App. Rep. 150; Digest Supp.	1044, 1048
R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. , [1922] 2 A.C. 128; 91 L.J.P.C. 146; 127 L.T. 437; 16 Digest 419, 2795	122, 123, 125, 126, 128, 129, 131, 133
R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal . Ex p. Horatio Crowther & Co., Ltd. , [1947] 2 All E.R. 693; [1948] 1 K.B. 424; [1948] L.J.R. 682; 2nd Digest Supp.	263, 269, 273
R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal . Ex p. Imperial Tobacco Co., Ltd. , R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal . Ex p. British American Tobacco Co., Ltd. , R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal . Ex p. Godfrey Phillips, Ltd. , R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal . Ex p. Ardath Tobacco Co., Ltd. , [1943] 2 All E.R. 162; 2nd Digest Supp.	263, 270, 273
R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal . Ex p. Midgley Harmer, Ltd. , [1947] 1 All E.R. 196; [1947] L.J.R. 645; 2nd Digest Supp.	263, 272, 273
R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal . Ex p. South Shields Corpn. , [1951] 2 All E.R. 828; [1952] 1 K.B. 46; 115 J.P. 594	263, 267, 1371, 1373
R. v. Nicholson , [1899] 2 Q.B. 455; 68 L.J.Q.B. 1034; 81 L.T. 257; 64 J.P. 388; 16 Digest 459, 3333	263, 267
R. v. Pearce , [1951] 1 All E.R. 493; 115 J.P. 157	482, 491
R. v. Postmaster-General . Ex p. Carmichael , [1928] 1 K.B. 291; 96 L.J.K.B. 347; 137 L.T. 26; 91 J.P. 43; 21 B.W.C.C. 226; Digest Supp.	58
R. v. Richmond Confirming Authority . Ex p. Howitt , [1921] 1 K.B. 248; 90 L.J.K.B. 413; 124 L.T. 345; 85 J.P. 84; 16 Digest 459, 3340	481, 488, 490
R. v. Saunders , (1854), 3 E. & B. 763; 24 L.J.M.C. 45; 23 L.T.O.S. 157; 18 J.P. 584; 118 E.R. 1327; 33 Digest 110, 739	482, 490
R. v. Sheaf , (1925), 134 L.T. 127; 89 J.P. 207; Digest Supp.	481, 488
R. v. Sims , [1946] 1 All E.R. 697; [1946] K.B. 531; [1947] L.J.R. 160; 175 L.T. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.	804, 807, 808
R. v. Smith , (1915), 84 L.J.K.B. 2153; 114 L.T. 239; 80 J.P. 31; 14 Digest 302, 3185	1044, 1048, 1049
R. v. South Greenhoe J.J. Ex p. Public Prosecutions Director , [1950] 2 All E.R. 42; [1950] 2 K.B. 558; 114 J.P. 312; 2nd Digest Supp.	1123, 1124

	PAGE
R. v. Sullivan, [1923] 1 K.B. 47; 91 L.J.K.B. 927; 126 L.T. 643; 86 J.P. 167; 14 Digest 291, 3065	1040, 1042
R. v. Surrey J.J. (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 466; 89 L.J.M.C. 145; 34 J.P. 614; 16 Digest 422, 2822	482, 491
R. v. Taylor, (1924), 93 L.J.K.B. 912; 88 J.P. 152; 20 Digest 140, 1146	348, 349
R. v. Tower Hamlets Sewers Comrs., (1843), 5 Q.B. 357; 13 L.J.Q.B. 12; 2 L.T.O.S. 167; 8 J.P. 214; 114 E.R. 1284; 16 Digest 461, 3353	124, 131
R. v. Tuttle, (1929), 140 L.T. 701; Digest Supp.	348, 349
R. v. Wakefield, (1827), 2 Lew. C.C. 279; 2 Town St. Tr. 112; Mood. & M. 197n; 14 Digest 451, 4774	114
R. v. Warnford, (1825), 5 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 489	123, 130
R. v. West Kent Quarter Sessions. Ex p. Files, [1951] 2 All E.R. 728; 115 J.P. 522	466, 467, 468, 469
R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire J.J. Ex p. Broadbent, [1910] 2 K.B. 192; 79 L.J.K.B. 731; sub nom. R. v. Morris, etc., West Riding J.J. Ex p. Broadbent, 102 L.T. 814; 74 J.P. 271; 19 Digest 567, 87	124, 131
R. v. White, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 309; reversd. C.A. (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 358; 52 L.T. 116; 49 J.P. 294; sub nom. R. v. Sibby, 54 L.J.M.C. 23; 38 Digest 591, 1222	123, 130, 481, 489
R. v. Woodhouse, [1906] 2 K.B. 501; 75 L.J.K.B. 745; 95 L.T. 367, 399; 70 J.P. 485; reversd. sub nom. , Leeds Corp'n. v. Ryder, [1907] A.C. 420; 76 L.J.K.B. 1032; 97 L.T. 261; 71 J.P. 484; 16 Digest 398, 2421	481, 487, 488, 489
R. v. Wright, (1858), Dears. & B. 431; 27 L.J.M.C. 65; 30 L.T.O.S. 292; 22 J.P. 71; 169 E.R. 1070; 15 Digest 891, 9781	804
Rabbitt v. Grant, [1904] 1 K.B. 323; 2nd Digest Supp.	470, 472, 474, 476, 477
Rabett v. Stamp Duties Comr., [1929] A.C. 444; Digest Supp.	199, 202
Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air, [1944] 1 All E.R. 60; [1944] Ch. 114; 113 L.J.Ch. 129; 170 L.T. 29; 2nd Digest Supp.	122, 123, 126, 130, 133
Ransom & Luck, Ltd. v. Surbiton Borough Council, [1949] 1 All E.R. 185; [1949] Ch. 180; [1949] L.J.R. 809; 113 J.P. 95; 2nd Digest Supp.	1374, 1375, 1377
Raven, Re , [1915] 1 Ch. 673; 84 L.J.Ch. 489; 113 L.T. 131; 8 Digest 303, 823	342, 345, 346, 1176, 1181, 1188
Read v. Lyons (J.) & Co., Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 471; [1947] A.C. 156; [1947] L.J.R. 39; 175 L.T. 413; 2nd Digest Supp.	925, 927
Reading v. A.-G., [1951] 1 All E.R. 617; [1951] A.C. 507	796, 800
Reckitt, Re , [1932] 2 Ch. 144; 101 L.J.Ch. 333; 147 L.T. 275; Digest Supp.	782, 783, 785
Reed v. Gray, [1952] 1 All E.R. 241	942, 955, 959, 962
Reeve v. Wood, (1864), 5 B. & S. 364; 34 L.J.M.C. 15; 34 L.J.Q.B. 24; 11 L.T. 449; 29 J.P. 214; 122 E.R. 867; 14 Digest 450, 4762	114
Reid v. Bickerstaff, [1909] 2 Ch. 305; 78 L.J.Ch. 753; 100 L.T. 952; 40 Digest 312, 2665	280, 286, 287
Reid v. Reid, [1926] P. 1; 95 L.J.P. 30; 134 L.T. 24; 27 Digest 503, 5384	790, 793, 795
Rekstin v. Severo Sibirsko Gosudarstvennoe Akcionernoe Obschestvo Komsseverputi & Bank for Russian Trade, [1933] 1 K.B. 47; 102 L.J.K.B. 16; 147 L.T. 231; Digest Supp.	637, 639, 642
Renals v. Cowlishaw, (1876), 9 Ch.D. 125; affd. C.A., (1879), 11 Ch.D. 866; 48 L.J.Ch. 830; 41 L.T. 116; 40 Digest 316, 2686	279, 280, 283, 284, 285, 287
Reynish v. Martin, (1746), 3 Atk. 330; 26 E.R. 991; sub nom. Rhenish v. Martin, 1 Wils. 130; 95 E.R. 532; 44 Digest 486, 3057	145, 146, 148
Reynolds v. Atherton, (1922), 127 L.T. 189; 12 Digest, Replacement, 69, 389	60, 65
Ricelip Parish v. Hendon Parish, (1698), 5 Mod. Rep. 416; 87 E.R. 739; 37 Digest 299, 995	123, 125
Richardson v. Richardson, (1942), 167 L.T. 260; 2nd Digest Supp.	374, 375
Richardson & Son v. Middlesbrough Borough Assessment Committee, [1947] 1 All E.R. 884; [1947] K.B. 958; 177 L.T. 103; 111 J.P. 357; 2nd Digest Supp.	158, 160
Richardsons (Charles), Ltd. v. Oppenheim, [1950] 1 All E.R. 420; [1950] 1 K.B. 616; 2nd Digest Supp.	89
Ricketts v. Erith Borough Council, [1943] 2 All E.R. 629; 113 L.J.K.B. 269; 169 L.T. 396; 108 J.P. 22; 2nd Digest Supp.	1213, 1214
Ridge, Re , (1885), 31 Ch.D. 504; 55 L.J.Ch. 265; 54 L.T. 549; 34 Digest 643, 411	342, 343
Ridgway v. Wharton, (1857), 6 H.L. Cas. 238; 27 L.J.Ch. 46; 29 L.T.O.S. 390; 10 E.R. 1287; 39 Digest 386, 234	1286, 1288
Rigby v. Connol, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 482; 49 L.J.Ch. 328; 42 L.T. 139; 8 Digest 512, 38	227, 238, 1176, 1180
Roberts v. Death, (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 319; 51 L.J.Q.B. 15; 46 L.T. 246; 21 Digest 629, 2131	134, 136
Roberts v. Roberts & Temple, (1917), 117 L.T. 157; 27 Digest 339, 3182	477, 479, 1077, 1087
Robertson v. Fraser, (1871), 6 Ch. App. 696; 40 L.J.Ch. 776; 44 Digest 977, 8328	609, 610
Robins v. National Trust Co., [1927] A.C. 515; 96 L.J.P.C. 84; 137 L.T. 1; Digest Supp.	374, 376
Robinson v. Gosnold, (1794), 6 Mod. Rep. 171; 87 E.R. 927	1077, 1083
Robinson v. Workington Corp'n., [1897] 1 Q.B. 619; 66 L.J.Q.B. 388; 75 L.T. 674; 61 J.P. 164; 38 Digest 55, 318	1328, 1336
Robson v. Headland, (1948), 64 T.L.R. 596; 2nd Digest Supp.	1308, 1311
Rogers v. Hosegood, [1900] 2 Ch. 388; 69 L.J.Ch. 652; 83 L.T. 186; 40 Digest 312, 2664	280, 287
Rogers v. Hyde, [1951] 2 All E.R. 79; [1951] 2 K.B. 923	150, 155, 664, 667
Roos v. Stent, (1909), T.S. 988; 32 Digest 44, f	502, 507
Rose, Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 971; [1949] Ch. 78; [1949] L.J.R. 208; 2nd Digest Supp.	1217, 1222
Rosenthal v. Alderton & Sons, Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 583; [1946] K.B. 374; 115 L.J.K.B. 215; 174 L.T. 214; 2nd Digest Supp.	796, 801
Ross v. Edwards & Co., (1895), 73 L.T. 100; 3 Digest 102, 288	1270, 1275
Roth, Re , (1896), 74 L.T. 50; 43 Digest 871, 3166	255, 260
Routh v. Jones, [1947] 1 All E.R. 179; affd. C.A. [1947] 1 All E.R. 758; 2nd Digest Supp.	116, 117, 118
Rowell v. Rowell, [1900] 1 Q.B. 9; 69 L.J.Q.B. 55; 81 L.T. 429; subsequent proceedings (1903), 89 L.T. 288; 2 Digest 246, 1772	1077, 1083, 1086, 1087, 1088, 1091
Royal British Bank v. Turquand, (1855), 5 E. & B. 248; 119 E.R. 474; affd. Exch. Ch., (1856), 6 E. & B. 327; 25 L.J.Q.B. 317; 119 E.R. 886; 9 Digest 97, 406	554, 558, 561, 562, 565, 567, 569, 571
Royal Choral Society v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 101; 112 L.J.K.B. 648; 169 L.T. 100; 25 Tax Cas. 263; 2nd Digest Supp.	50, 54, 55
Royal College of Surgeons of England, Re , [1899] 1 Q.B. 871; 68 L.J.Q.B. 613; 80 L.T. 611; sub nom. Royal College of Surgeons of England v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 4 Tax Cas. 344; 39 Digest 299, 1781	985, 986, 988, 989, 995, 999, 1000, 1003
Ruabon S.S. Co. v. London Assurance, [1900] A.C. 6; 69 L.J.Q.B. 86; 81 L.T. 585; 29 Digest 245, 1981	21, 24, 25, 30
Rushden Heel Co., Ltd. v. Keene. Rushden Heel Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1948] 2 All E.R. 378; [1948] L.J.R. 1570; 30 Tax Cas. 298; 2nd Digest Supp.	532, 542
Russell v. Russell, [1895] P. 315; 64 L.J.P. 105; 73 L.T. 295; affd. H.L., [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 291, 2661	875, 877, 882, 883, 884, 885
Russell v. Russell, [1924] A.C. 687; 93 L.J.P. 97; 131 L.T. 482; 27 Digest 297, 2743	1229, 1233, 1238, 1239, 1240, 1242
Russian Bank for Foreign Trade, Re , [1933] Ch. 735; 102 L.J.Ch. 309; 149 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.	1270, 1271, 1272, 1274

Russoff v. Lipovitch, [1925] 1 K.B. 628; 94 L.J.K.B. 355; 132 L.T. 789; 31 Digest, Replacement, 722, 805d	PAGE 1143, 1149
Rylands v. Fletcher, (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70; 36 Digest 187, 311	1328, 1337
Sachs v. Miklos, [1948] 1 All E.R. 67; [1948] 2 K.B. 23; [1948] L.J.R. 1012; 2nd Digest Supp.	796, 801
St. Aubyn (L. M.) v. A.-G. (No. 2), [1951] 2 All E.R. 473; [1952] A.C. 15	867, 874
St. Hilary, Cornwall, Re. Roffe-Silvester v. King, [1938] 4 All E.R. 147; [1939] P. 64; 159 L.T. 546; Digest Supp.	323, 324
St. Saviour's, Walthamstow, Re, [1950] 2 All E.R. 812; 2nd Digest Supp.	323, 324, 325
Salomon v. Salomon & Co. Salomon & Co. v. Salomon, [1897] A.C. 22; 66 L.J.Ch. 35; 75 L.T. 426; 9 Digest 34, 11	685, 690
Sandlands, Re, (1871), L.R. 6 C.P. 411; sub nom. Re Mayer, 40 L.J.C.P. 201; 24 L.T. 273; 17 Digest 202, 132	60, 62
Sartoris's Estate, Re, [1892] 1 Ch. 11; 61 L.J.Ch. 1; 65 L.T. 544; 5 Digest 666, 5914	1108, 1121, 1122
Scott v. A.-G., (1886), 11 P.D. 128; 55 L.J.P. 57; 56 L.T. 924; 50 J.P. 824; 11 Digest 325, 133	496, 499
Scott v. Avery, (1856), 5 H.L. Cas. 811; 25 L.J.Ex. 308; 28 L.T.O.S. 207; 10 E.R. 1121; 2 Digest 350, 263; 16 Digest 115, 149	342, 345, 346, 1176, 1181
Scott v. Bevan, (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 78; 9 L.J.O.S.K.B. 152; 109 E.R. 1073; 35 Digest 174, 44	1053, 1054, 1056
Scott v. Scott, [1913] A.C. 417; 82 L.J.P. 74; 109 L.T. 1; 16 Digest 31, 301	1188, 1189, 1190
Scott v. Scott, [1921] P. 107; 90 L.J.P. 171; 124 L.T. 619; 27 Digest 610, 5486	414, 418, 735, 736, 739, 740
Sechiari, Re, [1950] 1 All E.R. 417; 2nd Digest Supp.	255, 258
Sedgwick, Collins & Co. v. Russia Insurance Co. of Petrograd, [1926] 1 K.B. 1; 95 L.J.K.B. 7; 133 L.T. 808; affd. H.L. sub nom. Employers' Liability Assurance Corpn. v. Sedgwick, Collins & Co., [1927] A.C. 95; 95 L.J.K.B. 1015; 136 L.T. 72; Digest Supp.	1270, 1273
Sharp v. Wakefield, [1891] A.C. 173; 60 L.J.M.C. 73; 64 L.T. 180; 55 J.P. 197; 30 Digest, Replacement, 12, 51	481, 488
Sharpe v. Durrant, (1911), 55 Sol. Jo. 423; affd. [1911] W.N. 158; 19 Digest 95, 536	1309, 1313
Shearn v. Shearn, [1931] P. 1; 100 L.J.P. 41; 143 L.T. 772; Digest Supp.	1128, 1134
Shears v. Matthews, [1948] 2 All E.R. 1064; 113 J.P. 36; 2nd Digest Supp.	434, 435
Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co. Meux's Brewery Co. v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., [1895] 1 Ch. 287; 64 L.J.Ch. 216; 72 L.T. 34; subsequent proceedings, [1895] 2 Ch. 388; 28 Digest 415, 403	299, 303
Shelley v. London County Council. Harcourt v. London County Council, [1948] 2 All E.R. 898; [1949] A.C. 56; [1949] L.J.R. 57; 113 J.P. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	1350, 1351
Shepherd, Re, [1948] 2 All E.R. 932; [1949] Ch. 116; [1949] L.J.R. 205; 2nd Digest Supp.	363, 364, 366, 367
Sherwood v. Sherwood, [1928] P. 215; affd. C.A., [1929] P. 120; 98 L.J.P. 66; 140 L.T. 230; Digest Supp.	223
Sherwood v. Tucker, [1924] 2 Ch. 440; 94 L.J.Ch. 66; 132 L.T. 86; 30 Digest, Replacement, 495, 1399	60, 63
Shirley, Re. Ex p. MacKay, (1887), 58 L.T. 237; 4 Digest 134, 1223	107, 109
Shoreditch, Haggerston Division Case, Cremer v. Lowles, (1896), 5 O.M. & H. 68; 20 Digest 93, 711	698, 700
Sifton v. Sifton, [1938] 3 All E.R. 435; [1938] A.C. 656; 107 L.J.P.C. 97; 159 L.T. 289; Digest Supp.	408, 409, 410, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832
Simpson v. Godmanchester Corpn., [1897] A.C. 696; 66 L.J.Ch. 770; 77 L.T. 409; 19 Digest 14, 29	809, 812
Simpson v. Simpson, [1951] 1 All E.R. 955; [1951] P. 320; 115 J.P. 286	875, 881
Sing, Re, [1914] W.N. 90; 44 Digest 1185, 10249	770, 773
Slater v. Hoyle & Smith, [1920] 2 K.B. 11; 89 L.J.K.B. 401; 122 L.T. 611; 39 Digest 481, 1026	796, 800
Slingsby v. District Bank, Ltd., [1931] 2 K.B. 588; 100 L.J.K.B. 665; 145 L.T. 644; affd. C.A., [1932] 1 K.B. 544; 101 L.J.K.B. 231; 146 L.T. 377; Digest Supp.	709, 711, 713, 716, 718
Smiley v. Townshend, [1950] 1 All E.R. 530; [1950] 2 K.B. 311; 2nd Digest Supp.	796, 800
Smith, Re, (1892), 67 L.T. 64; 17 Digest 203, 135	60, 62
Smith, Re, [1913] 2 Ch. 216; 83 L.J.Ch. 13; 108 L.T. 952; 23 Digest 497, 5640	274, 277
Smith v. Baker & Sons, [1891] A.C. 325; 60 L.J.Q.B. 683; 65 L.T. 467; 55 J.P. 660; 36 Digest 95, 633	443, 445
Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 531; 2nd Digest Supp.	1093, 1096, 1099, 1102
Smith v. Kemp, (1693), Carth. 285 (90 E.R. 769); Holt, K.B. 322 (90 E.R. 1078); 2 Salk. 637 (91 E.R. 537); 4 Mod. Rep. 186 (87 E.R. 340); Skin. 342 (90 E.R. 152); 25 Digest 33, 318	1328, 1331
Smith v. London, Midland & Scottish Ry. Co., 1948 S.L.T. 238; 1948 S.C. 125; 2nd Digest Supp.	1249, 1253
Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd. v. Bolland. Smith's Potato Crisps (1929), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1948] 2 All E.R. 367; [1948] A.C. 508; [1948] L.J.R. 1557; 30 Tax Cas. 267; 2nd Digest Supp.	531, 533, 539, 540, 542, 1290, 1292
Smithwick v. National Coal Board, [1950] 2 K.B. 335; 2nd Digest Supp.	1014, 1017
Société des Hôtels Le Touquet Paris-Plage v. Cummings, [1922] 1 K.B. 451; 91 L.J.K.B. 288; 126 L.T. 513; 35 Digest 173, 36	383, 384, 385, 387
South Cadbury (Inhabitants) v. Braddon, Somerset (Inhabitants), (1710), 2 Salk. 607; 91 E.R. 515; 33 Digest 403, 1131	123, 131
South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., [1905] A.C. 239; 74 L.J.K.B. 525; 92 L.T. 710; 43 Digest 114, 1186	227, 235
Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd. v. Shirlaw, [1939] 2 All E.R. 113; [1939] 2 K.B. 206; 108 L.J.K.B. 747; 160 L.T. 53; affd., H.L., [1940] 2 All E.R. 445; [1940] A.C. 701; 109 L.J.K.B. 461; 164 L.T. 251; 2nd Digest Supp.	922, 924
Southgate Borough Council v. Watson, [1944] 1 All E.R. 603; [1944] K.B. 541; 113 L.J.K.B. 337; 171 L.T. 26; 108 J.P. 22; 2nd Digest Supp.	150, 154
Sovfracht (V/O) v. Van Udens Scheepvaart en Agentuur Maatschappij (N.V. Gebr.), [1943] 1 All E.R. 76; [1943] A.C. 203; 112 L.J.K.B. 32; 168 L.T. 323; 2nd Digest Supp.	629, 631
Spofforth & Prince v. Golder, [1945] 1 All E.R. 363; 173 L.T. 77; 26 Tax Cas. 310; 2nd Digest Supp.	1290, 1292
Squire v. Squire, [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; [1949] P. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 112 J.P. 319; 2nd Digest Supp.	875, 881, 885
Stamps Comr. v. Hope, [1891] A.C. 476; 60 L.J.P.C. 44; 65 L.T. 268; 12 Digest, Replacement, 581, 4481	549, 551, 552, 553
Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Clan Line Steamers, Ltd., [1924] A.C. 100; 93 L.J.P.C. 49; 130 L.T. 481; 41 Digest 428, 2691	720, 722
Stanley, In the Estate of, [1916] P. 192; 85 L.J.P. 222; 114 L.T. 1182; 39 Digest 336, 224	842, 846, 848, 849

	PAGE
Stanley v. Powell, [1891] 1 Q.B. 86; 60 L.J.Q.B. 52; 63 L.T. 809; 55 J.P. 327; 15 Digest 826, 9034.	925, 928
Statham v. Statham, [1929] P. 131; 98 L.J.P. 113; 140 L.T. 292; Digest Supp.	1077, 1091
Statham v. Statham & Baroda (Gaekwar), [1912] P. 92; 81 L.J.P. 33; 105 L.T. 991; 1 Digest 48, 333	327, 328
Steljes v. Ingram, (1903), 19 T.L.R. 534; 42 Digest 970, 24	215, 216, 218
Stevens v. Durban-Roodeport Gold Mining Co., (1909), 100 L.T. 481; 5 Tax Cas. 402; 28 Digest 54, 277	531, 533, 535, 540, 543
Stewart, Re, [1908] 2 Ch. 251; 77 L.J.Ch. 525; 99 L.T. 106; 25 Digest 539, 274	16, 18, 19
Steward v. Gromett, (1859), 7 C.B.N.S. 191; 29 L.J.C.P. 170; 141 E.R. 788; 33 Digest 481, 164	823, 824, 826
Stewart v. Stewart, [1947] 2 All E.R. 813; [1948] 1 K.B. 507; [1948] L.J.R. 799; 2nd Digest Supp.	1299, 1301, 1308, 1310
Stibbe v. Stibbe, [1931] P. 105; 100 L.J.P. 82; 144 L.T. 742; Digest Supp.	223
Stimson v. Standard Telephones & Cables, Ltd., [1939] 4 All E.R. 225; 161 L.T. 387; sub nom. Stimpson v. Standard Telephones & Cables, Ltd., [1940] 1 K.B. 342; 109 L.J.K.B. 315; 32 B.W.C.C. 253; 2nd Digest Supp.	1013, 1016, 1017
Stirland v. Public Prosecutions (Director), [1944] 2 All E.R. 13; [1944] A.C. 315; 113 L.J.K.B. 394; 171 L.T. 78; 109 J.P. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	1044, 1051
Stirling Western District Committee of the County Council v. North British Ry. Co., (1896), 23 R. (Cl. of Sess.) 929; 33 Sc. L.R. 459; 3 S.L.T. 323; 38 Digest 263, f	1249, 1251
Stoddart, Re, [1916] 2 Ch. 444; 86 L.J.Ch. 29; 115 L.T. 540; 21 Digest 37, 232	363, 365, 366, 367
Stokes v. Whicher, [1920] 1 Ch. 411; 89 L.J.Ch. 198; 123 L.T. 23; 12 Digest 159, 1028	1286, 1289
Strong v. Bird, (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 315; 43 L.J.Ch. 814; 30 L.T. 745; 25 Digest 538, 268	16, 17, 18, 19, 20
Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield, [1906] A.C. 448; 75 L.J.K.B. 864; 95 L.T. 241; 5 Tax Cas. 215; 28 Digest 57, 290	531, 533, 539, 540, 542
Strood Estates Co., Ltd. v. Gregory, [1936] 2 All E.R. 355; [1936] 2 K.B. 605; 105 L.J.K.B. 726; 155 L.T. 82; affd. H.L. [1937] 3 All E.R. 656; [1938] A.C. 118; 106 L.J.K.B. 752; 157 L.T. 338; 31 Digest, Replacement, 667, 7660	470, 472, 474, 475, 476
Struthers v. Struthers, [1943] South Australia Reports 89	1077, 1084
Sturla v. Freccia, (1880), 5 App. Cas. 623; 50 L.J.Ch. 86; 43 L.T. 209; 44 J.P. 812; 22 Digest 314, 3072	179, 184, 185, 186
Sulley v. Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, (1892), 29 S.L.R. 620; 3 Tax Cas. 173; 28 Digest 13, o	985, 998, 1004
Swedish Central Ry. Co., Ltd. v. Thompson, [1924] 2 K.B. 255; affd. H.L., [1925] A.C. 495; 94 L.J.K.B. 527; 133 L.T. 97; 9 Tax Cas. 342; 28 Digest 28, 144	646, 647, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661
Sweetapple v. Horlock, (1879), 11 Ch.D. 745; 48 L.J.Ch. 660; 41 L.T. 272; 37 Digest 478, 758	964, 968
Symes & Jaywick Associated Properties, Ltd. v. Essex Rivers Catchment Board, [1936] 3 All E.R. 908; [1937] 1 K.B. 548; 106 L.J.K.B. 279; 156 L.T. 116; 101 J.P. 179; Digest Supp.	765, 766
Szymonowski & Co. v. Beck & Co., [1923] 1 K.B. 457; affd. H.L., sub nom. Beck & Co. v. Szymanowski & Co., [1924] A.C. 43; 93 L.J.K.B. 25; 130 L.T. 387; 39 Digest 467, 925	522, 524
Taddy & Co. v. Sterious & Co., [1904] 1 Ch. 354; 73 L.J.Ch. 191; 89 L.T. 628; 39 Digest 526, 1406	1309, 1314
Talbot v. Marshfield, (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 549; 12 L.T. 761; 62 E.R. 728; 18 Digest 147, 970	85, 88
Talbot-Ponsonby's Estate, Re, [1937] 4 All E.R. 309; Digest Supp.	828, 832
Taylor (Inhabitants) v. Foston (Inhabitants), (1696), 2 Salk. 475; 91 E.R. 409	123, 129
Tamlin v. Hannaford, [1949] 2 All E.R. 327; [1950] 1 K.B. 18; 2nd Digest Supp.	314, 318, 320, 322
Tamplin v. James, (1880), 15 Ch.D. 215; 43 L.T. 520; 35 Digest 101, 84	60, 62
Tatham, Re, [1945] 1 All E.R. 29; [1945] Ch. 34; 114 L.J.Ch. 9; 172 L.T. 14; 2nd Digest Supp.	34, 36, 1037, 1039
Taylor v. Waters, (1816), 7 Taunt. 374; 129 E.R. 150; 30 Digest, Replacement, 530, 1680	1308, 1312
Taylor v. Sims & Sims, [1942] 2 All E.R. 375; 167 L.T. 414; 2nd Digest Supp.	39, 41
Taylor's Will Trusts, Re, (1950), 66 (pt. 2) T.L.R. 507; 2nd Digest Supp.	425, 427
Temperance Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Nevitt, [1940] 3 All E.R. 237; 163 L.T. 234; 2nd Digest Supp.	1033, 1034
Tennant v. Smith, [1892] A.C. 150; 61 L.J.P.C. 11; 66 L.T. 327; 56 J.P. 596; 3 Tax Cas. 158; 28 Digest 17, 87	867, 874
Tennants (Lancashire), Ltd. v. Wilson (C. S.) & Co., Ltd., [1917] A.C. 495; 86 L.J.K.B. 1191; 116 L.T. 780; 12 Digest, Replacement, 449, 3387	981, 983
Terry v. Huntington, (1668), Hard. 480; 145 E.R. 557; 38 Digest 84, 613	227, 232, 239
Theophile v. Solicitor-General, [1950] 1 All E.R. 405; [1950] A.C. 186; 2nd Digest Supp.	520
Thomas v. Sorrell, (1673), Vaugh. 330; 124 E.R. 1098; 19 Digest 196, 1496	149, 154
Thomas v. Thomas, [1948] 2 All E.R. 98; [1948] 2 K.B. 294; [1948] L.J.R. 1943; 112 J.P. 345; 2nd Digest Supp.	401, 402, 1348, 1349
Thomas & Co., Ltd. v. Portsea S.S. Co., Ltd., [1912] A.C. 1; 2 Digest 331, 141	332, 336
Thomas's Will Trusts, Re, [1930] 2 Ch. 67; 99 L.J.Ch. 286; 144 L.T. 64; Digest Supp.	140, 148
Thompson, Re, [1934] Ch. 342; 103 L.J.Ch. 162; 150 L.T. 451; Digest Supp.	1068, 1073, 1074
Thompson v. Earthy, [1951] 2 All E.R. 235; [1951] 2 K.B. 596; 115 J.P. 407	150, 156, 1299, 1300, 1301, 1308, 1311, 1315, 1316
Thompson v. Park, [1944] 2 All E.R. 477; [1944] K.B. 408; 113 L.J.K.B. 561; 170 L.T. 207; 30 Digest, Replacement, 539, 1736	150, 155
Thompson v. R., [1918] A.C. 221; 87 L.J.K.B. 478; 118 L.T. 418; 82 J.P. 145; 14 Digest 360, 3310	66, 67, 68, 69, 1044, 1047, 1048, 1050
Thompsonstone v. Simpson, [1952] 1 All E.R. 431	728, 732
Thomson (Archibald), Black & Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, 1919 S.C. 289; 56 Sc.L.R. 185; 7 Tax Cas. 158; 28 Digest 45, o	361
Thornton v. Thornton, (1886), 11 P.D. 176; 55 L.J.P. 40; 54 L.T. 774; 11 Digest 478, 1321	1026, 1029
Thorpe v. Brumfitt, (1873), 8 Ch. App. 650; 37 J.P. 742; 36 Digest 215, 576	1326, 1328, 1332, 1333
Tidy v. Battman, [1934] 1 K.B. 319; 103 L.J.K.B. 158; 150 L.T. 90; Digest Supp.	447, 449
Timms v. Timms, [1925] Victoria Reports 597	1077, 1084, 1085
Timpson's Executors v. Yerbury, [1936] 1 All E.R. 186; [1936] 1 K.B. 645; 105 L.J.K.B. 749; 154 L.T. 283; 20 Tax Cas. 155; Digest Supp.	867, 871, 872
Tims v. John Lewis & Co., Ltd. [1951] 1 All E.R. 814; [1951] 2 K.B. 459; 115 J.P. 265	1, 5
Tomkins v. Tomkins, [1948] 1 All E.R. 237; [1948] P. 170; [1948] L.J.R. 1028; 2nd Digest Supp.	790, 791, 793
Travis v. Minister of Local Government & Planning, [1951] 2 All E.R. 673; [1951] K.B. 956; 115 J.P. 500	1294, 1297

Trinidad Lake Asphalt Operating Co., Ltd. v. Trinidad & Tobago Income Tax Comrs., [1945] 1 All E.R. 9; [1945] A.C. 1; 114 L.J.P.C. 10; 171 L.T. 328; 2nd Digest Supp.	866, 867, 869, 872, 873
Truculent (H.M.S.). Admiralty v. The Divina (Owners), [1951] 2 All E.R. 968; [1952] P. 1.	720, 721, 723
Trusts Affecting Scheduled Investments, Re, (1943), 87 Sol. Jo. 66; 2nd Digest Supp.	458, 459
Tuckey v. Henderson, (1863), 33 Beav. 174; 55 E.R. 333; 44 Digest 1011, 8694	78, 79
Tulip v. Tulip, [1951] 2 All E.R. 91; [1951] P. 378	373, 374, 378
Tulk v. Moxhay, (1848), 2 Ph. 774; as reported in 1 H. & Tw. 105; 18 L.J.Ch. 83; 13 L.T.O.S. 21; 47 E.R. 1345; 30 Digest, Replacement, 424, 669	1308, 1313
Tunncliffe v. Birkdale Overseers, (1888), 20 Q.B.D. 450; 59 L.T. 190; 52 J.P. 452; 38 Digest 471, 323	314, 320
Turner, Re, [1949] 2 All E.R. 935; 2nd Digest Supp.	674, 675, 677
Turner v. Stallibrass, [1898] 1 Q.B. 56; 67 L.J.Q.B. 52; 77 L.T. 482; 42 Digest 968, 8	215, 217
Turton, Re, [1926] Ch. 96; 95 L.J.Ch. 136; 134 L.T. 439; 44 Digest 480, 2971	146, 147
Tweedale, In the Goods of, (1874), L.R. 3 P. & D. 204; 44 L.J.P. & M. 35; 31 L.T. 799; 39 J.P. 152; 39 Digest 338, 250	841, 842, 851
Twopenny v. Young, (1824), 3 B. & C. 208; 5 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 259; 107 E.R. 711; 12 Digest, Replacement, 581, 4477	549, 551
Tyler, Re, [1891] 3 Ch. 252; 60 L.J.Ch. 686; 65 L.T. 367; 8 Digest 327, 1100	985, 991, 992, 1003
Underwood (A. L.), Ltd. v. Bank of Liverpool, Same v. Barclays Bank, [1924] 1 K.B. 775; 93 L.J.K.B. 690; 131 L.T. 271; Digest Supp.	554, 559, 560
Union of London & Smith's Bank, Ltd.'s Conveyance, Re, [1933] Ch. 611; 102 L.J.Ch. 241; 149 L.T. 82; Digest Supp.	280, 284, 286, 287
Upton v. Upton, [1919] Victoria Reports 612	1077, 1084
Vatcher v. Paull, [1915] A.C. 372; 84 L.J.P.C. 86; 112 L.T. 737; 37 Digest 492, 865	964, 967
Vestey's Executors v. Inland Revenue Comrs. Vestey's Executors v. Colquhoun, [1949] 1 All E.R. 1108; 31 Tax Cas. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	173, 175, 177
Vickery v. Martin, [1944] 2 All E.R. 167; [1944] K.B. 679; 113 L.J.K.B. 552; 171 L.T. 89; 2nd Digest Supp.	431, 433, 728, 732, 733
Victoria Laundry (Windsor), Ltd. v. Newman Industries, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 997; [1949] 2 K.B. 528; 2nd Digest Supp.	89, 90, 970, 974, 977
Viney v. Viney, [1951] 2 All E.R. 204; [1951] P. 457; 115 J.P. 397	478, 479, 1076, 1078, 1080, 1081, 1083, 1085, 1089, 1090, 1091
Vionnet (Madeleine) et Cie. v. Wills, [1939] 4 All E.R. 136; 161 L.T. 311; Digest Supp.	383, 384, 385, 387, 388
Vitruvia S.S. Co. v. Ropner Shipping Co., 1925 S.C. (H.L.) 1; 41 Digest 806, 6675	21, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 33
Voisey, Ex p. Re Knight, (1882), 21 Ch.D. 442; 52 L.J.Ch. 121; 47 L.T. 362; 30 Digest, Replacement, 459, 1006	404, 405, 407, 408
Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros., Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 547; [1946] K.B. 50; 115 L.J.K.B. 119; 173 L.T. 330; 110 J.P. 76; 2nd Digest Supp.	1013, 1015, 1016, 1017, 1064, 1065, 1066, 1093, 1102
W. v. W., (1950), 1 Western Weekly Rep. 981, British Columbia	1194, 1196
Wait, Re, [1927] 1 Ch. 606; 96 L.J.Ch. 179; 136 L.T. 552; 39 Digest 678, 2644	1308, 1311
Waite v. Jones, (1835), 1 Bing. N.C. 656; 27 Digest 219, 1901	414, 416
Wallis v. Harrison, (1838), 4 M. & W. 538; 8 L.J.Ex. 44; 150 E.R. 1543; subsequent proceedings, (1839), 5 M. & W. 142; 151 E.R. 61; 19 Digest 28, 130	1308, 1312, 1313
Wallis v. Smith, (1882), 21 Ch.D. 243; 52 L.J.Ch. 145; 47 L.T. 389; 17 Digest 79, 12	89, 91, 970, 975
Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1878), 4 App. Cas. 30; 48 L.J.M.C. 65; 39 L.T. 453; 43 J.P. 108; 16 Digest 186, 920	122, 123, 125, 126, 129, 132, 133
Warkworth, The, (1884), 9 P.D. 145; 53 L.J.P. 65; 51 L.T. 558; 41 Digest 918, 8092	720, 722
Warren v. Murray, [1894] 2 Q.B. 648; 64 L.J.Q.B. 42; 71 L.T. 458; 32 Digest 453, 1194	1279, 1283, 1285
Watson v. Lowe, [1950] 1 All E.R. 100; 114 J.P. 85; 2nd Digest Supp.	434
Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas, [1947] 1 All E.R. 582; [1947] A.C. 484; [1947] L.J.R. 515; 176 L.T. 498; 2nd Digest Supp.	875, 878, 880, 882
Weatherley v. Weatherley, [1947] 1 All E.R. 563; [1947] A.C. 628; [1947] L.J.R. 869; 176 L.T. 434; 111 J.P. 220; 2nd Digest Supp.	875, 878, 1077, 1082
Webb, Re, [1951] 2 All E.R. 131; [1951] 1 Ch. 808	1309, 1314
Webb v. Paternoster, (1619), Poph. 151 (79 E.R. 1250); 2 Roll. Rep. 143 (81 E.R. 713); Godb. 282 (78 E.R. 165); Palm. 71 (81 E.R. 983); 30 Digest, Replacement, 540, 1744	1308, 1312
Webb v. Stenton, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 518; 52 L.J.Q.B. 584; sub nom. Re Hatton, Webb v. Stenton, 49 L.T. 432; 21 Digest 625, 2107	637, 638
Webb, Ltd. v. Webb, [1951] Oct. 24 (unreported)	150, 155
Wedgwood, Re, [1921] 1 Ch. 601; 90 L.J.Ch. 322; 125 L.T. 146; 21 Digest 36, 226	364, 365, 366
Weinberger v. Inglis (No. 2), [1918] 1 Ch. 517; 87 L.J.Ch. 345; 118 L.T. 769; affd. H.L. [1919] A.C. 606; 88 L.J.Ch. 287; 121 L.T. 65; 42 Digest 790, 14	226, 227, 231, 233, 1176, 1181
Wenlock (Baroness) v. River Dee Co., (1883), 36 Ch. D. 675, n.; 57 L.T. 402, n.; affd. H.L., (1885), 10 App. Cas. 354; 54 L.J.Q.B. 577; 53 L.T. 62; 49 J.P. 773; 13 Digest 367, 1002	985, 1002
Wennhak v. Morgan, (1888), 20 Q.B.D. 635; 57 L.J.Q.B. 241; 59 L.T. 28; 52 J.P. 470; 17 Digest 158, 591	74, 75
West Bromwich School Board v. West Bromwich Overseers, (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 929; sub nom. R. v. West Bromwich School Board, 53 L.J.M.C. 153; 52 L.T. 164; 48 J.P. 808; 38 Digest 470, 319	602, 608
West Ham Corp. v. Benabo (Charles) & Sons, [1934] 2 K.B. 253; 103 L.J.K.B. 452; 151 L.T. 119; 98 J.P. 287; Digest Supp.	1350
Westby's Settlement, Re, [1950] 1 All E.R. 479; [1950] Ch. 296; 2nd Digest Supp.	1108, 1110
Westminster Corp. v. Southern Ry. Co., Railway Assessment Authority & Smith & Son, Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 322; [1936] A.C. 511; 105 L.J.K.B. 537; sub nom. Re Southern Ry. Co.'s Appeals, 155 L.T. 33; 100 J.P. 327; Digest Supp.	350, 352
Weston, In the Goods of, (1869), L.R. 1 P. & D. 633; 38 L.J.P. & M. 53; 20 L.T. 330; 33 J.P. 312; 44 Digest 362, 1951	111
Wheatley v. Wheatley, [1949] 2 All E.R. 428; [1950] 1 K.B. 39; 113 J.P. 459; 2nd Digest Supp.	401, 402, 403, 1348, 1349
White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd., [1937] 3 All E.R. 269; affd. C.A., [1938] 1 All E.R. 546; [1938] Ch. 351; 107 L.J.Ch. 212; 158 L.T. 338; Digest Supp.	59, 60, 64, 65
White (otherwise Berry) v. White, [1948] 2 All E.R. 151; [1948] P. 330; [1948] L.J.R. 1476; 2nd Digest Supp.	1194, 1196, 1197
White v. White, [1949] 2 All E.R. 339; [1950] P. 39; 113 J.P. 474; 2nd Digest Supp.	925, 927, 928
Whitlocke v. Baker, (1807), 13 Ves. 510; 33 E.R. 385; 22 Digest 119, 935	1229, 1246

	PAGE
Whitney v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1926] A.C. 37; 95 L.J.K.B. 165; 134 L.T. 98; 28 Digest 105, 649	918, 920
Whitney v. Whitney, [1951] 1 All E.R. 301; [1951] P. 250; 115 J.P. 71	1076, 1078, 1084, 1085, 1088, 1089, 1090
Whitwham v. Westminster Brymbo Coal & Coke Co., [1896] 2 Ch. 538; 65 L.J.Ch. 741; 74 L.T. 804; 34 Digest 717, 1011	796, 800
Wicks v. Dowell & Co., Ltd., [1905] 2 K.B. 225; sub nom. Wilkes v. Dowell & Co., 74 L.J.K.B. 572; 92 L.T. 677; 34 Digest 266, 2265	106, 1066
Wilkes's (Beloved) Charity, Re , (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 440; 20 L.J.Ch. 588; 17 L.T.O.S. 101; 42 E.R. 330; 43 Digest 875, 3197	897, 900
Wilkinson, Re , [1926] Ch. 842; 95 L.J.Ch. 523; 135 L.T. 736; 44 Digest 442, 2678	828, 831, 832
Willé v. St. John, [1910] 1 Ch. 701; 79 L.J.Ch. 239; 102 L.T. 383; 42 Digest 258, 2919	104, 106
Williams, Re , [1945] 2 All E.R. 102; [1945] Ch. 320; 115 L.J.Ch. 101; 173 L.T. 132; 2nd Digest Supp.	34, 36, 37, 1037, 1039
Williams v. Bagot (Lord), (1824), 4 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 315; 2 L.J.O.S.K.B. 152; 16 Digest 436, 2999	123, 128, 130
Williams v. Jones, (1845), 13 M. & W. 628; 14 L.J.Ex. 145; 4 L.T.O.S. 318; 153 E.R. 262; 11 Digest 466, 1220	1053, 1055
Williams v. Linnitt, [1951] 1 All E.R. 278; [1951] 1 K.B. 565	289, 290, 291, 293
Williams v. Singer. Pool v. Royal Exchange Assurance, [1921] 1 A.C. 65; 89 L.J.K.B. 1151; 123 L.T. 632; 7 Tax Cas. 387; 28 Digest 78, 425	814, 817
Williams v. Williams, [1943] 2 All E.R. 746; 113 L.J.P. 18; 169 L.T. 375; 2nd Digest Supp.	1385, 1386
Williamson v. Thornycroft (John I.) & Co., Ltd., [1940] 4 All E.R. 61; [1940] 2 K.B. 658; 110 L.J.K.B. 82; 2nd Digest Supp.	21, 27
Wilson v. Brett, (1843), 11 M. & W. 113; 152 E.R. 737; sub nom. Willson v. Brett, 12 L.J.Ex. 264; 12 Digest, Replacement, 251, 1949	216, 219
Wilson v. Walters, [1926] 1 K.B. 511; 95 L.J.K.B. 624; 134 L.T. 597; 40 Digest 437, 571	529
Wilson v. Wilson, (1849), 6 Moo. P.C.C. 484; 13 E.R. 771; 27 Digest 340, 3199	876, 884
Wilson & Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English, [1937] 3 All E.R. 628; [1938] A.C. 57; 106 L.J.P.C. 117; 157 L.T. 406; Digest Supp.	720, 721, 722, 723
Wingham, Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 908; [1949] P. 187; [1949] L.J.R. 695; 2nd Digest Supp.	842, 848, 850
Winnan v. Winnan, [1948] 2 All E.R. 862; [1949] P. 174; [1949] L.J.R. 345; 2nd Digest Supp.	374, 375
Winter v. Cardiff Rural District Council, [1950] 1 All E.R. 819; 114 J.P. 234; 2nd Digest Supp.	720, 724
Winter Garden Theatre (London), Ltd. v. Millennium Productions, Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 678; reversd. H.L. [1947] 2 All E.R. 331; [1948] A.C. 173; [1947] L.J.R. 1422; 177 L.T. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.	150, 155, 1308, 1312, 1314
Winterbottom, Re. Ex p. Winterbottom, (1886), 18 Q.B.D. 446; 56 L.J.Q.B. 238; 56 L.T. 168; 4 Digest 95, 856	107, 109
Winters v. Dance, [1949] L.J.R. 165; 2nd Digest Supp.	663, 666
Wood, Re , [1949] 1 All E.R. 1100; [1949] Ch. 498; [1949] L.J.R. 1509; 2nd Digest Supp.	1068, 1074
Wood v. Cooper, [1894] 3 Ch. 671; 63 L.J.Ch. 845; 71 L.T. 222; 31 Digest, Replacement, 176, 3095	299, 301
Wood v. Lake, (1751), Say. 3; 96 E.R. 783; 30 Digest, Replacement, 537, 1713	1308, 1312
Wood v. Leadbitter, (1845), 13 M. & W. 838; 14 L.J.Ex. 161; 4 L.T.O.S. 433; 9 J.P. 312; 153 E.R. 351; 30 Digest, Replacement, 542, 1771	150, 155, 1308, 1312, 1313
Wood v. Wood, (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 190; 43 L.J.Ex. 153; 30 L.T. 815; 8 Digest 510, 29	1176, 1181
Wood v. Wood, (1867), L.R. 1 P. & D. 309; 36 L.J.P. & M. 34; 15 L.T. 593; 31 J.P. 567; 44 Digest 343, 1726	1031, 1032
Wood v. Wood, (1949) W.N. 59; 2nd Digest Supp.	370, 371
Woodall v. Clifton, [1905] 2 Ch. 257; 74 L.J.Ch. 555; 93 L.T. 257; 30 Digest, Replacement, 495, 1395	60, 63, 64, 65
Woolworth (F. W.) & Co., Ltd. v. Lambert, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1523; [1937] Ch. 37; 106 L.J.Ch. 15; 155 L.T. 236; Digest Supp.	1143, 1147
Wright v. Carter, [1903] 1 Ch. 27; 72 L.J.Ch. 138; 87 L.T. 624; 42 Digest 79, 702	1363, 1369
Wright v. Court, (1825), 4 B. & C. 596; 4 L.J.O.S.K.B. 17; 107 E.R. 1182; 14 Digest 173, 1508	1203, 1207, 1211, 1212
Writers to the Signet (Society of) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1886), 14 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 34; 28 Digest 13, m	985, 998
Wyatt v. Kreglinger & Fernau, [1933] 1 K.B. 793; 102 L.J.K.B. 325; 148 L.T. 521; Digest Supp.	414, 421
Wynn's Will Trusts, Re , [1952] 1 All E.R. 341	1176, 1181, 1188
Yarmouth v. France, (1837), 19 Q.B.D. 647; 57 L.J.Q.B. 7; 34 Digest 225, 1884	1013, 1015
Yates (Inspector of Taxes) v. Starkey, [1951] 1 All E.R. 732; [1951] Ch. 465	1128, 1134
York, The, [1929] P. 173; 98 L.J.P. 147; 141 L.T. 215; Digest Supp.	21, 23
Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] K.B. 718; 113 L.J.K.B. 513; 171 L.T. 113; 37 B.W.C.C. 51; affd. H.L., [1946] 1 All E.R. 98; [1946] A.C. 163; 115 L.J.K.B. 63; 174 L.T. 39; 38 B.W.C.C. 48; 2nd Digest Supp.	163, 164, 985, 988
Young v. Ladies' Imperial Club, [1920] 2 K.B. 523; 89 L.J.K.B. 563; 123 L.T. 191; 8 Digest 509, 25	227, 233, 240, 1175, 1179
Young (John) & Co. v. Bankier Distillery Co., [1893] A.C. 691; 69 L.T. 838; 58 J.P. 100; 44 Digest 13, 54	1327, 1330
Zetland (Marquess) v. Driver, [1938] 2 All E.R. 158; [1939] Ch. 1; 107 L.J.Ch. 316; 158 L.T. 456; Digest Supp.	299, 301

STATUTES, ETC., REFERRED TO

	PAGE
PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES
Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946 (c. 49), sched. I, para. 16 ..	1318
Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), sched. I, Part II, para. 8 (a) ..	274
Agricultural Credits Act, 1928 (c. 43), s. 5 (1) ..	549
Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (c. 9), s. 10 ..	97
Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63)—
s. 24 (1) ..	389
(3) (a) ..	748
s. 57 (1) ..	97
(3) ..	929
s. 70 (1) ..	97
(b) ..	929
s. 92 (3) ..	979
s. 99 ..	929
Agriculture Act, 1947 (c. 48), ss. 29 (1), 44 (1) ..	97
Air Force Act, s. 144 (1) ..	760
Air Navigation Act, 1920 (c. 80), s. 9 (1) ..	436
Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59)—
s. 1 (1) (c) (d) ..	519
ss. 18 (1), 38 (1) ..	133
s. 147 (1) ..	107
Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (c. 65), s. 4 ..	450
Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 29 (1) ..	709
British Nationality Act, 1948 (c. 56), s. 1 (1) (3) ..	326
Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945 (c. 20), s. 7 (1), (4), (7) (b) ..	545
Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 13 (4) ..	80
Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), Table "A", art. 68 ..	922
Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38)—
s. 352 (1) ..	112
s. 353 (5) ..	112
(6) ..	112, 613
Copyright Act, 1911 (c. 46), s. 22 (1) ..	205
County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53)—
s. 31 ..	411
s. 47 (1) (b) (i) (ii) ..	215
Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 24 (2) (as amended by Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), sched. IX) ..	1123
Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 11 ..	58
Doctors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5 ..	70
Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899 (c. 19), sched., s. 10 (b) ..	298
Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919 (c. 100), ss. 21, 22 (1) ..	298
Electricity Act, 1947 (c. 54), s. 57 (2), sched. IV, Part III ..	298
Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) (1) (b) ..	179
Exchange Control Act, 1947 (c. 14), s. 33 (1) ..	383
Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67)—
s. 14 (1) ..	56, 670, 833
s. 16 ..	670, 935
s. 20 ..	670
s. 25 (1) ..	443, 1302
(3), 26 (1) ..	679
s. 119 (1) ..	935
s. 151 (6) ..	679
Factory and Workshops Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (1) (c) (iii) ..	157
Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30)—
s. 5 (3) (as amended by Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 48) ..	162
s. 14 (1) ..	44
Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 55 (1) (b) ..	1388
Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 21 (1), (4), (9) (b) ..	173
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, Part I, para. 5, para. 8 ..	531
Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 30 (1) (2) ..	531
Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35)—
s. 36 (1) ..	428
s. 39 (1) ..	646
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1947 (c. 9), s. 6 (1) ..	775
Food and Drugs (Milk, Dairies and Artificial Cream) Act, 1950 (c. 35), s. 36 (3) ..	347
Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (c. 69)—
s. 5 ..	1060
s. 10 ..	1060
Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 5 ..	455
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 1 ..	1360
Highway Act, 1864 (c. 101), s. 48 ..	634
Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51)—
s. 79 (4) ..	1318
s. 163 ..	1352
s. 164 (2) ..	1350
Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40)—
s. 34 (2) ..	34
sched. D, case I ..	888
cases I and II, r. 3 (a) ..	360, 531, 1290
case V, r. 2 ..	866
Miscellaneous Rules, r. 2 ..	92
Income Tax Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 42, sched. IV, Part I ..	314
Income Tax Act, 1945 (c. 32)—
s. 14 (1) (b) and proviso ..	763
s. 55 (3) ..	918
Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17)—
s. 2 (1) (a), (5) ..	470
s. 12 (2) ..	663
(7) ..	460
s. 17 (2) ..	1142
India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949 (c. 92), s. 1 (1) ..	1060

Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36)—
s. 4 (1)	12
s. 5 (1)	12, 1344
(2)	1344
s. 18 (1)	463
s. 19 (2)	1142
Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40)—
s. 2 (1)	460
s. 11 (1)	455
Larceny Act, 1916 (c. 50), s. 30	803
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20)—
ss. 52 (1) (2) (d), 54 (2)	404
s. 56 (1)	59
Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1)	528, 701
Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 1	74
Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951 (c. 38)—
s. 10 (1)	685
(a)	437
s. 12 (1), (3) (e)	813
s. 20 (1)	437
Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51)—
s. 1 (7) (b)	104
s. 2 (1)	480
sched. III, para. 4 (1)	942, 1018
Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 1 (1)	495
Limitation Act, 1933 (c. 21), ss. 9 (2), 10 (1), 16	1279
Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75)—
s. 12	74
s. 17	1299
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25)—
s. 1 (1) (b)	1076
s. 2 (1)	250
s. 17 (1)	495
s. 19 (2)	413, 1128
(3)	413
s. 26 (1)	527
s. 32 (1) (2)	1228
Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (c. 60), s. 503 (1)	719
Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923 (c. 20), s. 3 (1)	678
National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81)—
s. 6 (1)	191
(2)	744
s. 7 (4) (10)	1379
s. 35 (1)	115
s. 79 (1)	439
National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949 (c. 93), s. 1 (1)	115
Obscene Publications Act, 1957 (c. 83), s. 1	1256
Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 46	411
Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), ss. 93, 343 (1)	368
Railways Clauses Act, 1863 (c. 92) s. 6	1248
Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 47	1248
Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1)	157
Registered Designs Act, 1949 (c. 88), s. 1 (4)	205
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. I, para. (a)	1142
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (3)	431, 728
Representation of the People Act, 1949 (c. 68), s. 63 (1) (b)	697
Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (c. 75), s. 3	1326
Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (c. 53), s. 9 (2)	1258
Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43)—
s. 12 (1)	447
s. 22 (2)	434
s. 28 (1)	423
Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 4 (1)	1286
Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 47 (1), (4) (b)	404
Statute of Frauds, 1677 (c. 3), s. 4	294
Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49)—
s. 17 (2) (as amended by Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), sched. IX)	1123
s. 25	823
s. 31 (1) (as substituted by Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (c. 38), s. 1)	466
(vii) (as substituted by Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (c. 38), s. 1)	347
Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 7	370, 611
Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 1 (4)	401, 1348
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49)—
s. 32	1025
s. 70 (5)	250
s. 176 (c) (as substituted by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 2)	875
s. 190 (1)	735
Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), s. 10 (3)	1150
Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51)—
s. 12 (1)	1374
(2)	1166
s. 14 (1)	1293
s. 23 (2) (3)	592
s. 43 (1)	509, 1293
(2)	1293
s. 75 (9)	1166
s. 78 (1)	1150
s. 119 (1)	1166
Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89)—
s. 2 (1) (b)	629
s. 7 (1)	314, 1107
(b) (c) (d)	629

	PAGE
Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19)—
s. 32 (3)	425
s. 41 (1)	133
Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 11	841, 852
LOCAL ACTS
Derby Corporation Act, 1901 (c. cclxvii), ss. 109 (1), 113	1326
Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Electric Power Act, 1929 (c. lxxxvi), s. 37 (1), (2)	1326
Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Act, 1905 (c. 1), s. 24	7
DOMINION ACT
New South Wales Stamp Duties Act, 1920–1949, s. 102 (2) (a) (c) (d)	198
RULES
County Court Rules, Ord. 27, r. 1	637
Designs Rules, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 2368), r. 26 (2)	205
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1940)—
r. 17 (1)	1343
r. 64 (1)	70
R.S.C.—
Ord. 22, r. 14 (11)	787
(9)	1135
Ord. 28, r. 11	1057
Ord. 36, r. 29 (6)	220
Ord. 38, r. 28	102
Ord. 45, r. 1	637
Ord. 53D, r. 1	12
Ord. 55, r. 5A, r. 8A	1033
Ord. 65, r. 27 (29)	241, 942
REGULATIONS
Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1145)—
reg. 2 (1)	696
reg. 22	696
(c), reg. 24 (1)	1064
Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 as amended by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 502)—
reg. 56A (2)	1008
(4) (6)	354
General Regulations, 1913 (S.R. & O., 1913, No. 748), reg. 23 (made under Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 86)	754
Horizontal Milling Machines Regulations, 1928 (S.R. & O., 1928, No. 548), reg. 3	56, 833
Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1359)—
reg. 4 (1) (3)	480
reg. 5 (2)	915
reg. 18 (3)	1018
Milk and Dairies Regulations, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 1588), reg. 26 (1)	380
National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1475), reg. 12	122
Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 654)—
schedule	1013
Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 1196), reg. 10 (b) (i)	1125
ORDERS
Aliens Order, 1920 (S.R. & O., 1920, No. 448), art. 12 (1)	187
Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940 (S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1305), art. 7	262
Explosives in Coal Mines Order, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 6), cl. 2 (h) (i)	754
Industrial Disputes Order, 1951 (S.I., 1951, No. 1376), art. 2	1370
Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 1198), art. 1 (i) (ii)	1107
Utility Mark and Apparel and Textiles (General Provisions) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 2642), art. 10 (1)	909
MISCELLANEOUS
Japanese Judgments and Civil Proceedings Ordinance, 1946 (Singapore Ordinance, No. 37 of 1946), s. 3	1261

WORDS AND PHRASES

	PAGE
Actual fault or privity of shipowner	719
Agreement respecting land	59
All devises . . . shall be enjoyed free of death duties	363
All moneys now or hereafter due	549
As riparian owner . . . upon the river	1326
At sea	841
Building	1166
Child the marriage of whose parents is the subject of the proceedings	527
Clerk or lawful deputy	1350
Construction, structural alteration, repair or maintenance of a building	686
Consultant	294
Consummation	1194
Conversion	1352
Cutting	763
Cutting off of bolts from boilers or other plant	1013
Development for which permission has been granted	1293
Directly or indirectly carrying on or being interested or concerned in carrying on the business or profession of medicine . . . within a radius of ten miles	115
Discontinue to bear and use	740
Disuse	408
Driver	434
Dwelling-house let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house	431, 728
Execution under the process of any court of justice	411

	PAGE
Existing company	1388
F. and F.N.	709
F. and F.N. Co.	709
Flatlets	1352
For the remainder of her life . . . 10s. per week	600
Force majeure	981
Hampering	678
Held by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital	191
Hospital	439, 1379
I give devise and bequeath unto	674
Improvement	470, 1142
Income arising from possessions out of United Kingdom	866
Income tax	782
Institution for the reception and treatment of persons	439
Interest in land	59
Lay-by	634
Lent	597
. . . maintained in connection with any such institution	439
Material	1064
Natural consequence	888
Non-occupying	725
Notice . . . proceeding from a local authority	1350
Occupier	685
On condition that they agree to pay in equal shares . .	609
Owing or accruing	637
Owner	368
Parties concerned	298
Plant	1013
Promoting . . . election of . . . candidate	697
Provision	935
Radius not exceeding radius of largest saw used on bench	1125
Reasonable doubt	1059
Receiving the rackrent . . . as agent	368
Residing with	1348
Residue of my deposit account . . . after all . . . debts . . . have been liquidated	274
Separate dwelling	663
Shall be deported	187
Ship's delivery order	1021
Stop	833
Subject to export licence	981
Superior and directing authority	646
Survive	769
Take off	436
Take up permanent residence in England	827
Taking off	436
Taxi	439
Termination of agreement	1355
Trust to take effect after death	198
Used for deposit of material	1064
Which shall injure prejudice affect or destroy the natural aspect and condition of the land	298
Wholly or mainly for purposes of retail trade or business	437
Within the close, curtilage, or precincts forming a factory	679
Working platform	696
Works for the erection of a building . .	1150
Works on land	1166

CORRIGENDA

- [1949] 1 All E.R.
P. 65. L.P.T.B. v. UPSON. Line D.6: for "stop within that distance." read "spot within that distance."
[1951] 1 All E.R.
P. 204. R. v. COHEN. Case referred to No. (2): for "R. v. Fitzgerald, (1948), unrep." read "R. v. Fitzpatrick, [1948] 1 All E.R. 769; [1948] 2 K.B. 203; 112 J.P. 251; 2nd Digest Supp." p. 206, line C: for "R. v. Fitzgerald (2)" read "R. v. Fitzpatrick (2)".
[1951] 2 All E.R.
P. 1036. Re E. W. SAVORY, LTD. Counsel: for "H. H. Monroe" read "J. G. Monroe".
[1952] 1 All E.R.
P. 114. Re CAMBRIDGE COFFEE ROOM ASSOCN., LTD. Solicitors: after "Waterhouse & Co." read "agents for Few & Kester, Cambridge."
P. 161. DAVIS COHEN & SONS, LTD., v. HALL. Line H.7: for "Hines (Ipswich Revenue Officer) v. Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Asscn., Ltd (3)" read "Richardson & Son v. Middlesbrough Borough Assessment Committee (5)".
P. 180. THRASYVOULOS IOANNOU v. PAPA CHRISTOFOROS DEMETRIOU. Counsel: for "Pearson, K.C." read "Karmel, K.C."
P. 188. R. v. GOVERNOR OF BRIXTON PRISON. Counsel: before "J. P. Ashworth" read "Kenneth Diplock, K.C., and".
P. 274. Re MELDRUM'S WILL TRUSTS. Counsel: for "H. H. Monroe" read "J. G. Monroe".
P. 305. CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES, LTD. v. REGEM. Lines E—G. Read the following instead of as printed:
HELD: if a clause in a contract contains language which expressly exempts the person in whose favour it is made ("the proferens") from the consequence of the negligence of his servants, effect must be given to that provision; if there is no express reference to negligence, the court must consider whether the words used are wide enough, in their ordinary meaning, to cover negligence on the part of the servant of the proferens; if they are wide enough, the court must then consider whether the head of damage may be based on some ground, other than that of negligence, which is not so fanciful or remote that the proferens cannot be supposed to have desired protection against it, and the existence of a possible head of damage other than that of negligence is fatal to the proferens; on construction, cl. 7 and cl. 17 were not expressed in such clear terms as would exempt the Crown from liability for the negligence of its servants or entitle it to an indemnity from the company for such negligence in the course of carrying out the obligation of the Crown under cl. 8; under the provisions of the Civil Code of Lower Canada the damage might be based on some ground other than negligence; and, therefore, the Crown had failed to establish its defence under cl. 7 or its claim for indemnity under cl. 17.
Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., in Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry, Ltd ([1945] 1 All E.R. 245), applied.
P. 404. KUSHNER v. LAW SOCIETY. Line C.2: for "January 31, 1951" read "January 31, 1952".
P. 492. PAVIA & CO., S.P.A. v. THURMANN-NIELSEN. Three lines from bottom of page: delete from "The arbitrators held" to the end of the page, and substitute: "On a consultative Case submitted by the parties for the opinion of the court MCNAIR, J., held that the credit should have been made available,"
P. 709. ARAB BANK, LTD. v. ROSS. Line D.6: for "plead" read "prove".
P. 744. MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. STAFFORD CORPN. Delete "and Another" from the title of the case.
P. 745, line B.3: after "Stafford Corporation" delete "and the Mid-Staffordshire Joint Hospital Board."
P. 750. LAWES v. CAULCUTT. Counsel: for "Aggs" read "Joseph Dean".

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS
AND THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

TEMPEST v. SNOWDEN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Denning and Morris, L.JJ.), November 22, 23, 1951.]

Malicious Prosecution—Honest belief of defendant in plaintiff's guilt—Form of question for jury.

Where, in an action for malicious prosecution which is tried with a jury, the question of honest belief is in issue the form of question to the jury should be: "Did the defendant honestly believe in the plaintiff's guilt?" or "Did the defendant honestly believe in the charges he was preferring?", and should not include any reference to reasonable or probable cause for the action of the defendant as, e.g., in the question: "Did the defendant honestly believe that there were reasonable grounds for instituting the prosecution?"

AS TO MALICE AND WANT OF REASONABLE AND PROBABLE CAUSE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 13-16, paras. 15-20; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, pp. 491-497, Nos. 309-379.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Herniman v. Smith, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1377; affd. H.L., [1938] 1 All E.R. 1; [1938] A.C. 305; 107 L.J.K.B. 225; Digest Supp.
- (2) Hicks v. Faulkner, (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 167; 51 L.J.Q.B. 268; 46 L.T. 127; 46 J.P. 420; 33 Digest 467, 18.
- (3) Abrath v. North Eastern Ry. Co., (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 440; 52 L.J.Q.B. 620; 49 L.T. 618; 47 J.P. 692; affd. H.L., (1886), 11 App. Cas. 247; 55 L.J.Q.B. 457; 55 L.T. 63; 50 J.P. 659; 33 Digest 500, 418.
- (4) Tims v. John Lewis & Co., Ltd., [1951] 1 All E.R. 814; [1951] 2 K.B. 459; 115 J.P. 265.
- (5) Musgrove v. Newell, (1836), 1 M. & W. 582; 5 L.J.Ex. 227; 150 E.R. 567; 33 Digest 488, 267.
- (6) Broad v. Ham, (1839), 5 Bing. N.C. 722; 8 L.J.C.P. 357; 132 E.R. 1278; 33 Digest 495, 362.

APPEAL by the defendant in an action for malicious prosecution from a judgment of CASSELS, J., sitting with a jury at Leeds Assizes, dated July 4, 1951.

Granville Sharp, K.C., and Snowden for the defendant.
Beyfus, K.C., and Forrester-Paton for the plaintiff.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: This is an appeal by the defendant from a verdict of the jury and the judgment of CASSELS, J., in an action for malicious prosecution in which there was judgment for the plaintiff for damages amounting to £205 5s. The only matter which counsel for the defendant relied on before us was the impropriety of the first question put by the judge to the jury. In those circumstances it is right to say that we have heard nothing on the merits from counsel for the plaintiff.

The plaintiff as a salesman had been in the service of a company of which the defendant was at all material times the chairman of the board of directors. The company was concerned in the business of selling such articles as burglar alarms, amplifiers, and the like. In May, 1950, the defendant laid an information before the stipendiary magistrate at Bradford, as a result of which two summonses were served on the plaintiff charging him, on one summons, with larceny as a servant of burglar alarm apparatus, and, on the second summons, with fraudulent conversion of the same articles. After an adjournment the first summons came on for hearing before the magistrate who took the view that there was no evidence to support it, and he, therefore, dismissed the summons without calling on the plaintiff to answer the charge made against him. The second summons for fraudulent conversion was not proceeded with. The plaintiff then issued the writ in the present action for malicious prosecution, claiming general damages and, as special damages, £5 5s. costs which the plaintiff had had to pay to his solicitor in excess of what he recovered from the defendant.

It is clear that in an action of this character a plaintiff must establish inter alia the following two propositions:—(i) that the defendant acted without reasonable and probable cause; and (ii) that the defendant acted maliciously. Two questions were submitted by the judge to the jury. Question 1 was: "Did the defendant honestly believe that there were reasonable grounds for instituting the prosecution?" Question 2 was: "Has the plaintiff satisfied you that the defendant was actuated by malice?" The jury answered the first question negatively and the second question affirmatively. The judge held that the defendant had acted without reasonable and probable cause, and judgment for the plaintiff was entered for £205 5s., the sum of £200 being the amount of the general damages.

It must now be taken as clearly established that the first of the two propositions which I have stated, though it may well be a matter of fact, is a question for the judge and not for the jury. The argument of counsel for the defendant may be put in this form. "By inviting the jury to answer the question: 'Did the defendant honestly believe that there were reasonable grounds for instituting the prosecution?' the minds of the jury were directed to, or, at least, were liable to be distracted by, a consideration of the question: 'Were there reasonable and probable grounds for the prosecution?'—the question which is for the judge and not for the jury." Counsel for the defendant argued that, the jury's mind being affected by this difficult problem, they came to the conclusion that there were no reasonable or probable grounds for the prosecution, more particularly, perhaps, because the magistrate dismissed the charge without calling on the plaintiff to answer it. If, said counsel, that was the thing they had in their minds, it would be easy enough for the jury to conclude: "Well, if there really was no reasonable and probable cause the defendant could not honestly have thought that there was," and, therefore, they answered the first question negatively. If they thought the defendant honestly did not think there was a case against the plaintiff, then, again, it would be a very easy step for them—perhaps a necessarily logical step—to conclude that he acted out of malice. Thus, argued counsel for the defendant, the whole verdict is vitiated by the jury's mind having been deflected in the first instance to a consideration of a matter not proper for them to consider.

I turn now to Herniman v. Smith (1). The speech of LORD ATKIN had the concurrence of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, LORD MACMILLAN, LORD MAUGHAM and LORD ROCHE, none of whom made any addition of his own. I have read and re-read LORD ATKIN's speech, and, with the utmost possible respect, I have not found it in all respects easy to follow. I say that because in the course of the speech various questions seem to be posed and treated almost as if they were the same questions in a different form. The question is put ([1938] 1 All E.R. 8): "... was there evidence of the want of reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution?" Then the more general question is posed: "was there reasonable and probable cause," and, finally, the question: "did the defendant honestly believe in the plaintiff's guilt?" The questions are not the same. They are not synonymous. The question whether there is any evidence of want of reasonable and probable cause is, I should say, a question of law. The general question: Was there reasonable and probable cause, as LORD ATKIN himself states, is a question of fact, although it is a question which has to be determined by the judge, and not left to the jury. That question was paraphrased by HAWKINS, J., in Hicks v. Faulkner (2) and that paraphrase was accepted by LORD ATKIN. It is as follows (8 Q.B.D. 171):

"Now I should define reasonable and probable cause to be, an honest belief in the guilt of the accused based upon a full conviction, founded upon reasonable grounds, of the existence of a state of circumstances, which, assuming them to be true, would reasonably lead any ordinarily prudent and cautious man, placed in the position of the accuser, to the conclusion that the person charged was probably guilty of the crime imputed."

If that is the meaning of the question: "Was there reasonable and probable cause," it is no wonder that it is a question not to be left to a jury.

However that may be, I think the difficulty that I have experienced depends on the particular circumstances of that case, and it is a trite remark that every judgment must be related to the facts which were before the court. I think, therefore, that it is not taking up time unduly if I refer to this extent to the facts of Herniman v. Smith (1). The relevant question which TALBOT, J., had put to the jury was: "Has it been proved that the defendant commenced and proceeded with the prosecution without any honest belief that the plaintiff was guilty of fraud?" The Court of Appeal held that there was no evidence which would justify the judge in leaving that question to the jury. In any case a judge can rule at an appropriate stage that there was no evidence either on which the negative question can be put or no evidence on which the second and affirmative question relating to malice can be put. It is conceivable that the judge in this case, if he had been invited to do so, would have ruled that there was no evidence of want of honest belief in the plaintiff's guilt, but I have no doubt that for a very proper reason he was not asked and was not minded so to rule. It was the gist of the plaintiff's case that the defendant never did have any honest belief in these charges which he preferred, and the defendant has not argued before us that there was no evidence to support the jury's first answer. I think, therefore, that the judge was concerned by the form of question to invite the jury to tell him, in their view, the answer to the question whether the defendant honestly believed in the charges he was preferring—that is, in the guilt of the plaintiff.

The question of the existence or absence of honest belief may not be a relevant question in every case, but that that may be a proper question to put to a jury in some cases appears to be clearly established from a passage in LORD ATKIN's speech. After referring to the statement of HAWKINS, J., and criticising the view which he thought had, perhaps, become prevalent—that the questions which were put by CAVE, J., in Abrath v. North Eastern Ry. Co. (3) should be put in all cases—LORD ATKIN said ([1938] 1 All E.R. 8):

"This, it seems to me, would be to take the decision of the issue out of the hands of the judge, to whom, in the interests of prosecutor and accused alike, it has been confided. The jury no doubt have important functions to perform. They are to find for the judge what the relevant facts are, when they are disputed. If there is any evidence of a lack of honest belief in the guilt of the accused on the part of the prosecutor, the fact whether he honestly believed or not is a disputed but essential fact, on which the judge is to draw his conclusion, and is a question for the jury."

If I have correctly analysed the matter by reference to LORD ATKIN's speech I think the problem in the present case narrows itself down to this: Did the question which was put to the jury have the emphasis, so to speak, put on the initial words: "Did the defendant honestly believe?", or was there so much emphasis on the latter words, "reasonable grounds for instituting the prosecution," that the jury were involved in answering a question which it was not for them to answer. I have found this a difficult matter, but on the whole I do not think that the court is justified in assuming against the jury that they were misled by the latter part of the question. I think the question was intended to be (and I am not satisfied that it was not) treated by the jury as being an invitation to them on all the facts given in evidence to determine the disputed, but essential, fact in the present case: Did the defendant honestly believe in the charges he was making? I am not prepared to make the assumption which counsel for the defendant invited us to make—which, if made, would vitiate the whole verdict.

In case it be of use in future cases it is desirable that, where the question of honest belief is an issue, the form of the question should be: "Did the defendant honestly believe in the plaintiff's guilt?" or "Did the defendant honestly believe in the charges he was preferring?", and that it is better not to include in the question any reference to reasonable grounds. I think counsel for the plaintiff may be correct when he says that, if the answer which the jury give to a question so put is that the defendant did not honestly believe in his charges, it must follow that there could not be reasonable and probable cause. I think that is why CASSELS, J., having had this answer of the jury, proceeded to hold that there was no reasonable or probable cause. The fact that the judge did so decide supports the view that the emphasis in his question was to discover for his assistance whether on the evidence there was an absence of honest belief on the defendant's part. If the jury said in answer to that question: "Yes, he did honestly believe" it would not necessarily follow that there was reasonable and probable cause. That the judge would then have to decide in the light of the expansion of the question enshrined in the judgment of HAWKINS, J. He would have to make up his mind whether there were reasonable grounds for the honest belief which was imputed to the defendant. I am bound to say that since this first question is, so to speak, taken out of the hands of the jury and left to the judge, it is not easy to see what real distinction there is in such a case as the present between the two questions posed. If the jury said that the defendant did not honestly believe in the plaintiff's guilt it is difficult to see how they could possibly answer the second question as to malice otherwise than in the affirmative. That, however, is another matter.

For the reasons I have indicated (though I confess to feeling great difficulty in the matter) I think that on the whole this court ought not to interfere with what I take to be the opinion of the jury that the defendant was not honest in taking the proceedings he did and that he acted out of malice. The jury thought the plaintiff should succeed and I do not think we should deprive him of the fruits of his judgment.

DENNING, L.J.: If the facts were as the defendant described them there would be reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution, but, if the facts were as the plaintiff said, there would not be. That crucial difference on the facts was a matter for the jury to decide. The judge would have to take their decision on it before he could decide whether there was reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution.

In my opinion, to determine the question of reasonable and probable cause, the judge must first find out what were the facts as known to the defendant, asking the jury to determine any dispute on that matter, and then the judge must ask himself whether those facts amounted to reasonable and probable cause. In Herniman v. Smith (1) LORD ATKIN put it quite clearly ([1938] 1 All E.R. 9):

“The facts upon which the prosecutor acted should be ascertained. In principle, other facts upon which he did not act appear to be irrelevant. When the judge knows the facts operating on the prosecutor’s mind, he must then decide whether they afford reasonable or probable cause for prosecuting the accused.”

If these facts do afford reasonable and probable cause, then the prosecution is justified, and it is not as a rule necessary for an inquiry to be made into the prosecutor’s belief. The state of his belief goes to malice, but not, as a rule, to reasonable and probable cause. This view is supported by the observations of LORD GODDARD, C.J., in Tims v. John Lewis & Co., Ltd. (4), where he said ([1951] 2 K.B. 472):

“The question whether there was a reasonable or probable cause is not, I think, to be determined subjectively, as has been suggested. It is a question which objectively the court has to decide on the evidence before it.”

It is sometimes said that to have reasonable and probable cause there must be an honest belief in the guilt of the accused. I do not think that should be regarded as a universal proposition applicable to all cases. It depends on the particular case. There are many justifiable prosecutions where the prosecutor has not himself formed any concluded belief as to the guilt of the accused. If he is a very fair-minded man he may well say to himself: “The case is so black against the man that I feel I must prosecute, but I am not going to believe him to be guilty unless the court finds him to be so.” Such a man would, I should have thought, have reasonable and probable cause for instituting a prosecution even though he did not affirmatively believe the man to be guilty. It is also said sometimes that to have reasonable and probable cause there must be an honest belief that there was reasonable ground for prosecuting. This, again, is by no means always necessary. Let me give another illustration. Take a prosecutor, a fair-minded man, who is personally convinced that the man is guilty, but does not himself think the evidence is sufficient to justify a prosecution. His solicitor advises him that the evidence is sufficient. He may well say to himself: “I do not myself believe there is sufficient evidence, but my solicitor says there is, so I feel justified in going on.” If the judge afterwards takes the same view as the solicitor, I should have thought that such a man would have reasonable and probable cause for instituting a prosecution, even though he did not himself affirmatively believe that there were reasonable grounds for it. In support of these views I would refer to Musgrove v. Newell (5). In that case the prosecutor had reasonable and probable cause for thinking that certain men had attempted to rob him and for thinking that the accused man was one of them, but, before he launched the prosecution, a constable told him that the accused was a man of good character. This seems to have so shaken the prosecutor’s belief in his guilt that he no longer affirmatively believed that the man was guilty. The court held that this did not take away the reasonable cause which existed. ALDERSON, B. (1 M. & W. 591), made it clear that the prosecutor’s state of belief, after hearing what the constable had to say went only to malice and not to reasonable and probable cause. It has to be remembered that, even though a prosecutor is actuated by the most express malice, nevertheless he is not liable so long as there was reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution. If envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness do not deprive him of this defence, I do not see why his state of belief should necessarily do so. The danger of introducing the question of honest belief in all cases, without considering the circumstances of the particular case, is that it places the decision of reasonable and probable cause in the hands of the jury, whereas the law, for good and sufficient reasons, has placed it in the hands of the judge. I do not say that the prosecutor's belief can never come into the question of reasonable and probable cause. If the prosecutor believed that the man was innocent and preferred the charge simply as a means of inducing him to pay over money to him, there would be no reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution because the cause for the prosecution would be, not the facts known to him, but another cause, and an unreasonable one: see Broad v. Ham (6). That is, I think, the sort of case which LORD ATKIN had in mind when he referred to belief in Herniman v. Smith (1). Apart from exceptional cases of that kind; however, I think it right to say that, once the facts as known to the prosecutor are ascertained, the state of his belief goes only to malice and not to reasonable and probable cause.

It is for these reasons that I think the form in which the first question was put to the jury in the present case was not strictly correct, but I can well understand how it came to be put. The real issue depended on whether the plaintiff or the defendant was to be believed. The plaintiff was alleging that the defendant was putting forward a false case, knowing it to be untrue. If the defendant did put forward a false case, he clearly would have no reasonable and probable cause for prosecuting. The only reasonable grounds which he had were those which depended on his own testimony. If he did not honestly believe in those grounds he was putting forward a false case. If he did honestly believe them, he was putting forward a true case. Hence the judge put the first question to get that issue decided. I would have preferred it to be put more simply—What were the facts known to the defendant? Were they as told by the plaintiff or as told by the defendant? In the circumstances of this case I think the first question came to practically the same thing. If the jury had believed the defendant, they would have answered the question: "Yes". As the answer is "No," they must have believed the plaintiff. If that is the right interpretation of the verdict, it is not a case in which we should interfere. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed.

MORRIS, L.J.: I have found myself in full agreement with the judgment delivered by SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R., and I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Clutton, Moore & Lavington, agents for Ralph C. Yablon & Temple-Milnes, Bradford (for the defendant); Ward, Bowie & Co., agents for James A. Lee & Priestley, Bradford (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LEEDS CORPORATION.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), November 12, 13, 28, 1951.]

Water Supply—Non-domestic purposes—Washing motor cars—Charge levied on registered owners of all cars in supply area—Burden on owner to show that no water supplied by undertakers used in respect of his car—Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Act, 1905 (c. i), s. 24.

Under s. 7 of the Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Act, 1905, with which, by s. 5, are incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (with certain immaterial exceptions), and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, the corporation were the water undertakers for the city and county of Leeds. Section 21 of the Act of 1905 provides: "In addition to the purposes set out in s. 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, a supply of water for domestic purposes shall not include a supply of water for washing any carriages." By s. 24: "The corporation may supply water for other than domestic purposes on such terms and conditions as the corporation think fit . . . and may if they think fit enter into agreements with respect to any such supply to any person and the moneys payable for the supply of water under this section shall be recoverable in the same manner as water rates." Two resolutions of the corporation, passed in 1926 and 1935 respectively, provided that the water charges for motor cars and tri-cars were to be 3s. for any quarter for which an excise licence was in force in respect of a car. This charge was levied by the corporation (in addition to the water rate, if any, payable for the ordinary water supply for domestic purposes) on every person registered in Leeds as the owner of a car in respect of which an excise licence was in force, and each quarter a demand note was sent to each registered owner demanding payment of the charge in respect of each car registered in his name, even if he had neither asked for, nor received, a supply of water for non-domestic purposes. Unless the registered owner satisfied the corporation (a) that no water supplied by them would be used in connection with any motor vehicle registered in his name, or (b) that the only water supplied by them which would be used in connection with his car was supplied by meter, and, therefore, separately paid for, he was liable for the charge, wherever the car was kept or washed. In an action to determine the validity of the procedure adopted by the corporation in levying this charge, HELD: the corporation had not exceeded their statutory powers.

AS TO WATER FOR NON-DOMESTIC PURPOSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, p. 466, para. 762; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, p. 1086, Nos. 197-199.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Harrogate Corpn. v. Mackay, [1907] 2 K.B. 611; 76 L.J.K.B. 977; 97 L.T. 689; 71 J.P. 458; 43 Digest 1081, 158.
- (2) Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Co., (1904), 20 T.L.R. 687; 43 Digest 1100, 294.

ACTION by the Attorney-General, suing on the relation of Automobile Proprietary, Ltd., for an injunction to restrain the defendants, Leeds Corporation, from levying a water rate of 3s. a quarter on every person registered with them as local taxation authority as being the owner of one or more motor cars (including tri-cars) in respect of each such car for which an excise licence was in force, whether or not such person had requested or been furnished with water for washing the car. It was contended for the Attorney-General that the procedure which the corporation had adopted in levying this charge was in excess of their statutory powers.

Sir Andrew Clark, K.C., and Skelhorn for the Attorney-General.
Upjohn, K.C., and Denys B. Buckley for the corporation.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 28. VAISEY, J., read the following judgment. The plaintiff in this action is the Attorney-General suing on the relation of Automobile Proprietary, Ltd., the owner of the Royal Automobile Club. The relator is not joined as a co-plaintiff, but it owns and pays rates in respect of premises known as Post Office House, Infirmary Street, in the city and county of Leeds. The defendants are the corporation for that city and county, and are, by virtue of the Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Act, 1905, s. 7, the water undertakers for the city and county. The question is whether the corporation are or are not exceeding their statutory powers as such water undertakers by acting in a manner which I will presently describe. Those statutory powers are contained in and conferred by the Act of 1905, to which I will refer as the "special Act". It is a comprehensive statute divided into twenty-nine Parts, 383 sections and fifteen schedules. Only very small parts of it affect the present question.

Section 5 of the special Act incorporates with it certain general Acts, including, in particular, the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (with certain immaterial exceptions) and the whole of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863. Section 3 of the Act of 1847 defines the expression "water rate" as including " . . . any rent, reward, or payment to be made to the undertakers for a supply of water."

Section 68 of the same Act reads:

" The water rates, except as herein-after and in the special Act mentioned, shall be paid by and be recoverable from the person requiring, receiving, or using the supply of water, and shall be payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water, and if any dispute arise as to such value the same shall be determined by two justices."

Section 74 is in these terms:

" If any person supplied with water by the undertakers, or liable as herein or in the special Act provided to pay the water rate, neglect to pay such water rate at any of the said times of payment thereof, the undertakers may stop the water from flowing into the premises in respect of which such rate is payable, by cutting off the pipe to such premises, or by such means as the undertakers shall think fit, and may recover the rate . . . " in the manner therein mentioned.

Two sections of the Act of 1863 seem to be material, namely, s. 12 and s. 18. Section 12 is:

" A supply of water for domestic purposes shall not include a supply of water for cattle, or for horses, or for washing carriages, where such horses or carriages are kept for sale or hire or by common carrier, or a supply for any trade, manufacture, or business, or for watering gardens, or for fountains, or for any ornamental purpose."

Section 18 is:

" If any person—first, not having from the undertakers a supply of water for other than domestic purposes, uses, for other than domestic purposes, any water supplied to him by the undertakers; or secondly, having from the undertakers a supply of water for any other than domestic purposes, uses, for any purposes other than those for which he is entitled to use the same, any water supplied to him by the undertakers,—he shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s., without prejudice to the right of the undertakers to recover from him the value of the water misused."

Reverting to the special Act, I think that s. 20, s. 21, s. 22, s. 24 and s. 25 are the only material ones for the present purpose. Section 20 reads:

“The corporation shall at the request of the owner or occupier of any dwelling-house or part of a dwelling-house in any street in which any pipe of the corporation shall be laid or of any person who under the provisions of this Act shall be entitled to demand a supply of water for domestic purposes furnish to such owner or occupier or other person a sufficient supply of water for domestic use at the rates not exceeding those hereinafter specified . . .”

The percentages are enumerated in the section and I need not more particularly refer to them, but I note that in the second proviso to that section a reference is made to the supply of “premises” with water. Section 21 is in these words:

“In addition to the purposes set out in s. 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, a supply of water for domestic purposes shall not include a supply of water for washing any carriages.”

That is contrary to the decision in Harrogate Corpn. v. Mackay (1). Section 22 refers to a “house” being supplied with water, and I venture to pose the question: If a house can be supplied, why not a car? Section 24 and s. 25 are:

“24. The corporation may supply water for other than domestic purposes on such terms and conditions as the corporation think fit and may supply water by measure either for domestic or other purposes and may if they think fit enter into agreements with respect to any such supply to any person and the moneys payable for the supply of water under this section shall be recoverable in the same manner as water rates: Provided always that no person shall be entitled to a supply of water for other than domestic purposes if such supply would interfere with the sufficiency of the supply of water for domestic purposes. 25. It shall be lawful for the corporation to enter into contracts with the owner of any tenement or hereditament situate in the neighbourhood of any water main or pipe of the corporation though not within the water limits and also with any local authority or company not within such water limits to take and use the water of the corporation upon such terms and conditions and for such period as may be agreed upon between them: Provided always that the corporation shall not supply water under any contract if and so long as their doing so would prevent them from giving throughout the water limits a sufficient supply for domestic purposes.”

The facts of the case are not in dispute. Two resolutions of the corporation, passed in 1926 and 1935 respectively, provide that the water charges for motor cars and tri-cars are to be 3s. for any quarter or less part of a year for which an excise licence is in force in respect of a car. The procedure which has been adopted to give effect to those resolutions is set out in an agreed statement. What the corporation do is to levy a water charge, in addition to the water rate or charge, if any, payable for the ordinary water supply for domestic purposes, on every person registered in Leeds as being the possessor of one or more motor cars (including tri-cars) in respect of which a road fund licence is in force, which person is referred to in the statement as the registered owner. They do this notwithstanding that the person charged has made no request for a supply of water for non-domestic purposes, and the process of levying such water charge is as follows. Early in each quarter a demand note is sent to each registered owner demanding payment in respect of that quarter of the total water charges claimed from that person whether for domestic or for non-domestic supplies. The demand note gives details of such charges, showing the separate items of which the total charge is composed, and as respects the motor cars of each such person it shows a charge of 3s. in respect of each motor car of which he is the registered owner. Attached to the agreed statement are examples of standard demand notes applicable in the case of (i) a person with a house and motor car in respect of which he is required to pay domestic and motor car water charges, (ii) a person with a house who is required to pay domestic charges but not a motor car charge, (iii) a person who is required to pay a motor car water charge but not a domestic water charge (e.g., a lodger), (iv) a person who is required to pay a domestic water charge and two or more motor car charges.

It seems that, on the first occasion that the demand note is sent to a registered owner claiming a water charge in respect of a motor car, a printed slip is always attached thereto worded in the following manner:

"A supply of water for any purposes in connection with a motor vehicle including a tri-car is not a domestic use. Therefore, where water from the Leeds Corporation supply is used for this purpose a charge of 3s. is payable for each quarter or less part of a year during which an excise licence is in force. The registered owner is liable whether the water is used by him or on his behalf (by a proprietor of a public garage or any other person) and wherever the vehicle is kept. An allowance will be made upon application in writing in respect of each complete quarter that a vehicle is not licensed."

If, on receipt of the demand note, the registered owner claims, and satisfies the corporation, that no water supplied by the corporation is or will be used by him or on his behalf for any purpose in connection with any motor vehicles registered in his name either at any public or private garage or at any address within the city's waterworks undertaking (area of supply), the corporation withdraw the charge. For this purpose the corporation treat water used at a public garage for the purpose of washing the registered owner's motor car as being used on his behalf, notwithstanding that the motor car is so washed by the proprietor or his servant by virtue of a contract with the registered owner and as an independent contractor, and, save in so far as he himself may be a registered owner, no charge is imposed on the proprietor of a public garage to whom water is supplied for use on motor vehicles unless such proprietor has elected to be provided with a metered supply. If a registered owner wishes to satisfy the corporation that no water is or will be used as aforesaid by or on his behalf, he is normally required to complete and sign a declaration in a certain printed form supplied to him if and when he claims exemption from the charge, and, unless the form is returned duly completed and signed by him (or, occasionally, when he otherwise satisfies the corporation that no water is or will be used as aforesaid), the corporation refuse to withdraw their claim to the charge. If, on receipt of the demand note, the registered owner claims and satisfies the corporation that the only water supplied by them which is or will be used for any purposes in connection with his car is supplied by meter, and, therefore, separately paid for, the corporation withdraw the charge.

Thus, it appears that the corporation have levied these water charges indiscriminately on every person registered with them, in their capacity of local taxation authority, as being the possessor of a motor car in respect of which an excise licence is in force, although such person may neither have asked for, nor been furnished with, a supply of water for purposes other than domestic purposes. I am told that the number of such cars is about twenty thousand. So far as I understand, the only use that can be made of any appreciable quantity of water in connection with a motor car is for washing it, for the amount of water poured into the radiator of a car is, in my judgment, so small as to be negligible. It is to be noted that the charge made by the corporation in respect of a steam wagon which is not only washed but has water put into its boiler is 30s., and not 3s., per quarter. The corporation have, in fact, proceeded on the assumption that, if a car is registered as ordinarily kept at an address in Leeds, it follows, not necessarily but as a matter of strong probability, that it will be washed on one or more occasions in each quarter with the corporation's water and that the probability is so strong as to justify them in requiring its owner to sustain the burden of establishing the contrary. I do not like the principle of levying a charge on the citizens of Leeds and then requiring them to disprove, if they can, the propriety of it, nor do I like the use which is being made of the records in the possession of the corporation as the local taxation authority to enable them to enforce their claims as water undertakers, nor do I think that their efforts to avoid unfair and unjustified charges have been particularly adroit. I also dislike very much the favour accorded to public garages in which a vast quantity of water must be used for washing cars, not only cars registered in Leeds, but those belonging to visitors to the city of various kinds and remaining there for varying periods. I do not, however, think that the corporation have failed to do their best to avoid making improper and unjustified charges, but I also think there is no doubt that a ratepayer will often rather pay this small charge than challenge it, and that is a thing which is undesirable and ought not to be allowed to occur.

The corporation claim that their way is really the only way in which they can charge for water used for car washing, any alternative involving the employment of a large number of inspectors to see that the water is not being misused. But whether I like or dislike their methods, the sole question is whether the corporation are justified in what they are doing by the very wide and comprehensive terms of s. 24 of the special Act, which authorises them to supply water for other than domestic purposes on such terms and conditions as they think fit, having regard to the differences between the language of that section and the language of the other sections to which I have called attention. It is suggested that a supply of water pre-supposes and requires that there should be a recipient of the supply who can be identified and that the supply of water can only be given and charged for where the recipient of the supply is identified or identifiable, and it is pointed out that in a special Act of Parliament the powers must be construed somewhat strictly: see Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Co. (2), per LORD MACNAGHTEN (20 T.L.R. 690). The opposing argument is that water may be supplied for a particular purpose (in this case, car washing), if it is made available for that purpose to those who desire either to use it or to procure that it shall be used for that purpose, and that it matters not whether the water leaves the mains of the corporation and reaches the owner's car by the action or instrumentality of the owner himself, or by that of his agent, a contractor, or a friend, nor does the source from which it happens to emerge from the corporation's reservoirs or mains matter. It is, therefore, said that the payment of the 3s. each quarter makes the car, as it were, free of the corporation's water from whatsoever tap or standpipe or hydrant it may be drawn. Treating the citizens of Leeds as a sort of family party and the city of Leeds as a collection of taps, standpipes and hydrants, the arrangement may be regarded as giving permission to those members of the family who have paid the water charge to have their cars washed with the city's water. I think on the whole that this view of the section is right, and, while I also think that the procedure is not incapable of some improvement, I hold that this action fails and must be dismissed, the relators paying the costs.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Clifford-Turner & Co. (for the Attorney-General); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for O. A. Radley, town clerk, Leeds (for the corporation).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRITISH AND COLONIAL FURNITURE CO., LTD. v.
WILLIAM McILROY, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Donovan, J.), November 19, 20, 1951.]

Landlord and Tenant—Compensation for goodwill—Failure by tenant to state amount of compensation claimed—Validity of claim—Amendment of claim—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 4 (1)—R.S.C., Ord. 53D, r. 1.

Landlord and Tenant—New lease—Claim for compensation bad—Effect on claim for new lease—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (1).

On Sept. 27, 1950, the tenants of business premises received three months' notice to quit expiring on Dec. 28, 1950. On Oct. 13, 1950, they served on the landlords two notices under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, the first claiming compensation for goodwill under s. 4 (1) and the second the grant of a new lease under s. 5 (1). The first notice did not state the amount of compensation claimed as required by R.S.C., Ord. 53D, r. 1, but on Nov. 24, 1950, the tenants took out an originating summons to determine the matters at issue and in that summons they stated the amount they claimed.

Held: (i) in view of the omission therein the first notice was not "made in the prescribed manner" as required by s. 4 (1) of the Act of 1927; even if the notice could be read as one document with the originating summons, the latter was taken out more than one month after the notice to quit (the time allowed by s. 4 (1) for making the claim); and, therefore, the tenants were debarred from proceeding with their claim for compensation.

(ii) assuming that the claim in the notice was a "pleading" within R.S.C., Ord. 28, r. 1, and the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 225, the court would not allow the claim to be amended by the insertion therein of the amount of compensation sought.

(iii) the requirement in s. 5 (3) (a) of the Act of 1927 that the tenant claiming a new lease must show that he "would be entitled to compensation" under s. 4 (1) meant that he would be so entitled if he had complied with the conditions laid down in s. 4 (1), and not that he was in fact entitled to compensation either because he had already claimed it in the prescribed form and proved the supporting facts or was in time to do so, and, therefore, the failure of the tenants to make a valid claim for compensation did not defeat their claim for a new lease.

AS TO COMPENSATION FOR GOODWILL AND RIGHT TO NEW LEASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 294-301, paras. 333-345; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Replacement Volume 31, pp. 629-633, Nos. 7393-7417.

PRELIMINARY ISSUES in an action claiming the grant of a new lease under s. 5 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, and, alternatively, compensation for the loss of goodwill under s. 4 (1).

On Sept. 27, 1950, the landlords of premises at 2 and 4 Oxford Road and 25, West Street, Reading, gave to the tenants three months' notice to quit. On Oct. 13, 1950, the tenants served on the landlords notices claiming compensation or a new lease of the premises under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 4 (1) and s. 5 (1). On Nov. 24, 1950, the tenants took out an originating summons to determine the matters at issue, and on Jan. 24, 1951, in their answer, the landlords denied that the tenants were entitled either to compensation or to a new lease on the ground that the claim for compensation did not state the amount claimed, as required by R.S.C., Ord. 53D, r. 1. The tenants contended that the notice substantially complied with the rule and that the originating summons stated the amount of compensation claimed and should be read as one document with the claim, thus constituting a claim in proper form, and they asked alternatively that they should be given leave to amend the claim as a pleading under R.S.C., Ord. 28, r. 1.

Weitzman, K.C., and Miss Faith A. Hopkins for the tenants.
Winn for the landlords.

DONOVAN, J.: This case comes before me by virtue of an order made in chambers by SLADE, J., on Feb. 21, 1951. The tenants carry on the trade of house furnishers at 2 and 4, Oxford Road, and 25, West Street, Reading, which premises are, apparently, comprised in a single holding. The tenants held these premises under a tenancy agreement for three years from Mar. 25, 1947, and thereafter, subject to three months' notice. On Sept. 18, 1950, a lease of the premises was granted by the owners—the Reading Corporation—to the landlords for ninety-nine years, subject to the aforesaid tenancy of the tenants. Nine days later—viz., on Sept. 27, 1950—the landlords gave the tenants three months' notice to quit, and the tenancy of the tenants thus expired on Dec. 28, 1950, but they are, I gather, still in possession. On Oct. 13, 1950, the tenants invoked the protection of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, and on that day they served two notices on the landlords. By the first notice they claimed to be entitled at the termination of their tenancy to compensation in respect of the goodwill which had become attached to the premises by reason of the tenants having carried on business there. By the second notice the tenants claimed, alternatively, a new lease of the premises. The first claim was made pursuant to s. 4 (1) of the Act; the second pursuant to s. 5 (1). An originating summons to lead to the determination of these matters was taken out by the tenants on Nov. 24, 1950. In their answer, dated Jan. 24, 1951, the landlords denied that the tenants were entitled either to compensation or to a new lease for the reason that in their claim to compensation the tenants had omitted to state the amount they claimed. It is this preliminary issue which I now have to decide pursuant to the order of SLADE, J., of Feb. 21, 1951.

I deal first with the question of compensation. Section 4 (1) of the Act of 1927, so far as here relevant, provides:

“The tenant of a holding to which this Part of this Act applies shall, if a claim for the purpose is made in the prescribed manner—(i) in the case of a tenancy terminated by notice, within one month after the service of the notice on the tenant; and (ii) in any other case, not more than thirty-six nor less than twelve months before the termination of the tenancy; be entitled, at the termination of the tenancy on quitting the holding, to be paid by his landlord compensation for goodwill if he proves to the satisfaction of the tribunal that by reason of the carrying on by him or his predecessors in title at the premises of a trade or business for a period of not less than five years goodwill has become attached to the premises by reason whereof the premises could be let at a higher rent than they would have realised had no such goodwill attached thereto.”

The manner in which such a claim has to be made is prescribed by Ord. 53D, r. 1 (1), of the Rules of the Supreme Court, which reads:

“A claim under the [Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927] for compensation . . . for goodwill . . . shall be made in writing signed by the claimant, his solicitor or agent, and shall state the name and address of the claimant and of the landlord against whom the claim is made, and shall contain . . . (d) if compensation is claimed, a statement of the amount claimed.”

It is objected on behalf of the landlords that the tenants' claim to compensation omitted, as, indeed, it did, to state the amount of compensation claimed, and that, accordingly, the claim was not made “in the prescribed manner” as s. 4 (1) of the Act requires, with the result, they say, that the tenants cannot now claim compensation, the time limit of one month for doing so having long expired.

The tenants resist this contention on the following grounds:—(i) that the notice claiming compensation substantially complied with Ord. 53D, r. 1 (1) (d);

(ii) that the originating summons stated the amount of compensation (as in fact it did) and that the notice plus the originating summons, read as one document, constitute a claim in the prescribed form. I cannot agree with the first contention. It is material that the landlord shall know the precise amount of compensation being claimed. For example, he can, within two months of receiving the claim, serve a counter-notice on the tenant offering him a renewal of the tenancy on reasonable terms: see s. 4 (1), proviso (b), of the Act. Again, s. 6 of the Act gives the landlord another alternative to the payment of compensation, depending on his serving a counter-notice on the tenant within one month after receiving the tenant's claim. The matter is not, therefore, one of pure technicality. In this case the landlords, reading the original claim for compensation, would not have the least idea how much was being claimed and whether it would be worth their while to avail themselves of their aforesaid rights, and, though I daresay they could have asked what amount of compensation was being claimed, they were not bound to do so. I am unable to take the view that s. 4 (1) and Ord. 53D, r. 1 (1) (d), have been "substantially" complied with, whatever "substantially" may mean in this context. I hold that to bring the claim within the aforesaid provisions the amount of compensation claimed must be contained in the claim, and here it was not. I purposely refrain from saying that it must be stated in figures, for the rule merely requires that the amount of compensation shall be stated, and I can conceive of this being done otherwise than by a figure. I reject the second argument of the tenants for the reason that the originating summons is dated Nov. 24, 1950, which is more than one month after the notice to quit was served on Sept. 27, 1950. Even, therefore, were it legitimate to read the tenants' claim and the originating summons as one document (as to which I say nothing), it would not be right to do so here, where one part of it, being for present purposes the vital part, was made after the statutory time limit had expired.

Alternatively, I was asked by the tenants to give them leave to amend their claim so as to make it comply with Ord. 53D, r. 1, i.e., by insertion of the amount claimed as compensation. Order 28, r. 1, was invoked in this connection. I do not think I ought to do so. If I am right, the omission to state the amount of compensation confers immunity on the landlord from having to pay it, and I do not think I ought to take that immunity away from him by allowing an amendment of the claim. Since I hold this view, I do not decide the question whether, in any event, the claim is a pleading within the meaning of Ord. 28, r. 1, and s. 225 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925. For the foregoing reasons, I hold that the tenants have not made a claim in the prescribed manner within the meaning of s. 4 (1) of the Act of 1927, and cannot now do so.

With regard to the alternative claim for a new lease, the provisions of s. 5 (1) of the Act of 1927 are in point. So far as relevant, that section enacts:

"Where the tenant alleges that, though he would be entitled to compensation under the last foregoing section, the sum which could be awarded to him under that section would not compensate him for the loss of goodwill he will suffer if he removes to and carries on his trade or business in other premises, he may in lieu of claiming such compensation, at any time within the period allowed for making a claim under the said section, serve on the landlord notice requiring a new lease of the premises at which the trade or business is carried on to be granted to him."

Sub-section (3) of the same section provides:

"Where the tenant is the applicant, the grant of a new lease under this section shall not be deemed to be reasonable—(a) unless the tenant proves that he is a suitable tenant and that he would be entitled to compensation under the last foregoing section, but that the sum which could be awarded to him under that section would not compensate him for the loss he would suffer if he removed to and carried on his trade or business in other premises."

A The landlords wish s. 5 (3) (a) to be construed in such a way as to debar the tenants from claiming a new lease. In other words, not only is their mistake in one claim to deprive them of compensation, but it is also to deprive them of the alternative of a new lease. To give effect to this contention, I must read

B s. 5 (3) (a) as though it prescribed that the tenant must prove that he is entitled to compensation either because he has already claimed it in the prescribed form and proved the supporting facts, or is still in time to do so. Such a construction, besides altering the sense of the relevant words, would lead to odd results. For example, the time when the tenant has to prove that he would be

C entitled to compensation is when the tribunal is considering whether to grant him a new lease. In almost every case, I should think, this will be more than one month after the notice terminating the tenancy has been served on the tenant, and it is within that month that the tenant must claim compensation, if he wants it. Suppose he does not, and, therefore, does not claim it, but wants a new lease instead. He will then go before the tribunal, probably some months later, and then, if the landlords' construction of s. 5 (3) (a) be right, be told that

D he cannot have a new lease—which he wants—because he did not claim compensation in time—which he does not want. Another way of putting the matter, according to the landlords, is that, while a tenant cannot have both compensation and a new lease, he cannot have a new lease unless he effectively claims both. If the language of s. 5 (3) (a) clearly produced this odd result, then effect would have to be given to it, but, in my view, it does not. The expression

E "would be entitled to compensation under the last foregoing section" obviously means that the tenant would be so entitled if he complied with the conditions therein laid down. I have not heard it disputed in this case that the tenants would, on that hypothesis, be entitled to compensation, i.e., as an alternative to a new lease. But it is said that in fact they have lost their right to compensation through not submitting a claim in due form. In my judgment, that is irrelevant

F in relation to the tenants' alternative claim for a new lease. The question which the opening words of s. 5 (3) (a) pose is, in my view, this: Would the tenant, if he submitted a claim in the prescribed form and in due time and proved the supporting facts, be entitled to compensation under s. 4?—and this is merely a step in the inquiry whether he shall be given a new lease. I construe s. 5 (3) (a) accordingly. A number of decisions were quoted to me, but, since the question is one of construction and is free from direct authority, I refrain from examining them. I decide that, while the tenants are debarred from proceeding with a claim for compensation since they did not make the claim in the prescribed manner, that omission nevertheless leaves them free to pursue their claim for a new lease.

Order accordingly.

G Solicitors: Paisner & Co. (for the tenants); Hale, Ringrose & Morrow (for the landlords).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

JACKSON v. RODGER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins and Morris, L.J.J.), October 23, 24, November 6, 7, 1951.]

Gift—Incomplete gift—Perfecting gift—Appointment of intended donee as executrix of intending donor—Object of gift lent by intending donor to third person.

The principle laid down in Strong v. Bird (1874) (L.R. 18 Eq. 315), namely, A that an imperfect gift may be perfected by the subsequent appointment of the donee as personal representative of the donor, applies only where there is an intention to make an immediate gift, and not where there is merely an intention to make a gift in the future. It is directed to perfecting gifts complete in all respects except as regards the legal formalities necessary for the proper transfer of title to the property in question, and is confined B to cases where nothing remains to be done but the mere formality of transfer to perfect what is intended by the testator to be an immediate gift inter vivos. Therefore, it cannot apply where there is an intention to give, but the gift is not completed because the intending donor desires first to apply the subject-matter of the contemplated or promised gift to some other C purpose.

Observations of PARKER, J., in Re Innes ([1910] 1 Ch. 193), approved.
Headnote in Re Stewart ([1908] 2 Ch. 251), criticised.

AS TO APPOINTMENT OF INTENDED DONEE OF INCOMPLETE GIFT AS EXECUTOR, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 15, p. 740, para. 1280; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 25, pp. 538-540, Nos. 268-280. D

Cases referred to:

- (1) Strong v. Bird, (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 315; 43 L.J.Ch. 814; 30 L.T. 745;
25 Digest 538, 268.
- (2) Re Stewart, [1908] 2 Ch. 251; 77 L.J.Ch. 525; 99 L.T. 106; 25 Digest 539, 274.
- (3) Re Innes, [1910] 1 Ch. 188; 79 L.J.Ch. 174; 101 L.T. 633; 25 Digest E 540, 275.
- (4) Re Pink, [1912] 2 Ch. 528; 81 L.J.Ch. 753; 107 L.T. 241; 25 Digest 539, 270.

APPEAL by the defendant from an order of DANCKWERTS, J., dated July 4, 1951, in an action for (a) a declaration that the plaintiff was the owner of a certain motor car, (b) the return of the car or its value, (c) damages for its detention, and (d) all accounts and inquiries necessary for the proper administra- F tion of the estate of the testatrix, Mrs. Freeland.

The testatrix was the owner of the car and in February or March, 1949, on being told by the plaintiff that the plaintiff's motor car was leaking, she said to the plaintiff: "You must have my car." The plaintiff said that she would buy it, but the testatrix replied: "No. I will give it to you." The plaintiff then G asked when she could have it, and the testatrix replied that she would let the plaintiff have it as soon as she "could get it on the road," the car not being in running order at the time. Nothing, however, was done to the car. Early in May, 1949, the defendant asked the testatrix to lend her the car. According to the evidence, the testatrix told her, on that occasion, that she could not let her have the car as it was already the plaintiff's. On May 5 the testatrix wrote H to the plaintiff saying: ". . . I wanted to tell you about the car . . . To put it quickly [the defendant's] car . . . has gone to pieces, and she cannot get another for the moment and she cannot get on with her job without one, and wants mine, and will put it in commission if I will let her have it for the time, say three or six months, but I am not thinking for one instant of selling it so I hope you will not think I am going back on my word if you really thought you would like to have it . . ." The plaintiff saw the testatrix after receiving that letter and signified her willingness that the defendant should use the car. The car was put in running order and the testatrix lent it to the defendant gratuitously, all the formalities in connection with the insurance company and with regard to the registration being dealt with on the footing that the testatrix, as owner, was lending the car to the defendant. The testatrix objected to certain use which the defendant made of the car on the footing that it was for her (the testatrix) to limit the use which the defendant, as borrower, could have of it.

By her will, made on June 30, 1949, the testatrix appointed the plaintiff and the defendant her executrices, but did not refer to the car. The testatrix died on Apr. 8, 1950, and probate of her will was granted on July 12, 1950. The car was still in the possession of the defendant. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to it on the ground that the imperfect gift to her had been perfected by her appointment as one of the executrices. The defendant contended inter alia (a) that she was entitled to use the car indefinitely as it had been lent to her on terms which imposed no limit of time on user, and (b) alternatively, that it belonged to the estate of the testatrix. DANCKWERTS, J., held that there was an imperfect gift to the plaintiff which was perfected by her appointment as executrix and declared that she was the owner of the car.

J. F. Bowyer for the defendant.

N. S. S. Warren for the plaintiff.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: The contest in these proceedings has arisen from the amiability of the testatrix towards the plaintiff and the defendant, her two executrices, each of whom has laid claim to a specific chattel, namely, a Hillman motor car. The testatrix died on Apr. 8, 1950, and the plaintiff's allegation is that in February or March, 1949, the testatrix gave to her the car, that is to say, "gave" it in the popular sense of the term, meaning to make then and there a gift of it, such gift being, however, imperfect in the eye of the law because it was not accompanied by actual manual delivery or its equivalent. The plaintiff contends that, by reason of the so-called rule in Strong v. Bird (1), the imperfection is cured by the circumstance that she was appointed personal representative of the testatrix. The defendant refutes the plaintiff's claim, and makes affirmative claims to the same chattel. She alleged in the court below that she, rather than the plaintiff, was at some time the donee of the car, and she was in a more fortunate position in that admittedly she had possession of the car at the time of the death of the testatrix and for some little time before that event. That allegation was rejected by DANCKWERTS, J., and there has been no appeal against that part of the judgment. The defendant also said that she was given the right to use the car, that it was lent to her gratuitously on terms which imposed no limit of time on her user, and, therefore, she was entitled now to go on enjoying the use of it until she no longer required it. I propose to deal shortly with that part of the defendant's case, which has been persisted in in this court. It rests on the proposition that, though the bailment is entirely gratuitous and though there be no circumstances such as would entitle the bailee to set up a representation on the faith of which she has altered her own position, nevertheless, the bailor cannot recall the bailment. I find no authority to support a proposition of that character, which seems to me to be in conflict with fundamental principles, and I reject it.

DANCKWERTS, J., found in favour of the plaintiff. He held that an imperfect gift, made in February or March, 1949, was perfected by the plaintiff's appointment as executrix, and the main part of the case before us has concentrated on that matter. Counsel for the defendant has argued that the judgment is incorrect in that regard, being based on a misapprehension, either of the law applicable, or of the true inference to be drawn from the facts, or both. I have found the case exceedingly difficult, and, although I have come to the conclusion that the learned judge did not misdirect himself in the matter of law, I think there is no doubt—and counsel for the plaintiff has barely contended the contrary—that in relying, as he did, on a particular letter [viz., a letter written by the testatrix to the plaintiff on May 5, 1949], the learned judge has exposed himself to serious challenge. Although, before us, there has been no question between counsel as to the law applicable, it may be useful to refer briefly to it, particularly because the headnote in Re Stewart (2) (which was cited by the learned judge) seems to me, unless examined in the light of the judgment in that case, to be liable somewhat to mislead.

The simple proposition which is associated with Strong v. Bird (1), namely, that an imperfect gift may be perfected by the subsequent appointment of the donee as personal representative of the donor, disguises an important distinction. In the headnote to Re Stewart (2) the principle is stated thus:

“The principle laid down by JESSEL, M.R., in Strong v. Bird (1)—that where a testator has expressed in his lifetime an intention to give personal estate belonging to him to one who becomes his executor, the intention to give continuing, the donee is entitled to hold the property for his own benefit—is not confined to the release of a debt; and it is immaterial whether the donee is the only executor or one of several.”

That summary of the decision of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., seems to me to be equivocal, for the words “an intention to give” may mean either one of two things. They may mean (i) an intention of giving, i.e., an intention to do that which, at the time of doing it, was meant to be a gift out and out, or (ii) an intention to make a gift in the future, which is in effect a promise—not, of course, enforceable in the eyes of the law—to make a gift thereafter. I am satisfied that the doctrine enunciated in Strong v. Bird (1) does not apply to the latter of the two types of case. For the application of the doctrine, there must be an intention of giving, as distinct from an intention to give.

That was made quite clear, to my mind, by PARKER, J., in Re Innes (3), and, as the point is not without some significance, I may be forgiven if I cite a passage from the learned judge’s judgment in that case. In Re Innes (3) a father was alleged to have said to his daughter that, since she had looked after him, she should have a certain income, and, in addition, the interest or dividends in respect of certain shares. After referring to Strong v. Bird (1) and Re Stewart (2), PARKER, J., said ([1910] 1 Ch. 193):

“It is attempted here to extend the doctrine of those cases still further. In the first place it is attempted to extend it to what, if there was a gift at all, was a gift of money without that money being identified, or sufficiently identified to enable it to be separated from the rest of the estate of the testator; and in the second place it is attempted to extend the principle of the earlier cases not only to an actual attempted gift which as a matter of fact is imperfect, and therefore will not take effect unless it is subsequently perfected, but to a mere promise to give on a future occasion. In my opinion the principle of Strong v. Bird (1) and Re Stewart (2) and other similar cases ought not to be so extended. What is wanted in order to make that principle applicable is certain definite property which a donor has attempted to give to a donee, but has not succeeded. There must be in every case a present intention of giving, the gift being imperfect for some reason at law, and then a subsequent perfection of that gift by the appointment of the donee to be executor of the donor, so that he takes the legal estate by virtue of the executorship conferred upon him. It seems to me that it would be exceedingly dangerous to try to give effect by the appointment of an executor to what is at most an announcement of what a man intends to do in the future, and is not intended by him as a gift in the present which though failing on technical considerations may be subsequently perfected.”

I am left in no doubt that the distinction to which PARKER, J., alluded is well-founded, and that SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., did not intend to make the principle which he laid down in Strong v. Bird (1) apply to a case where there was a mere intention to give at a future time. Indeed, in Re Pink (4) KENNEDY, L.J., said ([1912] 2 Ch. 538):

" . . . it is quite clear that what is spoken of both in the headnote in Strong v. Bird (1), and also in Re Stewart (2), as a continuing intention on the part of the testator, or the testatrix as the case may be, means a continuing intention that the gift should have been given at the time when it was given."

No point has been taken in the present case, and I am not to be thought to be suggesting that it could be taken, that the principle is not as applicable to a chattel like a motor car as it was to the bearer bonds in Re Stewart (2) and the debt in the case of Strong v. Bird (1).

The question, then, is whether it is established in this case that the testatrix, at the relevant date, intended to make an absolute gift of the motor car to the plaintiff, a gift which was only imperfect in the eye of the law because of the technicality of the absence of the transfer of possession, manual delivery or its equivalent, which the law requires to perfect such a gift. In a case like this it is necessary to have clearly in mind the nature of the proceedings. In form it is an action between two hostile parties. In truth, it is an action by a claimant against the estate of a deceased person, that claimant being an executrix. It is a trite observation, but nevertheless one which must not be forgotten, that a claimant in such a situation has a heavy onus to discharge. He or she must prove the case against his or her testator's estate clearly and convincingly.

There could, perhaps, be a case in which a gift might be absolute, though immediate possession by the donee might be postponed. To what extent the two conceptions are possible, as a matter of broad general theory, I need not discuss, but prima facie, if I make an absolute gift of some chattel, or purport to do so, and then assert a right to use it, not merely to keep it for custody, but to use it for such purposes, on such terms, and for such a time as I think fit, it seems to me that the assertion of that right is not consistent with an absolute gift, though it may well be consistent with a promise to give at some future date and though a person of sensibility and honour would feel that, if he had made a promise to give something in the future, his right to use the article in the meantime would be subject to serious qualification. [HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence, held that the plaintiff had failed to establish her claim, and said that the appeal should be allowed.]

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. To succeed in this case the plaintiff had to prove that there was on the part of the testatrix a present intention to make an immediate gift to her of the motor car, and that such intention survived until the date of the death of the testatrix.

In Re Pink (4), from which my Lord has cited an observation of KENNEDY, L.J., FARWELL, L.J., said ([1912] 2 Ch. 536):

" Since Strong v. Bird (1) we must regard the matter in the light given us by that decision. It is plain that a mere intention to give, not carried out during the lifetime, will not do, because that would in effect be to allow a man to dispose after his death of his property by a document not testamentary. It is plain also that a mere intention to give is not enough, because you want an immediate gift. If there is an immediate gift, then the resulting trust for the benefit of the beneficiaries is rebutted."

[HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence and continued:] In my view, the lending of the car to the defendant, albeit with the consent of the plaintiff, is really fatal to the plaintiff's claim that there was a continuing intention to make an immediate gift. In my judgment, the principle of Strong v. Bird (1) is directed to perfecting gifts complete in all respects except as regards the legal formalities necessary for the proper transfer of title to the particular property in question.

It is confined, in my view, to cases where nothing remains to be done but the mere formality of transfer in order to perfect what was intended by the testator or testatrix to be an immediate gift inter vivos, and surely there can be no room for its application in a case where there is an intention to give, but the gift is not completed because the intending donor desires first to apply the subject-matter of the contemplated or promised gift to some other purpose. In that case the intended donee, when appointed as executor, cannot say: "Nothing remained to complete my title except the transfer," or, in other words: "If the testator had been alive today and I had asked him for a transfer, he would have made it at once without question," for in such circumstances the testator's answer would have been: "I will not transfer the property to you now. My intention is to give it to you after I have used it for the prior purpose I have in view." That state of affairs seems to me necessarily to exclude the application of the principle of Strong v. Bird (1). Accordingly, I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

MORRIS, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed. Declaration that the motor car formed part of the estate of the testatrix.

Solicitors: Beaumont, Son & Rigden (for the defendant); Gordon Gardiner, Carpenter & Co., agents for F. H. Carpenter & Oldham, Brighton (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

THE CARSLOGIE. CARSLOGIE STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. ROYAL NORWEGIAN GOVERNMENT Represented by the NORWEGIAN SHIPPING AND TRADE MISSION.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Jowitt, Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord Tucker, Lord Asquith of Bishopstone), October 15, 16, 17, 18, November 29, 1951.]

Shipping—Collision—Damages—Detention in port to repair collision damage—Ship rendered unseaworthy by weather damage while proceeding to port for repair.

On Nov. 26, 1941, the respondents' vessel, Heimgar, while under time charter to the Ministry of War Transport, suffered damage in a collision with the appellants' vessel, Carslogie, for which, it was admitted, the Carslogie was solely to blame. After temporary repairs to the Heimgar had been effected in England the ship proceeded to a port in the United States where permanent repairs could be carried out. During her voyage across the Atlantic the vessel sustained heavy weather damage which necessitated immediate repair. The vessel remained in dry dock for fifty days during which time the repairs due to the collision and those due to the weather were carried out concurrently, it being agreed that ten days should be allocated to the repair of the collision damage and thirty days to that of the weather damage. The respondents claimed damages for loss of charter hire during the ten days attributable to the collision damage.

HELD: the appellants were only liable for such loss of profit suffered by the respondents as resulted from the appellants' wrongful act; during the time that the Heimgar was detained in dock she had ceased to be a profit-earning machine because the heavy weather damage had rendered her unseaworthy; and, therefore, the respondents had sustained no damage by reason of the fact that for ten days the vessel was undergoing repairs in respect of the collision damage.

Vitruvia S.S. Co. v. Ropner Shipping Co. (1925 S.C. (H.L.) 1), The Hawk (1927) (30 Lloyd, L.R. 32) and The Haversham Grange ([1905] P. 307), applied.

Per curiam: The decision in The Haversham Grange ([1905] P. 307) with regard to the apportionment of dock dues incurred in connection with the repair of collision damage was inconsistent with principle.

AS TO MEASURE OF DAMAGES IN COLLISION ACTIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 30, pp. 855-863, paras. 1125-1142; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 41, pp. 800-813, Nos. 6613-6745.

Cases referred to:

- (1) The Haversham Grange, [1905] P. 307; 74 L.J.P. 115; 93 L.T. 733; 29 Digest 246, 1982.
- (2) Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Marpessa (Owners), The Marpessa, [1907] A.C. 241; 76 L.J.P. 128; 97 L.T. 1; 41 Digest 808, 6690.
- (3) The Conqueror, (1896), 166 U.S. (S.C.) 110.
- (4) The Kingsway, [1918] P. 344; 87 L.J.P. 162; 122 L.T. 651; 41 Digest 806, 6671.
- (5) The York, [1929] P. 178; 98 L.J.P. 147; 141 L.T. 215; Digest Supp.
- (6) Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Chekiang, [1926] A.C. 637; 95 L.J.P. 119; sub nom. The Chekiang, 135 L.T. 450; 41 Digest 805, 6663.
- (7) Ruabon S.S. Co. v. London Assurance, [1900] A.C. 6; 69 L.J.Q.B. 86; 81 L.T. 585; 29 Digest 245, 1981.
- (8) The Acanthus, [1902] P. 17; 71 L.J.P. 14; 85 L.T. 696; 41 Digest 807, 6679.
- (9) Vitruvia S.S. Co. v. Ropner Shipping Co., 1925 S.C. (H.L.) 1; 41 Digest 806, 6675.
- (10) The Hawk, (1927), 30 Lloyd, L.R. 32; (1928), S.L.T. 71.
- (11) Bullfa & Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries (1891), Ltd. v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co., [1903] A.C. 426; 72 L.J.K.B. 805; 89 L.T. 280; 11 Digest 129, 186.
- (12) Williamson v. Thornycroft (John I.) & Co., Ltd., [1940] 4 All E.R. 61; [1940] 2 K.B. 658; 110 L.J.K.B. 82; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (13) Kelly v. Glasgow Corpn., 1949 S.C. 496; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (14) The Argentino, (1888), 13 P.D. 191; 58 L.J.P. 1; 59 L.T. 914; affd. sub nom. H.L. Gracie (Owners) v. Argentino (Owners), The Argentino, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 519; 17 Digest 82, 26.
- (15) The Glenfinlas, [1918] P. 363, n.; 122 L.T. 655, n.; 41 Digest 806, 6674.

APPEAL by the owners of the steamship Carslogie from a decision of the Court of Appeal (BUCKNILL, DENNING, L.JJ., and LLOYD-JACOB, J.), dated July 28, 1950, reversing an order of WILLMER, J., and restoring the decision of the registrar, that the appellants were liable for damages for the detention of the respondents' ship, Heimgar, while undergoing repairs.

The registrar held that where a collision had taken place, for which the appellants were admittedly to blame, and the respondents' ship, while on her way to the repairers suffered heavy weather damage necessitating immediate repairs, the detention caused by the heavy weather repairs did not deprive the respondents of their right to recover damages from the appellants for the detention in respect of the collision repairs. For the appellants it was contended that, as a result of the heavy weather damage, which was subsequent to the collision, the respondents had not suffered any damage by reason of the detention of the Heimgar since, during the whole time that collision repairs were undertaken, the ship was undergoing repairs to render her seaworthy which were necessitated by the heavy weather. The respondents contended that the case fell within the principle of The Haversham Grange (1) and that they were entitled to claim against the appellants as owners of the wrong-doing vessel damages for the detention.

Scott Cairns, K.C., and Rena for the appellants.
Carpmael, K.C., and Vere Hunt for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

Nov. 29. The following opinions were read.

VISCOUNT JOWITT: My Lords, on Nov. 26, 1941, the motor vessel Heimgar was lying at anchorage off Oban. She was due to join a convoy to West African ports. While she was so lying at anchor the steamship Carslogie collided with her. It was admitted that the Carslogie was solely to blame for the accident. On Nov. 27 the Heimgar was surveyed at her anchorage for the purpose of ascertaining the nature and extent of damage she had sustained as a result of the collision, and, this having been ascertained, Lloyd's surveyor issued a certificate of seaworthiness enabling the ship to go to a repairing port in the United Kingdom. Accordingly, she proceeded to Greenock on Nov. 28 and arrived there on Nov. 30. Owing to war restrictions all the work required could not be carried out, and temporary repairs were effected at Port Glasgow. In the meantime, and before these temporary repairs had been effected, the representative of the owners of the Heimgar had arranged with the Ministry of War Transport to send the vessel to the United States instead of to West Africa. This change of voyage was made primarily in order that she might go to a port at which permanent repairs could be effected. It was also considered by the owners desirable to take the opportunity of her being in dock to inspect her engines which had been giving some trouble. The port originally suggested was Chester, Pennsylvania, as it was hoped that a firm at Chester who were very experienced with Diesel motors might make any necessary adjustments to the engines. In fact, Chester proved impossible and she was allocated to New York. On the completion of her temporary repairs she was given a certificate of seaworthiness authorising her to be continued in her present class without fresh record of survey subject to certain permanent repairs at the owners' convenience and to her propeller being renewed at the owners' convenience, and she was stated to be fit to carry dry and perishable cargoes. When the vessel sailed for New York after the completion of the temporary repairs she was in a seaworthy condition, but during her crossing of the Atlantic she experienced heavy weather and sustained considerable damage thereby which rendered her unseaworthy. It was, therefore, necessary for her to go into dry dock at New York to have this heavy weather damage repaired apart altogether from the desirability of effecting permanent repairs in respect of the collision damage. The heavy weather damage was not in any sense a consequence of the collision, and must be treated as a supervening event occurring in the course of a normal voyage, during which the Heimgar was on hire. She remained in dry dock in New York from Jan. 2 to Mar. 1, 1942, being thus off hire for a period of approximately fifty days. During her time in dry dock the repairs due to the collision, the engine repairs, and the heavy weather repairs were all done concurrently. It was agreed that ten days out of the fifty should be allocated to the repair of the collision damage and that thirty days would have been required for the heavy weather damage.

The question for decision was whether the owners of the Carslogie were liable to pay, in addition to the cost of the repairs occasioned by the collision, the loss of chartered hire for ten days while the Heimgar was in dock, together with certain items in respect of war risk insurance and war bonus. These three items were considered as all turning on the same principle, and it was agreed that they succeeded or failed together. The registrar allowed the sum claimed by way of damages for detention and allowed the two remaining items as a necessary consequence of allowing the first item. He considered that where a collision had taken place in consequence of which the innocent ship was on her way to the repairers when another casualty occurred which necessitated immediate repairs, the owner was entitled to recover damages for detention in respect of the collision repairs from the owners of the wrong-doing ship. WILLMER, J., reversed this decision, and the Court of Appeal (BUCKNILL, L.J., DENNING, L.J., and LLOYD-JACOB, J.), reversed this decision of the judge and restored the decision of the registrar. From this decision of the Court of Appeal the appeal is brought to your Lordships' House. For the appellants it was contended that, as a result of the heavy weather damage which was subsequent to the collision, the owners of the Heimgar had not suffered any damage by reason of her detention, since during the whole time that the collision repairs were being undertaken the ship was undergoing repairs to render her seaworthy, which repairs were necessitated by heavy weather. It was further contended that, as the heavy weather damage was the only damage which rendered the vessel unseaworthy, this must be regarded as the effective cause of the detention.

A For the respondents it was contended that, as the owners of the Heimgar were entitled to have permanent repairs effected as a consequence of the collision and had actually and properly decided to send the ship to New York to have those repairs effected, they had become "necessary," and it was argued that her owners were entitled to claim against the owners of the wrong-doing vessel for damages due to the detention. In support of this contention they relied on the rule laid down in The Haversham Grange (1).

B

My Lords, at the outset I think it is well to bear in mind the elementary principle that it is for the plaintiff in an action of damages to prove his case to the satisfaction of the court. He has to show affirmatively that damage under any particular head has resulted from the wrongful act of the defendant before he can recover in respect of such damage. This principle applies to maritime collisions as much as it does to collisions on land. MR. ROSCOE in the third edition of his book dealing with the MEASURE OF DAMAGES IN MARITIME COLLISIONS, at p. 10, cites The Marpessa (2) as illustrating the proposition that the plaintiffs were only entitled to recover damages by way of demurrage in respect of such money as the court was reasonably satisfied had been lost. He points out that the same principle has been laid down in the United States:

D

E "It is equally well settled, however, that demurrage will only be allowed when profits have actually been or may be reasonably supposed to have been lost, and the amount of such profit is proven with reasonable certainty. (The Conqueror (3) (1896) (166 U.S. (S.C.) 125.)"

Moreover, it is well established that, in considering the damage occasioned by a wrongful act, all those facts which have actually happened down to the date of the trial must be taken into account: The Kingsway (4) ([1918] P. 362) per SCRUTTON, L.J. For this reason it is undoubted that, if a collision took place which would have occasioned a time in dock for repairs and the ship is sunk before these repairs can be effected, any claim for loss of time which would have been occupied in such repairs must fail. SCRUTTON, L.J., in The York (5)

F

G ([1929] P. 185) puts other illustrations showing circumstances which may make it impossible to substantiate a claim for damages for loss of profitable time. A ship may be detained by ice so that she could not trade at all, or possibly by an embargo, and other illustrations can be given. If I may use the expression of BUCKNILL, L.J., who delivered the leading judgment in the Court of Appeal, damages are payable for the detention of a ship because she is a profit-earning

H "machine." If she ceases to be a profit-earning machine it follows that she can sustain no damage from being detained until she again becomes capable of earning profit. In other words, it is not enough to consider whether the ship was detained by the wrongful act of the defendant. It is essential to consider whether damage was caused to the plaintiff by reason of such detention. So considered, it will be seen that the problem is not solved by answering the questions: "Was the ship detained, and, if so, what was the cause of her detention?" It is essential to answer the further question: "Assuming that she was detained and assuming that she was detained by the wrongful act of the defendant, did the plaintiff sustain damage as a result of such detention ? ”

In the present case the ship having had temporary repairs was in a seaworthy condition when she sailed across the Atlantic. It is, no doubt, the fact that she was sent on this particular voyage in order that permanent repairs might be carried out. At the same time it must be noted that the owners had not entered into any contract to send her for repairs and would have been free, had they been so minded, to send her back from New York without such repairs being effected. I am willing to assume without deciding the question that the collision was a cause of her detention. Still, the fact remains that when she entered the dock at New York she was not a profit-earning machine by reason of the heavy weather damage which had rendered her unseaworthy. If there had been no collision she would have been detained in dock for thirty days to repair this damage. I cannot see that her owners sustained any damage in the nature of demurrage by reason of the fact that for ten days out of the thirty she was also undergoing repairs in respect of the collision.

WILLMER, J., considered that the repairs to the engines would not have prejudiced the owners' claim to recover damages for loss of profitable time. He deals with this question as follows:

“ Although the collision repairs were not immediately necessary, the owners of the Heimgar were entitled to have them carried out, and if they did so would be entitled to take advantage of the occasion to carry out such other repairs of their own as they might think fit. The learned registrar has found, rightly in my judgment, that the vessel was diverted to New York for the express purpose of undergoing the collision repairs, and it matters not that, as I have found, there was a subsidiary purpose of carrying out a machinery overhaul at the same time. Had there been no subsequent heavy weather damage necessitating immediate repair, it seems to me that, in accordance with the principles applied by the House of Lords in Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Chekiang (6), the plaintiffs [respondents] would clearly have been entitled to recover damages in respect of ten days of the detention, notwithstanding the fact that they took advantage of the occasion to proceed with their machinery overhaul.”

My Lords, I am in complete agreement with this view. It is well established that, if a ship goes into dock for repairs of damage occasioned by a collision brought about by the fault of another vessel, the owners of that other vessel must pay for the resulting loss of time, even although her owners take advantage of her presence in the dock to do some repairs which, though not necessary, are advisable. Thus, in Ruabon S.S. Co. v. London Assurance (7), the Ruabon suffered damage on the voyage which made it necessary for her to be put into dry dock. The owners (without causing delay or increase of dock expenses) took advantage of her being in dry dock to have made the survey of the vessel for renewing her classification, though this survey was not then due. It was decided that the expense of getting the vessel into and out of dock, as well as those incurred in the use of the dock, fell on the underwriters alone. In The Acanthus (8), while the vessel was in dry dock to repair collision damage for which the defendants were liable, the owners took advantage of the opportunity to fit her with bilge keels. It was decided that, notwithstanding this fact, the wrong-doers were not entitled to any contribution towards the cost of dry docking. In Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Chekiang (6) H.M.S. Cairo suffered damage in a collision for which the owners of the Chekiang were to blame. After being temporarily repaired, she proceeded to Hong Kong for permanent repairs. The Admiralty took advantage of her presence in the dock to undertake her annual refit, though this was not then necessary. It was decided that this fact did not avail the defendants and could not be prayed in aid by them in reduction of their liability. VISCOUNT DUNEDIN points out ([1926] A.C. 642), however, that if the act of the owner was of necessity, it would have been otherwise. These cases support the view that the time occupied in the engine overhaul which, however desirable it may have been, was not then necessary, could not have been used to reduce any amount which might have been due from the owners of the wrong-doing vessel by way of damages for detention, but they have no bearing on the effect of the heavy weather repairs which had made the Heimgar unseaworthy.

A The case mainly relied on by the respondents as bearing on this latter question was The Haversham Grange (1). In that case the Maureen had suffered two collisions, for the first of which she was held partly to blame and for the second of which she was held free of all blame. Each collision made it necessary that she should go into dry dock. The two sets of repairs were carried out together. B Twenty-two days were taken in repairing the damage due to the first collision and six days in repairing the damage due to the second collision, these periods being concurrent and not cumulative and successive. The question arose which of the two wrong-doing vessels should pay for the undoubted damage which the owners of the Maureen had suffered from the delay to their steamship and a separate question arose as to the dock dues which had been incurred. With regard to the demurrage, SIR GORELL BARNES, P., held that, as the Maureen C had already been incapacitated by the first collision before the second collision took place, the repair of the damage done by the second collision did not in any way delay her, and, therefore, the second wrong-doer was not responsible for any part of the damage due to delay. He dealt with the dock dues on the same basis. On appeal, the decision of the President was confirmed with regard to demurrage, but it was decided that the claim for dock dues ought to be dealt D with on a different basis, and it was decided that the amount due in respect of dock dues should be divided between the two wrong-doers.

My Lords, I think that there can be no logical distinction between the claim for damages for delay and for dock dues, and, believing as I do that the decision as to damages for delay was correct, it follows, in my view, that the latter decision in respect of dock dues cannot be supported. I am confirmed in this E view by this further consideration. Ruabon S.S. Co. v. London Assurance (7) was a case which was concerned solely with dock expenses. No question as to damages for delay arose in that case. Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Chekiang (6) was a case which was concerned solely with damages for delay. No question as to dock expenses arose in that case. Yet VISCOUNT DUNEDIN in the latter case ([1926] A.C. 641) regards the decision of the House in the Ruabon case (7) F about dock expenses as concluding the question in the Chekiang case (6) about damages for delay. This supports the view that in principle the two questions are indistinguishable.

The case from which I have derived most assistance is Vitruvia S.S. Co. v. Ropner Shipping Co. (9). The Vitruvia had been in collision with the Carperby. For this collision the Carperby was alone to blame. The damage sustained by the G Vitruvia did not render her unseaworthy. She continued to make voyages and it was not until several months after the collision that she came to Glasgow to have the collision damage repaired. When the case first came to the House of Lords the appellants put forward an argument founded on the alleged facts that the Vitruvia, before she entered the dock to carry out the collision repairs, was in fact unseaworthy, that the defect rendering her unseaworthy could only H be remedied in a dry dock, and that no dry dock was available until after the collision damage had been repaired. Accordingly, they sought to argue that there had been no damages for delay occasioned by the repair of the collision damage. As this matter had not been properly pleaded and the relevant facts had not been found, the House sent the case back for a further ascertainment of the facts. The further findings established that the Vitruvia was, in fact, unseaworthy owing to a small defect which could have been put right in a few hours, and that it was not necessary to obtain a dry dock to remedy this defect. On these facts LORD DUNEDIN (1925 S.C. (H.L.) 5) was of the opinion that the respondents had not established the defence they sought to make. Had the facts established that the unseaworthiness of the vessel could not have been made good until after the collision repairs had been completed it is plain that he would have decided that the owners of the wrong-doing vessel would not have been liable for any damages for delay while the collision repairs were being carried out. LORD PHILLIMORE put the matter in this way (ibid., 6):

“When this case was before your Lordship’s House on the last occasion, a formidable point was made by the appellants. They said: ‘you must not charge us for the time spent in repairing the damage caused by the collision, for you lost no time by it, because you had to wait for the dry dock into which you could put your ship in order to repair her propeller’.”

LORD PHILLIMORE adds, however, that this case was not proved for it was not necessary for the owners of the Vitruvia to wait for a dry dock. They would have been able to do the work by tipping the ship in wet dock, and, accordingly, he decided that the owners of the Vitruvia were entitled to be paid for the loss of profitable time during which the repairs were being effected. The case of the Vitruvia (9) is not referred to in the judgments of the Court of Appeal, though I feel confident that had the judges considered this case and the grounds on which it was decided they would not in the present case have come to the conclusion to which they in fact came.

A similar question arose in The Hawk (10). In that case the Cameronia had sustained damages in a collision for which the Hawk was to blame, but her seaworthiness was not affected and after temporary repairs she continued her trading. Subsequently, she sustained sea damage to her rudder which rendered her unseaworthy and necessitated immediate repair. The question arose whether the wrong-doing vessel was responsible for any loss of profitable time occasioned during the time the collision repairs were being carried out. LORD CONSTABLE (Lord Ordinary) states his view in the following words (30 Lloyd, L.R. 36):

“... I think it would be difficult to affirm that the collision was not a cause of the detention, though the detention was immediately brought about by the accident to the rudder. But the present question does not seem to me to depend upon whether in strictness the collision or the accident to the rudder was the true cause of the detention. Even on the assumption that the repair of the collision damage was the true cause, the pursuers must also show that the detention of the Cameronia for such repair resulted in a loss of profit, and they cannot do so when in fact the Cameronia was by reason of the accident to the rudder disabled from earning any profit before she was laid up. The loss of profit was not the direct and natural consequence of the defenders’ wrongful act, nor did it represent what but for the collision the owners would have earned by the use of their ship.”

BUCKNILL, L.J., in his judgment differentiated this case on the ground that if the heavy weather damage was done after the collision damage the rule laid down in The Haversham Grange (1) should apply. My Lords, both in The Hawk (10) and in the present case the unseaworthiness was caused by an event which happened after the collision, and I see nothing in the rule laid down in The Haversham Grange (1) which in any way conflicts with the decision in The Hawk (10). That rule, as I have already pointed out, rightly treats the first wrong-doer who renders the vessel unseaworthy as responsible for the consequent delay, notwithstanding the act of a second wrong-doer who also rendered the ship unseaworthy, but the rule is addressed to causation, for it was clear in The Haversham Grange (1) that damage had resulted from the detention. In the present case I think that the damage brought about by the collision did not, in the events which happened, cause any loss of profitable time to the owners of the Heimgar because when she entered dry dock she was not a profit-earning machine. This is in substance the ground taken by WILLMER, J., in his judgment when he says:

“The owners of the Heimgar would have had no use of their ship and would have earned nothing by her use for the simple reason that at the time when the collision repairs were executed the ship was completely immobilised as the result of damage received in the heavy weather encountered during the Atlantic voyage.”

My Lords, I agree with this reasoning, and, accordingly, I am in favour of allowing the appeal and restoring the judgment of WILLMER, J.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, when a plaintiff claims damages from a tortfeasor for the detention of a chattel while it is undergoing repairs he undertakes to prove, not only that the repairs were rendered necessary by the tortious act or negligence and that the period of detention in respect of which he claims was necessary for the execution of the repairs, but also that by the deprivation of the use of the chattel during the detention he suffered pecuniary loss. If the action is raised and the damages have to be assessed before the repairs are executed, the court is perforce dealing with damage which may or may not arise in the future, and it will require proof of sufficient certainty that the plaintiff will suffer measurable damage, making allowance for the chance that by some subsequent casualty the chattel may be destroyed before the repairs are executed or that when the chattel comes to be repaired the deprivation of its use may involve no pecuniary loss: The Kingsway (4). In the more usual case, when the damages are assessed after the repairs have been executed, the court has before it the facts as they have occurred. It is dealing, no longer with the future, but with past history, and in the assessment proof of the facts displaces estimates of probabilities. This principle has long been established and has been followed, not only in many claims for collision damage, but also in a wide variety of other cases in which compensation or damages have been assessed. For example, in Bullfa & Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries (1891), Ltd. v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co. (11) it was applied to a claim for statutory compensation. In Williamson v. John I. Thornycroft & Co., Ltd. (12) the Court of Appeal applied it when a widow claiming under Lord Campbell's Act died before the assessment of the damages, and in a recent case this House held that it had been rightly applied by the Court of Session where the pursuer in a claim for solatium died before the solatium was assessed: Kelly v. Glasgow Corpn. (13).

The facts of the present case, which it is unnecessary for me to narrate again in detail, show that the Heimgar, while seaworthy and able for a trading voyage after temporary repairs rendered necessary by a collision with the Carslogie, suffered weather damage so great that immediate repairs were necessary before she could continue trading. She entered dry dock at New York and there three sets of repairs were carried out—the permanent repairs required to make good the collision damage, the repairs immediately necessary to make good the heavy weather damage, and repairs to her auxiliary machinery which were not immediately necessary. These repairs were carried out concurrently. The Heimgar was detained in dock fifty days in all, but the collision repairs alone would not have detained her for more than ten days, whereas the repair of the heavy weather damage alone would have detained her thirty days. On these facts she was, in consequence of the heavy weather damage, a vessel incapable of gainful use during the ten days necessary to complete her collision repairs, and no claim against the Carslogie for deprivation of profits in respect of this detention can be established.

Every case depends on its own facts, but I find the strongest support for this conclusion in Vitruvia S.S. Co. v. Ropner Shipping Co. (9). The Vitruvia suffered damage by collision with the Carperby for which the Carperby was alone to blame. This damage did not make her unseaworthy or prevent her from trading.

After several months of profitable trading her owners brought her to Glasgow solely for the purpose of having the collision repairs carried out. She arrived at Glasgow on Aug. 12 and the repairs were completed on Sept. 3. Her owners claimed against the Carperby for loss of earnings during these twenty-two days. On her voyage to Glasgow it had been noticed that her propeller was making a knocking sound and after her arrival the engineer reported that he suspected there was something wrong with the propeller. On Sept. 2 a dry dock became available for the first time since her arrival and she entered it that day for examination of her propeller. It was then found that a nut on the propeller was loose and needed tightening. The repair was completed in a few hours. While this defect existed it would have been imprudent to send the ship to sea. The case came before this House on two occasions. On the first occasion the House allowed the parties an opportunity to amend their pleadings so as to present in clear form the defence that the Vitruvia was unseaworthy during the whole period in respect of which damages were claimed and, accordingly, that there was no loss in respect of detention during that period, and the pursuers' reply that the propeller defect would not have prevented her from completing her next voyage because it could have been quickly repaired though no dry dock was available to her. That this House regarded the defence as relevant is clear, for it remitted the case to the Court of Session with a direction to allow the proposed amendments and a proof thereof. As a result of the proof it was found that the propeller defect could have been repaired in a few hours without dry-docking the ship. When the case was reported to the House, LORD DUNEDIN said (1925 S.C. (H.L.) 5):

"If the defenders had been in a position to say, 'your vessel when it arrived on the 12th was in what is admitted to be a practically unseaworthy condition,' and if they had been able to go on to say, 'it would not have been possible for you to get it into a seaworthy condition before the time when you went into dry-dock on Sept. 2,' then they could have added, I think, what always can be said by defenders, 'you were bound to use that time in executing the repairs.' In other words, it would not have been possible for the pursuers to say, 'we will wait until Sept. 2 when we can put our vessel into dry dock, and then we will do our repairs and charge you for demurrage during the time we are doing them.'"

Then his Lordship went on to point out that the defenders could not say that, because the propeller defect could have been remedied and the vessel made seaworthy in a very few hours without the use of a dry dock. That case would have been indistinguishable from the present if dry-docking had been necessary to make good the propeller defect. On that hypothesis the defence would have succeeded. A seaworthy ship had been directed in each case to a repair port. In the Vitruvia S.S. Co. v. Ropner Shipping Co. (9) the only purpose in sending the ship to Glasgow was the repair of the collision damage. In the present case the repair of the collision damage was one and the chief of three purposes in sending the ship to New York, the other two being to make a voyage on hire and to carry out repairs to the auxiliary engines. In both cases the ships suffered on the voyage damage rendering them unfit for another voyage. In both cases any period of detention necessary for the completion of the repairs to make the ship seaworthy had, if possible, to be used by her owners to execute the collision repairs, and from that detention no claim for loss of profits as part of the collision damage could arise.

The Hawk (10) is also a case closely resembling the present case. The Hawk had suffered damage in a collision with the Cameronia for which the Cameronia was held liable to the extent of two-thirds. As in the present case, some temporary repairs were carried out. Then, after a period of trading, she suffered storm damage which necessitated her being docked at once for repair. The storm damage repairs and the collision damage repairs were put in hand at the same time, but the storm damage took longer to repair than the collision damage. The pursuers claimed a sum in the name of loss of profits during detention. The Lord Ordinary, LORD CONSTABLE, disallowed the claim on the ground that, though the collision damage might be a cause of the detention during its repair, the pursuers had failed to show that the vessel could have earned any profit in that period. The Lord Ordinary regarded this case as governed by the Vitruvia S.S. Co. v. Ropner Shipping Co. (9) and his judgment is a valuable clarification of the law of damages in such cases as this.

None of the other cases cited conflicts with the decision of WILLMER, J., in the present case, or with The Vitruvia (9) or The Hawk (10). The decision on demurrage in The Haversham Grange (1) is no exception. It is, indeed, another example of the general rule that the owner of a chattel who claims damage for detention from a wrong-doer must show that, apart from the wrongful act of the defendant, the chattel was capable of profitable use during the period of detention. In The Haversham Grange (1) the Maureen was in collision with the Caravellas on Dec. 25, 1904, and with the Haversham Grange on Dec. 26. The owners of the Caravellas agreed to a decree of both to blame, and the owners of the Haversham Grange admitted sole liability. Each collision caused damage which it was essentially necessary to repair. The owners of the Maureen recovered fifty per cent. of their loss including loss on account of detention from the owners of the Caravellas and sought to charge the owners of the Haversham Grange with the remaining half-share of demurrage damage. There was also a claim for dock dues, which I pass over in the meantime. One of the proved facts was that the repair of the damage done by the Haversham Grange had not increased the period of detention. SIR GORELL BARNES, P., held that as the Maureen was already incapacitated by the collision with the Caravellas when she collided with the Haversham Grange the claim against the Haversham Grange for loss of earnings during repair failed, and that decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal. As in that case so in the present the claim fell to be disallowed because the respondents failed to prove that the ship could have earned profits during the period of detention caused by the repairs rendered necessary by the appellants' tort. There has been, I think, some misunderstanding of the decision in The Haversham Grange (1). Thus, in his judgment in The Hawk (10), LORD CONSTABLE seems to over-emphasise the importance of the fact that the collision with the Caravellas was prior in time to the collision with the Haversham Grange. The emphasis should be on the existing disablement of the Maureen when the Haversham Grange collided with her.

I respectfully think that the Court of Appeal in the present case erred in thinking that the issue could be settled by determining whether there was a causal connection between the collision damage and the detention of the Heimgar for ten days. This particularly appears in the judgment of DENNING, L.J. On this point I am in agreement with the Lord Ordinary's judgment in The Hawk (10). It is, I think, difficult to say that the collision damage was not, while it was being made good, a cause of the detention of the ship. But the real issue is whether in these ten days the vessel was a potential profit-earning vessel or not. BUCKNILL, L.J., thought that the fact that the Heimgar was re-routed to New York for the express purpose of having the collision repairs carried out and that it was when she was on this voyage that she suffered the heavy weather damage was a material circumstance which distinguished this case from The Hawk (10). So, also, LLOYD-JACOB, J., thought that "the decision to immobilise" the Heimgar for collision repairs was the determining factor. But to make that distinction a ground of judgment is inconsistent with The Vitruvia (9) which was, unfortunately, not referred to in any of the judgments. BUCKNILL, L.J., fell into what I humbly think is the error of supposing that The Haversham Grange (1) is authority for a rule that liability for detention attaches to a tortfeasor merely because the damage done by his tort is prior in time to a subsequent damage, whether caused by a tort or by some other cause. For example, he says:

"I think it is essential to know whether the heavy weather damage was received before or after the damage by collision."

But, with respect, if the fact is that one of two casualties made the vessel unseaworthy and the other did not, the problem of liability is solved and the time sequence is irrelevant. In The Haversham Grange (1) the time sequence was important because the damage suffered by the Maureen in each of the two collisions was enough to make her unseaworthy.

On the view of the case which I have taken it is not necessary to consider the bearing of the repairs to the auxiliary engines, which occupied fifty days, on the claim for damages for detention, but I may be allowed to say that I agree with all that has been said on that point by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack. For the reasons I have given I would allow the appeal.

My Lords, in this appeal the liability for dock dues is not in issue. We were told that they had been apportioned, and there was no appeal against that. This is in accordance with the decision of the Court of Appeal in The Haversham Grange (1) reversing SIR GORELL BARNES, P. In my opinion, the liability for dock dues is the same as the liability for the demurrage, and the decision in The Haversham Grange (1) on this point is inconsistent with principle and with a decision of this House. The history of the matter must be shortly set out. In the Ruabon S.S. Co. v. London Assurance (7) a vessel was damaged by a peril insured against and was put into dry dock for the necessary repairs. The survey of the vessel for renewing her classification was not due at that time, but the owners took advantage of her being in dry dock to have the survey made without increasing the period of detention. It was held that the liability for the dock dues fell on the underwriters alone. It will be observed that that was a case in which the liabilities of the parties inter se rested on contract. But in The Acanthus (8), the question of liability, both for dock dues and for demurrage, between the plaintiff and a tortfeasor was decided by SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., by applying the rule laid down in The Ruabon (7). The facts were that when the vessel was in dry dock for the repair of collision damage the owners took advantage of the opportunity to fit bilge keels without causing increased detention or increase of dock dues. It was held by SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., that the tortfeasor was liable for the dock dues and for the demurrage and he made no distinction between them. The next case was The Haversham Grange (1), which, as I have already indicated, made a radical distinction between liability for dock dues and liability for demurrage. The last case to which I need refer is Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Chekiang (6). In that case the Admiralty took the opportunity of the docking of H.M.S. Cairo for collision repairs to do certain refitment repairs not immediately necessary. It was held that the owners of the vessel to blame for the collision were liable in damages for the deprivation of the use of the vessel for the period of the collision repairs. VISCOUNT DUNEDIN in his speech said that the question was concluded by The Ruabon (7) and he also approved of the decision in The Acanthus (8). LORD PHILLIMORE took the same view of the case, and said that the decision on dock dues in The Haversham Grange (1) might have to be re-considered. The Haversham Grange (1) decision is not consistent with the ratio decidendi of The Acanthus (8) and The Chekiang (6). I want only to add that I think that the distinction between liability for dock dues and liability for detention is, in principle, unmaintainable. The present case may be taken as an illustration. As regards detention, the question is whether the owners of the detained ship suffered a loss of earnings while she was undergoing the collision repairs. The answer is that they did not, because during the detention the ship, though not disabled from trading by the collision damage, was necessarily disabled from trading by the weather damage. As regards the dock dues, the question is whether any part of the payment of the dues for the period while the collision repairs were executed was a loss suffered as part of the collision damages. The answer is that it was not, because it was a payment incurred in order to carry out the immediately necessary weather damage repairs. The collision repairs were, therefore, executed in the dock when its use was franked by that necessary payment.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, the Heimgar was detained in New York for repairs for nearly fifty days. At an early stage in the speech of counsel for the appellants I asked whether it was common ground between the parties that, if the collision between the Heimgar and the Carslogie had never happened, the Heimgar would have been detained in New York for the same period of fifty days. The answer was in the affirmative. In The Argentine (14) BOWEN, L.J., observed (13 P.D. 201):

“A ship is a thing by the use of which money may be ordinarily earned, and the only question in case of a collision seems to me to be, what is the use which the shipowner would, but for the accident, have had of his ship, and what (excluding the element of uncertain and speculative and special profits) the shipowner, but for the accident, would have earned by the use of her.”

WILLMER, J., asked himself that question in the present case and gave this answer:

“The owners of the Heimgar would have had no use of their ship and would have earned nothing by her use, for the simple reason that at the time when the collision repairs were executed the ship was completely immobilised as the result of damage received in the heavy weather encountered during the Atlantic voyage.”

My Lords, I agree with this answer, and, if it is the correct answer, I can see no ground on which the respondents can recover the damages which they claim for the detention of their ship. If the Heimgar had not encountered heavy weather on her voyage across the Atlantic, I entertain no doubt that the respondents could have recovered damages for her detention in New York for the period of ten days which would have been required to repair the collision damage. In that event they would have lost the use of their profit-earning chattel for a period of ten days and the negligence of the appellants would have been the cause of that loss. But in the events which happened the respondents have failed to prove that any loss of the use of their profit-earning chattel resulted from the negligence of the appellants. On this short ground I would allow the appeal, but, as we are differing from a unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal, and as counsel for the respondents submitted that a decision in favour of the appellants would involve overruling The Haversham Grange (1), I shall first make some observations on that case and shall then explain briefly why I cannot accept the reasoning of the Court of Appeal. I shall follow the example of BUCKNILL, L.J., in quoting WILLMER, J.’s statement of the facts in The Haversham Grange (1). It is as follows:

“In The Haversham Grange (1) . . . the plaintiff’s ship (the Maureen) was involved in two collisions, both necessitating immediate repairs. Both sets of repairs were executed simultaneously, and the repair of the second collision damage did not in any way increase the period of detention which would in any case have been required for the repair of the first collision damage. In respect of the first collision the plaintiff’s ship and the colliding ship were equally to blame. In respect of the second collision the owners of the colliding ship (the Haversham Grange) admitted liability. The plaintiffs in due course recovered from the owners of the first colliding ship fifty per cent. of their claim, including fifty per cent. of the amount lost by reason of the detention of their vessel during repair. They then sought to recover from the owners of the Haversham Grange, inter alia, the remaining fifty per cent. of their claim in respect of the detention of their vessel. The learned President, SIR GORELL BARNES, confirming the report of the registrar, disallowed the claim, holding that, as the vessel was already incapacitated by something which had previously happened before the second wrong-doing ship ran into her, the repair of the damage done by the second collision did not in any way delay her, and, therefore, the second wrong-doer was not responsible for any part of the delay, which he had not in fact caused. In the Court of Appeal the claim for detention was abandoned, but the learned Master of the Rolls, although the matter was no longer before the court, expressed his concurrence with the decision in the court below."

Thus, the decision in The Haversham Grange (1) was that the owners of the Maureen could not recover from the owners of the Haversham Grange any part of the loss resulting from the detention of the Maureen during repairs, because no part of that loss resulted from the negligence of that particular wrong-doer. That decision seems to me to be wholly in accordance with the view which I have formed in the present case.

My Lords, I have noticed references in the judgments under appeal and in other cases to "the rule laid down in The Haversham Grange (1)." I confess that I can discover no rule which is laid down in that case. It seems to me merely an illustration of the elementary principle, already stated by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack, that a plaintiff must "show affirmatively that damage under any particular head has resulted from the wrongful act of the defendant before he can recover in respect of such damage." I add that, in agreement with the opinions which have just been delivered I can see no logical reason for the distinction which was drawn in The Haversham Grange (1) between the claim for damages for detention and the claim for dock dues.

I think that the reason why I differ from the Court of Appeal can best be explained if I quote three sentences from the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., whose wide knowledge of these matters leads me to differ from him with great hesitation. The learned lord justice said:

"When the owners, quite properly, arranged to have their ship sent to the United States of America in order that the collision repairs might be done, I think that the owners of the wrong-doing ship became liable to pay, not only for the prospective cost of the repairs, but also for the loss of time thereby incurred. It is true that, if the Heimgar had been sunk on her way to the United States, the owners of the wrong-doing ship would not have been liable to pay for detention during the repairs. But the reason for that, as explained in The Glenfinlas (15) is that, the ship having been lost, she ceased to be a potential money-making machine, and, therefore, her owners did not lose something which did not exist."

With the first of these three sentences I entirely agree, but I would add that, in my view, no loss of time was "thereby incurred," because in the events which happened, the repairs were carried out at a time when the ship was incapacitated for other reasons. As to the third sentence, I would respectfully point out that in the present case the ship ceased to be a potential money-making machine when she became unseaworthy owing to heavy weather, having been seaworthy when she sailed—see the Lloyd's surveyor's certificate of seaworthiness dated Dec. 4, 1941. In these circumstances I find it difficult to distinguish between the present case and the position if the Heimgar had been sunk on her way to the United States. In both cases no loss of time would result from the earlier collision. I agree that this appeal should be allowed with costs.

LORD TUCKER: My Lords, as I have arrived at a conclusion different from that of the Court of Appeal I will state very shortly why I have found myself compelled to disagree with their decision. The gist of the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., is that the fundamental difference between the present case and The Hawk (10) is that in the latter case the ship was compelled to repair her rudder and was, therefore, not a profit-earning machine until that repair had been effected. In that condition the collision repairs were also done, and, therefore, it is right to say that she would have earned nothing whilst those collision repairs were being done, whereas in the present case the Heimgar was proceeding to New York for the express purpose of having collision damage repaired when she suffered the heavy weather damage and it would be contrary to the decision in The Haversham Grange (1) to hold that she could not in any event have earned a profit during the period of detention by reason of the heavy weather damage. But, my Lords, both the Hauk and the Heimgar were rendered unseaworthy by events which happened after the collision in each case. So far as the claim for demurrage was concerned in The Haversham Grange (1), it was rejected not because the collision between the Maureen and the Haversham Grange was subsequent to the collision with the Caravellas, but because it turned out that the Maureen must have been and in point of fact was detained the whole time in dock for the repairs which had to be executed in consequence of the damage done by the Caravellas which had rendered her unseaworthy. It was immaterial that the damage done by the Haversham Grange would also by itself have made the Maureen unseaworthy or that it occurred after the first collision.

It seems to me, therefore, with respect, that the decision of WILLMER, J., in the present case was consistent not only with that part of the decision in The Haversham Grange (1) which dealt with the claim for demurrage, but with the other authorities, including, in particular, The Vitruvia (9) and The Hauk (10). I agree, however, with your Lordships in thinking that the other part of the decision of the Court of Appeal in The Haversham Grange (1), viz., with regard to dock dues (which is quite immaterial for present purposes) cannot be reconciled with their decision as to demurrage and should be overruled. DENNING, L.J., approached the case from the point of view of the common law, but I venture to think that the error underlying his judgment, if I may respectfully say so, is that he regards the cause of the detention as equivalent to the cause of the loss of profit. The distinction is to be found clearly expressed in the judgment of LORD CONSTABLE in The Hauk (10) in the passage which has already been quoted. I am prepared to assume in the present case that the collision was a cause of the detention, but none the less the detention for such repair did not result in any loss of profit. It does not represent what, but for the collision, the owners would have earned by the use of their ship. LLOYD-JACOB, J., treated the time of the decision to immobilise as the decisive factor and this also entered into the reasoning of BUCKNILL, L.J. I do not, however, think that this is consistent with the authorities in which the unseaworthiness of the vessel at the material time has always been regarded as decisive. For these reasons and for those which have been stated by your Lordships I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

My Lords, my noble and learned friend LORD ASQUITH OF BISHOPSTONE, who is unable to be present, has asked me to say that he agrees with the motion proposed from the Woolsack.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Clyde & Co. (for the appellants); Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless (for the respondents).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re LYONS. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. v. LYONS AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins and Morris, L.JJ.), November 8, 9, 12, December 3, 1951.]

Annuity—Annuity free of income tax—Business loss by annuitant—Relief under Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 34 (2)—Repayment to annuitant of tax paid on annuity—Liability of annuitant to account to trustees.

By his will, dated Oct. 8, 1942, the testator directed his trustees out of his residuary estate to pay the sum of £10 a week free of income tax to his son M. during his life on protective trusts. The testator died on Mar. 25, 1946, and after his death the annuity was paid to M. out of dividends received by the trustees as income of the testator's residuary estate on which tax at the standard rate had been deducted at source. In the year 1946-47 M. sustained a business loss of £1,027, in respect of which he claimed relief under the Income Tax Act, 1918, s. 34 (1), and under s. 34 (2) he was repaid payments of tax aggregating £429 19s. 1d., of which £425 9s. 1d. represented the tax deducted at source on the gross annuity. The question arose whether M. was accountable to the trustees for the sum of £425 9s. 1d. or part of it. It was conceded on his behalf that, under the rule in Re Pettit ([1922] 2 Ch. 765), he was accountable for so much of that sum as was equivalent to the proportion (referable to the annuity) of what he would have been entitled to recover in respect of his statutory allowances (viz., his personal allowance and allowances in respect of his children and of life assurance premiums paid by him).

HELD: the testator's object in giving M. an annuity free of tax was to provide him with a certain sum, viz., £10 a week, and not to indemnify him out of residue in respect of a business loss; by s. 34 (1) and s. 34 (2) of the Income Tax Act, 1918, M. became entitled, by reason of his business loss in 1946-47, to have his tax liability in respect of that year adjusted by reference, not only to his statutory allowances, but also to his business loss; he was no more entitled to keep what he recovered in respect of a business loss than he was to keep his statutory allowances, the purpose of the testator being satisfied if the net sum specified by him was left in M.'s hands; and, therefore, M., who was a trustee, not only of any sums received by him which were referable to the tax in respect of his annuity, but also of whatever right he had to make a claim for repayment, was accountable to the trustees for so much of the sum recovered by him from the Inland Revenue as represented repayment of tax paid in respect of his annuity for that year.

Re Kingcome ([1936] 1 All E.R. 173), approved.

Decision of ROMER, J. ([1951] 2 All E.R. 507), affirmed.

AS TO EFFECT OF DIRECTION IN WILL TO PAY ANNUITY FREE OF INCOME TAX, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 28, pp. 215, 216, paras. 386-388; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 166-168, Nos. 572-593.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Pettit, [1922] 2 Ch. 765; 91 L.J.Ch. 732; 127 L.T. 491; 39 Digest 167, 587.
- (2) Re Williams, [1945] 2 All E.R. 102; [1945] Ch. 320; 115 L.J.Ch. 101; 173 L.T. 132; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Cook, [1945] 2 All E.R. 377; [1946] A.C. 1; 114 L.J.P.C. 69; 173 L.T. 211; 26 Tax Cas. 489; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Tatham, [1945] 1 All E.R. 29; [1945] Ch. 34; 114 L.J.Ch. 9; 172 L.T. 14; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Kingcome, [1936] 1 All E.R. 173; [1936] Ch. 566; 105 L.J.Ch. 209; 154 L.T. 462; Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Jones, [1933] Ch. 842; 102 L.J.Ch. 303; 149 L.T. 417; Digest Supp.

- (7) Michelham's Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs. Michelham (Executors of Dowager Lady) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1930), 144 L.T. 163; 15 Tax Cas. 737; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the first defendant, the annuitant, from an order of ROMER, J., dated July 11, 1951, and reported [1951] 2 All E.R. 507.

By the will of his father the annuitant was given an annuity of £10 a week free of income tax. The annuity was paid to him out of income of residue on which income tax at the standard rate had been deducted at source. In the years 1946-47 and 1947-48 the annuitant suffered business losses in respect of which he obtained relief under the Income Tax Act, 1918, s. 34 (2), being repaid sums paid by him in respect of income tax, including the tax paid in respect of the annuity for those years. On a summons by the trustees to determine, inter alia, whether the annuitant was liable to account to them for so much of the sums so repaid to him as were referable to the tax paid on the annuity for the two years, it was contended by the annuitant that he was accountable only for so much of the tax recovered as would be equal to the amounts for which he would have been accountable in respect of the statutory allowances (i.e., his personal allowance and allowances in respect of his children and of life assurance premiums paid by him) attributable to the annuity for those years if he had made no claim under s. 34 (1) of the Act of 1918. ROMER, J., held that the annuitant was accountable to the trustees for the whole of the sums recovered in respect of income tax paid on the annuity for the years 1946-47 and 1947-48.

J. H. Stamp for the annuitant.

Droop for the trustees.

E. G. Wright for infants interested in the residuary estate.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 3. SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R., read the following judgment of the court. The facts of the present case have been fully stated in the reserved judgment by ROMER, J. ([1951] 2 All E.R. 507), and it is unnecessary to relate them again at length. The question for determination is the extent of the accountability to the trustees of the estate of the testator, Henry Lyons (who died on Mar. 25, 1946) of his son Michael, the appellant (hereinafter called "the annuitant"), in respect of repaid income tax. By the terms of cl. 12 of the testator's will, dated Oct. 8, 1942, the trustees were directed out of his residuary estate

" . . . to pay the sum of £10 each week free of income tax to . . . Michael during his life on protective trusts . . . "

The trustees of the will in proper execution of their duties paid to the annuitant during each of the first two years following his father's death the amount of his annuity out of income in their hands, after accounting to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for income tax at the standard rate. But, during each of those years, the annuitant had suffered substantial business losses, and, accordingly, he made a claim, pursuant to s. 34 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1918, for repayment of income tax paid by him or on his account. The question is whether and to what extent, having recovered such tax, he is now accountable to the trustees of his father's will for so much of the amount recovered as represents the tax paid in respect of his annuity.

The material figures for the two years are set out in the judgment of ROMER, J. For present purposes it will suffice to refer to the figures for the first of the two years, the income tax year 1946-47, for in principle there is no difference between the two years. In the year 1946-47 the annuitant's taxable income was, in all, £1,086 1s., of which £945 9s. 1d. represented the gross annuity required to produce the net sum of £10 per week less tax at the standard rate of 9s. in the £. In respect of that income the income tax paid was £429 19s. 1d., of which £425 9s. 1d. was the amount of tax paid by the trustees in respect of the annuity. In the circumstances of his business loss [which amounted that year to £1,027] the annuitant became entitled to recover, and did recover, the whole amount of £429 19s. 1d. of tax paid as above mentioned, and it was unnecessary to make any calculation of the sums he would, apart from his business loss, have been entitled to reclaim in respect of personal allowances and in respect of his children and life insurance premiums. In fact, however, these various allowances would have been equivalent, as we were told, to about one-half of the total tax paid by him, or on his behalf, and counsel has conceded on his behalf that, having regard to the decision in Re Pettit (1) and the cases which have followed that decision, the annuitant is liable to account to the trust estate for so much of the tax recovered as is equivalent to a due proportion (referable to the annuity) of what he would have been entitled to recover in respect of those allowances. In Re Williams (2), cited by the learned judge below, UTHWATT, J., drew attention ([1945] 2 All E.R. 104) to the logical and administrative difficulties which, as it seemed to him and as Mr. Stamp (counsel for the annuitant) had himself argued in the leading case of Re Pettit (1), might flow from the conclusion at which the court arrived in the last-named case. The present case may well afford an illustration of those difficulties. But since the decision of the House of Lords in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Cook (3), all doubts have been laid at rest and all regrets rendered futile. It is now to be taken as well established that, in the case of an annuity comparable in form to that in Re Pettit (1), the annuitant is accountable to the trustees for what in the present case ROMER, J., has conveniently called ([1951] 2 All E.R. 509) "statutory allowances".

But the first question must always remain: What did the testator mean to give? In the passage cited by ROMER, J. ([1951] 2 All E.R. 512) from Re Williams (2), UTHWATT, J., noted the distinction between two classes of gift ([1945] 2 All E.R. 104): (i) where the reference to income tax is merely an indication of the arithmetical method whereby the amount of the gift is to be ascertained; and (ii) where it appears that the testator's intention is to relieve his beneficiary of liability for income tax in respect of the benefit concerned so that (and this must be regarded as the main purpose of the gift) the beneficiary may have a clear sum of so much money in hand—to use the phrase of EVERSLED, J. ([1945] 1 All E.R. 33) in Re Tatham (4), a clear sum of "spending" money, neither more nor less, or, as VISCOUNT MAUGHAM expressed it ([1945] 2 All E.R. 381) in Cook's case (3), a certain sum for his "personal behoof." In the present case it has been conceded by counsel for the annuitant that the annuity given must be regarded as of the second category above mentioned, the category in which fell Re Pettit (1) itself. The question, then, is whether the sum of tax refunded to the annuitant under s. 34 (2) of the Act of 1918 is to be regarded as in pari materia with the statutory allowances so as to make him accountable for the whole sum received, or whether it is, as counsel for the annuitant contends, something altogether distinct in character from the statutory allowances. We have examined all the cases that have been decided since Re Pettit (1), and it must, we think, be conceded that in none of them was the present case ever in the minds of the judges who decided them.

It would be possible to imagine an extreme case in which the Crown placed itself under an obligation to make a payment to some individual or class of individuals, in consideration, say, of services rendered to the State, equivalent to the whole or some part of the income tax which that individual, or class of individuals, had paid. In such a case there would obviously be a strong case for asserting that the sum recovered was not, in fact, tax, and did not in any way affect what had been the true liability for tax. Again, s. 34 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1918, might have been differently worded so as to make it appear that, in the circumstances in which the annuitant found himself, he was entitled to recover a sum equivalent to the whole or part of the tax for which he had been properly assessed. But the sub-section is not so worded. The right of the annuitant, according to s. 34 (1), is to have "an adjustment of his liability" for tax in respect of the previous year's income. In the circumstances, the kernel of the matter, as it seems to us, is found in the single sentence of the judgment of ROMER, J. ([1951] 2 All E.R. 512):

"The question is not whether at any particular stage [the annuitant] was liable to tax, but whether he was ultimately liable . . ."

In our judgment, on a true analysis, in respect of the year in question, the annuitant became entitled to have his tax liability adjusted by reference, not only to his "statutory allowances", but also by reference to the fact of his business loss. In the end he was not liable for any tax at all. And, as we interpret the gift, the annuitant was no more entitled to keep what he recovered in respect of business loss than he was to keep his statutory allowances.

Counsel for the annuitant quarrelled somewhat with the learned judge's reference to a windfall ([1951] 2 All E.R. 509), and it is true that, in the circumstances, the persons entitled to residue subject to the annuity may well be said, if the judgment appealed from is right, to have had a windfall attributable to the purely extraneous circumstance that the annuitant incurred a business loss. Still, we cannot see in principle that it is any less a windfall for residue that the persons interested therein are entitled to recover a certain sum by reason of the fact that the annuitant has married or has had one or more children. And we agree with the reasoning of the learned judge when he said ([1951] 2 All E.R. 511):

"I am unable, however, to regard the 'additional gift' as a bequest in the full sense that that word ordinarily bears, for, in my judgment, it is a gift for a particular purpose and for no other, and, if it is not required to answer that purpose, it fails and cannot be applied to some other purpose instead."

It seems to us not to be in accordance with the intention of the testator that his estate should, in effect, provide a sum of money to make good to the annuitant a business loss. The obligation of the estate was, as we have said, on a true interpretation of the gift, to provide the annuitant with a certain sum of spending money, no more, no less.

Counsel for the annuitant also argued, however, that the sum paid out of residue in respect of the annuitant's income tax is no more than a gift for a particular purpose, and does not fail because the purpose for which it was made is not, or has not to be, fulfilled. It is true that (as the authorities have made clear) in the case of an annuity such as the present there is to be found a gift (i) of the amount of the net sum of the annuity, and (ii) of the amount of tax properly exigible in respect of it. That result is achieved because it is not in law possible to make a gift of so much per annum "free of income tax". As LORD MAUGHAM observed ([1945] 2 All E.R. 380) in Cook's case (3), "a benevolent construction" must be given to the gift to save it from invalidity, and so it is construed as a gift (a) of the net sum, and (b) of the tax properly exigible in respect of it. But the conclusion for which counsel for the annuitant contends does not, in our judgment, follow from the premise. So to hold would be, as we think, to lose sight of the essential distinction to which UTHWATT, J., drew attention ([1945] 2 All E.R. 104) in Re Williams (2), for it would then appear that the reference to income tax was not intended to achieve for the annuitant an indemnity against tax in respect of the annuity given and to allow the annuitant to receive neither more nor less than a clear net sum, but was, in truth, merely an arithmetical factor in quantifying the amount of the gift. In our judgment, once it is determined that the effect of s. 34 (1) of the Act of 1918 is to give to the annuitant a right to reopen his assessment and have his liability for tax in respect of all his income adjusted, then it must follow that the purpose of the testator will have been satisfied so long as any tax properly referable to the annuity, as ultimately ascertained, is discharged out of the estate and the net sum specified by the testator is left in the hands of the beneficiary.

In his judgment ROMER, J., referred ([1951] 2 All E.R. 511) to the question which had been raised before him: Assuming that residue was entitled to re-claim from the annuitant the sum of tax repaid, then, following the principles laid down by BENNETT, J., in Re Kingcome (5), did it not follow that the annuitant must be a trustee, not merely of any sums in fact received and referable to the tax in respect of his annuity, but also of the right to make the necessary claim? In the present case there is the complication that the taxpayer has an option. He may either claim repayment under s. 34 (1) of the Act of 1918 (i.e., have his tax re-adjusted under s. 34 (2) of the Act) or he may carry forward his loss to his next year's tax liability under s. 33 (1) of the Finance Act, 1926. ROMER, J., felt it unnecessary to give any answer to the question posed. We were somewhat troubled in the course of the argument by the point, for, if counsel for the annuitant is wrong, it seems to us that it should follow that the annuitant was a trustee of whatever rights he had as distinct from anything he recovered in respect of them. In so stating, we are assuming that Re Kingcome (5) was rightly decided. No doubt has ever been raised in subsequent cases as to the correctness of the decision, and we see no reason to doubt it. If, therefore, it is necessary to give an answer to this question (as we are inclined to think it is) we should not shrink from holding that the annuitant was a trustee of his rights. Strictly, it may follow that he ought to exercise that one of the two alternative rights available which was the more advantageous to the trust estate. We are not, however, satisfied that it is necessary to go to that length. It may well be that the annuitant would be entitled to exercise whichever of the alternatives he preferred, that matter being left to his discretion, but, if he declined to exercise either alternative, then, as it seems to us, the trustees could bring him before the court and obtain an order on him to exercise either that one which was the more beneficial to the estate, or, at least, that one which he, the annuitant, preferred. It might well be possible that in respect of one or more of the statutory allowances Parliament might hereafter give to the taxpayer an option to choose between one of two alternative ways of obtaining a particular benefit. And, if this came to pass, then the present problem would arise almost exactly in reference to that statutory allowance. For the reasons to which we have given brief expression, out of compliment to the argument of counsel for the annuitant, we conclude that the judgment of ROMER, J., was correct, and we agree with and accept the reasoning on which that judgment was based. In our opinion, the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Wright & Webb (for the annuitant); Saville & Mannooch (for the trustees and infants interested in residue).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CHRISTMAS v. GENERAL CLEANING CONTRACTORS, LTD.
AND OTHERS.ed and Distinguished. BATES
ER. [1952] 2 All E.R. 987.Denning and Hodson, L.JJ., and Lloyd-Jacob, J.), November
H.L. [1952] 2 All E.R. 1110.Negligence—Invitee—Duty of occupier—Protection against unusual danger—Window cleaner—Defective window sash—Window safe for ordinary purposes.

The plaintiff, a window cleaner, was employed by contractors to clean the windows of a club. While he was standing on the outside sill, cleaning one of the windows and holding on to one sash of the window for support, the other sash came down on his fingers, causing him to let go and fall to the ground, suffering injury. He claimed damages for personal injuries against his employers and against the proprietors of the club as occupiers of the premises. The cause of the fall of the sash was an insufficiency in the weights balancing the window, but the window was quite safe for ordinary purposes, and no complaint had been made about its condition by the staff of the club or by other window cleaners.

HELD: where a window is safe for ordinary purposes a defect in it which may render it dangerous for a window cleaner to hold on to is not an "unusual" danger of which an occupier is bound to warn the window cleaner (he being an invitee), and, therefore, the club were not liable to the plaintiff, but it was for the plaintiff's employers to take reasonable care to see that the premises were safe or else to take proper steps to protect him from the dangers to which he was sent; on the facts they had not taken proper steps so to lay out the work as to protect the plaintiff from the dangers of his employment; and they were liable to him in respect of his injury.

London Graving Dock Co., Ltd. v. Horton ([1951] 2 All E.R. 1), applied.

AS TO DEGREE OF CARE ORDINARILY REQUIRED, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 571-587, paras. 825-840; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 16-21, Nos. 68-101.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Bolton v. Stone, [1951] 1 All E.R. 1078; [1951] A.C. 850.
- (2) London Graving Dock Co., Ltd. v. Horton, [1951] 2 All E.R. 1; [1951] A.C. 737.
- (3) Taylor v. Sims & Sims, [1942] 2 All E.R. 375; 167 L.T. 414; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Bowater v. Rowley Regis Corpn., [1944] 1 All E.R. 465; [1944] K.B. 476; 113 L.J.K.B. 427; 170 L.T. 314; 108 J.P. 163; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendants from a decision of JONES, J., dated May 10, 1951, awarding £3,500 damages to the plaintiff for personal injuries. The learned judge found that the second defendants, as occupiers of premises where the plaintiff, a window-cleaner, received his injuries, were guilty of negligence in failing to warn him, as an invitee, of an unusual danger of which they ought to have known, namely, a defective window which did not provide a safe hold for the plaintiff when cleaning the windows. The judge further found that the first defendants, the plaintiff's employers, were also guilty of negligence in failing to take reasonable care to provide a safe system of work.

Nelson, K.C., and Stephen Chapman for the first defendants.

Berryman, K.C., and N. G. L. Richards for the second defendants.

Fortune for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

-Nov. 29. The following judgments were read.

DENNING, L.J.: The plaintiff is a window cleaner employed by General Cleaning Contractors, Ltd., whom I will call the "contractors". On December 8, 1948, they sent him to clean the windows of the Caledonian Club which was owned by the Caledonian Club Trust, Ltd., whom I will call the "club". The plaintiff was cleaning one of the windows of the club, standing on the outside sill, when he fell twenty-nine feet into the basement below and was injured. He brought this action against the contractors, who were his employers, alleging that his fall was due to a breach of duty on their part. As they said that it was not their fault, but the fault of the club, the plaintiff added the club as defendants also. The judge found that both the contractors and the club were at fault and were equally to blame and he has ordered them to pay £3,500 damages. Each of them now appeals to this court.

The plaintiff was a good workman who had worked for the contractors for twenty years. He was employed on piece-work terms. The contractors had a standing contract to clean the windows of the club, in the course of which they cleaned the windows of the first floor every fortnight. The plaintiff had frequently been one of the men sent to do this work. The men had found some of the windows troublesome and defective and had complained about them to their own manager and to the steward of the club, but they had never had any trouble with the windows of the library. On Dec. 8, 1948, the plaintiff was cleaning one of the windows of the library on the first floor which he believed was quite safe. It was a tall window, 10 feet 5½ inches high and 4 feet 7¾ inches wide, and had two sashes, a top sash and a bottom sash, each with nine panes of glass in it. The plaintiff first cleaned all he could from the inside. He did the inside of the panes and also, from the inside, reached over to do the top panes of the top sash. Then he got outside to do the rest of the top sash. He threw up the bottom sash, and got on the sill, which was only 6¼ inches wide, and stood on it. He did not close the bottom sash because it had a self-locking device. He left it open a few inches so as not to find himself locked out. The top sash was the outer sash, and the plaintiff held on to its bottom edge with his right hand while he cleaned the panes of it with his left hand. To finish the panes, he pushed the top sash up to the top, still holding the bottom edge of it with his right hand, but, as he did so, the bottom sash, which he had left open, came down and closed the window, with the result that the top edge of the bottom sash came close against the bottom edge of the top sash and knocked his hand from the place he was holding, causing him to lose his balance, and he fell. It was probably the jar caused by the pushing up of the top sash which caused the bottom sash to run down as it did and catch his fingers.

A few months later an expert who examined the window found that on some occasions, when pushed up, it did not stay up, but came down of its own accord, and, on others, it stayed up but dropped on being touched with the fingers. His view was that the weights were not heavy enough properly to balance the sash. In short, it ran down rather too easily, but otherwise there was nothing wrong with it. After the accident it was used and cleaned for some months just as it had been before, but later on, when the club was shut for the annual closing, the weights were put right.

The learned judge found that the window was defective in that it was ill balanced and I think that we must accept his finding, but I do not think it follows that the club were guilty of negligence. It is useful first to consider whether the club were in breach of the duty of care which they owed to the members and the servants of the club. I think not, for, despite the defect, the window was safe enough for all ordinary purposes. There was, I suppose, a remote possibility of injury to the members or servants if it ran down too easily, but it was such a remote possibility that it could not form a basis for a charge of negligence: see Bolton v. Stone (1). Next, consider whether the club were in breach of their duty to the window cleaners. The defect rendered it a danger for them, but the liability of the club depends on whether it was an unusual danger. The judge says that it was an unusual danger, but I cannot agree with him. The plaintiff himself said that "the weather has a lot of effect on windows if they are not properly balanced, and on several occasions when I was working outside a window you would find the bottom sash slowly sinking down." Mr. Mahoney, a director of the contractors, who has had thirty-five years' experience, said: "We have had quite a number of accidents with window sash cords breaking and sashes coming down on fingers . . . that is quite a usual accident". He added that on this particular window there was no question of a sash cord breaking, because they were held by chains and balance weights. He also mentioned a case where "a man was cleaning and holding on to the handles underneath and he was picked up dead from Bishopsgate with the handle in his hand. He was depending on the handle which an experienced man would not, as he knows full well they may be rusty and may suddenly go". That evidence shows quite clearly that windows which are safe enough for ordinary purposes may yet have a defect rendering them a danger to window cleaners.

What then is the law on this matter? Is a householder responsible for seeing that windows are safe for window cleaners to hold on to? I think not. The householder is concerned, of course, to see that the windows are safe for his servants to open and close, and, indeed, to clean, but he is not concerned to see that they are safe for a window cleaner to hold on to. The duty which a householder owes to his servants is much higher than that which he owes to a window cleaner who is only an invitee. The householder employs the window cleaner as an independent contractor to clean his windows, and leaves it to him to decide how he shall do it and what safeguards he shall take, whether he shall use ladders or cradles or simply stand on the sill. The householder does not know what strains or stresses the window cleaner is going to put on the window. If the window cleaner chooses to rely on the window for his safety, then it is for him, and not for the householder, to take steps to see that it is safe for his special purposes. The window cleaner has no right to expect the windows to be in perfect condition. Windows, which are often quite serviceable for ordinary purposes, may yet have some minor defect, such as rusty screws or worn sash cords, or ill-balanced weights, making them unsuitable for window cleaners to put their trust in. Such defects are, for window cleaners, common, recognisable dangers of everyday experience and cannot be classed as "unusual". They are, therefore, dangers against which window cleaners must provide their own safeguards. They cannot saddle the householder with damage which results from them: see London Graving Dock Co., Ltd. v. Horton (2). In my opinion, therefore, the judge was wrong in finding the club liable, and their appeal should be allowed.

The next question is whether the contractors are liable to their workman, the plaintiff. Counsel for the contractors argued that employers who send their men out to work on the premises of other people, have no responsibility for the safety of those premises. He cited Taylor v. Sims & Sims (3) in support of that proposition. He said that it was for the occupier to see that the premises were safe for the workman and not for the employer to do so. I cannot agree with that proposition. Until recently many people thought that an occupier was bound to use reasonable care to see that his premises were safe for workmen he invited on them, but that is no longer true. The decision of the House of Lords in London Graving Dock Co., Ltd. v. Horton (2) shows that an occupier can allow his premises to remain defective and dangerous with impunity so long as he gives the men warning of the risk or the danger is so obvious that they must be aware of it. If this is so, I think it must follow that it is for the employer, who sends his men to the premises, to take reasonable care to see that the premises are safe for the men or else take proper steps to protect the men from the dangers to which he sends them. There is a difference between a master-man and a journeyman. A master-man, working on his own account, who knows of the dangers, has a choice before him. He need not do the work if he does not wish to run the risk. But a journeyman, working for another, has no such easy choice. He has been sent to do the work and he may well feel that do it he must, even though he knows that it involves risk. If such a man has no remedy against the occupier—and Horton's case (2) shows that he has none—then it must be the duty of his employer to take reasonable care to protect him. This seems to me implied in the observations of LORD PORTER and LORD NORMAND in Horton's case (2) ([1951] 2 All E.R. 5, 11).

The question then is: Did the contractors take reasonable care to protect the plaintiff? The judge has found that they did not, and I find myself in full agreement with him. Window cleaning is a dangerous occupation, and the plaintiff fell owing to one of the dangers usual to it. The employers should have taken proper steps to protect him from the dangers. They should have laid out the work more carefully. One way would have been to do the cleaning from a ladder instead of from a sill. Another way would have been to ask the householder to allow the firm to insert hooks into the brickwork so as to attach a safety belt. It is said by the employers that these suggestions are not practicable, and that it is the usual thing for the men to clean windows by standing on the sill. That answer does not satisfy me. If employers employ men on this dangerous work for their own profit, they must take proper steps to protect them, even if they are expensive. If they cannot afford to provide adequate safeguards, they should not ask them to do the work at all. That seems to be the view of the London County Council, for they have made regulations forbidding a man to stand or kneel on a sill adjoining a highway unless he is hooked on by a safety belt. At the hearing of the appeal it was suggested that the accident might have been avoided if the man had put in a chock to prevent the bottom sash coming right down as it did. This was, in effect, a suggestion of contributory negligence. This was negatived by the judge and I agree with him. You cannot blame the man for not taking every precaution which prudence would suggest. It is only too easy to be wise after the event. He was doing the work in the way which the employers expected him to do it, and, if they had taken proper safeguards, the accident would not have happened. It was suggested also that the man voluntarily took the risk of injury on himself. The judge negatived this and I agree with him. The result is that the appeal of the contractors fails and must be dismissed.

HODSON, L.J.: The plaintiff is a window cleaner. He claims damages from his employers on the grounds that either in breach of their duty to him they have failed to take reasonable care to provide a safe system of work or they were negligent so that he sustained injury. By his amended statement of claim he has also claimed damages from the second defendants who are the occupiers of the premises where he was injured on the ground that the accident was caused by their negligence. At the trial the learned judge found in favour of the plaintiff against both defendants and apportioned the liability equally between them.

He found that the window was defective and that the tendency of the sash to move suddenly because the weights were not heavy enough to balance the sash properly constituted an unusual danger which the club ought to have known if they had exercised reasonable care in having the windows inspected from time to time and repaired when necessary.

I find myself unable to accept the finding that the window constituted such an unusual danger as to impose a duty on the club to warn, so as to prevent damage to, the plaintiff. As the learned judge said in one part of his judgment, window sashes do occasionally move, and, if they move, are liable to cause the hand of a cleaner to be caught between the two sashes or to be knocked off the sash he is holding. The risk of a sash window moving was, I think, clearly recognised by the plaintiff in his evidence. The balance must vary with the position of the window, and, as Mr. Harrington pointed out, the window was suspended by a chain, not an ordinary sash cord, and when the lower sash was near the bottom it was prone to run down. Even if the window can be regarded as defective it cannot, in my view, be regarded as a danger unusual for window cleaners. "... 'unusual' [danger] ... means such danger as is not usually found in carrying out the task . . . which the invitee has in hand . . .": per LORD PORTER in London Graving Dock Co., Ltd. v. Horton (2) [1951] 2 All E.R. 5. This was not, in my judgment, such a danger.

So far as knowledge is concerned, assuming the unusual danger to exist, no defect was ever reported to the club. The steward said that the staff and the members regularly used the windows and no complaint had reached him from them. Since the windows were cleaned once a fortnight by expert window cleaners who made no complaint about the running of the windows in the room in question, the club was not under an obligation, in my view, to make any further inspection. I do not think that there was any reason why the club should, even if they had known that the window in question was liable to run down, foresee that there would be an accident and consequent injury occasioned by the method in which the window cleaner performed his work, namely, by standing on the sill outside and holding on to the sash. I would, therefore, allow the appeal of the club.

So far as the plaintiff's employers are concerned, I think that the judgment of the learned judge was right and that they are liable for breach of duty in not taking reasonable care to provide a safe system of working and for negligence. Contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff was negatived by the learned judge and this finding is not challenged in this court. I reject the argument based on the defence volenti non fit injuria. Window cleaning is not, in my opinion, an inherently dangerous occupation of a kind which of necessity exposes employees to risks such as those encountered in this case. The learned judge quoted from a judgment of GODDARD, L.J., in Bowater v. Rowley Regis Corpn. (4) ([1944] 1 All E.R. 467):

"A horse-breaker must take the risk of being thrown or injured by a restive or unbroken horse; it is an ordinary risk of his employment. But a man whose occupation is not one of a nature inherently dangerous but who is asked or required to undertake a risky operation is in a different position".

Applying these observations to this case I reach the same conclusion as did the learned judge. [HIS LORDSHIP considered the evidence regarding the system of working and continued:] I would accept the conclusion of the learned judge that the system of work provided was unsafe and that the contractors were negligent, and would dismiss their appeal.

LLOYD-JACOB, J.: By accepting the evidence of a Mr. Harrington the learned judge has found that the lower sash of the window on which the plaintiff was working at the time of his accident was defective in that, by reason of the inadequacy of the sash weights properly to balance the window, it sometimes dropped instead of remaining in position, an occurrence which was more likely to be experienced when the opening was less than one foot. He further found that it was this involuntary closing of the window by a few inches which, by displacing the plaintiff's finger-grip of the bottom sash of the top window, caused the plaintiff to lose his balance and fall to his injury. The learned judge found that this tendency to involuntary closure constituted an unusual danger which the club, with reasonable care, would have known had the window been inspected from time to time. Apart from the normal day-to-day opening and closing of this, among other windows, the evidence established that this particular window was regularly opened and closed for cleaning purposes every fortnight, and that by window cleaners who were never averse from expressing their opinion when any window was found to be troublesome or defective, and at no time was any criticism expressed of its condition. Except on the footing that a householder must be assumed to have knowledge of a defect which has escaped the notice of persons far more expert in the operation of windows than he is, or can fairly be expected to be, the finding, in effect, means that the householder is under a duty to provide for inspection by an expert of such of his windows as have been regularly operated without complaint. In my judgment, that is to impose a duty on an invitor more onerous than has yet been found appropriate for normal human relations and I would allow the appeal of the club. I agree that the appeal of the contractors should be dismissed.

Appeal of first defendants dismissed.

Appeal of second defendants allowed.

Solicitors: L. Bingham & Co. (for the first defendants); Berrymans (for the second defendants); Wedlake, Letts & Birds (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re KEELE ESTATES.

Re SNEYD'S SETTLEMENTS. Re SNEYD (WALTER) WILL TRUSTS.

Reversed. C.A. [1952] 2 All E.R. 164

AVELING AND ANOTHER v. SNEYD AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), November 23, 27, 28, 29, 1951.]

Estate Duty—Incidence—Portions charged by will on property reversionary at date of testator's death—Duty exigible on death of life tenant—Liability of portioners to be charged with duty—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 14 (1).

By his will, dated May 30, 1865, R.S. senior devised real property to the use of W.S. for life and after his death to the use of R.S. junior for life, and after his death on limitations for the sons of R.S. junior in tail, and in default of such issue to the use of W.S. his heirs and assigns for ever. R.S. senior died on July 27, 1870, W.S. on July 2, 1888, and R.S. junior died without leaving issue on Dec. 25, 1949. By his will, dated June 14, 1886, W.S., in case he should become entitled in fee simple to the said real property, devised the same (subject to subsisting prior limitations and to a jointure and certain portions charged by his own will) to the use of his trustees for a term of fifteen hundred years to raise a portion of £20,000 for each of his daughters. Each portion was then settled. On the question of the incidence of estate duty exigible in respect of the settled realty in connection with the death of R.S. junior,

HELD: no part of the estate duty was charged on the portions.

Re Fuchs ([1944] 1 All E.R. 338), applied.

Administration of Estates — Deficiency — Relative priorities of jointuress and portioners.

By his will, dated June 14, 1886, W.S. declared that it should be lawful for every person thereby made tenant for life of the settled estates, either before or after he or she should become entitled in possession, by deed or will (but subject to prior limitations) to appoint to any husband or wife of the person exercising the power for his or her life any yearly rentcharge not exceeding for any one such husband or wife the yearly sum of £1,500, to be charged on all or any of the said premises thereinbefore devised in settlement, and also to charge the premises with payment as portions for his or her children of a sum not exceeding, for four or more children, £25,000, together with certain interest. By a deed dated June 5, 1931, H.S., who was, under the said will, tenant for life of the settled estates, although not then entitled in possession, appointed that such estates should remain and be held in trust for a term of one thousand years to commence from the death of the survivor of himself and R.S. junior in trust after the death of such survivor (or in his lifetime with his consent) to raise £15,000 clear of death duties (or such less sum as should be the maximum principal sum chargeable under the power being exercised) with certain interest and hold the same in trust for such of his five daughters as should be objects of the said power and should attain the age of twenty-one years or marry in equal shares. H.S. by his will dated Dec. 26, 1949, in exercise of the jointuring power conferred on him by the will of W.S., appointed to his wife J. in case she survived him (which happened) a yearly rentcharge of £1,800 or the maximum annual sum of money which he could so appoint by way of jointure to be issuing out of or to be charged on all the property which at his death should be subject to subsisting limitations of the will of W.S. and to commence from the death of H.S. (R.S. junior having died on Dec. 25, 1949) and to be paid without any deduction except income tax and legacy duty. It was common ground that the latter appointment only operated so as to entitle J. to £1,500 a year. J. was the second wife of H.S. and was not the mother of the portioners. In the event of the settled estates proving insufficient to pay the portions and the jointure in full,

HELD: in the absence of any indication in the deed of 1931 or in the will of H.S. as to priority as between the portions and the jointure, they must rank pari passu.

AS TO BY WHOM ESTATE DUTY IS PAYABLE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 279-285, paras. 290-299; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 27, 28, Nos. 148-166.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Fuchs, [1944] 1 All E.R. 338; [1944] Ch. 200; 113 L.J.Ch. 97; 170 L.T. 191; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Berry v. Gaukroger, [1903] 2 Ch. 116; 72 L.J.Ch. 435; 88 L.T. 521; 21 Digest 27, 155.
- (3) Re Hicklin, [1914] 2 Ch. 278; 86 L.J.Ch. 740; 117 L.T. 403; 21 Digest 28, 157.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine inter alia (i) as to the portions of £20,000 each appointed by the will of Walter Sneyd, deceased, in favour of his daughters, whether each such portion ought to be charged with a rateable, or some and what part of the estate duty payable on the death of Colonel Ralph Sneyd junior in respect of certain settled real property; and (ii) as to the portions appointed to the daughters of Henry Ralph Mowbray Sneyd by a deed dated June 5, 1931, whether such portions ranked in priority to the jointure rentcharge appointed by the said Henry Sneyd by his will to his wife, and, if not, what were the relative priorities of such portions and jointure.

Wilfrid Hunt for the plaintiffs, the trustees of both the will of Ralph Sneyd, senior, and the will of Walter Sneyd.

S. Pascoe Hayward, K.C., and Duthie for the first defendant, the widow of Henry Ralph Mowbray Howard Sneyd, the jointress under his will.

J. A. Wolfe for the second to the fifth defendants and the fifteenth defendant, those entitled (or their representatives) to the portions under the will of Walter Sneyd.

Cross, K.C., and Wigglesworth for the sixth to the eighth defendants, interested in portions appointed under the will of Walter Sneyd.

E. G. Wright for the ninth to the thirteenth defendants, the portioners under the deed of June 5, 1931.

Salt, K.C., and H. E. Francis for the fourteenth defendant, an infant, the tenant in tail male in possession of the settled estate.

ROXBURGH, J.: The question to be determined is whether, as to the portions of £20,000 each appointed by the will of the testator, Walter Sneyd, in favour of his daughters, each such portion ought to be charged with a rateable, or some and what, part of the estate duty payable on the death of Colonel Ralph Sneyd junior in respect of the settled estate. The property with which we are concerned is real property in strict settlement, which was originally settled by Ralph Sneyd senior, who died on July 27, 1870. By his will, dated May 30, 1865, Ralph Sneyd senior devised the said settled estates to the use of his brother Walter Sneyd for life, and after his death to the use of Colonel Sneyd for life, and after the decease of Colonel Sneyd on limitations for the sons of Colonel Sneyd in tail—he had none—and in default of such issue to the use of Walter Sneyd, his heirs and assigns for ever. Walter Sneyd died on July 2, 1888, i.e., before the passing of the Finance Act, 1894, but Colonel Sneyd survived until Christmas Day, 1949, and, therefore, when Walter Sneyd died he (Walter Sneyd) had a vested defeasible remainder in fee simple in the settled estates. Heavy estate duty became payable on the death of Colonel Sneyd. By his will, dated June 14, 1886, Walter Sneyd, in case he should become entitled in fee simple to the real estate being freeholds of inheritance devised by the will of Ralph Sneyd senior, devised the same (subject to any estates or interests prior to the ultimate limitation to himself and also subject to a certain jointure and portions charged by his own will) and all his own real estate to the use of his trustees for a term of fifteen hundred years to commence from his decease on the trusts thereafter declared and from and after the expiration or determination of the said term of years and in the meantime subject thereto to various uses. The trusts of the term were to raise as and for the portion of each of his daughters (other than the eldest or any other daughter or daughters entitled as tenant for life in possession) the sum of £20,000 together with certain interest. The portion of each daughter was settled.

A decision of SIMONDS, J., in Re Fuchs (1), bears a close similarity to the present case, although the cases are not identical. In particular, Re Fuchs (1) was concerned with a fund of personality, while this case is concerned with freeholds of inheritance. Re Fuchs (1) turned on the Finance Act, 1894, s. 8 (4), which provides:

“Where property passes on the death of the deceased, and his executor is not accountable for the estate duty in respect of such property, every person to whom any property so passes for any beneficial interest in possession, and also, to the extent of the property actually received or disposed of by him, every trustee, guardian, committee, or other person in whom any interest in the property so passing or the management thereof is at any time vested, and every person in whom the same is vested in possession by alienation or other derivative title shall be accountable for the estate duty on the property . . . ”

Dealing with that sub-section SIMONDS, J., said ([1944] 1 All E.R. 340):

“The sub-section contemplates the passing of property from A to B upon the death of A under circumstances in which the executor of A is not liable for duty. Where, under a disposition made by C, a trust fund becomes distributable upon the death of the life tenant A to the reversioner B, it is sufficiently accurate to say that the property in the trust fund passes to B and if B represents more than one person then the several reversioners will bear the duty rateably. But where the reversioner B dies before the reversion falls in and, when it does fall in, it is distributable under his will, or (it may be) upon his intestacy, it is, in my judgment, too great a strain even of popular language, in which admittedly the Finance Act is couched, to say that the property, that is the trust fund, passes from A, the tenant for life, to the persons who take either under B's disposition or in default of such disposition. The right of such a person is not a right in or to any property but solely a right to have the estate of the reversioner including this asset administered in due course. Upon this footing the primary condition of the application of the sub-section is not present and it is in this respect that Berry v. Gaukroger (2) and Re Hicklin (3), upon which counsel for the residuary legatees relied, are to be distinguished. In both cases the deceased upon whose death duty was exigible and the persons who disputed their rateable liability claimed under the same disposition and it could be fairly predicated of them that the same property which the deceased enjoyed during his life passed to them after his death according to their respective interests. They were accordingly liable for a rateable part of the duty . . . But as I have already pointed out, it is just this element which is absent from such a case as the present one where the contest is between several beneficiaries who claim not under the original disposition but under a testator who was himself absolutely entitled in reversion under that disposition. In my judgment, there is no room for the application of the principle . . . ”

I have embarked on an obscure and difficult journey and there is no doubt that there is much to be said for each of the different points of view, but in Re Fuchs (1) I have a broad statement of principle. What is my duty ? Is it to apply the same principle mutatis mutandis to the present case, or is it to evolve some further distinction based on the differences between real and personal property and between the treatments of each of those kinds of property, in particular at the date when Walter Sneyd died ? My view is that I should not attempt to introduce distinctions, but should endeavour to assimilate the two cases, leaving it for some other court which is untrammelled by authority to re-survey the whole field. I shall, therefore, approach this case in that frame of mind.

Counsel for the infant defendant, faced with Re Fuchs (1), addressed no argument to me on s. 8 (4). His submissions were two. The first was that somehow the property which passed on the death of Colonel Sneyd by-passed the estate of Walter Sneyd. His second argument was that the effect of s. 14 (1) of the Act of 1894 was to throw a rateable part of the duty on the portioners. Section 14 (1) provides:

“ In the case of property which does not pass to the executor as such, an amount equal to the proper rateable part of the estate duty may be recovered by the person, who being authorised or required to pay the estate duty in respect of any property has paid such duty, from the person entitled to any sum charged on such property (whether as capital or as an annuity or otherwise,) under a disposition not containing any express provision to the contrary.”

I will deal with those two arguments seriatim. I find myself unable to accept counsel's first submission for two reasons. First, it was only by virtue of an indefeasible estate in fee simple in possession that Walter Sneyd could effectively make the testamentary dispositions in question. Secondly, in his lifetime Walter Sneyd had been entitled to a defeasible vested estate in fee simple in remainder which on his death became an asset of his estate and could only be enlarged into an indefeasible estate in possession in the bosom of that estate. On those two grounds I find myself unable to accept counsel's first argument. The point as to s. 14 (1) is, I think, undoubtedly a matter of difficulty, but my view is that the portioners have no charge on the property which passed on the death of Colonel Sneyd. Their charge was on so much, if any, as emerged from the estate of the testator, Walter Sneyd, in due course of administration. What in fact emerged was an equity of redemption—that is to say, the freehold property subject to a charge for estate duty. But it might have been partially, or even wholly, applied in the payment of the debts of Walter Sneyd if he had left debts of a sufficient amount. Or it is possible to look at it in another way. The trustees of the leasehold term were not entitled to a lease of all the freehold properties which passed on the death of Colonel Sneyd, but they were entitled to a lease of mixed real properties—that is to say, the testator, Walter Sneyd's, own real estate and so much of the real estate passing on the death of Colonel Sneyd as was not required for the purpose of administration and for the payment of the estate duty in question. The security of the portioners extended so far, but not farther. Accordingly, in my judgment, no part of the estate duty can be thrown on the portioners.

[HIS LORDSHIP heard argument on the question secondly stated above.]

ROXBURGH, J.: The will of Walter Sneyd conferred on Major Henry as tenant for life powers of jointuring and of charging portions. Major Henry married first a Miss Helen Millicent James, and by that marriage had five children. That marriage was dissolved and he married Janet Emma Jameson Howard Duthie as his second wife. By his second marriage he had a son who is the present tenant in tail. He exercised both his power of charging portions and his power of jointuring his second wife. So far as the latter power was concerned, he exercised it excessively, but it is common ground that it only operated to the full extent of his power, viz., £1,500 a year. He also exercised his power to the full as regards the children. As the estate is heavily charged with estate duty, there is a possibility of a deficiency. If there is a deficiency, there is a very serious question as to the position between the jointuress and the portioners. It is at present a hypothetical question, but I was anxious to decide it now rather than put the parties to the expense of a new construction summons.

There are three possible contentions. One is that the jointuress takes precedence over the portioners. The second is that the portioners take precedence over the jointuress. The third is that they rank pari passu. These powers were not exercised at the same time. The portions were appointed by a deed-poll of June 5, 1931. The appointor had then re-married. The deed provides:

"This appointment is made by the appointor in exercise of the power for this purpose given to him by the will of the testator [Ralph Sneyd senior] and of every or any other power enabling him in this behalf (but only if and so far as such powers respectively prove in the events which shall happen to be exercisable by him) and is made subject and without prejudice to his life interest under the said will and to the uses estates and powers preceding or overriding such life estate and to the uses and estates limited or created in exercise of such powers . . . The appointor hereby irrevocably charges the Keele Estates with the payment of the principal sums and interest and other money to be raised under the trusts of the term hereinafter limited."

That charge makes no reference to the so far unexercised power of jointuring. He charges these portions on the estates. If he was intending to reserve the power of over-reaching this charge by the subsequent jointuring of a wife, surely he would have been expected to reserve that over-reaching power when he was dealing with priorities, as indeed he was in the paragraph which I have read. Subsequently, by his will dated Dec. 26, 1949, he jointured his second wife.

The sheet anchor of counsel for the jointuress is the great name of LORD ST. LEONARDS. In FARWELL ON POWERS, 3rd ed., p. 577, LORD ST. LEONARDS is cited as saying (in SUGDEN ON POWERS, 8th ed., p. 487):

"If the rule is universally in favour of portions, there is no distinction between a jointure and portions; but either, when raised by means of a power, will prevail over the other, if actually created by the settlement itself. There would, however, be no difficulty in drawing a distinction between the two charges, which is pointed out by their nature. Where they come into competition, the jointure should precede the portions. Where both are created by powers, and although the portions are first charged, a jointure would, it is apprehended, prevail over portions."

They are both here created by the exercise of powers and the portions were first charged. But, says LORD ST. LEONARDS, a jointure would, it is apprehended, prevail over portions. I must confess I do not quite know to what situation LORD ST. LEONARDS was referring when he said that. Was he referring to the case of a jointure in favour of a widow after the life interest of her husband as compared with portions in favour of the children of the marriage, or was he speaking in entirely general terms so as to comprehend in his statement the relative positions of the children of the first marriage and the widow of the second marriage, and, therefore, not the mother of the children? I really do not know. Moreover, I feel that broad statements of that character made without any regard to the circumstances of a particular case might be dangerous. The basis, I understand, of LORD ST. LEONARDS' observations is a surmise as to the intention of the person exercising the powers, but, if it is permissible to surmise at all, it is better to surmise in the light of the circumstances of the particular case. Even then surmise is a most unruly horse. In this particular case I think it is easy to make equal and opposite surmises at almost every point. I cannot but think that, if a person subjects property to charges which are to take effect at the same time and nothing is said directly or indirectly about priority, on the general principle of equity—that, if there is a deficiency which nobody who drafts these documents expects, the only thing you can do is to apportion the burden of the deficiency—they ought to rank pari passu. In this deed of appointment I think that there is a clear indication that a widow is not to have priority over the portions. I think that the form of the document itself by implication shows that. Counsel for the portioners asks me to go further and say that that document also shows that the portioners were to have priority over the jointuress. I do not think so. It is not like a mortgagor mortgaging his house in favour of a number of different mortgagees. It is a person exercising a power in a family settlement, and I should need strong words to convince me that merely because the appointor did not reserve the right to create in favour of his widow a jointure ranking pari passu with portions he was to be deemed to have surrendered that right. Therefore, I arrive at the conclusion that, if there is a deficiency, the jointuress and the portioners rank pari passu.

Declarations accordingly.

Solicitors: Cunliffe & Airy, agents for Knight & Sons, Newcastle, Staffordshire (for the plaintiffs); Hunters (for the first, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth defendants); Nicholl, Manisty, Few & Co. (for the second, third, fourth, fifth and fifteenth defendants); Royds, Rawstorne & Co. (for the sixth, seventh and eighth defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re SHAW'S WILL TRUSTS. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. NATIONAL CITY BANK, LTD. AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), November 30, December 3, 1951.]

Charity—Education—Gift for the teaching, promotion, and encouragement of appreciation of the fine arts, and also of self-control, elocution, oratory, deportment, and the arts of personal contact, social intercourse, and public, private, professional and business life.

By her will a testatrix constituted a trust fund and directed her trustee to pay or apply the net income thereof in perpetuity in or towards the appreciation of the fine arts and all or any one or more of the following objects (inter alia): "The teaching promotion and encouragement in Ireland of self-control elocution oratory deportment the arts of personal contact of social intercourse and the other arts of public private professional and business life. The establishment and endowment within the special period [thereinafter mentioned] either solely or jointly with any person or persons or any other corporation of any educational institution or any chair or readership in any university college or educational institution now existing or coming into existence within the special period in Ireland for the purpose of giving instruction in or promoting the study by the general public of the subjects mentioned in this clause . . . or any of them provided that no such college or educational institution has for its sole object the exclusive or complete training in any single profession or calling."

HELD: the trust was of an educational nature and beneficial to the community, and, therefore, it constituted a valid charitable gift.

AS TO TRUST FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, pp. 116-118, paras. 153, 154; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 245-248, Nos. 51-73.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re De Noailles, (1916), 85 L.J.Ch. 807; 114 L.T. 1089; 8 Digest 341, 1321.
- (2) Re Hummeltenberg, [1923] 1 Ch. 237; 92 L.J.Ch. 326; 129 L.T. 124; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Corelli, [1943] 2 All E.R. 519; [1943] Ch. 332; 112 L.J.Ch. 348; 169 L.T. 265; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Price, [1943] 2 All E.R. 505; [1943] Ch. 422; 112 L.J.Ch. 273; 169 L.T. 121; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Royal Choral Society v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 101; 112 L.J.K.B. 648; 169 L.T. 100; 25 Tax Cas. 263; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Central Employment Bureau for Women & Students' Careers Asscn. (Incorporated), [1942] 1 All E.R. 232; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the trusts declared in the will of Charlotte Frances Shaw, deceased, concerning her ultimate trust fund were valid, or were void as contravening the rule against perpetuities or for uncertainty or for any other reason.

K. J. T. Elphinstone for the plaintiffs, the general trustees of the deceased's will.

Russell, K.C., and M. Browne for the first defendants, the National City Bank, Ltd., the special trustees of the deceased's will.

Wilfrid Hunt for the second defendant, the Public Trustee, the executor of the will of the deceased's husband.

S. Pascoe Hayward, K.C., and J. Monckton for the third defendant, interested on intestacy.

Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

VAISEY, J.: By cl. 11 to 16 of her will, dated Sept. 2, 1937, the testatrix, Charlotte Frances Shaw, constituted a residuary trust fund, of which, by cl. 16, she provided that her husband, if he survived her, should receive the income during his life. Clause 17 directs that, subject to such life interest, a sum of £20,000 should be raised out of the trust fund and held on the trusts therein mentioned. Clause 18 provides that, subject to the preceding trusts, her trustees should stand possessed of the said trust fund or the residue thereof, defined as the ultimate trust fund, on trust as soon as conveniently might be after the death of her husband (in the event which happened of his surviving her) to transfer the same to and vest the same in the National City Bank, Ltd., in Ireland. The testatrix died on Sept. 12, 1943, and thereafter her will and codicil were proved by her husband and the National Provincial Bank, Ltd., in the Principal Probate Registry. The husband of the testatrix died on Nov. 2, 1950. The ultimate trust fund now consists of investments and cash of an approximate value of £72,990 with a reversion to a fund retained to provide for the payment of certain annuities consisting of investments of an approximate value of £21,750. The present proceedings have been instituted by the National Provincial Bank, Ltd., the surviving general trustee of the will, as plaintiffs, against the Irish bank, the Public Trustee (as legal personal representative of the testatrix's husband), the niece of the testatrix (Mrs. Cecily Charlotte Colthurst), and the Attorney-General, as defendants.

The relevant clauses of the will do not err on the side of brevity, but, in saying that, I would also say that they give an interesting insight into the mind of the testatrix, and may, indeed, be described as very good reading. I must state them almost in full, and it is from them that I have to extract the proper answer to a very simple question: Are the trusts declared by those clauses charitable trusts or not? Unless they are, in the legal sense of the word, charitable, they are admittedly void for perpetuity. They can only be brought within the purview of "charity" as being either for the advancement of education or for the general benefit of the community or a part of it. The clause on which the question chiefly turns, cl. 19, is divided into three sub-clauses, of which the first two are subdivided into lettered paragraphs. This elaboration is, no doubt, intended to clarify, but it has also the unfortunate effect of obscuring, the intentions of the testatrix whose meaning is in many respects exceedingly elusive.

The first of the three sub-clauses of cl. 19 is in the form of recitals. It reads thus:

"(i) Whereas: (a) I am desirous of promoting and encouraging in Ireland the bringing of the masterpieces of fine art within the reach of the Irish people of all classes so that they may have increased opportunity of studying such masterpieces and of acquiring a fuller and wider knowledge thereof, and (b) in the course of a long life I have had many opportunities of observing the extent to which the most highly instructed and capable persons have their efficiency defeated and their influence limited for want of any organised instruction and training for the personal contacts whether with individuals or popular audiences without which their knowledge is incommunicable (except through books) and how the authority which their abilities should give them is made derisory by their awkward manners and how their employment in positions for which they have valuable qualifications is made socially impossible by vulgarities of speech and other defects as easily corrigible by teaching and training as simple illiteracy and whereas my experience and observation have convinced me that the lack of such training produces not only much social friction but grave pathological results which seem quite unconnected with it and that social intercourse is a fine art with a technique which everybody can and should acquire."

The second sub-clause begins with a reference to the objects which the testatrix asserts that she had at heart, which I construe as an allusion to the preceding recitals. Paragraph (a) of the second sub-clause is merely an investment clause. Paragraphs (b), (c), (d) and (e) provide:

"(b) The Irish bank shall pay or apply the net income of the ultimate trust fund in perpetuity to in or towards all or any one or more of the following objects and in such proportions and in such manner as the Irish bank shall in its absolute discretion from time to time think fit that is to say: (c) The making of grants contributions and payments to any foundation corporate body institution association or fund now existing or hereafter coming into existence within the special period hereinafter defined having for its object the bringing of the masterpieces of fine art within the reach of the people of Ireland of all classes in their own country provided that no such foundation corporate body institution association or fund shall be eligible as an object of this trust if (i) It is not of a public character or (ii) In the case of a foundation corporate body institution or association it is at liberty to pay or distribute any profits to or among any of its members subscribers contributors or benefactors or the fund or any part thereof or any income therefrom may be so paid or applied or (iii) Any of the members subscribers contributors or benefactors would have any right to participate in the assets or in the fund in the event of its dissolution or distribution.

(d) The teaching promotion and encouragement in Ireland of self control elocution oratory deportment the arts of personal contact of social intercourse and the other arts of public private professional and business life. (e) The establishment and endowment within the special period either solely or jointly with any person or persons or any other corporation of any educational institution or any chair or readership in any university college or educational institution now existing or coming into existence within the special period in Ireland for the purpose of giving instruction in or promoting the study by the general public of the subjects mentioned in this cl. 19 or any of them provided that no such college or educational institution has for its sole object the exclusive or complete training in any single profession or calling."

The third and last sub-clause of cl. 19 says:

"I declare that for the purpose of this my will the expression 'masterpieces of fine art' means and includes works of the highest class in the fields of orchestral and classical music painting sculpture fine printing and literature produced or originating not in any one country exclusively but in any country in the world and by or among people in any age period or date whether ancient or modern."

By cl. 20 of the will the "special period" is defined as meaning the lives of the issue now living of his late Majesty King George V and the life of the survivor of them and twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of them.

Clause 21 reads as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything herein contained I empower the Irish bank for any of the foregoing purposes or objects in its absolute discretion to expend or lay out the capital of the ultimate trust fund or any part thereof in paying or transferring the same to the trustees or other governing body of any such foundation corporate body institution association fund educational institution (whether or not established by the Irish bank under the power in that behalf hereinbefore contained) university or college as hereinbefore mentioned either absolutely or by way of loan and if by way of loan either at such rate of interest as the Irish bank shall think fit or without charging any interest."

Clause 22 of the will places certain restrictions on the activities of the Irish bank as trustees, and prohibits the use of the fund in erecting new buildings. Finally, cl. 23 defines the expression "Ireland" wherever used in the will as denoting the existing Irish Free State and any future extension of it that may take place.

The long and short of this problem is this: Can I extract from this welter of words the intention of promoting the education of Irish men and women and children to be better citizens in the various departments of secular life, or has the verbosity of the testatrix vitiated her good intentions by including objects which are either too vague or too fanciful to be made effective? It is para. (d) of the second sub-clause of cl. 19 which gives the most difficulty. It will be remembered that it reads as follows:

"The teaching promotion and encouragement in Ireland of self control elocution oratory deportment the arts of personal contact of social intercourse and the other arts of public private professional and business life."

It was suggested in argument that the purposes which the testatrix had in mind were those of a sort of finishing school for the Irish people, and, on the whole, I think that this is the right view to take. Clause 19 of the will provides excellent material for the allocation of a somewhat pragmatical headmistress at an annual speech day or other ceremonial occurrence, with its judicious admixture of criticism of awkward manners, vulgarities of speech, and so on, and admonitions to a higher degree of self-control, improved deportment, and so on. Indeed, there is, in my judgment, nothing in cl. 19 of this will which lies outside the purely secular curriculum of an educational establishment of a somewhat pedantic and precious type. How the people of Ireland will react to such intensive treatment as the testatrix appears to envisage, I ought not to speculate, nor am I concerned to consider how far its application to them will be considered to be, or be in fact, beneficial. Education is not always successful in improving the characters and capabilities of those who are subjected to it, but such is its aim and purpose. There may be some who obtain high marks (for example) in such subjects as elocution, oratory, and deportment, and yet in the process lose something of greater value in the qualities of simplicity, spontaneity, and singleness of heart. But the court ought not to weigh the respective merits of particular educational methods. It will suffice if the purposes are genuinely educational in their aim and scope. In cl. 19 there are obviously many ways in which the trust income could be most usefully applied within the terms laid down in the clause, and it is not, in my view, admissible to test the matter by pre-supposing perverse and unreasonable methods of applying it, as, for example, the method of devoting it entirely to the teaching and encouragement of "deportment," for, after all, that word means nothing except "manners," however much its significance has been debased by its connection with the character of Mr. Turveydrop in BLEAK HOUSE, in which the word is usually printed with a capital "D".

Certain cases have been cited to me and I have obtained a good deal of assistance from them. First, there is Re De Noailles (1) in which there are some observations of EVE, J., which seem to me to be very relevant to this kind of problem. EVE, J., said (114 L.T. 1094):

"Here again I think that one must have regard to the main object of education. I know that there are a large number of purists who tell you that the only object of education is to get information, but that is a class of person who I think might be asked what is the use of information unless you turn it to some practical use. The mere stuffing of information into a boy or girl may make them very priggish, but it does not make them of much use in life, unless they know how to apply that information for the purpose of becoming useful citizens. Having regard to the course of education that is contemplated here, and remembering always that these are persons who will have to fight their way through life, and that one condition is that otherwise they will have to pay for their education without assistance, I cannot help thinking that, having regard to these points, it is abundantly necessary, in order to put the privileges of education within the grasp of those who will be educated at this institution, that there should be conferred upon those who are responsible for its management a power to see that the education is completed, and completed in the manner and at the place where it could be completed most advantageously."

My attention was then called to Re Hummeltenberg (2). That is, I think, important from the point of view that it contains certain statements of RUSSELL, J., which have recently received very clear and strong approval in the House of Lords. The headnote is:

"To be valid a charitable bequest must be for the public benefit, and the trust must be capable of being administered and controlled by the court. The opinion of the donor of a gift or the creator of a trust that the gift or trust is for the public benefit does not make it so, the matter is one to be determined by the court on the evidence before it."

The passage in RUSSELL, J.'s, judgment ([1923] 1 Ch. 242) from which that headnote is extracted deals really with two points. It says that the donor of a gift or the creator of a trust is not himself to be the judge of what is charitable or of the essential quality of being for the benefit of the public, and it further says that the private opinions of the judge who tries the case are equally irrelevant. RUSSELL, J., goes on to say, in the words quoted in the headnote, that the question whether a gift may be operative for the public benefit is to be answered by the court by forming an opinion on the evidence before it. In Re Hummeltenberg (2) there was a trust for the establishment of a college for the training of spiritualistic mediums. That was a matter on which evidence was obviously required because it was an unfamiliar subject.

There are many cases on this question of "charitable" or "non-charitable" purpose where the purpose is so obviously beneficial to the community that to call evidence on the matter would be absurd. When once it can be derived from the terms of this will that this trust is, in substance, a trust of an educational character—that is to say, in the words of EVE, J. (in Re De Noailles (1)), for completing an education which is incomplete—it seems to me that the matter speaks for itself. If I think, as I do think, that the main object of the testatrix, as expressed by her at such great length and in such great detail, is really to promote education and to improve, both for their own benefit and for the benefit of the community in which they live, the personal qualities and characteristics of Irish men and women and so train them to be better citizens in the various departments of secular life, it seems to me there is nothing in the statement of RUSSELL, J., in Re Hummeltenberg (2) which requires me to call for evidence that those purposes are beneficial to the community. I think that no such evidence could be sought from any quarter, and it is a matter on which the court, relying, I would stress, not on any personal view of the judge who decides the case, but on the general judicial knowledge of the conditions under which people live both in this country and in the Republic of Ireland, should come to a conclusion. I come to the conclusion that the trusts declared are not only educational, but are educational in the sense that they benefit the public.

Other cases were cited to me which I might mention. In Re Corelli (3) the testatrix placed the residue of her estate and effects in the hands of trustees to enclose certain land as a breathing space and air zone for the health of the town of Stratford-on-Avon. Then she made some further trusts for allowing her house to be used for the benefit of distinguished visitors from overseas. It was held that:

"although the directions for the establishment of an air zone and for the promotion of science, literature and music might have constituted a valid charitable bequest, the dominant motive of the testatrix was to be found in the trust for the establishment of a hotel for the entertainment of distinguished visitors from far countries, and that that trust was void for remoteness."

Here, as distinct from that case, I find that the dominant, and, indeed, the exclusive, intention of the testatrix was the betterment of those who required education by giving them facilities of education in the various directions and for the various purposes which she indicated in her will, and I think there is not in the will of this testatrix any such offensive or extraneous or non-charitable purpose as would vitiate the whole of the gift. I mention in passing, without further allusion to it, as it was cited to me, Re Price (4).

I gain some assistance from Royal Choral Society v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (5), because there LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1943] 2 All E.R. 104):

"Dealing with the educational aspect from the point of view of the public who hear music, the Solicitor-General argued that nothing could be educational which did not involve teaching—as I understood him, teaching in the sense of a master teaching a class. He said that in the domain of art the only thing that could be educational in a charitable sense would be the education of the executants: the teaching of the painter, the training of the musician, and so forth. I protest against that narrow conception of education when one is dealing with aesthetic education. Very few people can become executants, or at any rate executants who can give pleasure either to themselves or to others; but a very large number of people can become instructed listeners with a trained and cultivated taste. In my opinion, a body of persons established for the purpose of raising the artistic taste of the country and established by an appropriate document which confines them to that purpose, is established for educational purposes, because the education of artistic taste is one of the most important things in the development of a civilised human being."

That case has a direct reference to the first of the objects which are indicated by the testatrix—the bringing of the masterpieces of fine art within the reach of the Irish people, "masterpieces of fine art" being defined as "works of the highest class in the fields of orchestral and classical music painting sculpture," and so forth. Although I do not think anyone could question that that part of the gift was charitable in itself, regard being had to the case to which I have just alluded, I feel it is important in throwing some light and colour on the other part of the trust as showing the aesthetic education which is properly to be regarded as a branch of education, and that the whole scheme of the will, the improvement of the mind of those subjected to that influence, is educational in the best sense.

In addition to those cases, I was referred to certain observations of SIMONDS, J., in Re Central Employment Bureau for Women & Students' Careers Assn. [Incorporated] (6), where he said ([1942] 1 All E.R. 233):

"It is clear that, so far as it is educational, it is a good charity, because I cannot distinguish between a gift for the advancement of education in general terms and a gift for the purpose of educating individuals in such manner as will be most conducive to their earning their living, as, for instance, if this had been a gift for apprenticeships."

The kind of education which is envisaged by the testatrix in this case is that which is best conducive to the recipients earning their living and also to living a happy and contented life in the social society in which they are placed. I strongly dissent, as did the learned Master of the Rolls in Royal Choral Society v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (5) ([1943] 2 All E.R. 105), from the statement that the only education worth having is the education given by a master or mistress in class. I think "education" includes in the terms of that sub-clause to which I have already alluded, not only teaching, but also the promotion or encouragement of those arts and graces of life which are, perhaps, the finest and best part of the human character. With regard to the reference to the arts of personal contact and social intercourse, and the other arts of public, private, professional and business life, I read the words "the other arts" as being properly to be taken ejusdem generis, i.e., arts of the same sort and kind as the arts and graces of personal contact and of social intercourse—in other words, teaching people how to behave better. Whatever my own personal views about this type of education may be, they have nothing to do with the case. It may be, I think, that it is a rather superficial, top-heavy, or unbalanced kind of education, but it is education of a kind which is desirable, and an education which, if corrected, augmented, and amplified by other kinds of teaching and instruction, might have most beneficial results. I think that the testatrix—possibly by rather a narrow margin—has kept herself within the necessary limits. I think that, if she had said rather less, it would have been easier to discover her meaning, but I am prepared to declare that the trusts in question are valid charitable trusts.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Lawrence, Graham & Co. (for the plaintiffs and the third defendant); Young, Jackson, Beard & King (for the first defendant); J. N. Mason & Co. (for the second defendant); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BENN v. KAMM & CO., LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Parker, J.), December 6, 7, 1951.]

Factory—Dangerous machinery—Duty to fence—Compliance with regulation, but not with Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 14 (1)—Horizontal Milling Machines Regulations, 1928 (S.R. & O., 1928, No. 548), reg. 3.

A workman was injured while adjusting a stop on a horizontal milling machine. The part of the machine where the stop worked was found to be a "dangerous part" which was not "securely fenced" in accordance with the requirements of s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, but the machine complied with the requirements as to fencing of the Horizontal Milling Machines Regulations, 1928, reg. 3, which were deemed to be made under s. 60 (1) of the Act.

HELD: the regulations were in substitution for the provisions relating to fencing in s. 14 (1) of the Act of 1937 and contained the sole obligation with regard to fencing of the employers, who were, therefore, not liable for any breach of statutory duty.

AS TO ABSOLUTE DUTY TO FENCE DANGEROUS MACHINERY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, p. 594, para. 1130, and 1951 Supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 24, pp. 908-910, Nos. 65-76, and Digest Supps.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Miller v. Boothman (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 333; [1944] K.B. 337; 113 L.J.K.B. 206; 170 L.T. 187; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 485; [1945] K.B. 50; affd. H.L., [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Franklin v. Gramophone Co., Ltd., [1948] 1 All E.R. 353; [1948] 1 K.B. 542; [1948] L.J.R. 870; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION for damages for negligence and breach of statutory duty.

The plaintiff was an employee of the defendants, working at their factory at Powell Street, London, E.C.1. While he was adjusting a stop on the side of a horizontal milling machine in the factory his left index finger was caught in the machine and injured. He submitted inter alia that the defendants were in breach of their duty under s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, to provide proper fencing of a dangerous part of the machine. The defendants contended that their sole statutory obligation to fence was not under s. 14 (1) of the Act of 1937, but was under reg. 3 of the Horizontal Milling Machines Regulations, 1928, relating to fencing such machines, with which they had complied, such regulations being deemed to be made under s. 60 (1) of the Act of 1937, and being, they submitted, in substitution for the provision relating to fencing in s. 14 (1).

F. Donald McIntyre for the plaintiff.

Marven Everett for the defendants.

PARKER, J., stated the facts, found that the place where the stop came in front of the base of the pedestal of the machine was a dangerous part of the machine which was not fenced and that a form of guard to protect the operator against accident from it was practicable, and continued: But it is said on behalf of the defendants that s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, does not apply because of the provisions of the Horizontal Milling Machines Regulations, 1928, made by the Secretary of State under s. 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and now deemed to have been made under s. 60 (1) of the Act of 1937. This machine is a horizontal milling machine to which those regulations apply. With regard to fencing reg. 3 provides:

"(i) The cutter or cutters of every horizontal milling machine shall be fenced by a strong guard, properly adjusted to the work, which shall enclose the whole cutting surface except such part as is necessarily exposed for the milling operations."

The regulation then specifies what the guard shall consist of. The regulations provide that nothing in reg. 3 shall apply to eight "exemptions,"

"Provided that these exemptions shall not prejudice the application of s. 10 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in regard to fencing of such machinery."

For that section of the Act of 1901 one now reads s. 14 of the Act of 1937. Though not very happily worded it seems to me that that proviso is saying in effect that, as regards those exemptions, the ordinary liabilities and obligations under s. 14 (1) of the Act remain in force. The argument, however, is that, there being now a special code dealing with, inter alia, the fencing of horizontal milling machines, the employer has no obligations except under that code, and none under s. 14 (1) except in regard to the exemptions. I certainly would not accept this point unless I was driven to it. To take an extreme case, a machine may have ten dangerous parts and the regulations may deal with only one of them. If, then, a workman is injured through one of the others, it seems at first glance an extraordinary proposition that, because the regulations have said that dangerous part A shall be guarded in a particular way, there is no obligation to guard dangerous parts B, C, D and E. But one has to look at the principle to be applied. Is the true view in such cases that the regulations are in substitution for the obligations under the Act in respect of the particular subject-matter involved, e.g., fencing, or do they only modify the obligations under the Act, leaving them in force in so far as they are not modified?

The matter is, in my mind, almost concluded by authority, by Miller v. William Boothman & Sons, Ltd. (1), Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (2) and Franklin v. Gramophone Co., Ltd. (3). Those cases were dealing with other regulations, but from the judgments it seems to me the principle is clear. There are passages in Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (2), which seem to me to be almost conclusive on this matter. STABLE, J., had held in effect that the particular code there was not a substitution for the obligations under the Act but a mere modification. MACKINNON, L.J., says ([1944] 2 All E.R. 488):

"It seems to me clear, so far as the statement of claim in this case alleges breaches of the statutory duty imposed by the Act of 1937, it being admitted that the defendants fully complied with the requirements of the regulations of 1922, any attempt to say that there was any surviving or additional duty upon them by s. 14 is erroneous and is not justified having regard to that decision of this court."

That was a reference to Miller v. William Boothman & Sons, Ltd. (1). LAWRENCE, L.J., says (ibid., 489):

"I am of the same opinion. On the question of common law negligence, it seems to me that in addition to the fact that there was no evidence of any previous accident and no evidence of any previous complaint and no finding by the judge that there was common law negligence, one must also have regard to the fact that the Secretary of State has made, in the regulations to which my Lord has alluded, most specific provisions as to the protection which could be given to this saw and has made no regulations under the last paragraph of s. 14 requiring the fencing of materials or articles which are dangerous while in motion in the machine. In those circumstances, I cannot think that any reasonable user of such a machine as this could have thought that he was under any further obligation to fence the machine."

In the last case of Franklin v. Gramophone Co., Ltd. (3), the injured man was injured as a result of a matter which fell within the exemptions. It was a case, not of fencing, but under s. 47 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937. There was an exemption provision saying that the regulations should not apply in certain cases, but no words were added, as in this case, that in respect of the exemptions the statutory duty under the Act was in full force. The Court of Appeal held that even as regards an injury caused by one of the matters in the exemptions there was no claim under s. 47 (1). That, it seems to me, could only be on the basis that the regulations were a self-contained code which was in complete substitution for the corresponding obligations under the Act.

In these circumstances I reluctantly feel bound to hold that the defendants' obligation in this case in regard to fencing is the obligation laid down in reg. 3 of the Horizontal Milling Machine Regulations, 1928, and that they were under no other obligation in relation to fencing. No complaint is made that they have failed to comply with reg. 3, and, accordingly, any claim in respect of failure to fence must fail.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Bryan O'Connor & Co. (for the plaintiff); Stanley & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

R. v. BURROWS.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Barry, JJ.), December 11, 1951.]

Criminal Law—Gross indecency—Boy told to commit indecent act—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 11.

APPEAL against conviction and sentence.

The appellant was convicted at Ipswich Quarter Sessions of indecent assault on a boy of fourteen and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment. Evidence was given that the appellant exposed himself to the boy and told the boy to handle his, the appellant's, person.

Cases referred to:

(1) Fairclough v. Whipp, [1951] 2 All E.R. 834; 115 J.P. 612.

(2) R. v. Pearce, [1951] 1 All E.R. 493; 115 J.P. 157.

W. H. Hughes for the appellant.

Jellinek for the Crown.

THE COURT held that, in the absence of a hostile act against the boy, the appellant should not have been convicted of indecent assault: Fairclough v. Whipp (1) followed, but that, in the circumstances, the proper charge was one of committing an act of gross indecency.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant); Gotelee & Goldsmith, Ipswich (for the Crown).

J.D.P.

STROMDALE AND BALL, LTD. v. BURDEN.

CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), November 5, 6, 26, 29, 1951.]

Sale of Land—Option to purchase leasehold reversion expectant on term of years granted by tenancy agreement—“Agreement respecting land”—“Interest in land”—Option contained in deed of licence to assign term and exercisable only by assignee—Assignee not party to deed—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 56 (1).

Deed—Execution—Sealing.

Specific Performance—Option to purchase land.

The defendant was the tenant of a house the ground floor of which she had let to D. and R. by a tenancy agreement, dated Oct. 25, 1946, for a term of three years. By a deed, dated Mar. 16, 1948, made between the defendant, of the first part, D. and R., of the second part, and the directors of the plaintiff company, as sureties, of the third part, the defendant granted to D. and R. licence to assign all their estate and interest under the tenancy agreement to the plaintiff company. By cl. 4 of the deed the defendant granted an option to the plaintiff company to purchase her leasehold interest in the whole house at the price of £1,250, on giving fourteen days' notice to the defendant at any time during the term granted by the agreement. On Aug. 19, 1948, the plaintiff company gave notice in writing to the defendant of its intention to exercise the option, but the defendant refused to proceed in the matter. In an action by the company for specific performance, HELD: (i) an option to purchase land was an “agreement . . . respecting land” within the meaning of s. 56 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925; as the object of cl. 4 of the deed of Mar. 16, 1948, was to enable the plaintiff company to purchase the defendant's leasehold interest in the house in question, the option contained in the clause gave to the company an “interest in land,” within the meaning of s. 56 (1); and, therefore, the sub-section enabled the company to enforce the option notwithstanding the fact that the company was not a party to the deed.

Dictum of SIMONDS, J., in White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd. ([1937] 3 All E.R. 277) and of SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., ibid. ([1938] 1 All E.R. 554), applied.

(ii) the option contained in cl. 4 was an offer made to the plaintiff company and was intended to be communicated to the company, and, as the company had accepted the offer by the notice of Aug. 19, 1948, there was a complete contract which the company was entitled to enforce by action.

Per DANCKWERTS, J.: Time was when the placing of the party's seal was the essence of due execution. Signature was not, indeed, necessary to make a deed valid: see NORTON ON DEEDS, 2nd ed., p. 7. But with the spread of education, the signature became of importance for the authentication of documents and since 1925 it has become essential by reason of the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 73 (1). Meticulous persons executing a deed may still place their finger on the wax seal or wafer on the document, but it appears to me that at the present day if a party signs a document bearing wax or wafer or other indication of a seal, with the intention of executing the document as a deed, that is sufficient adoption or recognition of the seal to amount to due execution as a deed.

AS TO PROCEEDINGS FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE BY STRANGER TO CONTRACT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 417-419, paras. 497, 499; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 543-547, Nos. 1035-1073.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Howatson v. Webb, [1907] 1 Ch. 537; affd. C.A., [1908] 1 Ch. 1; 77 L.J.Ch. 32; 97 L.T. 730; 35 Digest 632, 3646.

- (2) Tamplin v. James, (1880), 15 Ch.D. 215; 43 L.T. 520; 35 Digest 101, 84.
- (3) Re Sandilands, (1871), L.R. 6 C.P. 411; sub nom. Re Mayer, 40 L.J.C.P. 201; 24 L.T. 273; 17 Digest 202, 132.
- (4) Re Smith, (1892), 67 L.T. 64; 17 Digest 203, 135.
- (5) Re Miller's Agreement, [1947] 2 All E.R. 78; [1947] Ch. 615; [1948] L.J.R. 567; 177 L.T. 129; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Chelsea & Waltham Green Building Society v. Armstrong, [1951] 2 All E.R. 250; [1951] Ch. 853.
- (7) Forster v. Elvet Colliery Co., Ltd., Quinn v. Same, Seed v. Same, Morgan v. Same, [1908] 1 K.B. 629; affd. H.L. sub nom. Dyson v. Forster, Dyson v. Seed, Quinn, Morgan, etc., [1909] A.C. 98; 78 L.J.K.B. 246; 99 L.T. 942; 34 Digest 686, 799.
- (8) Grant v. Edmondson, [1931] 1 Ch. 1; 100 L.J.Ch. 1; 143 L.T. 749; Digest Supp.
- (9) Woodall v. Clifton, [1905] 2 Ch. 257; 74 L.J.Ch. 555; 93 L.T. 257; 30 Digest, Replacement, 495, 1395.
- (10) Sherwood v. Tucker, [1924] 2 Ch. 440; 94 L.J.Ch. 66; 132 L.T. 86; 30 Digest, Replacement, 495, 1399.
- (11) Re Adams & Kensington Vestry, (1884), 27 Ch.D. 394; 54 L.J.Ch. 87; 51 L.T. 382; 20 Digest 357, 961.
- (12) Friary, Holroyd & Healey's Breweries, Ltd. v. Singleton, [1899] 1 Ch. 86; reversed on the facts, [1899] 2 Ch. 261; 68 L.J.Ch. 622; 81 L.T. 101; 21 Digest 395, 1571.
- (13) London & South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882), 20 Ch.D. 562; 51 L.J.Ch. 530; 46 L.T. 449; 11 Digest 286, 2141.
- (14) White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd., [1937] 3 All E.R. 269; affd. C.A., [1938] 1 All E.R. 546; [1938] Ch. 351; 107 L.J.Ch. 212; 158 L.T. 338; Digest Supp.
- (15) Re Foster, [1938] 3 All E.R. 357; 159 L.T. 279; Digest Supp.
- (16) Reynolds v. Atherton, (1922), 127 L.T. 189; 12 Digest, Replacement, 69, 389.

ACTION for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of leasehold premises contained in an option to purchase leasehold premises in a deed of licence, dated Mar. 16, 1948, and a notice, dated Aug. 19, 1948.

In 1946 the defendant was the tenant of premises known as No. 40, Romford Road, Stratford, under an underlease, dated Mar. 25, 1895, for a term of ninety-nine years (less one day) from Sept. 29, 1892, at a rent of £12 per annum. The underlease contained full repairing covenants. There was no restriction on assignment, but the lessee was required to register any assignment, underlease, or other assurance, with the landlords, and to pay a registration fee of £1 1s. In 1946 the defendant, who had been carrying on a café business on the ground floor of the premises, sold the goodwill of the business to William Dennison and William John Rosengrave, and on Oct. 25, 1946, by an agreement in writing, she granted them a tenancy of the ground floor for the term of three years from Oct. 25, 1946, at a weekly rent of £2 inclusive of rates. The tenancy agreement conferred on the tenants an option, exercisable by notice in writing at any time before the expiration of the term thereby granted, to take a full repairing lease of the same premises for a further term of seven years. Clause 5 purported to give to the tenant, William Dennison, the right to have the first chance of purchasing the fee simple of the demised premises (i.e., the ground floor) for the sum of £1,250, if he gave written notice to the defendant during the term granted by the agreement or during the term created by the lease. On Feb. 4, 1948, the tenants' solicitors wrote to the defendant's solicitors saying that they proposed to sell the business to the plaintiff company and asking for a licence to assign to the company the term granted by the agreement of Oct. 25, 1946. The defendant's solicitors replied that the directors of the company would be required to guarantee the rent, and a deed of licence was agreed and engrossed and was executed (according to the statements appearing on it) on Mar. 16, 1948. This document was made between the defendant (the landlord), of the first part, Dennison and Rosengrave (the tenants), of the second part, and Charles William Stromdale and Stanley Ball, directors of the plaintiff company ("the sureties"), of the third part. The document recited the agreement of Oct. 25, 1946, and that the tenants desired to assign all their estate and interest in the demised premises to the plaintiff company, and it then contained (i) a licence to assign by the defendant, (ii) a joint and several covenant by the directors guaranteeing payment of the rent so long as the term granted by the agreement should be vested in the company, and (iii) a restriction limiting the licence to the single occasion in question. By cl. 4 the following provision was substituted for cl. 5 of the tenancy agreement:

"If during the continuance of the agreement the company shall be desirous of purchasing the unexpired residue of the term of years in the premises granted by the lease dated Mar. 25, 1895 . . . (hereinafter called 'the lease') subject to the payment of the rent thereby reserved and the lessee's covenants therein contained at the price of £1,250 and shall at any time during the term granted by the agreement give to the landlord fourteen days' notice in writing of such desire the landlord hereby covenants that she will at the expiration of such notice and upon the payment of the said sum of £1,250 together with all rent reserved by the agreement up to the actual date of completion assign all her interest in the residue of the term granted by the lease unto the company."

On Mar. 19, 1948, the defendant granted to her nephew a lease of the two upper floors of the premises for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rent of £125 and took a lease from him of the first floor for a term of fourteen years at an annual rent of £52. By a document, dated June 9, 1948, in consideration of £2,250 paid by the company, the tenants, Dennison and Rosengrave, assigned to the company (i) all the property comprised in the agreement of Oct. 25, 1946, and (ii) all the goodwill of the café business. The document contained no express reference to the option or to the benefit of the covenants on the landlord's part, the habendum being:

"unto the company for all the residue of the term created by the said agreement subject to the rents thereby secured and the tenants' covenants and conditions therein contained and as to all other premises hereby assigned unto the company absolutely."

On June 25, 1948, the deed of Mar. 16, 1948, was registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, as an "estate contract." On Aug. 19, 1948, the plaintiff company's solicitors gave notice in writing of the company's intention to exercise the option conferred by the deed of licence of Mar. 16, 1948, to acquire the defendant's leasehold interest in the house. The defendant refused to proceed in the matter, and on Dec. 16, 1949, the company began an action for specific performance. The defendant contended inter alia (a) that she did not know that the deed of licence contained an option to the company to purchase her leasehold property, (b) that the document of Mar. 16, 1948, was not effectively executed as a deed, as she never sealed it, (c) that the plaintiff company was not in a position to exercise the option as it was not a party to the document of Mar. 16, 1948, and (d) that an order for specific performance should be refused on the ground of hardship, and she counterclaimed for possession of the ground floor as the term of three years under the agreement of Oct. 25, 1946, had expired.

J. A. Brightman for the plaintiff company.

A. L. Bray for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 29. DANCKWERTS, J., read a judgment in which he stated the facts and continued: The main defence involving questions of fact is an allegation that, if the defendant executed the deed of licence, she did so believing that she was only signing a licence to assign and that she never knew that the document contained an option to the company to purchase her leasehold property. This mistake is attributed, in the alternative, to all the parties to the deed of licence and to the defendant alone. Evidence of any mutual mistake by the parties is entirely absent. The defence really is, therefore, based on a mistake by the defendant. There is no doubt that the defendant knew that the document was one which dealt with her property, and, therefore, it would appear that, even if there was contained in it a provision of which she was unaware or which she did not understand, the facts are insufficient to support a defence of non est factum, and it is not a mistake for which the plaintiff company can be made to accept responsibility: see Howatson v. Webb (1) and Tamplin v. James (2) per BAGGALLAY, L.J. (15 Ch.D. 217). However, it is not necessary to decide this question on any legal rule or principle if I am not satisfied that there was any lack of knowledge of the insertion of the option on the defendant's part. [His LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence on this point and came to the conclusion of fact that when the defendant signed the deed of licence she knew and appreciated that the deed contained a clause containing an option to purchase her leasehold interest in No. 40, Romford Road. He continued:]

Another point is taken which also depends on the defendant's evidence. It is said that, as she merely signed the document called "deed of licence" and never did any act amounting to sealing, it was not effectively executed as a deed. I was referred by counsel for the defendant to NORTON ON DEEDS, 2nd ed., pp. 7, 8, where the formalities required for the execution of deeds are discussed, and it is said there (at p. 8), quoting MONTAGUE SMITH, J. (L.R. 6 C.P. 413) in Re Sandilands (3), that "... some act must be done 'with the intention of sealing'." Reliance was also placed on Re Smith (4), in which the document intended to be a bond bore the words "sealed with my seal" and was stated in the attestation clause to have been "signed, sealed, and delivered," but there was no mark, wafer, or seal visible on the face of the document. It was held in that case that the document could not be treated as having been sealed. In the present case the defendant's evidence is very vague as to whether the wafer seal was on the document when she signed it, and I think it is unlikely that the wafer seal had not been placed on it before she was asked by the solicitors' clerk to sign. If it was there when she signed, it seems to me that the document was effectively executed as a deed. Time was when the placing of the party's seal was the essence of due execution. Signature was not, indeed, necessary to make a deed valid: see NORTON ON DEEDS, 2nd ed., p. 7. But with the spread of education the signature became of importance for the authentication of documents and since 1925 it has become essential by reason of the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 73 (1). Meticulous persons executing a deed may still place their finger on the wax seal or wafer on the document, but it appears to me that at the present day if a party signs a document bearing wax or wafer or other indication of a seal with the intention of executing the document as a deed, that is sufficient adoption or recognition of the seal to amount to due execution as a deed. Further, in the present case there is no doubt that, when the document was sent by the defendant's solicitors to the solicitors of the plaintiff company, it bore the description: "deed of licence," and also stated: "This deed witnesseth . . ." It stated that the parties to it had thereunto "set their hands and seals," it bore a red wafer seal opposite the defendant's signature, and it was attested by her solicitors' clerk, who stated that it was signed, sealed and delivered by the defendant. I am unable to see how the defendant can now be allowed to say that she did not seal the document and execute it as a deed. It seems to me the clearest case of estoppel possible.

The next point which is taken for the defence involves some legal questions of difficulty or, at any rate, obscurity. It is pointed out that the plaintiff company were not a party to the deed of licence, though the option of purchase thereby conferred was to be exercised by the plaintiff company and by no one else. It is argued, therefore, that the deed of licence and the option are res inter alios acta and the plaintiff company is not in a position to enforce the option in an action: see Re Miller's Agreement (5). In Chelsea & Walham Green Building Society v. Armstrong (6) the building society were held by VAISEY, J., to be entitled to enforce a covenant contained in a registered transfer to which the society was not a party, because the registered transfer, though a deed, was not a deed inter partes. In the present case, it is clear that the deed of licence is a deed inter partes.

Section 56 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, was referred to in Armstrong's case (6), but was not dealt with by VAISEY, J. Section 56 replaces s. 5 of the Real Property Act, 1845, and s. 56 (1) provides:

"A person may take an immediate or other interest in land or other property, or the benefit of any condition, right of entry, covenant or agreement over or respecting land or other property, although he may not be named as a party to the conveyance or other instrument."

The true effect of this sub-section, and of s. 5 of the Real Property Act, 1845, which it replaces, has not yet been fully elucidated, and counsel for the defendant argued that it would not assist the plaintiff company in the present case for the following reasons. He says, first, that the authorities show that this section applies only to covenants "which run with the land," and he referred to Forster v. Elvet Colliery Co., Ltd. (7). In that case, the owners of surface lands were held entitled, by virtue of the Real Property Act, 1845, s. 5, to enforce a covenant to pay compensation for damage caused by working coal mines, though they were not parties to the lease containing the covenant. The Court of Appeal thought that s. 5 of the Act of 1845 applied only to covenants that ran with the land. But on appeal, sub nom. Dyson v. Forster (7), though the decision of the Court of Appeal was affirmed by the House of Lords, LORD MACNAGHTEN, who was the only one of the Lords who stated reasons, said ([1909] A.C. 102):

"Whether the section must be confined to covenants running with the land may perhaps be doubted."

In Grant v. Edmondson (8) it was held by the Court of Appeal that the benefit of a covenant to pay a rentcharge did not run with the rentcharge at law, and the Court of Appeal expressed the view that s. 5 of the Real Property Act, 1845, and s. 56 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, did not affect the question, as those sections applied only to covenants which ran with the land or the property. Counsel for the defendant then relied on Woodall v. Clifton (9) and Sherwood v. Tucker (10), which establish that a covenant or proviso conferring on a lessee the right to purchase the freehold reversion is not a provision which directly affects or concerns the land, regarded as the subject-matter of the lease, and, consequently, such a covenant does not run with the leasehold interest in the land so as to bind heirs or assigns under the provisions of the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34. Accordingly, counsel for the defendant argues that the provision conferring the option in the present case is not one which runs with the land and the provisions of s. 56 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, do not assist the plaintiff company.

Re Adams & Kensington Vestry (11) and Friary, Holroyd & Healey's Breweries, Ltd. v. Singleton (12), on which counsel for the plaintiff company relied to dispose of this argument, do not really assist him, because it appears that the question of covenants running with the land, as discussed in Woodall v. Clifton (9), was not considered in these cases, which, in any event, were before the decision of the Court of Appeal in Woodall v. Clifton (9). Counsel for the plaintiff company was, however, correct in pointing out that in Woodall v. Clifton (9) the action was an attempt to enforce the option to purchase the freehold reversion against assigns of the reversion, whereas in the present case the defendant is the actual person who gave the option. Counsel for the plaintiff company admitted that there is no assignment expressly to the company of the benefit of the option in the assignment of June 9, 1948, but he said that the benefit of the option would pass automatically with the assignment of the term. In support of this he pointed out that the option was provided in substitution for the provisions of cl. 5 of the original tenancy agreement. I am not satisfied, however, that these considerations are sufficient to get over the difficulties of the plaintiff company. But counsel for the plaintiff company relies on s. 56 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, in a way which is somewhat different from that in which the sub-section has been considered by me so far. He referred me to London & South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm (13) as an authority showing that an option to purchase in equity creates an interest in land. SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., said (20 Ch.D. 581):

"The right to call for a conveyance of the land is an equitable interest or equitable estate. In the ordinary case of a contract for purchase there is no doubt about this, and an option for re-purchase is not different in its nature. A person exercising the option has to do two things, he has to give notice of his intention to purchase, and to pay the purchase-money; but as far as the man who is liable to convey is concerned, his estate or interest is taken away from him without his consent, and the right to take it away being vested in another, the covenant giving the option must give that other an interest in the land."

It should be added that in the present case there is no difficulty under the rule against perpetuities, as there was in Gomm's case (13). Counsel for the plaintiff company argues from the decision in Gomm's case (13) that s. 56 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, enables the plaintiff company to take such an interest in land as is created by an option to purchase, though it is not a party to the document conferring the option. In support of this argument, he referred me to certain decisions in which the provisions of the sub-section were considered.

In White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd. (14), which was concerned with covenants restricting the use of land, SIMONDS, J., referring to s. 5 of the Real Property Act, 1845, after saying that the section had a limited operation, said ([1937] 3 All E.R. 276):

"It is intended to confer a benefit only upon those persons . . . with whom there purports to be a covenant or agreement."

He went on to say that s. 5 did not create a benefit in favour of any persons who might like to avail themselves of it. In regard to s. 56 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, SIMONDS, J., said (ibid., 277):

"It appears to one at once that, so far as any other interest in land is concerned [i.e., any interest other than an immediate interest], the section is superfluous, because a person always could take another interest in land, though not a party. It is at least a question how far such a provision is necessary at all in the case of personalty. Without deciding it, I should be disposed to think that equitable estates, even in land, were not subject to the old artificial rule, and it is very doubtful if an interest in personalty was ever so subject. However that may be, for the purposes of the present case I think I am concerned with only one aspect of this question. Just as, under s. 5 of the Act of 1845, only that person could call it in aid who, although not a party, yet was a grantee or covenantee, so, under s. 56 of this Act, only that person can call it in aid who, although not named as a party to the conveyance or other instrument, is yet a person to whom that conveyance or other instrument purports to grant something, or by which some agreement or covenant is purported to be in his favour."

In the same case in the Court of Appeal SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., said ([1938] 1 All E.R. 554):

“ . . . whatever else s. 56 (1) may mean, it is, I think, confined to cases where the person seeking to take advantage of it is a person within the benefit of the covenant in question, if I may use that phrase.”

It seems to me that those statements of the limited effect of s. 56 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, do, none the less, exactly cover the situation of the plaintiff company in the present case. I have not overlooked Re Foster (15), in which CROSSMAN, J. ([1938] 3 All E.R. 365) expressly declined to treat s. 56 (1) as creating “such an enormous change” in the law as to enable an agreement by A with B to pay money to C to be enforced by C. But it seems to me that in the present case the intention of cl. 4 of the deed of licence is to enable the person therein named, the plaintiff company, and no one else, to obtain the leasehold interest of the defendant in No. 40, Romford Road. In the language of SIMONDS, J., in White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd. (14) ([1937] 3 All E.R. 277), the plaintiff company is a person to whom the “ . . . instrument purports to grant something, or by which some agreement or covenant is purported to be in his favour.”

Section 56 (1) says:

“ A person may take an immediate or other interest in land . . . or the benefit of any . . . covenant or agreement over or respecting land . . . although he may not be named as a party to the . . . instrument.”

It is difficult to see what the intention of cl. 4 of the deed of licence was if it was not to confer on the plaintiff company an interest in No. 40, Romford Road, and to give to the plaintiff company the benefit of the covenant or agreement conferring an option to acquire the defendant's leasehold interest. The question decided in Woodall v. Clifton (9), namely, whether an option to acquire the reversion in fee simple on a leasehold term ran with the leasehold term in the hands of an assignee of the term so as to make the liability to perform the covenant run with the reversion, seems to me to be a different matter. In the present case, for the purposes of s. 56 (1), the “land” is No. 40, Romford Road and an option to purchase a leasehold interest in that land seems to me to create an interest in it and to be an agreement respecting it, and so to be within the precise words of the sub-section. I do not understand why the words “agreement . . . respecting land” should not be given their plain meaning. An option to purchase land is an agreement respecting land. Accordingly, I reach the conclusion that the provisions of s. 56 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, enable the plaintiff company to enforce the option in the present case.

Counsel for the plaintiff company, however, also rested his case on another argument which seems to me to be attractive. He said, and, as it seems to me, correctly, that an option is no more than an offer, which, if given for consideration or contained in a deed, may be irrevocable, but in any case remains open for acceptance until it is revoked. It is plain that the defendant never had taken any steps to revoke the offer contained in the option in the present case before it was accepted by the plaintiff company on Aug. 19, 1948 (even assuming, of course, that any such revocation was open to her). An offer must, of course, be accepted by the person to whom the offer is made and not by any other person: see Reynolds v. Atherton (16), a decision of the House of Lords. It is quite clear that the offer in the present case was made to the plaintiff company and was intended to be communicated to the plaintiff company, and it was accepted by the plaintiff company. There is, therefore, a complete contract which the plaintiff company is entitled to enforce by action.

Counsel for the defendant argued that an order for specific performance should be refused on the ground of the hardship which would be caused to the defendant by compelling her to perform a contract which he claimed was financially disadvantageous to her. He submitted that the plaintiff company had obtained an unexpectedly favourable bargain because, under the substituted option, they were able to compel the defendant to sell for £1,250 her leasehold interest in the whole of No. 40, Romford Road, whereas under the original tenancy agreement Dennison, under the right of first refusal, would acquire the fee simple in the ground floor only at the same price of £1,250. The value of property is what it will fetch, and many considerations may affect the price named. In comparing a purchase of the fee simple in the ground floor with a leasehold interest in the whole property, it seemed to me that too little attention had been paid to the condition of the property and the onerous repairing covenants contained in the underlease under which the defendant was the tenant. Moreover, the paragraphs in FRY ON SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 6th ed., ch. VII, on which counsel for the defendant relied, do not bear out the interpretation which he sought to put on them. In particular, in para. 446 the impossibility of making the adequacy of the consideration (in the absence of fraud) the test of enforceability of a contract is pointed out. In the view which I take, the defendant entered into a business arrangement giving to the plaintiff company an option to acquire her leasehold interest in No. 40, Romford Road, with a knowledge of what she was doing, and I see no reason why she should not be compelled to carry out her obligations. There will, therefore, be an order for specific performance.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: Gustavus Thompson & Sons, agents for Herrington & Carmichael, Aldershot (for the plaintiff company); Scott, Bell & Co. (for the defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. HALL.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Barry, JJ.), December 10, 1951.]

Criminal Law—Separate trials—Eight counts alleging gross indecency with three men—Evidence on all counts admissible on each count.

The appellant was convicted on an indictment containing eight counts charging him with committing acts of gross indecency with three men. An application for the separate trial of each group of counts relating to one of the men was refused on the ground that all the witnesses to be called on all the counts could have been called on any one count. In his defence the appellant stated, in respect of two of the men, that when he did the acts complained of he was giving them medical treatment, and, in the case of the third man, that there had been a mistake in identity.

HELD: (i) as soon as it became clear that the defence of the appellant was that the acts alleged against him had an innocent and not a guilty complexion, or that he relied on mistake or accident as a defence, the prosecution could call evidence of similar acts, and such evidence was not inadmissible because it tended to show that the appellant had committed other offences, and, therefore, the evidence of each of the first two men was admissible on the counts relating to the other of those two men.

Dictum of LORD GODDARD, C.J., in R. v. Sims ([1946] 1 All E.R. 701), not followed.

(ii) in the case of the third man the evidence was admissible on the issue of identity.

Thompson v. R. ([1918] A.C. 221), applied.

(iii) therefore, the evidence of each of the men was admissible on the trial of the counts relating to the others, and the application for separate trials was rightly refused.

AS TO JOINDER OF SEVERAL OFFENCES ON ONE INDICTMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 137, 138, paras. 179, 180; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 14, pp. 226-231, Nos. 2111-2174 and Digest Supps.

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Sims, [1946] 1 All E.R. 697; [1946] K.B. 531; [1947] L.J.R. 160; 175 L.T. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Noor Mohamed v. R., [1949] 1 All E.R. 365; [1949] A.C. 182; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Thompson v. R., [1918] A.C. 221; 87 L.J.K.B. 478; 118 L.T. 418; 82 J.P. 145; 14 Digest 360, 3810.
- (4) R. v. Cole, (1941), 165 L.T. 125; 105 J.P. 279; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL against a conviction of gross indecency before LYNSEY, J., at the Central Criminal Court.

E. V. Falk for the appellant.

R. E. Seaton for the Crown.

LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivered the following judgment of the court. The appellant was convicted before LYNSEY, J., at the Central Criminal Court on an indictment containing eight counts. The charge in each count was gross indecency, three different young men being involved. Charges relating to one young man were contained in counts 1, 2, and 4; charges relating to the second young man were contained in counts 3, 5, 7, and 8; while the charge relating to the third man, one Ritchie, was in count 6. At the outset of the case an application was made to the judge asking him to order separate trials of the groups of counts relating to each young man.

That the indictment was good in form and complied with s. 3 (1) of the Indictments Act, 1915, there can be no doubt. Rule 3, which is contained in sched. I to the Act, provides:

“Charges for any offences, whether felonies or misdemeanours, may be joined in the same indictment if those charges are founded on the same facts, or form or are a part of a series of offences of the same or a similar character.”

There is no doubt in the present case that the facts on which the charges were founded were of a startlingly similar character.

That being so, it became a matter of discretion in the judge whether he would allow the charges to be tried together or whether he would order separate trials. That is a judicial discretion with the exercise of which this court has said on more than one occasion it will not interfere unless it is compelled by some overwhelming fact. If the judge, or recorder, or chairman of quarter sessions, has given a reason which is obviously a bad reason, the court may review its decision, although it is not certain that it would if it were of opinion that in all the circumstances the charges might well have been tried together though the reason given by the judge was wrong. In the present case LYNSEY, J., gave as his reason that he was of opinion that all the witnesses who were to be called on all the counts could have been called on any one of the counts. That was because the judge had seen from the conduct of the case when it was before the examining magistrate what was the nature of the defence.

The appellant, who was masquerading as a medical man, was attached to some sort of society or institution which, it was suggested, was concerned, inter alia, with the occult. Young men used to go to this institution. In the case of one young man, the moment he got there the appellant began to talk to him about homosexual matters and to behave with him in a disgusting way. Another young man alleged that as soon as he visited this society the appellant began to talk to him about homosexuality and to behave indecently. Later he invited him to his home where indecent acts took place. In the third case the appellant met a young man at Bournemouth and did exactly the same thing to him as he had done with the other two young men. When the appellant was charged he said that he had never seen this young man before.

It is said that the provisions in the Indictments Act, 1915, and the rules thereunder by which charges can be included in one indictment and tried together are always subject to the principle that, if the evidence on one count is not admissible on the other counts and is of a highly prejudicial character, the judge ought to refuse to try all the counts together and should try them one by one. Counsel for the appellant desired to challenge the ruling in R. v. Sims (1) in which this court, consisting of five judges, decided that certain counts could all be tried together. That case also was concerned with homosexual offences. In that case there were several young farm labourers with whom the prisoner, an elderly man, was alleged to have committed the offence of buggery. The court, in effect, said that it was right of the judge to try all the four cases together, because all the men, who admittedly had gone to the prisoner's house to spend the evening on different occasions, said that exactly the same advances had been made to them by the prisoner and exactly the same acts had been committed on them, which tended to show that the association of the prisoner with these men was a guilty and not an innocent one. His defence was that he used to invite these men to have a game of cards and sit with him in his cottage. The answer the prosecution made was: "Although you say A.B. came to you innocently, whereas he says you committed these filthy offences on him, exactly the same thing happened in the case of C.D., who you say came innocently, and also in the case of E.F." On those grounds the court held that the evidence was admissible. In the course of the judgment two lines of approach were suggested, and I think it should be taken, in view of a criticism by the Privy Council in Noor Mohamed v. R. (2)—criticism, be it noted, not of the decision, but of a passage in the judgment—that that judgment went too far. Giving the judgment of the court, I said ([1946] 1 All E.R. 700):

"It has often been said that the admissibility of evidence of this kind depends on the nature of the defence raised by the accused: see, for instance, the observations of LORD SUMNER in Thompson v. R. (3) ([1918] A.C. 232), and of this court in R. v. Cole (4). We think that that view is the result of a different approach to the subject. If one starts with the assumption that all evidence tending to show a disposition towards a particular crime must be excluded unless justified, then the justification of evidence of this kind is that it tends to rebut a defence otherwise open to the accused; but if one starts with the general proposition that all evidence that is logically probative is admissible unless excluded, then evidence of this kind does not have to seek a justification but is admissible irrespective of the issues raised by the defence, and this we think is the correct view."

Their Lordships in the Judicial Committee doubted the correctness of the second proposition contained in that passage, but they thought that the first proposition was correct. Therefore, this matter may be viewed on the footing: "If one starts with the assumption that all evidence tending to show a disposition towards a particular crime must be excluded unless justified, then the justification of evidence of this kind is that it tends to rebut a defence otherwise open to the accused." One objection taken in the present case is that that would be tantamount to saying that in every case where the prisoner pleads Not Guilty the evidence must be open. I do not think that is right, and LORD SUMNER in Thompson v. R. (3) said it was not. In criminal cases, with certain immaterial exceptions, the prisoner does not plead in writing. He pleads orally, and a plea of Not Guilty is a plea to the general issue. As soon as the general issue is pleaded all defences are open. It would not, therefore, be right at once in all cases to assume that a prisoner is going to set up a certain defence, but he may have shown perfectly clearly, by what he has said at the time of arrest or by the conduct of his case before the justices, the defence which he is going to raise.

It may be that some particular defence does not emerge until some cross-examination takes place in the court of trial, from which it can be seen that the prisoner is going to set up the defence of mistake or accident, or, as in the present case, innocent conduct. As soon as it becomes clear that the prisoner's defence is that the facts alleged by the prosecution have an innocent, and not a guilty, complexion, evidence may be given which otherwise might be inadmissible, and it is not the less admissible because it shows, or tends to show, that the prisoner has been guilty of another offence. That was made clear in Thompson v. R. (3).

In the present case LYNSKEY, J., pointed out to the jury that if the appellant was genuinely doing the acts in question with a view to giving medical advice, even if he was not a qualified medical man, that would be a defence, because he would not be doing them with an indecent mind and they would cease to be indecent acts. Therefore, in my opinion, this matter was dealt with in a proper way. The reasons given by LYNSKEY, J., were right and the evidence was clearly admissible. When one witness gave evidence of the suggestion made to him about medical treatment, it was material to show that the intention of the appellant was indecent and that he was doing almost the same thing in the case of another witness.

The only count which for a moment gave the court concern was that charging offences against the man whom the appellant met at Bournemouth, because there the appellant's defence was: "I had never seen this man before in my life." But there the evidence of the other men became material on the very ground on which the House of Lords upheld the admission of evidence in Thompson v. R. (3), because it went to identity. The expression "identity" means that the evidence goes to show that the witness for the prosecution is speaking the truth when he says: "That is the man who did these indecent things to me," and the evidence of the other men shows that the prisoner is a man addicted to unnatural practices. It was open to the jury to say that Ritchie was a liar, but they were surely entitled to take into account the evidence which the other two young men had given, because Ritchie told the jury that the appellant had talked to him in exactly the same way as he did to the other men. That tended to show that the appellant was the man who Ritchie said performed disgusting acts on him. I cannot see that it makes any difference that in Thompson v. R. (3) the defence was an alibi. That simply means: "I am not the man. It was somebody else who committed the offence." Whereas the appellant says, without saying that he was not there: "I have never seen the man before in my life." That was a flat denial that he was engaged in these practices and whether it was because he was not in the town or because, being in the town, he had never seen the man, seems to me not to matter in the least. He was giving the same denial to Ritchie's evidence as was given in Thompson v. R. (3), and the House of Lords held that the evidence was admissible on the grounds which I have indicated.

In future it would be desirable that a court which has to deal with a case of this kind should remember that the criticism which was passed on R. v. Sims (1) was passed on one passage only in a long judgment, and remember that no court has yet thrown any doubt on this passage in that case, which, I think, sums up the matter ([1946] 1 All E.R. 701):

"In this case the matter can be put in another and very simple way; the visits of the men to the prisoner's house were either for a guilty or innocent purpose; that they all speak to the commission of the same class of acts upon them tends to show that in each case the visits were for the former and not the latter purpose. The same considerations would apply to a case where a man is charged with a series of indecent offences against children, whether boys or girls; that they all complain of the same sort of conduct shows that the interest the prisoner was taking in them was not of a paternal or friendly nature but for the purpose of satisfying lust."

For the words "paternal or friendly nature" one could put "a medical nature."
Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Pollard, Stallabrass & George Martin (for the appellant); Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SHELLEY v. SHELLEY.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Pearce, J.), November 16, 23, 1951; (Lord Merriman, P.), November 30, 1951.]

Infant—Maintenance—Order of High Court—Enforcement—Summons by wife as infant's next friend—Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I., 1950, No. 1940), r. 64 (1).

Where a maintenance order directing payment by the husband to the children of the marriage is not complied with, a judgment summons under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, will not be issued in the name of the wife since she administers the money merely as agent for the children and on their behalf and is not herself a principal as against the debtor. The children are persons "in whose favour an order had been made" within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 42, r. 26, and, under the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950, r. 64 (1), the wife is entitled to issue the summons as their next friend.

AS TO THE MEANING OF CREDITOR, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, p. 33, para. 45; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 5, pp. 1033, 1034, Nos. 8445-8460.

FOR THE DEBTORS ACT, 1869, s. 5, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 2, p. 294.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Cox-Sinclair. Ex p. Jones, [1913] W.N. 263; 5 Digest 1033, 8449.
- (2) Re A Debtor (No. 76 of 1929), [1929] 2 Ch. 146; 98 L.J.Ch. 334; 141 L.T. 250; Digest Supp.
- (3) Ex p. Muirhead. Re Muirhead, (1876), 2 Ch.D. 22; 45 L.J.Bey. 65; 34 L.T. 303; 4 Digest 124, 1127.
- (4) Hewitson v. Sherwin, (1870), L.R. 10 Eq. 53; 22 L.T. 576; 5 Digest 1034, 8458.

CORAM PEARCE, J.

APPLICATION ex parte by a wife for leave to issue a judgment summons in her own name against the husband in respect of his failure to comply with an order for the payment of maintenance to two children of the marriage.

L. F. Sturge for the wife.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 23. PEARCE, J., read the following judgment. In this case the wife petitioner wishes to issue a judgment summons in her name in respect of an order for payment of maintenance to two children of the marriage. For tax purposes the order was made in a form directing payment, not to the wife, but to the children. Such orders are not infrequent. Counsel for the wife relies on Re Cox-Sinclair. Ex p. Jones (1). In that case an order for costs was made in favour of the petitioner's solicitor. The solicitor issued a judgment summons in his own name. Objection was taken that the judgment summons should have been issued in the petitioner's name. PHILLIMORE, J., held that the objection was fatal, and dismissed the summons, but gave leave to issue a fresh summons. That judgment clearly implied that a judgment summons could have been issued by the petitioner. The basis of that decision was explained in Re A Debtor (No. 76 of 1929) (2) by LORD HANWORTH, M.R., where he said ([1929] 2 Ch. 152):

"The principle raised seems to me to have been the basis of the judgment of PHILLIMORE, J., in Ex p. Jones (1), where he pointed out that the right party had not been put forward as principal to initiate proceedings against the debtor. Also, in Ex p. Muirhead. Re Muirhead (3), I think that in the judgment of COCKBURN, C.J., there is the same intention to indicate that the person at whose suit proceedings are taken must be the principal, the person in whose interest those proceedings are necessary. In my opinion the petitioning husband in this case was the person who was really the principal, for whose indemnity legal proceedings were necessary. The solicitors were merely acting as a necessary part of the machinery, under which the sum enured for the benefit of the petitioner; but they were not the principals as against the debtor."

LORD HANWORTH, M.R., was there dealing with the question whether a solicitor who had an order for costs could come within the meaning of "a creditor" under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, but his reasoning as to the principle underlying the brief report of the judgment in Re Cox-Sinclair. Ex p. Jones (1) is equally applicable to the case before me which comes under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869.

That section regulates, so far as monetary orders are concerned, the old remedy by writ of attachment for contumacious refusal to carry out an order: see Hewitson v. Sherwin (4). The words of the section do not expressly state who is entitled to apply to enforce the order, nor say that only the recipient may do so, but the section is expressed to be subject to the prescribed rules. Rule 4 of the General Rules under the Debtors Act, 1869, made in Michaelmas Term, 1869, states that the order for committal "may be in the Form A in the schedule, or to the like effect." Form A is headed:

"Upon hearing, etc., [Christian and surname of the debtor and of the party claiming]."

It continues:

"I do order that the said A.B. be for default in payment of the debt hereinafter mentioned committed to prison . . . or until he shall pay £ . . . being the amount of [an instalment due to the said C.D. upon] [or a judgment of the court of . . .] [or an order made by . . .] . . ."

Rule 5 says that on payment of the sum mentioned in the order the debtor shall be entitled to a certificate of satisfaction in the Form B in the schedule or to the like effect signed by the attorney in the cause of the creditor or signed by the creditor. The jurisdiction and powers of the High Court under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, so far as they relate to default in payment in pursuance of any order or judgment made or given by a judge exercising jurisdiction in matrimonial causes, were assigned to the Divorce Division by the Debtors Act (Matrimonial Causes) Jurisdiction Order, 1932 (S.R. & O., 1932, No. 503).

It is clear that the rules under the Debtors Act, 1869, anticipate that the application will be made by the party in whose favour the order is made, and, in my view, that was their intention. Moreover, from a practical point of view, if the wife were to issue this summons, there would be no one who could give the husband the valid certificate of satisfaction to which he is entitled under r. 5. Re Cox-Sinclair. Ex p. Jones (1), as explained by LORD HANWORTH, M.R., does not help the wife. There the petitioner was entitled to apply because, in the words of LORD HANWORTH, M.R. (ibid.), he was "the person in whose interest those proceedings are necessary . . . the person who was really the principal, for whose indemnity legal proceedings were necessary," whereas the solicitors in whose favour the order was made

"were merely acting as a necessary part of the machinery, under which the sum enured for the benefit of the petitioner; but they were not the principals as against the debtor."

In the case before me it cannot be said that the wife is the principal and the children are acting as a necessary part of the machinery under which the sums enure for the benefit of the petitioner. The whole basis and object of an order directing payment of the money to the children direct is that the money should be their income and belong to them. It is only on that basis that a benefit is obtained in respect of tax. It may be that in practice the wife administers it for their benefit, but, if so, she does so only as agent for them and on their behalf. She has no legal right to touch the money. Although it would be preferable on technical and social grounds if the judgment summons in respect of this order could be issued by the wife rather than the children, I am bound regretfully to hold that it cannot. The application is, therefore, refused.

Application dismissed.

CORAM LORD MERRIMAN, P.

APPLICATION ex parte by the wife as next friend of the children of the marriage for leave to issue a summons against the husband in respect of the arrears of payments under the order for the maintenance of the children.

L. F. Sturge for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: This is an ex parte application by a wife, who has obtained a decree absolute against her husband, for leave to issue, as next friend of the children of the marriage, a summons under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, against her former husband in respect of arrears of maintenance payable to them.

By r. 375 of the Bankruptcy Rules it is necessary to obtain the leave of a judge for the issue of the summons. The order in respect of which it is desired to proceed is an order made under what is now s. 26 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, which reproduces s. 193 (1) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, and provides:

"In any proceedings for divorce . . . the court may from time to time, either before or by or after the final decree, make such provision as appears just with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of the children [of the marriage] . . ."

By an order of Nov. 22, 1949, made at the instance of the wife Mr. Registrar LONG ordered maintenance for the wife at the token rate of 1s. per annum, payable monthly, and he ordered the husband to pay to each of the two children of the marriage the sum of £1 per week, payable weekly, until each child should attain the age of sixteen. It was also ordered that the wife and the husband should share the income tax relief in respect of the children. The order is often in this form to avoid the income payable under the order being included with other income which the wife may have. That is clearly shown on the face of the order by the provision for sharing the income tax relief. The order in this form has the disadvantage that difficulties may arise with regard to its enforcement where the husband makes default in payment. In the present case the wife applied to PEARCE, J., for leave to issue a summons, she herself being the applicant, and PEARCE, J., decided that she was not entitled to make the application. He took the view that the whole framework of the Debtors Act, 1869, and the rules under that Act made it clear that the person to make the application was the person who was entitled to the fruit of the judgment, namely, the children. The wife is now applying to be allowed to issue this summons as next friend of the two children in whose favour the order was made.

I know nothing about the merits of the case, but on the face of the summons there is a statement that a very considerable sum is due under the order to these two children. There is no doubt that arrears of maintenance are the proper subject of proceedings under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869. Rule 61 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950, provides:

"An application for . . . committal shall be made to a judge . . ."

It does not, however, specify how, or by whom, it should be made. By r. 80, it is provided:

"Subject to the provisions of these rules and of any enactment, the Rules of the Supreme Court shall, notwithstanding the provisions of Ord. 68 thereof, apply with the necessary modifications to the practice and procedure in any cause or matter to which these rules apply."

Since neither the method of application nor the party to apply is defined in the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, R.S.C., Ord. 42, r. 26, is brought into play. By that rule:

"Any person not being a party to a cause or matter, who obtains any order or in whose favour any order is made, shall be entitled to enforce obedience to such order by the same process as if he were a party to such cause or matter . . ."

I think those words are wide enough to cover the case of these two infants. They did not, it is true, obtain the order. The wife, being the petitioner, was the proper party to obtain the order, but plainly the children are persons in whose favour the order was made. Therefore, prima facie, they come within this rule, and it is clear from the footnote to the rule that the rule (and its predecessors) has been treated for many years as being applicable to orders made in this Division in connection with maintenance.

There remains the question: How are these children, being persons in whose favour this order has been made, to make the application? Here the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950, are quite clear, for by r. 64 (1) of those rules, relating to proceedings by infants and persons of unsound mind, it is provided:

"An infant . . . may . . . make any application to which these rules apply by his next friend . . ."

Plainly this is an application to which these rules apply, and it is suggested that the wife, as mother of the children, is the right person to be the next friend. By r. 64 (2) it is provided:

"Before the name of any person is used in any proceedings as next friend the solicitor for the infant . . . shall obtain a written authority signed by that person. The authority shall be attested by a solicitor, who shall certify that the proposed next friend has no interest in the proceedings adverse to that of the infant . . ."

The position at this moment is that the wife has signed an agreement to act and has stated that she has no adverse interest to the children. Prima facie, it is plain that not only has she no adverse interest, but that she has a favourable interest because the enforcement of this order manifestly is very much in her interest as well as in that of the children. Subject, therefore, to this authority being attested by the solicitor, I make the order that the wife be allowed to issue the summons as next friend on behalf of the two infants.

Order for leave to issue summons.

Solicitors: May, May & Deacon (for the wife).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BAYLIS v. BLACKWELL AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (McNair, J.), November 5, December 6, 1951.]

Husband and Wife—Legal proceedings—Right of husband to sue wife for tort committed before marriage—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 12—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 1.

A passenger in a motor car, who was injured in a collision with a lorry, subsequently married the woman who had been driving the car at the time of the accident. He having added her as third defendant to an action for damages for negligence which he had brought against the person in charge of the lorry and its owner.

HELD: any right of action against the woman driver in respect of her negligence which the passenger might have possessed had abated as a result of their marriage.

FOR THE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1882, s. 12, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 11, p. 802; and FOR THE LAW REFORM (MARRIED WOMEN AND TORTFEASORS) ACT, 1935, s. 1, see ibid., p. 811.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Gottliffe v. Edelston, [1930] 2 K.B. 378; 99 L.J.K.B. 547; 143 L.T. 595; Digest Supp.
- (2) Wennhak v. Morgan, (1888), 20 Q.B.D. 635; 57 L.J.Q.B. 241; 59 L.T. 28; 52 J.P. 470; 17 Digest 158, 591.
- (3) Barber v. Pigden, [1937] 1 All E.R. 115; [1937] 1 K.B. 664; 106 L.J.K.B. 858; 156 L.T. 245; Digest Supp.
- (4) Mallett v. Dunn, [1949] 1 All E.R. 973; [1949] 2 K.B. 180; [1949] L.J.R. 1650; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Edwards v. Porter, [1925] A.C. 1; 94 L.J.K.B. 65; 132 L.T. 496; affg. S.C. sub nom. Edwards v. Porter, McNeill v. Hawes, [1923] 2 K.B. 538; 27 Digest 214, 1851.
- (6) Chant v. Read, [1939] 2 All E.R. 286; [1939] 2 K.B. 346; 108 L.J.K.B. 547; 160 L.T. 462; Digest Supp.
- (7) Curtis v. Wilcox, [1948] 2 All E.R. 573; [1948] 2 K.B. 474; [1949] L.J.R. 266; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co., [1894] A.C. 535; 63 L.J.Ch. 908; 71 L.T. 489; affg. S.C. sub nom. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co. v. Nordenfelt, [1893] 1 Ch. 630; 36 Digest 671, 1546.

PRELIMINARY POINT OF LAW under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2.

The plaintiff, while travelling as a passenger in a motor car driven by the third defendant, was injured in a collision with a stationary motor lorry in the charge of the first defendant and owned by the second defendants. After the accident he married the third defendant. In an action for damages for personal injuries he alleged that the collision was due to the negligence of the first defendant in the course of his employment as servant or agent of the second defendants, and, alternatively, that it was due to the negligence of the third defendant. The third defendant contended that any cause of action against her, if it existed, had abated in consequence of her marriage to the plaintiff.

Van Oss for the plaintiff.

H. J. Baxter (Ryder Richardson with him) for the first and second defendants, W. F. Blackwell and Victoria Motor Haulage Co., Ltd.

Berryman, K.C., and Marven Everett for the third defendant, Jean Baylis.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 6. McNAIR, J., read the following judgment. This case, which comes before me for the determination of a preliminary point of law under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2, raises in a neat form the question whether a husband can during overture sue his wife in respect of an ante-nuptial tort. The facts as alleged in the pleadings, which for present purposes I must take as proved, may be shortly stated. On Dec. 14, 1948, the plaintiff was travelling as a passenger in a motor car driven by a lady when the motor car came into collision with a stationary trolley in charge of the first defendant, but owned by the second defendants, by reason whereof the plaintiff suffered personal injuries and loss and damage. The plaintiff, by his statement of claim, delivered on Nov. 2, 1949, pursuant to a writ issued against the first and second defendants on Oct. 22, 1949, alleged that the collision was caused by the negligence of the first defendant while acting in the course of his employment as the servant or agent of the second defendants. By their defence, delivered on Dec. 7, 1949, these defendants, while denying negligence, averred in the alternative that the collision was caused by the negligence of the lady driver of the motor car. Accordingly, on June 4, 1951, the plaintiff, having since the date of the accident married the driver of the motor car, amended his writ by adding her as third defendant as "Jean Baylis (married woman)", and, by his amended statement of claim, delivered on June 4, 1951, he alleged against her the negligence which had been alleged against her in the defence of the first and second defendants. The third defendant by her defence, delivered on July 18, 1951, pleads as follows:

"This defendant says that the amended statement of claim discloses no cause of action against her. Since the date of the said accident the plaintiff and this defendant have become man and wife. If the plaintiff ever had any cause of action against this defendant, which is denied, such cause of action has abated."

On Sept. 18, 1951, the master ordered that the point of law raised by the defendant, Jean Baylis, in her defence be set down for hearing and disposed of forthwith and before the trial of any other issue in the action. This, accordingly, is the issue which I have now to determine.

It is clear that, at least up to the date of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, neither husband nor wife could sue the other in respect of ante-nuptial torts, though, as has been pointed out by McCARDIE, J., in Gottliffe v. Edelston (1) ([1930] 2 K.B. 387), striking encroachments had already by that date been made in the common law doctrine of the legal unity of husband and wife by the invention by the courts of equity of the doctrine of separate estate in order to mitigate the severity of the common law with respect to the husband's rights over the property of the wife. The authorities on which the common law doctrine was founded are fully analysed in the judgment of McCARDIE, J., above referred to, and it is sufficient to say that they disclose quite clearly that the basis of the rule is to be found in the legal unity of husband and wife which MANISTY, J., in Wennhak v. Morgan (2) (20 Q.B.D. 639) states to be founded on public or social policy.

The broad submission made on behalf of the plaintiff is that the process of encroachment or erosion has now, and, in particular, by the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, been carried so far as to sweep away the last remnant of the wife's dependency on the husband and to destroy finally the legal unity of the spouses, and reliance is placed on the maxim cessante ratione legis, cessat ipsa lex. It is, accordingly, necessary to trace briefly the steps by which this result is said to have been reached. By the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1, it was provided as follows:

"(1) A married woman shall, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing by will or otherwise, of any real or personal property as her separate property, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee. (2) A married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued, either in contract or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or defendant, or be made a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by or taken against her; and any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding shall be her separate property; and any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding shall be payable out of her separate property, and not otherwise."

By s. 12 of the same Act it was provided that

"Every woman . . . shall have in her own name against all persons whomsoever, including her husband, the same civil remedies . . . for the protection and security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole, but, except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort."

Though it may be said that the purposes of the Act did not necessitate any reference to the husband's rights of suit against the wife, it is significant that the legislature in 1882 appears expressly to have re-affirmed the common law rule in its entirety so far as the husband's rights of suit are concerned.

The next statutory step is to be found in the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, which, while repealing ss. 1 to 5 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and the provisions relating to separate property in other sections, including s. 12, and thus, in effect, abolishing the married woman's separate estate, provided by s. 1:

"Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, and subject, as respects actions in tort between husband and wife, to the provisions of s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman shall—(a) be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing of, any property; and (b) be capable of rendering herself, and being rendered, liable in respect of any tort, contract, debt, or obligation; and (c) be capable of suing and being sued, either in tort or in contract or otherwise; and (d) be subject to the law relating to bankruptcy and to the enforcement of judgments and orders, in all respects as if she were a feme sole."

Of this Act SCOTT, L.J., in Barber v. Pigden (3) uses the following language ([1937] 1 All E.R. 125):

"The purpose of Part I of the Act is to give back to woman, though married, the full human status allowed by the common law to a man, a maiden, or a widow, of which the common law had robbed her; in short, it restores to her her natural status and capacity. It does it by sweeping away a host of legal fictions—fictions which in origin were inextricably mixed up with old procedural law."

See, too, the observation by HILBERY, J., in Mallett v. Dunn (4) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 976) to the effect that since the Act of 1935 "a wife is a fully independent legal person." These passages were strongly relied on by counsel for the plaintiff as showing that the process of encroachment on or erosion of the old doctrine of legal unity of man and wife had gone the whole length for which he contended. But the observation of LORD SUMNER in Edwards v. Porter (5) ([1925] A.C. 38) to the effect that is, in my judgment, equally applicable to Part I of the Act of 1935.

"Generally speaking, the Act of 1882 was a Married Women's Property Act, not a Married Man's Relief Act,"

It remains for me to consider the authorities more particularly relevant. In Gottliffe v. Edelston (1) McCARDIE, J., had dismissed the wife's claim to recover against her husband for an ante-nuptial tort resulting in personal injury, on the ground that such a cause of action was not such a thing in action within the definition of "property" contained in s. 24 of the Act of 1882 as to become part of the wife's separate property. This decision was followed by HALLETT, J., in Thant v. Read (6) when he held that the wife's right of action for personal injuries resulting from her husband's negligence during coverture was not a civil remedy for the protection and security of her property within the meaning of s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, as amended by the Act of 1935. Finally, in Curtis v. Wilcox (7) it fell to the Court of Appeal to consider the correctness of the decision in Gottliffe v. Edelston (1). In Curtis' case (7), as in Gottliffe's case (1), the wife was suing her husband in respect of an ante-nuptial tort by the husband resulting in personal injury to the wife. WYNN-PARRY, J., in delivering the judgment of the court overruling Gottliffe v. Edelston (1), uses the following language ([1948] 2 All E.R. 574):

"It is clear, as McCARDIE, J., held, that at common law a wife cannot sue her husband for a tort committed before the marriage. If, therefore, the wife had a cause of action which she could pursue after the marriage it must have been because her right of action in tort, which arose before the marriage, was a thing in action forming part of her estate, which she could reduce into possession by action before marriage, which, by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, became part of her separate estate on her marriage, and which, therefore, she could reduce into possession by action after marriage, such action being pursued for the purpose of securing that part of her separate estate."

The learned judge, however, came to the conclusion that McCARDIE, J., was in error in attributing to the expression "thing in action" in s. 24 of the Act of 1882 the limited meaning which he attributed to it, and held, accordingly, (ibid., 576) that the case of Gottliffe v. Edelston (1) was wrongly decided and is not good law.

It is, in my judgment, clear that the ratio decidendi of the judgment in Curtis v. Wilcox (7) was that the particular cause of action there under consideration was "property" within the meaning of s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and it is true that, as counsel for the plaintiff submitted, no decision was given on the broader principle here averred before me, but not, apparently, argued before the Court of Appeal, that the process of erosion or encroachment had gone so far as to destroy the basis of the common law rule. Further, I accept counsel's submission that the final paragraph in this judgment was not necessary for the decision, and I share, with respect, his difficulty in distinguishing a "purely personal claim against her husband, e.g., for damages . . . for assault," which would be barred, from a claim against the husband for personal injuries resulting from negligence which, according to the decision, would not be barred. Nevertheless, it seems to me that, when the legislature in 1935 expressly re-affirmed s. 12 of the Act of 1882 by providing that the new law laid down as respects the wife by s. 1 should be " . . . subject, as respects actions in tort between husband and wife, to the provisions of s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 . . . "

it is impossible to say that the legislature did not at the same time re-affirm as respects the husband the provisions of that section that "except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort."

It may be anomalous that in these days of equality the wife should be able to sue the husband for ante-nuptial torts and possibly for torts during coverture while the husband should not enjoy corresponding rights. This anomaly, if anomaly it be, is, in my judgment, so firmly engrafted in our law that it can only rightly be removed by legislation.

It is true, as was pointed out in Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co. (8) ([1894] A.C. 553), that public policy may change, and, in so far as the old rule against actions between husband and wife was based on public policy, the basis of the rule may be said to be no longer firmly founded, though, if civil litigation between spouses was unseemly in 1888, it is difficult to see why it should be considered seemly today. Nevertheless, there is, in my judgment, a countervailing principle, viz., that the courts should not by over-refined subtlety of reasoning be persuaded, merely for the sake of logicity, to weaken well-established doctrines of the law which have long been acted on by the public and their legal advisers. In my judgment, the plea raised in the defence of the third defendant succeeds, and there must be judgment in the action for the third defendant, with costs.

Judgment for third defendant.

Solicitors: Payne, Hicks Beach & Co. (for the plaintiff); Stanley & Co. (for the first and second defendants); Berryman's (for the third defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

Re PLANT (deceased). JOHNSON v. HARDWICKE AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), December 4, 1951.]

Will—Two wills admitted to probate—Principles of construction.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The testatrix, who died on June 13, 1950, left two wills both of which were admitted to probate. The first will, dated Aug. 24, 1939 (hereinafter called "the will of 1939"), purported expressly to revoke all former wills and codicils and was declared to be the last will of the testatrix. The second will (hereinafter called "the will of 1940"), which was undated, but, when admitted to probate, was deemed to have been executed on May 28, 1940, did not expressly revoke the first will, but was declared to be the last will of the testatrix. By the will of 1940 (which was home-drawn), the testatrix made similar bequests to those contained in the will of 1939 with some variations as to time of payment and the amount of legacies and purported to benefit the same persons except that five pecuniary legacies and one specific legacy bequeathed in the will of 1939 were not expressly mentioned in the will of 1940. This originating summons was issued to determine, inter alia, whether, on the true construction of the will of 1939 and the will of 1940, (a) all the pecuniary legacies bequeathed by the will of 1939 were revoked by the will of 1940; or (b) some, and, if so, which, of the said legacies were revoked by the will of 1940; or (c) none of the said legacies was revoked by the will of 1940. The question also arose whether the specific legacy given by the will of 1939, but not mentioned in the will of 1940, was preserved or revoked.

AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF GIFTS IN DIFFERENT TESTAMENTARY INSTRUMENTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 360, para. 408; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 1006-1013, Nos. 8631-8716.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Tuckey v. Henderson, (1863), 33 Beav. 174; 55 E.R. 333; 44 Digest 1011, 8694.
- (2) Hemming v. Gurrey, (1827), 1 Dow. & Cl. 35; 6 E.R. 438; 44 Digest 1010, 8684.
- (3) Jackson v. Jackson, (1788), 2 Cox, Eq. Cas. 35; 30 E.R. 17; 44 Digest 1010, 8678.

(4) Kidd v. North, (1846), 2 Ph. 91; 16 L.J.Ch. 116; 41 E.R. 876; sub nom. Tidd v. North, 8 L.T.O.S. 289; 44 Digest 1010, 8689.

(5) Re Gare, [1951] 2 All E.R. 863.

R. Gwyn Rees for the plaintiff, the surviving executor.

Richmount for the first defendant, a residuary legatee.

G. C. D. S. Dunbar for the second to the seventh defendants, pecuniary legatees.

Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

ROXBURGH, J., held that on the true construction of the two documents the trusts of the will of 1940 were intended to be in substitution for the similar trusts in the will of 1939, but that, as the will of 1939 had been admitted to probate, the legacies bequeathed therein but not mentioned in the will of 1940 must be treated as subsisting. HIS LORDSHIP said that it seemed to him from the documents themselves that it was the plain intention of the testatrix to substitute the second document for the first. He could not, however, give full effect to that conclusion because both had been admitted to probate, and, therefore, it was not open to him to say that the second will revoked the first in toto. At the same time, he was entitled to look at the two documents side by side, and to draw such conclusions as he might from internal evidence, and, if the two wills as a whole showed that that was the intention of the testatrix, he considered that he had jurisdiction to give effect to that conclusion. Tuckey v. Henderson (1) appeared to give full warrant for that course. In that case, SIR JOHN ROMILLY, M.R., said (33 Beav. 175):

"I am of opinion that the cases of Hemming v. Gurrey (2), Jackson v. Jackson (3), and Kidd v. North (4), govern this case, and that, upon the construction of these two wills of the testatrix, the second instrument was meant to be in substitution for the first. It is true that both are wills of the testatrix, and that both are admitted to probate, and that it is, therefore, simply a question of construction. But as a question of construction, I am of opinion that the second is substitutionary for the first, as regards the legacies in the first will to legatees who are also named as legatees in the second. This differs from the case of a codicil, a codicil is professedly an addition to the will, but this is professedly a substitution for it. Though it is called 'the last will,' that does not prevent the proof of the prior will, which is not revoked: therefore both are proved, and if there be legacies given in the first will to objects of bounty not mentioned in the second will, they are not revoked, but, in all other respects, I think the legacies are substitutionary and not cumulative . . . There is a gift to the rector of Winterbourne, in trust for the aged poor women of the parish in the first will, and the same sum is given by the second will for the poor generally of the parish, as the minister and churchwardens shall think fit; I consider that a mere substitution of the one for the other . . . I am of opinion, regarding it as a question of construction, as the Lord Chancellor did in the case referred to, and considering that, although the testatrix calls the second instrument 'my last will,' yet both have been admitted to probate, you must look at the general scope of both and see if substitution is intended."

That was to be his (HIS LORDSHIP'S) approach. HIS LORDSHIP then compared the two documents in detail, and reached the conclusion above stated.

Solicitors: Rhys Roberts & Co., agents for C. James Hardwicke & Co., Cardiff for the plaintiff and first defendant); William A. Crump & Son, agents for Gilbert Robertson & Co., Cardiff (for the second to the seventh defendants); Treasury Solicitor.

R.D.H.O.

COTTAGES, LTD. v. MINISTER OF FUEL AND POWER AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Croom-Johnson, Devlin and Parker, JJ.), December 10, 1951.]

Coal—Nationalisation of industry—Valuation of transferred interests—Compensation unit of nine houses—Notional sale in open market—Notional sale of unit as a whole, not in separate lots—Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 13 (4).

Nine houses owned by the claimants became vested in the National Coal Board pursuant to the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, and for the purpose of compensation were constituted one compensation unit. The houses differed in size and type, were situated in various parts of the coal mining district, and ranged in value from £150 to £2,500. In determining the value of the unit under s. 13 (4) of the Act the district valuation board proceeded on the basis that the value must be taken to be the amount which the houses might have been expected to realise if they had been sold in the open market as a whole to a single purchaser, and not sold in separate lots.

HELD: this was the correct basis of valuation.

FOR THE COAL INDUSTRY NATIONALISATION ACT, 1946, s. 10 (5) and s. 13 (4), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 16, pp. 291 and 296, respectively.

Case referred to:

- (1) Ellesmere (Earl) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1918] 2 K.B. 735; 88 L.J.K.B. 337; 119 L.T. 568; 21 Digest 24, 136.

SPECIAL CASE stated by a referee under the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Valuation of Compensation Units) Regulations, 1947, reg. 40 (1).

The claimants, a Class B subsidiary of a colliery concern within the meaning of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, were the owners of nine houses which vested in the National Coal Board pursuant to para. 13 of sched. I to the Act and the exercise by the board of the option given by s. 5 (2) of the Act. The houses were not situate together. They were of varying types, and their values were between £150 and £2,500. A compensation unit was constituted which consisted of the transferred interests of the claimants in those houses. Pursuant to the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Valuation of Compensation Units) Regulations, 1947, the district valuation board prepared and served a draft valuation of the compensation unit, and, the claimants having objected thereto, the district valuation board determined the value of the said unit. As appeared from the statement of the basis of valuation contained in the determination of value, the district valuation board held themselves bound in law to assume that the compensation unit was sold as a whole to a single buyer. They made a deduction on the ground that a willing buyer of the unit as a whole would only buy to make a profit, and, therefore, the value of the unit would not be the sum of the full values of the individual properties with vacant possession, but would be less by approximately twenty per cent., which, in the view of the board, represented the speculator's risk. The claimants contending that the district valuation board was wrong in law in making that assumption, appealed to a referee. When the matter came before the referee the claimants asked him to state a Case, and in that Case he asked the court to determine the following questions: Whether, in the application of s. 13 (4) of the Act (a) it was as matter of law to be assumed that the said compensation unit was sold as a whole to a single purchaser, or (b) it was permissible, if the amount expected to be realised would thereby be greater, to assume that the compensation unit was sold in separate lots to several purchasers.

MacKenna, K.C., and Brunyate for the claimants.
Paull, K.C., and Squibb for the National Coal Board.
J. P. Ashworth for the Minister of Fuel and Power.
Littman for the Northern District Valuation Board.

CROOM-JOHNSON, J.: This Special Case raises a short point under s. 13 (4) of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946. To understand it a brief examination of the structure of the Act is necessary. Under the statute, on the appointed day the assets described in sched. I, Part I, to the Act, which theretofore belonged to the colliery owners, vested in the National Coal Board without further assurance. Assets described in Part II of the schedule were subject to an option, to be exercised either by the board or by the owner, to transfer such assets to the board. When assets became vested in the board, it was provided under s. 10 that compensation should be paid by the board under the provisions of the statute. Under s. 10 (2) compensation had to be ascertained separately, as provided in para. (a) and para. (b) of that sub-section.

With regard to assets within the provisions of sched. I, compensation had to come out of what has been called the global sum. The statute dealt with the allocation of the global sum among various coal mining districts and the determination of their status as respects coal industry value. Transferred interests had to be dealt with under s. 10 (5) on the basis of what are called "compensation units." It was left to the Minister of Fuel and Power to prepare a draft scheme relating to these "compensation units." That appears in the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Options and Constitution of Compensation Units) Regulations, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 1574), reg. 14 (1) of which provides:

"After the Minister has made such inquiries, considered such matters (including any representations which the claimant may have made as to the constitution of the relevant compensation unit or units) and taken such steps as he thinks requisite, he will, as soon as practicable, cause to be prepared a draft of the compensation unit, or of each of the compensation units, which he proposes to constitute in relation to the transferred interests mentioned in each statement and supplementary statement of interests duly delivered to him."

There is a provision that the draft compensation unit is to be served on the claimant. Therefore, Parliament has conferred on the Minister the right of determining, after carrying out the duties and investigations which are laid on him by reg. 14 (1), what the compensation units are to be. In the present case we are concerned only with certain houses which are part of the property of a colliery concern. The Minister decided that nine houses, situated in different places and of varying types and theoretical values, accommodation, and amenities, were to form a compensation unit. In pursuance of the statute that unit had to be valued.

I look next at s. 13 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, which indicates how a compensation unit is to be dealt with. First, it has to be allocated to what is called a valuation district. Then the district valuation board have to determine the value. If there is objection made to their determination, there may be a reference to a referee. That is what happened in this case. No question arises here about the preliminary matters to be decided. The district valuation board made their determination. There was objection to their determination on much the same ground as that now raised before us. Finally, the matter came before the referee, who dealt with it under s.13 (4) which provides:

"For the purposes aforesaid the value of a compensation unit shall be taken to be the amount which it might have been expected to realise if this Act had not been passed and it had been sold on the primary vesting date in the open market by a willing seller to a willing buyer, no allowance being made on account of the vesting of the transferred interests comprised in the unit being compulsory."

It was contended by the claimants, before the referee, as it has been contended before us, that the effect of applying the words "by a willing seller to a willing buyer" necessarily involved the consideration of whether the nine items which constitute the unit were to be regarded as one unit or whether the referee was obliged to say with regard to each of the constituent items that a particular value might have been obtained, and, as a result of that, the nine of them would fetch from a willing buyer to a willing seller in the open market more than the referee was being invited to determine for them on the basis that they were all being sold together. It is contended on behalf of the claimants that the referee would err if he applied the omnibus valuation without taking into consideration the separate valuations. The basis of that argument is that the Act intended that the best possible price should be obtained and that it is not possible to obtain such a price if a whole collection of cottages or houses, spread here, there and everywhere within the particular valuation district, is offered together. The Minister has to decide what the compensation unit is to be under the safeguards provided in reg. 14 (1). Then the question arises as to the meaning of the best possible value. Is it to be the best possible value to the colliery which has gone out of existence as owning the compensation unit? Or is it to be the best possible value to the National Coal Board who are going to take over? Or is it to be the value to some other person or body who might be interested? I could not follow for whom, it was said, the best possible price was to be.

I go back to the plain, simple words of the sub-section. It is framed, as counsel for the National Coal Board emphasised, entirely in the singular. It says that it is the value of the compensation unit, reading s. 13 (1) and s. 13 (4) together, which has to be regarded. It is true that that has to be done as if the Act had not been passed, but it goes on to say "and it had been sold on the primary vesting date in the open market." "It" is again in the singular; "it" is again the compensation unit. It is that, and that alone, which the district valuation board and the referee have to value. When they have looked to see what it is that they have to value, they are then to apply the test of a sale in the open market by a willing seller to a willing buyer. It does not seem to me to follow that because they are going to apply the test of a sale by a willing seller to a willing buyer, therefore, they must determine that they can only approach the matter on the basis of first of all splitting up the compensation unit, fixed by the Minister, into its constituent parts. It seems to me that that branch of the argument is a non sequitur. Counsel for the claimants supported it by a reference to Earl of Ellesmere v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1), which was an appeal to a referee against an assessment to estate duty. That arose out of the language used in the Finance Act, 1894, s. 7 (5), and s. 60 (2), of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. For the purposes of those enactments, which were taxing enactments, the question for decision was what was the effect of the words "the price which . . . such property would fetch if sold in the open market"? SANKEY, J., for the purpose of that legislation, came to the conclusion that where there was what he called varied property the words gave to the assessing person the right to take into account the value of the constituent parts of the property. I have derived no assistance from that decision. I do not think that a decision on a taxing statute is of much assistance on a question as to the interpretation of a statute which deals with the nationalisation of an industry or in determining the value of property which has been transferred by another Act to a board set up by that other Act.

I, therefore, go back to the actual language of s. 13 (4), and before coming to a conclusion I look at the proviso to the sub-section which says:

"Provided that provision may be made by regulations requiring the said amount to be estimated on the basis that the purchaser on the assumed sale of the unit would be in a position to use the property in which the transferred interests subsisted with other assets used in association therewith before the transfer, or to be estimated in accordance with other rules prescribed for securing that the said amount shall not be diminished by disregard of any factor appearing to the Minister to be relevant."

I am not disposed to attach too much importance to words used in a proviso, but a proviso relates to the section which it immediately follows and it is not to be expected that the draftsman will have changed his mind so quickly regarding what he intended by the enactment to which the proviso is appended. It seems to me that the proviso to s. 13 (4) is consistent with the whole framework of the sub-section, and it is obvious that in passing this proviso the legislature were thinking in terms of the unit set up by the Minister's action being submitted to the district valuation board, and ultimately, in a proper case, to the referee. I can see nothing which suggests any other possible view. I have come to the conclusion that, while the words used in the sub-section are to be a guide in arriving at the amount of the valuation, the referee was not obliged to direct himself that the compensation unit must be taken to have been sold in separate lots to separate purchasers. I can find no justification for that in any of the language which has been used. In my judgment, it was to be assumed by the referee that the compensation unit had been transferred as a whole to a single individual.

DEVLIN, J.: Section 13 (4) requires the board or the referee to ascertain the value of a compensation unit on the hypothesis that it had been "sold on the primary vesting date in the open market by a willing seller to a willing buyer." Counsel for the claimants says that the Act requires the compensation unit to be sold, but does not say whether it is to be sold as a whole or in parts, and, that question being open, the Act must be presumed to intend that the seller may dispose of it in such a way as is to his best advantage. Let me assume that, if the sub-section stopped there, that would be its right construction. There is, however, another step to be taken before arriving at its meaning. It has to be ascertained what is meant by "open market." It is a commonplace that there will be different markets for the same object or the same commodity and in those different markets different prices for the same object or the same commodity may be obtained. As between producer and wholesaler, as between wholesaler and distributor, as between distributor and retailer, and as between retailer and the ultimate buyer who is a member of the public, the same object fetches a different price. Before, therefore, beginning to apply the Act intelligently, it is necessary to ask oneself what is the level of the market contemplated by the section. The ordinary way of doing that is to ascertain in what lots or parcels the object or commodity is to be sold. Are we dealing in bulk, or are we dealing in small, individual objects? If it is in bulk, the sale will obviously be between wholesalers; if the subject of the sale is a small individual object, it will plainly fetch a higher price. In the present case we are dealing in something which is called a compensation unit. That is what s. 13 (4), which we have to construe, refers to, and s. 10 (5) provides:

"The transferred interests shall be dealt with for the purposes of compensation in units constituted as hereinafter provided (in this Act referred to as 'compensation units') . . ."

That makes it plain that we are dealing with transferred interests, not individually as, if I may pursue the analogy, a retailer might, but in bulk, in parcels made up into compensation units, and that the price we have to look for is the price for a compensation unit as a whole.

Counsel for the claimants argued that that in some way involves the willing seller in getting less than the full value or the best possible price for that which he is notionally deemed to be selling. I do not think that that is so at all. Taking again the analogy of a commodity, such as a stock of coal, which might well fall under s. 13 (4), it is plain that the price obtained for the coal will depend on whether it is deemed to be a sale at the pit-head, a sale in a wagon on a railway siding, or a sale in a half-hundredweight sack. All those will command different prices. It may very well be that, sold in half-hundredweight sacks, the price would be twice that paid at the pit-head. I take that merely as an illustration. Is it then open to the seller, who is selling at the pit-head, to say: "I am not getting the best possible price for my coal. The best possible price is for coal in half-hundredweight sacks"? That is a wholly fallacious argument, because as soon as the seller investigates how the so-called best possible price is obtained, he finds that to get it he will have to render a lot more services, all of which cost him money, and to take extra and additional risk. I do not think that the position is any different in the case of the houses with which we are dealing here. What the valuation board have done is to say that a willing buyer of the unit as a whole would only buy to make a profit, and, therefore, the value of the unit would not be the sum of the full vacant possession values of the individual properties, but would be less by approximately twenty per cent. which, in the view of the board, represents the speculator's risk. Whether twenty per cent., ten per cent., or five per cent. would be the right figure is not a matter with which we are concerned, but what the board has done, and, in my judgment, rightly done, is to say in effect that there must be deducted from the value of the individual elements a sum representing the speculator's risk, and, no doubt, there is to be included in that last figure the additional expenses that the seller would have incurred if he had wished to sell individually—the necessity of employing an agent, the risk that he might get less, and the fact that he might be out of his money for some considerably longer time. All those things are part of the speculator's risk. It is not, in my judgment, true or fair to say that in some way a loss or deduction of twenty per cent. is imposed on what would otherwise be the fair value of these houses. It is true that, in dealing in things such as counsel for the claimants described as a mixed bag, it may well be that, by compelling the seller to part with a lot of miscellaneous objects altogether which he would do much better to dispose of in different places, he would sustain loss, because he would only get the price for a job lot. I do not think it is so in this case, but, if it be so, it is not because of any unfairness in the interpretation which, in my judgment, should be put on s. 13 (4), but because the make-up of the compensation unit would have erred. As my Lord has pointed out, that is a matter for the Minister. It must be presumed that he makes up the compensation units in such a way as to hold the scale even, in so far as he can, between the willing buyer and the willing seller. That being so, when the willing seller in the present case comes to part with the houses in one lot he must be presumed to have equal knowledge with the buyer, to be equally alive to the potentialities of the property and to the fact that it can be sold to better advantage by anybody who is willing to wait for individual prices of its component parts, and, therefore, although willing to allow the buyer a proper margin for the additional services and risk which he must be prepared to render and take, not willing to allow him an unreasonable profit. The twenty per cent. must be assessed on that basis. The make-up of the compensation unit may work both ways. Though counsel for the claimants wants to have it in his favour, it is conceivable that transferred interests sold separately might not fetch so much as if they were sold together. He is anxious to have the option of separating them where it suits the seller, but he would not, I suppose, on the construction that he puts on the section, grant a similar option to the buyer of separating them where it suits him. For these reasons I agree with the conclusion which my Lord has expressed.

PARKER, J.: I agree with both judgments just delivered.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Lawrence Jones & Co., agents for Maughan & Hall, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (for the claimants); R. S. S. Allen (for the National Coal Board); Treasury Solicitor (for the Minister of Fuel and Power and the Northern District Valuation Board).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

TIGER v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Jenkins and Hodson, L.J.J.), November 27, 28, 29, December 14, 1951.]

Trust and Trustee—Natural trustee—Corporate trustee—Bank—Right to withhold documents relating to estate from successors in office.

Per curiam: A natural trustee can be required to produce to his successor in office entries relating to the administration of the trust recorded by him in a diary or other document, and, similarly, two or more trustees can be required to produce the minutes of their meetings.

In the case of a corporate trustee the internal correspondence and memoranda of such a trustee is not, as such, necessarily exempt from production. Each individual document must be considered on its merits. If such a document relates to the administration of the testator's estate and no more than that is known about it, it is potentially a document which would or might assist a new trustee in the administration of the estate. Whether it would in fact do so or not must depend on its actual contents, and of that question, prima facie, the new trustee, whose duty it is to carry on the administration, would be the best judge, and obviously he could only form an opinion by looking at the document itself. He would, moreover, have to see it for the purpose of conducting his side of any argument about its production which might ensue before the master.

Where a trust corporation fills the double capacity of trustee and banker, its successors in the trust should be in no worse position as regards the obtaining of information with respect to the trust bank account and with regard to the production of documents relating to the trust than they would have been in if a third party had been the banker.

Decision of FINNEMORE, J. ([1951] 2 All E.R. 262), affirmed.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Talbot v. Marshfield, (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 549; 12 L.T. 761; 62 E.R. 728; 18 Digest 147, 970.
- (2) Re Cowin. Cowin v. Gravett, (1886), 33 Ch.D. 179; 56 L.J.Ch. 78; 18 Digest 147, 973.

APPEAL by the defendants from a decision of FINNEMORE, J., on June 8, 1951 (reported [1951] 2 All E.R. 262), in an action for delivery up of all documents in the possession or power of the defendants relating to the administration of the estate of a testator.

In November, 1949, in an action in the Probate Division for the revocation of the grant of probate of the testator's will a compromise was reached whereby the defendants, administrators pendente lite and executors of the testator's estate, renounced probate and the plaintiffs, Eduard Max Tiger and Klara Haider, two of the residuary legatees, undertook to apply for letters of administration with the will annexed. In the present action the plaintiffs contended that the defendants were under an obligation to hand over to them all documents connected with the administration of the estate, either as an implied term of the compromise agreement or on the ground that, having renounced probate, they had no right to retain possession of them as against the administrators. The defendants claimed that they were entitled to a formal release and discharge from all liability in respect of the estate before handing over the documents. FINNEMORE, J., held that the defendants were not entitled to a release and made an order for delivery up of all documents belonging to the estate of the testator or relating to the administration thereof that were in the possession or power of the defendants, whether the same were brought into existence by the defendants or came into their possession or power in connection with the administration. On appeal the defendants did not contest the decision of the judge on the point in issue before him, but sought to vary the order so as to exclude "any books or documents kept or brought into being by the defendants as bankers of the said estate and any books kept by the defendants as . . . administrators or executors which also contain entries as to other trusts or matters, but as to such last-mentioned books with liberty to the plaintiffs to inspect the entries therein relating to the said estate, and excluding also any inter-office correspondence, memoranda, or other documents brought into existence by the defendants in the ordinary course of the defendants' business as a trust corporation, the production of which would not assist the plaintiffs in the discharge of their duties as administrators of the said estate". The Court of Appeal, in dismissing the appeal, made certain observations, with which this report is concerned, on the right of a corporate trustee to withhold documents from their successors in office.

J. G. Strangman, K.C., and Lindner for the defendant bank.

Platts-Mills and D. B. Broad for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 14. JENKINS, L.J., read the judgment of the court in which he stated the facts and continued: The sole question in issue before the learned judge having been decided against the bank, it does not appeal from that decision, but seeks to raise in this court for the first time an entirely new contention that the documents comprised in the description "all documents relating to the administration of the estate" include documents or classes of documents which the bank should not as a matter of law have been held liable to deliver up. If the point had been taken at the trial on pleadings appropriately framed so as to raise it and with evidence enabling the learned judge to appreciate with a reasonable degree of particularity what documents he was being asked to exclude from the order, no doubt the learned judge would have considered and decided the question, and it may be he would have thought fit to make the order for delivery up of documents by reference to some more restricted definition than the comprehensive one of "all documents relating to the administration of the estate." But, the question never having been pleaded or argued and no evidence having been adduced to show its bearing on the documents actually existing in this case, we think it would be contrary to all principle for this court to entertain an appeal based on this new contention. Counsel for the bank invited us to act under the "Slip Rule" (R.S.C., Ord. 28, r. 11), or, rather, under the inherent jurisdiction of the court (acted on in the cases noted under that rule in the ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1951, p. 465), to vary its orders so as to carry out its meaning, which could be done on appeal by virtue of Ord. 58, r. 4. The short answer to this seems to us to be that the order here in question plainly did carry out the learned judge's meaning in so far as it ordered delivery up of all documents relating to the administration of the estate, inasmuch as it was not in dispute before him that, subject only to the question of the release, those were the documents which the bank must deliver up. For these reasons we are of opinion that this appeal cannot properly be entertained by this court and must fail. We should add that the reasons we have stated are no mere technical reasons. As the argument proceeded it became increasingly apparent to us that it was really impossible to evolve in vacuo and without evidence as to the particular documents in question in this particular case any general formula adequately defining the more restricted obligation as to the production of documents which the bank would have us substitute for the obligation imposed by the order under appeal. Counsel for the bank told us he made no distinction between documents proper to be delivered up by the bank and documents proper to be retained by the bank subject to the right of inspection and taking copies. He objected equally to both courses as regards all documents for which exemption was claimed. The practical difficulty with regard to documents common to this and other matters (i.e., books containing information relating to other trusts besides the testator's estate) was met by counsel for the plaintiffs conceding (as was obviously right) that under the order as it stood he could not claim more than a right to the inspection and taking copies of the relevant parts of documents of this description. Save in cases of this sort we understood it to be a matter of indifference to the bank whether the documents for which exemption was claimed were delivered up or produced for inspection, both courses being equally objectionable from the bank's point of view. In what follows, therefore, we need not trouble with this distinction, and will use the word "production" as a neutral term equally applicable to delivery up or to inspection.

Counsel for the bank did not maintain before us the contention originally advanced in the notice of appeal that production should be limited to documents actually belonging to the estate of the testator, and, indeed, it became apparent that this restriction clearly could not be justified as it would make production by a retiring trustee to his successor of information essential to the execution of the trust depend on whether the physical property in the book or other document in which it was recorded belonged to the trust estate or to the retiring trustee. For this restriction counsel invited us to substitute a qualification to the effect that the documents to be produced should have been brought into existence by or come into the possession of the bank in its capacity as administrator pendente lite or executor of the testator's estate. This limitation at first sight has little significance, for, if an administrator or executor receives or himself creates a document relating to the administration of the estate, it is difficult to see how he can be said to have done either of those things in any capacity other than that of administrator or executor. Significance is, however, claimed for it in the present case by reason of the peculiar position of a trust corporation as distinct from an ordinary trustee, and, in particular, of a trust corporation which, like the bank in this case, combines the character of personal representative or trustee and that of banker to the estate or trust.

In substance two points were made by counsel for the bank, the first on the special position of a trust corporation and the second on the dual capacity of a trust corporation acting also as banker to an estate or trust of which it is personal representative or trustee. His first point was that whereas a natural trustee reflects in his own mind on matters arising in the execution of his trust and reaches from time to time decisions leading to action, a corporate trustee perforce performs the equivalent of a natural trustee's mental deliberations by means of internal memoranda and correspondence passing between its various officials and departments, leading in due course to the appropriate action or decision. From this he adduced the general proposition that the internal memoranda and correspondence of a corporate trustee should be exempt from production because they are equivalent to the private thoughts and deliberations of a natural trustee which are incapable of production because never reduced to writing. We are unable to accept this as a general proposition. If a natural executor or trustee does, in fact, reduce his deliberations to writing, as, for instance, by recording them in a diary relating to the administration of the estate or trust, we see no reason in principle why he should not be required to produce it to his successor in office. Another example may be found in the case of two or more natural trustees who record their deliberations in minutes of trustees' meetings. Here, again, we see no reason in principle why the advantage of production and perusal of such minutes should be withheld from their successors in office. Unless it can be shown that records such as these, if kept by natural trustees, would necessarily be exempt from production—and as at present advised we see no sufficient ground for this view—we find it impossible to accept the general proposition that the internal correspondence and memoranda of a corporate trustee must as such necessarily be so exempt. Indeed, counsel found himself in the end unable to maintain this general proposition. Examples were put such as that of a corporate trustee with its own legal department and of inter-departmental correspondence resulting in advice on some point of law arising in the administration of the trust being received by the trustee department from the legal department. Counsel, in effect, agreed that correspondence such as this ought to be produced, just as production was ordered of the case submitted to counsel and his opinion thereon in Talbot v. Marshfield (1).

In its final form counsel's submission came in substance to this, that while he could not claim that all internal or inter-departmental correspondence and memoranda were as such necessarily exempt from production, there must be many such documents which ought to be exempted as obsolete or of insufficient materiality. This submission he sought to embody in his revised form of order in the words:

"And excluding also any inter-office correspondence, memoranda, or other documents brought into existence by the defendants in the ordinary course of the defendants' business as a trust corporation, the production of which would not assist the plaintiffs in the discharge of their duties as administrators of the estate."

This brings the matter down to a consideration of each individual document of the general description mentioned on its own merits. If such a document relates to the administration of the testator's estate and no more than that is known about it, then, at all events, it is potentially a document which would or might assist the plaintiffs in the administration of the estate. Whether it would in fact do so or not must depend on its actual contents, and of that question, prima facie, the plaintiffs, whose duty it is to carry on the administration, would be the best judges, and obviously they could only form an opinion by looking at the document itself. They would, moreover, have to see it for the purpose of conducting their side of any argument about its production which might ensue before the master. Accordingly, there seems to us from a practical point of view to be little, if any, substance in the partial and imprecisely defined exemption of internal correspondence and memoranda finally propounded by counsel for the bank.

The second point raised by counsel for the bank concerned, as we have said, the dual capacity of the bank as personal representative and as banker to the estate. As appears from his proposed form or order, he invited us to exclude "any books or documents kept or brought into being by the defendants as bankers of the said estate." As to this point, it seems to us that, while an investigation of the system of book-keeping used by the bank in cases in which it acts both as banker and trustee might justify the drawing of a line at some point between mere banking books or documents, on the one hand, and trust books or documents, on the other, the complete absence of evidence on the subject would make it impossible for us to vary the order by inserting a general exception of the kind suggested, even if it was otherwise open to the bank, having regard to the previous course of the proceedings, to claim such a variation, as, in our view, it is not. We should, perhaps, add that where a trust corporation fills the double capacity of trustee and banker its successors in the trust should, at all events, be in no worse position as regards the obtaining of information with respect to the trust bank account than they would have been in if a third party had been the banker.

We have said enough to show that the bank's proposed exceptions from and modifications of the order for delivery up of documents as made by the learned judge are at least open to criticism, but nothing we have said is to be taken as prejudging any case in which comparable questions may be raised on adequate evidence as to the nature of the particular documents of which production is disputed or as implying any decision as to the possibly more restricted form of order which it might have been proper for the learned judge to make in the present case, if the points now taken before us had been raised by the pleadings, and argued before him on adequate evidence.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Reed & Reed (for the defendant bank); Kennedy Genese & Co. (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

TRANS TRUST S.P.R.L. v. DANUBIAN TRADING CO., LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (McNair, J.), December 10, 11, 12, 13, 1951.]

Damages—Measure of damages—Foreseeable consequences of breach of contract—Sale of goods—Loss of profit—Payment by confirmed letter of credit—Failure to procure confirmation—Knowledge of parties that subject-matter of sale unobtainable by sellers without confirmation.

Under a contract for the sale of goods payment was to be cash against shipping documents from a confirmed letter of credit to be opened by American customers of the buyers, who undertook to cause it to be opened and confirmed forthwith. It was known to both parties that the sellers had an option to buy the goods from a Belgian firm and that neither sellers nor buyers were in a financial position to provide the Belgian francs required to obtain delivery of the goods unless the letter of credit was made available by the American customers. In breach of the contract the buyers did not cause the letter of credit to be opened or confirmed and the contract was not executed.

HELD: (i) the rule that damages for failure to pay money were restricted to the interest thereon must be strictly limited to cases falling within it and did not apply to failure to procure the provision of a letter of credit.

(ii) the impecuniosity of the sellers and the loss of profit resulting from their consequential inability to obtain delivery of the goods in the event of a breach of the contract being within the reasonable contemplation of the parties, the sellers were entitled to damages on the basis of that loss of profit.

Dictum of LORD WRIGHT in Monarch S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Karlshamns Oljefabriker (A.B.) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 14), applied.

AS TO REMOTENESS OF DAMAGE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 103-109, paras. 130-136; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 17, pp. 95-99, Nos. 108-141.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Victoria Laundry (Windsor), Ltd. v. Newman Industries, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 997; [1949] 2 K.B. 528; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Prehn v. Royal Bank of Liverpool, (1870), L.R. 5 Exch. 92; 39 L.J.Ex. 41; 21 L.T. 830; 17 Digest 78, 3.
- (3) Wallis v. Smith, (1882), 21 Ch.D. 243; 52 L.J.Ch. 145; 47 L.T. 389; 17 Digest 79, 12.
- (4) Re English Bank of the River Plate. Ex p. Bank of Brazil, [1893] 2 Ch. 438; 62 L.J.Ch. 578; 69 L.T. 14; 10 Digest 932, 6383.
- (5) Liesbosch, Dredger v. Edison S.S., [1933] A.C. 449; 102 L.J.P. 73; sub nom. The Edison, 149 L.T. 49; Digest Supp.
- (6) Monarch S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Karlshamns Oljefabriker (A.B.), [1949] 1 All E.R. 1; [1949] A.C. 196; [1949] L.J.R. 772; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Muhammad Issa el Sheikh Ahmad v. Ali, [1947] A.C. 414; [1948] L.J.R. 455; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Household Machines, Ltd. v. Cosmos Exporters, Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 622; [1947] K.B. 217; [1947] L.J.R. 578; 176 L.T. 49; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corp. of New York, [1917] 2 K.B. 473; 86 L.J.K.B. 1325; 117 L.T. 330; 12 Digest 434, 3516.
- (10) Charles Rickards, Ltd. v. Oppenheim, [1950] 1 All E.R. 420; [1950] 1 K.B. 616; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION by sellers for damages for breach of a contract, entered into in September, 1950, for the purchase by the buyers of one thousand tons of hot rolled steel sheets and for a declaration.

The sellers alleged that payment for the goods was to be cash against shipping documents from a confirmed letter of credit to be opened by an American company to whom the buyers had re-sold, or were proposing to re-sell, the goods, such credit to be provided at the Krediet Bank in Brussels in favour of Messrs. S. A. Azur, of Brussels, from whom the sellers had an option to buy the goods. They alleged further that it was a term and condition of the contract that the buyers would cause the letter of credit to be opened and confirmed forthwith, and that it was not opened or confirmed, and that, in breach of the contract, by a letter dated Oct. 16, 1950, the buyers finally refused to take any steps to have the letter of credit provided. The sellers claimed as damages the loss of profit represented by the difference between the price at which they had bought the goods and the price which they would have received if the contract had been performed. They asked also for a declaration that they were entitled to be indemnified against any damages for which they might be held liable to the firm from whom they had the option to buy the goods. The buyers, who carried on business in London as general merchants and commission agents, denied that the agreement was ever concluded and submitted that it was at all times conditional on a letter of credit being provided by their American customers, which had not been provided. They contended further that their breach, if any, was merely a failure to pay money, that the damages recoverable were limited to interest on this money, and that the sellers' loss of profit was due to their own impecuniosity and did not represent the damages recoverable.

Mocatta, K.C., and T. G. Roche for the sellers.

Winn for the buyers.

McNAIR, J., stated the facts, found that there had been a completed contract as alleged by the sellers and that, by their letter of Oct. 16, 1950, the buyers had committed a breach of their obligations under it, and continued: I have now to deal with the question of damages. The first head of claim is for £3,214 5s. 8d., which is alleged to be loss of profit which the sellers suffered, being the difference between the price of 7,555 Belgian francs a ton at which they bought from Messrs. S. A. Azur and the contract price of 8,025 francs per ton which they would have received had the contract been performed. In support of this claim counsel for the sellers relied on the statement of principle by ASQUITH, L.J., in Victoria Laundry (Windsor), Ltd. v. Newman Industries, Ltd. (1) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 1002, 1003). I need not read the passage in full, but, on the basis of the statement of the principle there, counsel submitted that, in as much as it was common ground between the parties that neither the sellers nor the buyers were in a financial position to provide the necessary Belgian francs which would be required to obtain delivery of the steel unless the letter of credit was made available by the American company, it must have been within the reasonable contemplation of the parties that failure by the buyers to procure provision of this letter of credit would necessarily result in the sellers being unable to complete the purchase of the steel from Messrs. Azur, and, accordingly, would necessarily cause them a loss at least equivalent to their loss of profit on the transaction with the buyers. In my judgment, the evidence clearly established the facts necessary to support this submission, if it be legally sound. It was established that at all material times the market value of the steel, in the hands of anyone in a financial position to obtain it from the suppliers, was in excess of the contract price as between the sellers and the buyers, but it was also established that both the sellers and the buyers knew that neither of them was in a position to put up the necessary Belgian francs to satisfy their purchase obligations unless the American buyers made the money available through their letter of credit. Accordingly, it would be within the reasonable contemplation of both of them that failure to put up the letter of credit would mean that the contract could not be executed.

On behalf of the buyers it was submitted, first, that their breach, if any, was merely failure to pay the money, and that, in general, the damages recoverable on a failure to pay money are limited to interest on that money: see MAYNE ON DAMAGES, 11th ed., p. 18; Prehn v. Royal Bank of Liverpool (2); Wallis v. Smith (3); Re English Bank of the River Plate. Ex p. Bank of Brazil (4). They said, secondly, that the sellers' loss of profit was caused by their own impecuniosity, and reliance in this connection was placed on the speech of LORD WRIGHT in Liesbosch, Dredger v. Edison S.S. (5) ([1933] A.C. 456).

As to the first submission, in my judgment, the special rule which restricts the damages ordinarily recoverable for failure to pay money, which, as SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., said in Wallis v. Smith (3) (21 Ch.D. 257), was not consistent with reason, should be strictly limited to cases falling within the rule and has no application to the facts of this case. The breach here was failure to procure the provision of a letter of credit. This seems to me to be essentially different from the mere failure to pay money on a due date, notwithstanding that, if provided, the money would ultimately result.

As to the second submission, it is, in my judgment, a question of fact whether or not in a particular case the impecuniosity of the party claiming to have suffered the loss, and the loss resulting from such impecuniosity, can be said to have been within the reasonable contemplation of the parties: see the speech of LORD WRIGHT in Monarch S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Karlshamns Oljefabriker (A.B.) (6) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 14):

"Again, in Liesbosch, Dredger v. Edison S.S. (5) this House made some observations on the measure of damages, which are of general import. The case was one of tort. The question there was what was the proper sum to award by way of compensation for the loss of a dredger. LORD WRIGHT said ([1933] A.C. 464): 'Many, varied and complex are the types of vessels and the modes of employment in which their owners may use them. Hence the difficulties constantly felt in defining rules as to the measure of damages. I think it impossible to lay down any universal formula.' Earlier in his speech LORD WRIGHT said (ibid., 463): '... the dominant rule of law is the principle of restitutio in integrum, and subsidiary rules can only be justified if they give effect to that rule.' In the Liesbosch (5) case it was held that loss due to the party's impecuniosity was too remote, and, therefore, to be neglected in the calculation of damages. It was special loss due to his financial position. A different conclusion was arrived at in Muhammad Issa el Sheikh Ahmad v. Ali (7) where damages consequent on impecuniosity were held not too remote, because, as I understand, the loss was such as might reasonably be expected to be in the contemplation of the parties as likely to flow from breach of the obligation undertaken: see the judgment of the Judicial Committee delivered by LORD UTHWATT ([1947] A.C. 427). The difference in result did not depend on the differences (if any) between contract and tort in this connection."

Here I have reached the conclusion, on the facts of this case, that the loss of profit claimed by the sellers is not too remote although consequent on the sellers' impecuniosity because the loss was such as might reasonably be expected to be in the contemplation of the parties as likely to flow from the breach of the obligation undertaken by the buyers. To adopt the language of LORD DU PARCQ in the Monarch case (6) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 19):

"Any jury of business men would, I believe, have received such a direction with dismay, and acted on it with reluctance. It would, indeed, as it seems to me, result in manifest injustice."

The direction there referred to was such a direction as counsel for the buyers submits the jury should have received here. Counsel for the sellers also submitted that the sellers are entitled to a declaration that they are entitled to be indemnified against any damages which might be recoverable against them by Messrs. Azur. I was referred in this connection to the case of Household Machines, Ltd. v. Cosmos Exporters, Ltd. (8) in which LEWIS, J., made a declaration to that effect. Except that I accept the criticism made by counsel for the buyers that the declaration in that case was unduly wide and should be modified by the omission of the words, "and/or which may reasonably be paid in respect of the discharge of their legal liability," I consider that the sellers are entitled to the declaration claimed, and, accordingly, there will be judgment for the sellers.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors: Hardman, Phillips & Mann (for the plaintiffs); A. & G. Tooth (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILKIE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Donovan, J. (sitting as an additional judge of the Division)), December 11, 12, 1951.]

Income Tax—Residence in United Kingdom—Six months in year of assessment—Calendar, not lunar, months—Fractions of days to be counted in hours—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Miscellaneous Rules, r. 2.

The taxpayer came to the United Kingdom for a temporary purpose only, and not with any view or intent of establishing his residence therein. He arrived at about 2 p.m. on June 2, 1947, and left at about 10 a.m. on Dec. 2, 1947. On the question whether he was chargeable to tax on income from foreign possessions in respect of the year 1947-48 (in which there were 366 days) as being actually resident in the United Kingdom for a period equal in the whole to six months in that year of assessment within r. 2 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918.

HELD: (i) "six months" in r. 2 meant six calendar months and not six lunar months.

(ii) to ascertain whether a taxpayer had been actually resident in the United Kingdom for a period equal in the whole to six months within r. 2, the number of days during which he had been actually resident, whether continuous or discontinuous, should be added up to see whether their total equalled the number of days in one half of the particular year of assessment.

(iii) where fractions of a day entered into the computation of the six-months period, they must be taken into account in hours of actual presence.

(iv) accordingly the taxpayer having been resident in the United Kingdom for 182 days, 20 hours, had not been so resident for a period equal in the whole to six months in the year of assessment.

AS TO LUNAR AND CALENDAR MONTHS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 120-122, paras. 171-176; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 930-933, Nos. 13-67.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re North. Ex p. Hasluck, [1895] 2 Q.B. 264; 64 L.J.Q.B. 694; 59 J.P. 724; sub nom. Re North. Ex p. Parkinson, 72 L.T. 854; 42 Digest 946, 189.
- (2) Lester v. Garland, (1808), 15 Ves. 248; 33 E.R. 748; 42 Digest 947, 203.

CASE STATED by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

The question for determination by the Special Commissioners was whether the taxpayer had resided in the United Kingdom for six months in the year of assessment 1947-48, so as to make him chargeable to income tax under sched. D on income from possessions out of the United Kingdom under the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D, r. 2. The taxpayer was of Scottish origin and domicil, and had various connections with Scotland. He arrived in England from India at about 2 p.m. on June 2, 1947. Of the next twenty-six weeks he spent eight or nine in Scotland and the remainder in England and Wales, and he left England to return to India at about 10 a.m. on Dec. 2, 1947, his departure having been delayed for two days through compulsory cancellation by the air line of his earlier departure reservation.

Before the Special Commissioners the taxpayer contended that, according to both English and Scottish law (and, if not according to English law, then according to Scottish law, which should be applied) the day of arrival should be excluded in computing the six-months period, which would, therefore, not expire until midnight on Dec. 2, 1947, by which time he had left England. Alternatively, he contended that, since the latter part of his stay was against his will and through circumstances over which he had no control, that period should be excluded. The Crown contended (i) that there was an established rule of law in both England and Scotland that fractions of a day counted as a whole day, and that by reason thereof both the day of arrival and the day of departure should be included in computing the period, and (ii) that the fact that the taxpayer's stay in the United Kingdom was prolonged through circumstances beyond his control was immaterial.

The Special Commissioners took the view that on the facts the taxpayer was in England for temporary purposes only, spent the greater part of his time in England, and departed from England, and that there was a presumption, which the evidence of domicil and Scottish connections was insufficient to displace, that English law was to be applied in computing the length of his stay. They found that the taxpayer's stay was to be deemed to have commenced from the first moment of the day of arrival, and that, therefore, the six-months period expired at the last moment of Dec. 1, when the taxpayer was still in the United Kingdom, and that, accordingly, he actually resided in the United Kingdom for a period of six months in the year of assessment 1947-48. Before the court the taxpayer abandoned both the contentions he advanced before the Special Commissioners, and contended instead that the length of stay should be computed in hours. The Crown repeated their contention that fractions of a day should count as a day, and in addition contended that "six months" in r. 2 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D meant six lunar months.

Pennycuik, K.C., and Bowe for the taxpayer.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Reginald Manningham-Buller, K.C.) and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

DONOVAN, J., stated the facts and the contentions of the parties before the Special Commissioners and continued: In this court the Crown also advanced a new and more radical contention. They said that the expression "six months" in r. 2 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918, meant six lunar months. A lunar month is twenty-eight days, and six lunar months, therefore, comprise 168 days. The taxpayer was admittedly actually resident in the United Kingdom for more than this number of days in 1947-48, and, therefore, it is said, he is taxable. If this interpretation of "six months" be right, there is an end of this case, and I, therefore, proceed at once to consider it. The argument runs thus. Rule 2 is a reproduction of s. 39 of the Income Tax Act, 1842. In 1842 the word "month," when used in a statute, meant, in the absence of a special definition to the contrary, a lunar month: see the authorities cited in STROUD'S JUDICIAL DICTIONARY, 2nd ed., at p. 1224. The Interpretation Act, 1889, by s. 3, provides that in all Acts passed since 1850 "month" means calendar month unless the contrary intention appears. The contrary intention does appear in the present Income Tax Act passed in 1918, for the legislature cannot have intended to alter r. 2 so as to change the meaning of "six months" in that rule from lunar into calendar months, for that would make the rule unworkable.

Before dealing with this argument, I had better explain why the Crown alleges that r. 2 would be unworkable if "six months" be construed as six calendar months. The rule prescribes as one condition for exemption from tax that the person involved

"has not actually resided in the United Kingdom at one time or several times for a period equal in the whole to six months in any year of assessment."

So that where a person was actually resident here intermittently in the year of assessment, you must necessarily find out how many days he was here and add up the number and see if "in the whole" they equal the number of days in six months. You can do that, says the Crown, by treating "month" as meaning simply twenty-eight days, i.e., a lunar month. You cannot do it by treating the word as meaning calendar month. For example, suppose a person is here for fifteen days in May, fifteen days in June and fifteen days in July, how many calendar months is that, seeing that a calendar month may be twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, or thirty-one days according to which month you choose and whether or not it is leap year? Therefore, starting with the proposition that before 1850 "month" in a statute meant lunar month, which makes the rule workable, it must be assumed that in 1918 the legislature did not intend to make it unworkable. Six months, therefore, it is urged, still means six lunar months. I am not prepared to accept the initial premise on which this argument is based, for, if six months in the Act of 1842 meant six lunar months, there was no need for the legislature to deal with the case of an intermittent actual residence in the way it did. It dealt with that case by enacting that a person should not be charged who had not "actually resided in the United Kingdom at one time or several times for a period equal in the whole to six months in any year of assessment." But if "month" meant "lunar month," then, since "lunar month" simply means twenty-eight days, all that the legislature needed to do, to cover both continuous and intermittent actual residence, was to say, "who has not actually resided in the United Kingdom for six months in the year of assessment." Then you could add up the days of residence simply to find out whether they totalled six times twenty-eight, namely, 168 days. Moreover, I see no rational purpose behind a provision that the months shall be lunar months. When one is determining how long a foreigner or a Briton from abroad should be allowed to stay in the United Kingdom before contributing, through income tax, to the expenses of the State, there is at least something intelligible, if arbitrary, about selecting one-half of the fiscal year. But to tax him because he has been here for 168 days out of 365 is unintelligible and merely whimsical. In any event, if the Crown's initial premise were correct, I think the Interpretation Act involves that "six months" in r. 2 now means six calendar months, for I reject the view that a contrary intention can be read into the Income Tax Act, 1918, for the reasons suggested by the Crown inasmuch as I hope to show that the rule does not become unworkable by construing "six months" as six calendar months.

If that be the right construction of the term, then this much at least is common ground—it is right to apply the rule by adding up the number of days a person has been actually resident in order to see whether those days, whether continuous or discontinuous, equal the number of days in six calendar months.

But what is one to do about fractions of a day, for a person's stay will almost always begin and end with a fraction of a day? There are these alternatives: (i) To disregard altogether the day of arrival and to treat the day of departure as a whole day. Such a proceeding is, in my view, more appropriate where the words prescribing the period are words such as "so many days from a particular event." The expression I have to construe is simply "for a period equal to . . . six months." (ii) To include the day of arrival as a whole day and to ignore the day of departure. For such a test I see no justification here. (iii) To ignore both the day of arrival and the day of departure altogether. This, however, is appropriate, in my view, only when the expression to be construed is "so many clear days," or words to that effect. (iv) To treat both the day of arrival and the day of departure as whole days. It is for this latter method that the Crown contend, and this whether "six months" means six lunar or six calendar months. Applying it to the present case, the result is, they say, as follows. The taxpayer was here from June 2 to Dec. 2, 1947. On June 2 and on Dec. 2 he was here for part of the day. Treat each of those days as a full day of actual residence on the part of the taxpayer. On this basis he was here for 184 days, which is over one-half of 1947-48, which, as I have said, comprised 366 days, so he was here for six months in the year of assessment and is taxable.

To determine whether this is the right approach to the problem, I think it is desirable to bear in mind the precise circumstances in which r. 2 comes into operation. First, there is a charge to tax imposed under sched. D by the opening charging words of r. 1 on income arising to any person residing in the United Kingdom from property whether situate in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. Then Miscellaneous Rule, r. 2, provides that a person shall not be charged to tax under sched. D if he proves three things: (i) he is here for a temporary purpose: (ii) he has no intention of establishing his residence here: (iii) he has not actually resided here on and off for six months in the year of assessment. In the present case the first two conditions are admittedly satisfied, and so, when face to face with the Revenue, the taxpayer has to prove, and to prove only, his satisfaction of condition no. (iii). He can do that if he, also, can pray in aid the method of treating fractions of a day as a whole day. For he was actually resident outside the United Kingdom for part of June 2, 1947, and for part of Dec. 2, 1947. Treating each of those days as a full day of actual residence outside the United Kingdom, then he was so resident for more than 183 days, i.e., for more than six months. Therefore, he was not actually resident in the United Kingdom for six months. Why should not the taxpayer, as well as the Crown, invoke the rule about treating fractions of a day as a whole day? Because, says the Crown, what you are really determining under the rule is how long a person is actually resident here and nothing else. I do not accept this. You are also determining how long he has not actually resided in the United Kingdom. In the order of events it is the taxpayer who has to prove that first. No doubt, one method of doing this is to prove how long he actually resided in the United Kingdom, but that does not make it right to say that that is the only issue to be decided under the rule. Indeed, if the taxpayer fails to prove that he actually resided outside the United Kingdom for the requisite period, then he does not displace the existing charge to tax, so that the concluding words of the rule beginning, "but if any such person," give the Crown no greater rights to tax than they would have if the words were not there, as the Solicitor-General agreed.

One view of how r. 2 should be construed is, therefore, this. The taxpayer can treat any day for a part of which he was not actually resident in the United Kingdom as being a day for the whole of which he was not so actually resident, i.e., by invoking the rule that fractions of a day count as a whole day. If the result is to show that he was actually resident outside the United Kingdom for a number of days greater than the number of days in six calendar months of the year of assessment in question, then he qualifies for the exemption, and the inquiry need go no further. One need not go on to consider the effect of the concluding words of the rule. This view, I confess, makes a very strong appeal to me. But it does side-step any difficulty that may arise if one takes into account the concluding words of the rule and applies in any given case the same method of treating fractions of a day as a whole day. On the whole, I feel it is better to face any such difficulty, and to see whether there is any reasonable construction of the rule which will resolve it.

The concluding words of the rule are, "but if any such person resides in the United Kingdom for the aforesaid period he shall be so chargeable for that year." Applying the same rule about fractions of a day, one arrives at the result in this case, as already narrated, that in 1947-48 the taxpayer was actually resident in the United Kingdom for 184 days, i.e., over six months. So that, by applying the rule about fractions of a day one gets the absurdity that the taxpayer is actually resident outside the United Kingdom for more than six months and actually resident inside the United Kingdom for more than six months. In other words, he is both exempt and chargeable under the rule. This absurdity, remarkable even in an Income Tax Act, the Crown seeks to resolve by asserting that really the thing one is seeking to discover under the rule is whether the taxpayer was actually resident in the United Kingdom for six months and seeking to discover nothing else. I have already given my reasons for disagreeing with that view.

The taxpayer says the absurdity can easily be avoided by rejecting the method of treating fractions of a day as a whole day, and he says it would be right to do so on any question arising under r. 2 at any rate. The reasons are these. First, because there is no general rule established in English law that fractions of a day should count as a whole day. The method to be employed in computing time must be determined by the terms of the instrument, be it statute or something else, which requires the computation; see in Re North. Ex p. Hasluck (1) ([1895] 2 Q.B. 269) where LORD ESHER, M.R., says:

"I think that this appeal should be dismissed. No general rule exists for the computation of time either under the Bankruptcy Act or any other statute, or, indeed, where time is mentioned in a contract, and the rational mode of computation is to have regard in each case to the purpose for which the computation is to be made. Notwithstanding the elaborate array of authorities which have been cited to us, they seem on being sifted to contain no binding rule to the effect that time must be computed according to a hard and fast rule: that seems clear from the judgment in Lester v. Garland (2), in which SIR WILLIAM GRANT, after a learned examination of the whole subject, laid down what I conceive to be the wholesome view that no general rule exists."

Secondly, it is argued that the terms of r. 2 require the period of "actual" residence to be computed, and "actually" means truly and in fact, and is the reverse of notional. If, therefore, the so-called general rule is out of the way, why, in order to determine the actual period that a person is resident outside the United Kingdom or inside it, should you not use in the computation a lower unit of time if it be necessary to do so to arrive at the truth and avoid a fiction? To do that here you should regard complete days of actual residence and actual non-residence and at the hours in the case of days when the taxpayer was here for a part of the day and elsewhere for the rest, and then see whether or not it all adds up to the amount of time that there is in six months. If you do that and express the taxpayer's period of actual residence in this country in hours, you find—as is the truth—that he was here for a less number of hours than there were in six calendar months of 1947-48.

In answer the Crown says that this construction would impose such an undue administrative burden on the Revenue that the legislature could never have intended it. The Revenue officers, they say, would have to discover the exact hours of arrival and departure of the taxpayer, making allowances for summer time here and abroad, and even, perhaps, deciding when the three mile limit of the territorial waters of the United Kingdom was crossed. The argument of undue administrative inconvenience is a legitimate one when considering which of two rival constructions of a statute should be adopted, but it has very little weight in the present case. For the burden of proving the facts justifying exemption under r. 2 lies on the taxpayer, who has to establish his case for exemption. And the cases where it is necessary to get down to hours in this connexion must be very rare. Rule 2 has been in operation for 109 years at least, and this is the first time that the courts have been asked to construe the words "six months" appearing in it. The reason, no doubt, is that those desiring to obtain the benefit of the rule take care to give themselves a margin of safety, and will continue to do so wherever possible. I do not think, therefore, that the construction contended for by the taxpayer involves any administrative nightmare. On the other hand, that construction has these merits. First, it gives effect to the word "actually." Secondly, it makes the rule entirely workable. Thirdly, it makes the operation of the rule the same in Scotland as in England, and there is some reason, as the Case Stated discloses, at least to suspect that the rule whereby fractions of a day sometimes count as a whole day in England does not prevail in Scotland.

I come to the conclusion that the taxpayer's construction should be upheld, and I declare that when computing the period of six months for the purposes of r. 2 there is nothing in the language of the rule to prevent hours being taken into the computation, but that, on the other hand, since what has to be determined is the period of actual residence, it is legitimate to do so. Several judicial decisions were cited to me on how time has been computed under other statutes for other purposes—for example, what a sentence of six months' imprisonment involves. The result was an interesting hour or two, but, since the present point is free from judicial authority and I can find a solution within the four corners of the rule itself and the argument I have heard on its language, I do not further burden this judgment with a recitation and examination of those cases. The Special Commissioners obviously devoted much time and care to the consideration of the arguments addressed to them, and, since I am reversing their decision, it is only fair that I should record that I do so as a result of contentions which they never had an opportunity of considering.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: May, May & Deacon (for the taxpayer); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GULLIVER v. CATT AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Barry, J.), November 2, 7, 8, December 12, 1951.]

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Claim by landlord for compensation for breach of covenant—Jurisdiction of court to entertain—Notice to quit given before Mar. 1, 1948—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (c. 9), s. 10—Agriculture Act, 1947 (c. 48), s. 29 (1), s. 44 (1)—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 57 (1), s. 70 (1).

On Dec. 16, 1947, the landlord of a farm served on the tenants notice to quit expiring on Sept. 29, 1949. After the expiry of the notice he brought an action against the tenants and obtained judgment for possession. The tenants contended that the court had no jurisdiction to deal with a further claim in the action for damages for breach of a covenant for the repair and maintenance of the holding which, they said, must be determined by arbitration under the Agricultural Holdings Acts.

HELD: (i) the notice to quit had been given before the commencement of the Agriculture Act, 1947 (i.e., Mar. 1, 1948), and when the tenants quitted the holding they would do so in consequence of that notice: Preston v. Norfolk County Council ([1947] 2 All E.R. 124), applied; in view of the date of the notice to quit and of the date when the tenants would quit the holding, under s. 99 of, and sched. VIII to, the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, and s. 34 (1) of the Act of 1947 the application of s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1947 was excluded and the landlord's right to compensation was regulated by s. 10 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, which did not contain any provision postponing the landlord's claim to the tenants' quitting the holding on the termination of the tenancy; therefore, the claim for damages was not a claim arising "on or out of the termination of the tenancy," and the provisions of s. 44 (1) of the Act of 1947 and s. 70 (1) of the Act of 1948, which required such a claim to be determined by arbitration in accordance with those Acts, did not apply.

(ii) s. 70 (1) of the Act of 1948 was a provision "relating to the rights of landlords . . . to compensation" and the "recovery of compensation" within s. 99, and, therefore, the provisions of s. 70 (1) did not apply.

(iii) the provisions of s. 44 (1) of the Act of 1947 were "provisions relating to compensation" within s. 34 (1) of the Act, and, as the tenants would quit the holding in consequence of a notice to quit given before the commencement of the Act, the provisions of s. 44 (1) had no effect.

(iv) therefore, the landlord's rights were regulated by s. 16 (1) of the Act of 1923 and the court had jurisdiction to entertain the claim.

Lowther v. Clifford ([1927] 1 K.B. 130), applied.

FOR THE AGRICULTURE ACT, 1947, s. 34 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 1, p. 589.

FOR THE AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACT, 1948, s. 99, see ibid., Vol. 28, p. 97.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Preston v. Norfolk County Council, [1947] 2 All E.R. 124; [1947] K.B. 775; [1947] L.J.R. 1301; 177 L.T. 390; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Lowther v. Clifford, [1927] 1 K.B. 130; 95 L.J.K.B. 576; 135 L.T. 200; 90 J.P. 113; Digest Supp.
- (3) Olive v. Paynter, [1932] 2 K.B. 666; 101 L.J.K.B. 786; 148 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.

ACTION for possession of a house and farm, and (inter alia) damages for breach of covenant relating to the repair and maintenance of the premises.

The landlord, the plaintiff in the action, had let the house and farm, Great Worsham, Bexhill-on-Sea, to a Mrs. Ethel Mary Catt on a yearly tenancy commencing on Sept. 29, 1937. After the death of Mrs. Catt the administrators of her estate remained as tenants and continued to farm the holding. On Dec. 16, 1947, the landlord served a valid notice to quit on the tenants, requiring them to deliver up possession of the farm on Sept. 29, 1949. The tenants contended inter alia that the court had no jurisdiction to deal with the claim for damages for breach of covenant on the ground that by virtue of the Agriculture Act, 1947, s. 29 (1) and s. 44 (1), and the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 57 (1) and s. 70 (1), such a claim could only be adjudicated on by an arbitrator appointed under the Agricultural Holdings Acts. The landlord contended that these sections did not apply because the notice to quit had been given before the commencement of the Act of 1947 (Mar. 1, 1948).

Laskey for the landlord.

Percy Lamb, K.C., and Widgery for the tenants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 12. BARRY, J., read a judgment in which he stated the facts, held that the landlord was entitled to an order for possession, and continued: I must now turn to the second important issue which has been raised in this case. The tenants contend that the court has no jurisdiction to deal with the landlord's claim for damages for breach of covenant either by direct decision or by reference to an official referee or arbitrator under the Rules of the Supreme Court. A claim of this nature made by the landlord of an agricultural holding against his tenant can, it is said, only be adjudicated on by an arbitrator appointed under the Agricultural Holdings Acts, and is subject to the provisions as to notice and other matters which are contained in those statutes. Counsel for the tenants conceded that, prior to the coming into operation of the Agriculture Act, 1947, there was a number of decisions of the Court of Appeal, binding on me, which established that claims such as the present, which arose out of breaches of the contract of tenancy and were independent of any right to compensation conferred on a landlord or tenant by the Acts themselves, could be heard and determined by the King's courts despite the arbitration provisions of the earlier Acts, and, in particular, those of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923. His argument is based on the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, or, alternatively, the Agriculture Act, 1947, which, in his submission, have altered the law and effectively withdrawn all such cases from the jurisdiction of the courts.

The tenants' arguments can be quite shortly stated. Section 57 (1) of the Act of 1948, which, in matters material to this case, is similar in terms to s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1947, provides that a claim by a landlord for compensation under and in accordance with a written contract of tenancy in respect of the dilapidation or deterioration of, or damage to, the holding may only be made on the tenant quitting the holding on the termination of the tenancy. The tenants say that the present claim is a claim for compensation or damages in respect of the dilapidation or deterioration of, or damage to, the holding, and thus falls within the provisions of one or other of those sections. The claim cannot, therefore, be made until the tenant quits the holding—i.e., until the termination of the tenancy—and, for this reason, says counsel, it becomes a claim which arises on or out of the termination of the tenancy. Section 70 (1) of the Act of 1948 and s. 44 (1) of the Act of 1947 both provide that any claim of whatever nature by the landlord of a holding against his tenant which arises under any agreement and on or out of the termination of the tenancy shall be determined by arbitration either under the Act of 1948, or, in the case of s. 44 (1) of the Act of 1947, under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923. Counsel for the tenants contends that the present claim is one which arises under an agreement. The tenancy here expired after Mar. 1, 1948, when the Act of 1947 came into operation, and, therefore, it falls within s. 57 (1) of the Act of 1948 or s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1947. Thus, says counsel, it is brought in the clearest possible terms within the ambit of s. 70 (1) or s. 44 (1) and it must be referred to arbitration under one or other of these sections. The argument proceeds on the basis that nothing in the savings clauses in either the Act of 1947 or that of 1948 can alter this position. Section 44 (5) of the Act of 1947 expressly provides that nothing in s. 54 of the Act of 1923, which contains a general saving for the remedies of a landlord or a tenant, shall be construed as limiting the generality of the provisions of sub-s. (1) of this section. The same object is achieved in the later Act by an amendment to the savings clause itself, namely, s. 101, which is now made subject to the provisions of s. 70 (1) of that Act. The provisions of s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1947 or s. 57 (1) of the Act of 1948, to which I have referred, had no counterpart in s. 10 of the Act of 1923 nor in any of the earlier agricultural legislation. Neither the Act of 1923 nor the earlier Acts postponed claims by the landlord for dilapidation or deterioration of, or damage to, the holding made under a contract of tenancy at the time when the tenant quitted the holding on the termination of the tenancy. Moreover, the savings clauses in the earlier Acts were not qualified as they now are in the Acts of 1947 and 1948. In these circumstances, says counsel for the tenants, the decisions of the Court of Appeal on the interpretation of the Act of 1923 and the earlier Acts can no longer be regarded as correctly stating the law which now applies to tenancies which terminate after Mar. 1, 1948, i.e., the date of commencement of the Act of 1947.

This argument is a formidable one. There may be answers to it, but I think it is unnecessary for me to reach any decision on the merits of the point raised, as I am quite satisfied that the sections of the Acts of 1947 and 1948 on which the whole argument is based do not apply to the present case. Here the notice to quit was given on Dec. 16, 1947, before the commencement of the Agriculture Act, 1947. Having regard to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Preston v. Norfolk County Council (1) I think it is clear that the tenants will quit this holding, when they do so, in consequence of that notice, although their departure may be precipitated by the present litigation. If and so far as this is a question of fact, I find without hesitation that their quitting is, or will be, in consequence of that notice.

It thus becomes necessary to consider the application of the Acts of 1947 and 1948 to cases in which the tenant quits the holding after the commencement of those Acts, but in consequence of a notice given before the commencement of the Act of 1947, i.e., before Mar. 1, 1948. I am not unmindful of the argument of counsel for the tenants as to the retrospective effect of procedural enactments, but here, as I see it, I need not—and, indeed, cannot—resort to any general rules of construction, because the answer is to be found in the express provisions of the Acts themselves. Section 99 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, provides:

“ . . . where the tenant . . . quits . . . after the commencement of this Act in consequence of a notice to quit given . . . before Mar. 1, 1948 . . . the provisions of this Act, so far as relating to the rights of landlords, tenants and occupiers to compensation . . . the payment and recovery of compensation . . . shall not apply, and in lieu thereof the enactments specified in sched. VIII to this Act, so far as relating to the matters aforesaid, shall continue to apply and shall . . . be excepted . . . ”

(from repeal under s. 98). Schedule VIII to the Act of 1948 incorporates a reference to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, and Part III (with one irrelevant exception) of the Agriculture Act, 1947. It is, therefore, necessary to look at the Acts of 1923 and 1947 to ascertain the law applicable to the present claim. When one looks at Part III of the Act of 1947, it will be found to contain a number of sections dealing with compensation—in particular, ss. 22, 29 and 30. To s. 29 I have already referred. Section 34 (1) of the Act of 1947 provides that the provisions relating to compensation in Part III of the Act (and these provisions clearly include s. 29 (1)) shall not have effect if the tenant of a holding quits the holding in consequence of a notice to quit given before the commencement of this Part of the Act, i.e., Mar. 1, 1948. Thus, as I see it, it is clear that s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1947 is not applicable to the landlord's present claim, and his statutory right to compensation is regulated by s. 10 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923.

This section, as I have already indicated, does not postpone the landlord's claim for compensation under a written contract of tenancy to the tenants' quitting the holding on the termination of the tenancy as do s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1947 and s. 57 (1) of the Act of 1948, and thus, as I see it, the basic premise of the tenants' whole argument seems to me to be destroyed. In the absence of any provision postponing the landlord's claim, I can see no ground for holding that an ordinary claim such as this for damages for breach of the repairing and other covenants under a lease is one which arises “on or out of the termination of the tenancy.” Such a claim may be made on the termination of a tenancy or it may be made while the tenancy still continues. The present claim was brought after the notice to quit had expired, but the operative word in the Acts is not “bring,” but “arise,” and I am satisfied that this claim is not one which arises on or out of the termination of the tenancy. Indeed, as I understand it, counsel for the tenants did not seek to establish that it was, except by invoking the aid of the express words of s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1947, or s. 57 (1) of the Act of 1948, neither of which, to my mind, is applicable to the present claim.

Can the tenants obtain assistance from any of the other sections of the Acts of 1947 and 1948 on which counsel relied? I do not think they can. It is, first, necessary to consider whether the arbitration sections in these two Acts apply at all to the present claim. Section 70 (1) of the Act of 1948 is, I think, a provision within the meaning of s. 99. That is a section relating to the settlement of claims and, I think, relates to the “recovery of compensation.” If I am right in this view, the Act of 1948 can be wholly disregarded and one must turn to the Act of 1947. Can s. 44 (1) of that Act, which is entitled “Provisions as to arbitration,” be properly classed as one of the “provisions relating to compensation” referred to in s. 34 (1) of that Act? On the whole I think it can. The wording of s. 34 (1) is not so clear as that of s. 70 (1) of the Act of 1948, as the phrase “recovery of compensation” is not to be found in s. 34 (1). None the less, even without the assistance of this phrase, I think that the words “provisions relating to compensation” are wide enough to cover the procedural enactments which regulate the recovery of compensation.

“relating to the rights of landlords, tenants and occupiers to compensation” [and] “the payment and recovery of compensation”

In my judgment, therefore, s. 34 (1) expressly excludes the application of s. 44 (1) to the present case, as the tenants will quit the holding in consequence of a notice to quit given before Mar. 1, 1948. If I am right in this view, the landlord's rights are regulated by s. 16 of the Act of 1923, which was the very section interpreted by the Court of Appeal in the cases of Lowther v. Clifford (2), Olive v. Paynter (3) and Preston v. Norfolk County Council (1), to which I have already referred. It is true that in these cases s. 16 was interpreted in the light of s. 54, which was the “savings” section of the Act of 1923. For the purposes of this case, however, there is no material difference between the wording of that section and the savings sections of the two later Acts. The qualification of s. 54 of the Act of 1923, which is to be found in s. 44 (6) of the Act of 1947, cannot be relied on because, as I have already indicated, s. 44 in its entirety is inapplicable to the present claim. Again, the opening words of s. 101 of the Act of 1948, on which counsel for the tenants relied, do not affect the present case, since s. 70 (1) of the same Act, which is therein referred to, is also, in my judgment, wholly inapplicable to this claim. On this construction of the two latter Acts, the landlord's present claim is regulated by enactments substantially identical with those considered by the Court of Appeal in the cases to which I have referred, and I am clearly bound by those authorities, which there is no necessity for me to review.

I do not think that the position is in any way altered if I am wrong in my view that the arbitration sections—viz., s. 70 (1) or s. 44 (1)—of the later Acts do not apply where the tenant quits the holding as a result of a notice to quit given before Mar. 1, 1948. Even if one or other of these sections is applicable, they both refer in terms to claims which arise “on or out of the termination of the tenancy.” I have already indicated that without the aid of s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1947 or s. 57 (1) of the Act of 1948 the landlord's present claim cannot be said to fall within this category. Thus, in my judgment, the landlord is entitled to pursue his claim for damages for breach of covenant in the ordinary courts.

Judgment for the landlord for possession and mesne profits. Claim for damages referred to an Official Referee.

Solicitors: Edwin Coe & Calder Woods, agents for Tomkins & Bowes, Bexhill-on-Sea (for the landlord); Blyth, Dutton, Wright & Bennett, agents for Menneer, Idle & Brackett, St. Leonards-on-Sea (for the tenants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re LUCAS (deceased). BENNETT AND ANOTHER v. LUCAS AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), December 7, 1951.]

Affidavit—Evidence by affidavit—Cross-examination of deponent—Service of notice—Deponent out of jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 38, r. 28.

Under R.S.C., Ord. 38, r. 28, when evidence is taken by affidavit any party desiring to cross-examine a deponent who has made an affidavit filed on behalf of the opposite party may serve on the party by whom such affidavit has been filed a notice in writing requiring the production of the deponent for cross-examination at the trial. That notice may be served notwithstanding that the deponent is out of the jurisdiction, and if the deponent is produced his affidavit shall not be used as evidence save by special leave of the court or a judge.

AS TO TRIAL ON AFFIDAVITS AND CROSS-EXAMINATION OF DEPONENTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 782-785, paras. 859-862; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 22, pp. 523-526, Nos. 5583-5614.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine, inter alia, whether the plaintiffs, as the personal representatives of Oliver Lucas deceased, ought to admit or reject or how otherwise deal with the claim of the defendant, Lily Adelaide Lucas, the widow of the deceased, to have been the absolute owner of a herd of Ayrshire cattle which, at the death of the deceased, was kept on his property.

At all material times this defendant was living in the Bahamas. The defendants in the opposing interest served a notice under R.S.C., Ord. 38, r. 28, requesting her production in order that she might be cross-examined on her affidavit evidence.

R. R. A. Walker for the plaintiffs, the personal representatives.

Bathurst for the first defendant, Lily Adelaide Lucas.

Lionel Edwards for the second and third defendants, other beneficiaries under the deceased's will.

ROXBURGH, J.: The defendant, Mrs. Lucas, is the widow of the testator, Oliver Lucas, and she claims ownership of a herd of Ayrshire cattle (or the proceeds of sale thereof) which was on property belonging to the testator at the time of his death. In those circumstances counsel for the executors and trustees took out a summons asking whether the plaintiffs ought

“to admit or reject or how otherwise deal with the claim of the defendant [Mrs. Lucas] to have been absolute owner of a herd of Ayrshire cattle known as the Morton Bagot herd which, at the death of the above named deceased, was kept on his property, Morton Bagot Manor and neighbouring lands.”

That is the only form of question which can properly be asked by originating summons in this type of case, but the adverse claimant often submits to have the actual claim dealt with on the originating summons. The defendant, Mrs. Lucas, has done so in this case.

Mrs. Lucas is resident in the Bahamas. On Aug. 2, 1950, she filed an affidavit and on Mar. 13, 1951, the other two defendants to the application served notice under R.S.C., Ord. 38, r. 28, requesting her production for cross-examination. Order 38, r. 28, provides:

“When the evidence is taken by affidavit, any party desiring to cross-examine a deponent who has made an affidavit filed on behalf of the opposite party may serve upon the party by whom such affidavit has been filed, a notice in writing, requiring the production of the deponent for cross-examination at the trial, such notice to be served at any time before the expiration of fourteen days next after the end of the time allowed for filing affidavits in reply, or within such time as in any case the court or a judge may specially appoint; and unless such deponent is produced accordingly, his affidavit shall not be used as evidence unless by the special leave of the court or a judge."

I am told that Mrs. Lucas was in the Bahamas at the date of the service of the notice under that rule and is there today, and I am proceeding on that footing.

There has been a long-standing question whether this rule applies to a deponent who is outside the jurisdiction. I cannot see why it should not apply. It is not a rule providing for the service of a notice on the deponent; it provides for the service of a notice on the party by whom the affidavit has been filed. The rule is not absolute, because it says:

" . . . unless [the] deponent is produced . . . , his affidavit shall not be used as evidence unless by the special leave of the court or a judge."

In the case of a deponent who is outside the jurisdiction, it is plain to me that the judge would give special leave if he were satisfied that the attendance of the witness was wholly unnecessary. If, on the other hand, the judge thought that his cross-examination was desirable, he would consider whether in the circumstances it was reasonable or necessary to bring him to this country for cross-examination, and he would act accordingly. In some cases he might think it imperative that the witness should come if his evidence was to be used at all, but in many, perhaps in most, cases the judge would probably prefer to have the cross-examination conducted in the country where the witness was to be found and so save the witness the expense of coming to England. But all these matters are matters of discretion which, by the terms of the rule itself, are left to the judge.

I cannot see why the rule should not be applied to a deponent who happens to be outside the jurisdiction. There is certainly no qualification in the rule to that effect. Therefore, in my judgment, as the field is entirely open, I decide that Ord. 38, r. 28, does apply to a deponent who happens to be outside the jurisdiction.

Solicitors: Powell, Skues & Graham Smith, agents for S. J. Grey & Willcox, Birmingham (for the plaintiffs); Ashurst, Morris Crisp & Co. (for the first defendant); Lewis & Lewis and Gisborne & Co. (for the second and third defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

JACKSON v. JOHN DICKINSON & CO. (BOLTON), LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell and Jenkins, L.JJ.), December 14, 1951.]

Legal Aid—Costs—Security for costs—Plaintiff assisted person resident out of jurisdiction—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (c. 51), s. 1 (7) (b).

The plaintiff, who was ordinarily resident abroad, claimed as an assisted person damages for personal injuries. The defendants having applied for an order for security for costs,

HELD: the plaintiff being resident out of the jurisdiction, the fact that he was an assisted person did not disentitle the defendants to an order for security.

Conway v. George Wimpey & Co., Ltd. ([1951] 1 All E.R. 56), distinguished.

FOR THE LEGAL AID AND ADVICE ACT, 1949, s. 1 (7) (b), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 18, p. 534.

Cases referred to:

(1) Re Percy & Kelly Nickel, Cobalt, & Chrome Iron Mining Co., (1876), 2 Ch.D. 531; 45 L.J.Ch. 526; 10 Digest 862, 5813.

(2) Conway v. George Wimpey & Co., Ltd., [1951] 1 All E.R. 56.

(3) Willé v. St. John, [1910] 1 Ch. 701; 79 L.J.Ch. 239; 102 L.T. 383; 42 Digest 258, 2919.

(4) Crozat v. Brogden, [1894] 2 Q.B. 30; 63 L.J.Q.B. 325; 70 L.T. 522; 40 Digest 433, 546.

(5) Burton v. Holdsworth, [1951] 2 All E.R. 381; [1951] 2 K.B. 703.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL of the defendants from an order of Mr. Commissioner GOODMAN ROBERTS, K.C., dated Nov. 29, 1951, reversing an order of the district registrar that the plaintiff should give security for costs.

The plaintiff, who was ordinarily resident in Dublin, claimed damages as an assisted person for personal injuries sustained by him while he was in the employment of the defendants. The defendants contended that, until the regulations referred to in s. 12 (1) (b) (ii) of the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, had been made, in view of the provisions of s. 1 (7) (b) of that Act, they were entitled to security for costs. The plaintiff contended that the case was covered by Conway v. George Wimpey & Co., Ltd. (2), and that, as an assisted person, he could not be ordered to give security.

Marven Everett for the defendants.

P. C. M. Curtis-Bennett for the plaintiff.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of Mr. Commissioner GOODMAN ROBERTS, K.C., allowing an appeal from an order of the district registrar that the plaintiff, who was claiming damages for personal injuries and was out of the jurisdiction, should lodge in court a sum of £25 by way of security for costs. The appeal raises the question whether security can properly be ordered, the plaintiff having become an assisted person under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949.

The general rule as to security is contained in R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 6, which provides:

"In any cause or matter in which security for costs is required, the security shall be of such amount, and be given at such times, and in such manner and form, as the court or a judge shall direct."

In the ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1950, there are notes which summarise the various principles which have been laid down by the courts as to the cases in which security may be ordered. The first note is headed "Residence Abroad," and states (p. 1445):

"The ordinary ground on which security is ordered is residence abroad . . . , and, subject to the exceptions hereinafter mentioned, the rule is inflexible" in Re Percy & Kelly Nickel, Cobalt, & Chrome Iron Mining Co. (1), where it was held that a shareholder of a company who resides out of the jurisdiction and appears to oppose a petition for winding-up the company cannot be required to give security for costs, SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., stated the principles applicable to persons residing abroad. He said (2 Ch.D. 531):

"The principle is well established that a person instituting legal proceedings in this country, and being abroad, so that no adverse order could be effectually made against him if unsuccessful, is by the rules of the court compelled to give security for costs. That is a perfectly well-established and a perfectly reasonable principle . . ."

There is an exception to that rule when it can be shown that there is property in this country against which execution could be levied. Although the principle is to be found in the cases and not in the rules, it is clearly recognised by R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 6A, which provides that

"A plaintiff ordinarily resident out of the jurisdiction may be ordered to give security for costs, though he may be temporarily resident within the jurisdiction."

The plaintiff became an assisted person by virtue of the provisions of the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, s. 1 (7) of which provides:

"Save as expressly provided by this Part of this Act or by regulations made thereunder . . . (b) the rights conferred by this Part of this Act on a person receiving legal aid shall not affect the rights or liabilities of other parties to the proceedings or the principles on which the discretion of any court or tribunal is normally exercised."

Section 2 (2) provides:

"Where a person receives legal aid in connection with any proceedings . . . (e) his liability by virtue of an order for costs made against him with respect to the proceedings shall not exceed the amount (if any) which is a reasonable one for him to pay having regard to all the circumstances, including the means of all the parties and their conduct in connection with the dispute."

That provision plainly supersedes in respect of assisted persons the ordinary rule (with certain exceptions) that an unsuccessful party has to pay the taxed costs. Section 12 provides:

"(1) The Lord Chancellor may make such regulations as appear to him necessary or desirable for giving effect to this Part of this Act or for preventing abuses thereof. (2) Without prejudice to the foregoing sub-section or any other provision of this Act authorising the making of regulations, regulations may . . . (b) regulate the procedure of any court or tribunal in relation to legal aid, and in particular make provision . . . (ii) as to the cases in which and extent to which a person receiving legal aid may be required to give security for costs, and the manner in which it may be given . . ."

We are told that no regulations have so far been made under that power or under any other power affecting the issue which is now before us.

In Conway v. George Wimpey & Co., Ltd. (2), on Nov. 6, 1950, an order for security for costs was made against the plaintiff who was then not an assisted person. On Nov. 16, 1950, he became an assisted person, an emergency certificate being granted him, and it was held that until the regulations envisaged by s. 12 (2) (b) (ii) of the Act of 1949 were made, in the absence of special circumstances an order for security for costs should not be made against an assisted person, and, therefore, the order which had been made would be discharged. The security in that case was in respect of an appeal to this court and was applied for under Ord. 58, r. 15, the last three lines of which provide:

"Such deposit or other security for the costs to be occasioned by any appeal shall be made or given as may be directed under special circumstances by the Court of Appeal."

The question arises whether Conway's case (2) covers the present matter. COHEN, L.J., in his judgment, referred to the position under the Poor Persons procedure, now superseded by the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949. He referred to Willé v. St. John (3), which was parallel to the case before him in that an order for security had been made before the person became a poor person under the Poor Persons procedure as then in force. It was held there that, the litigant having become a poor person, the order for security should be suspended. The lord justice pointed out the difference between the position of a litigant under the Poor Persons procedure and one under the Act of 1949. Under the Poor Persons procedure, if the poor person failed, the opposite party could not recover any costs, whereas under s. 2 (2) (e) of the Act of 1949 the court may order the assisted person to pay the full or part of the costs. COHEN, L.J., said ([1951] 1 All E.R. 57):

"The matter is, therefore, not so plain under the Act of 1949 as it was under the Poor Persons procedure. None the less, until we get the guidance of the regulations which are indicated by the provisions in s. 12 . . . I think we must proceed on the basis that, generally speaking, and in the absence of special circumstances, it would be inappropriate to make an order for security for costs at a time when an emergency certificate is in force."

He goes on to say there were no special circumstances.

An application for security for costs against a plaintiff out of the jurisdiction is based, not on impecuniosity, but on inability to reach the plaintiff or his property and make effective an order for costs against him if he loses his action. In considering the present legislation under which some order might be made against the plaintiff in these proceedings, the inability to reach him or his property, which is the basis of the rule, remains. The fact that he is an assisted person may well be relied on as some indication that a full order for costs will probably not be made against him, but we have had the advantage of having read to us the certificate under which he became an assisted person, and, having regard to the figures therein, it is plain that it may well be that some order for costs may be made against him should he lose the action. In Conway's case (2) COHEN, L.J., was careful to make it clear that he was not seeking to lay down a general rule covering all classes of case and all circumstances. I think, for the reasons I have indicated, that this case falls into a different class for two reasons:—(i) that security is (subject to exceptions which are not relevant) ordered as a matter of course against a plaintiff out of the jurisdiction, and (ii) that the reason for ordering security when a plaintiff is out of the jurisdiction is that, unless he shows he has property within the jurisdiction, an order for costs may be ineffective. Therefore, I have come to the conclusion that the present case is not covered by any rule laid down in Conway's case (2), and that it is right to make an order. The question then arises as to quantum. We were told that the learned registrar, in fixing the sum of £25, had regard to the provisions of the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, and I do not think we should interfere with the sum which he fixed. For these reasons, in my view, this appeal should be allowed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Gardiner & Co., agents for A. W. Mawer & Co., Manchester (for the defendants); Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Lawson, Coppock & Hart, Manchester (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re A DEBTOR (No. 41 OF 1951). Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. HUNTER (LIQUIDATOR OF MARVEL PAPER PRODUCTS, LTD.) AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts and Upjohn, JJ.), December 10, 1951.]

Bankruptcy—Bankruptcy notice—Validity—Debt due to company in liquidation—Notice served and petition presented in name of liquidator and not in name of company in liquidation—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 147 (1).

By an order of the court, made on Feb. 16, 1951, the debtor was ordered to pay the sum of £1,008 3s. 9d. to H. as liquidator of a company in voluntary liquidation in respect of a call on shares and certain costs. A bankruptcy notice, dated June 5, 1951, was served on the debtor by H. in his own name followed by the words "liquidator of" the company. The notice required the debtor to compound or secure the sum of £1,008 3s. 9d. to the satisfaction of H., without describing H. as acting on behalf of the company, or to satisfy the court that he had a counterclaim, set-off, or cross-demand against H., without adding "as liquidator of the company." A petition in bankruptcy, based on the notice, was presented by H., again in his own name followed by the words "liquidator of" the company.

HELD: as the bankruptcy notice was served and the petition presented, not in the name of the company in liquidation, but in the name of H., followed merely by his description, they were wrong in form: Re Winterbottom. Ex p. Winterbottom (1886) (18 Q.B.D. 446); Re Shirley. Ex p. MacKay (1887) (58 L.T. 237); and Re Bassett. Ex p. Lewis (1895) (43 W.R. 427), followed; further, the bankruptcy notice was misleading in that it required the debtor to compound or secure to the satisfaction of H. without describing him as acting for the company, and referred to a counterclaim, set-off, or cross-demand against H. instead of against the company; these were defects which could have misled the debtor and were not formal defects or irregularities which could be remedied under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 147 (1); and, therefore, the bankruptcy notice and petition were bad and the bankruptcy proceedings were ineffective.

Re A Debtor (No. 21 of 1950). Ex p. Debtor v. Bowmaker, Ltd. ([1950] 2 All E.R. 1129), applied.

AS TO BANKRUPTCY NOTICE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, p. 41, para. 52; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 4, pp. 94-98, Nos. 852-881.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Winterbottom. Ex p. Winterbottom, (1886), 18 Q.B.D. 446; 56 L.J.Q.B. 238; 56 L.T. 168; 4 Digest 95, 856.
- (2) Re Shirley. Ex p. MacKay, (1887), 58 L.T. 237; 4 Digest 134, 1228.
- (3) Re Bassett. Ex p. Lewis, (1895), 43 W.R. 427; 4 Digest 134, 1229.
- (4) Re Howes. Ex p. Hughes, [1892] 2 Q.B. 628; 62 L.J.Q.B. 88; 67 L.T. 213; 4 Digest 96, 871.
- (5) Re A Judgment Debtor (No. 530 of 1908), [1908] 2 K.B. 474; 77 L.J.K.B. 968; 99 L.T. 126; 4 Digest 97, 874.
- (6) Re A Debtor (No. 21 of 1950). Ex p. Debtor v. Bowmaker, Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 1129; [1951] Ch. 313; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the debtor from a receiving order made against him by the registrar of Croydon County Court, on Nov. 2, 1951.

Judgment had been obtained against the debtor in respect of a debt due to a company in liquidation. The bankruptcy notice was served and the petition was presented in the name of the liquidator followed by his description of liquidator of the company. It was contended inter alia by the debtor that the notice and petition were bad in form and incapable of amendment as they were respectively served and presented, not by the company in liquidation, but by the liquidator. This point was not taken before the registrar, but leave to take it on appeal was granted by the court.

Muir Hunter for the debtor.

M. Nesbitt for the liquidator and the official receiver.

DANCKWERTS, J.: This is an appeal from a receiving order made against a debtor on a bankruptcy petition in the Croydon County Court. The receiving order made by the registrar was based on a bankruptcy notice, dated June 5, 1951, which was stated to be based on an order dated Feb. 16, 1951, which had been obtained in the winding-up of a company, called Marvel Paper Products, Ltd., by the liquidator, one Archibald William Hunter. The petition and the bankruptcy notice were respectively presented and served by Mr. Hunter, who was at all material times the liquidator of the company. The order of Feb. 16, 1951, which was obtained on an originating summons in the voluntary winding-up of the company, orders that two persons, of whom the debtor is one,

“ . . . do within four days of the service of this order upon them respectively pay to the applicant the said Archibald William Hunter as . . . liquidator [of the company, Marvel Paper Products, Ltd.] at his office situate at 185/188 High Holborn in the county of London the several sums of money set opposite their respective names in the fifth column of the schedule, such sums being the amounts due from the said several persons respectively in respect of the call of £1 per share duly made by the said liquidator on May 2, 1950.”

In the schedule, against the name of the debtor, there is an amount due in respect of the call of £1,000 and a proportion of the costs of the proceedings, £8 3s. 9d., making a total sum of £1,008 3s. 9d. The bankruptcy notice, dated June 5, 1951, bears the heading “Re [the debtor]. Ex parte Archibald William Hunter, liquidator of Marvel Paper Products, Ltd.” In the body of the notice it is addressed to the debtor, giving his address, and continues:

“ Take notice that within seven days after service of this notice on you, excluding the day of service, you must pay to Archibald William Hunter, liquidator of Marvel Paper Products, Ltd., of 185/188 High Holborn W.C.1. in the county of London the sum of £1050 3s. 9d. [the £1008 3s. 9d. plus interest] claimed by Archibald William Hunter liquidator of Marvel Paper Products, Ltd., as being the amount due on a final order obtained by him against you in the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division, Companies Court, dated Feb. 16, 1951, whereon execution has not been stayed. Or you must secure or compound for the said sum to his satisfaction or to the satisfaction of this court; or you must satisfy this court that you have a counterclaim, set-off, or cross-demand against him which equals or exceeds the sum claimed by him and which you could not set up in the action or other proceedings in which the order was obtained.”

It is indorsed with the following note:

“ You are specially to note that the consequences of not complying with the requisitions of this notice are that you will have committed an act of bankruptcy, on which bankruptcy proceedings may be taken against you. If, however, you have a counterclaim, set-off, or cross-demand, which equals or exceeds the amount claimed by Archibald William Hunter liquidator of Marvel Paper Products, Ltd., in respect of the order and which you could not set up in the action or other proceedings in which the said order was obtained, you must within three days apply to this court to set aside this notice, by filing with the registrar an affidavit to the above effect.”

The petition in bankruptcy bears the heading “Ex parte Archibald William Hunter, liquidator of Marvel Paper Products, Ltd.,” and states that the debtor justly and truly indebted to him as liquidator of Marvel Paper Products, Ltd., in the sum of £1,050 3s. 9d.

The first point that is taken before us is that the bankruptcy notice and the petition were wrong in form because they were not served and presented in the name of the company, Marvel Paper Products, Ltd., in liquidation, but were served and presented in the name of Archibald William Hunter who is merely described as the liquidator of the company. There are authorities which are binding on us which establish that, in the case of a sum due to a company in liquidation, a bankruptcy notice and a petition are not correctly served and presented if they are served and presented in the name of the liquidator and not in the name of the company: see Re Winterbottom. Ex p. Winterbottom (1), Re Shirley. Ex p. MacKay (2), and Re Bassett. Ex p. Lewis (3). In the present case it is claimed that the moneys due in respect of calls, which were ordered to be paid by the order of Feb. 16, 1951, were due to the company in liquidation and were only payable to the liquidator, Archibald William Hunter, in his capacity as liquidator, i.e., as the agent of the company, or, as VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J., put the matter (43 W.R. 427) in Re Bassett (3), "as collector of the assets of the company." Unlike the case of a trustee in bankruptcy in whom the assets of the debtor vest, in the case of a company in liquidation the assets, without a special and unusual order of the court, do not vest in the liquidator, but remain vested in the company in liquidation. Therefore, it is plain to me, on those authorities, that the bankruptcy notice and the petition ought to have been served and presented in the name of the company in liquidation and not in the name of the liquidator.

It is also said that there are authorities which show that the bankruptcy notice is bad unless it complies strictly with the form of the judgment on which it is based. In support of that proposition counsel for the liquidator cited Re Lowes. Ex p. Hughes (4), and Re A Judgment Debtor (No. 530 of 1908) (5). It seems to me that on that basis there is a further objection to the bankruptcy notice, viz., that it does not comply with the order of Feb. 16, 1951, which directed payment to "Archibald William Hunter as such liquidator," i.e., as liquidator of Marvel Paper Products, Ltd. The notice requires payment to "Archibald William Hunter liquidator," simply by that description, and does not make it clear, as in the terms of the order, that payment is due to him only as liquidator of the company in liquidation and collector of its assets. Therefore, even on that point it seems to me that the bankruptcy notice is in error. It is also plain that the bankruptcy notice is wrong in form because it is not in the name of the company in liquidation, but is in the name of Archibald William Hunter with the description added, and that it is dangerous and misleading in that it requires compounding or securing to the satisfaction of Mr. Hunter, without describing him as acting on behalf of the company, and refers to a counterclaim, set-off, or cross-demand against him, which is quite a different matter from a counterclaim, set-off, or cross-demand against a company on whose behalf he may be acting, because any private debt of his would be entirely irrelevant. It seems to me, therefore, that the bankruptcy notice is open to objection in all those respects, and the petition is likewise open to objection in that it is not presented in the name of the company in liquidation.

Counsel for the liquidator relied on the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 147 (1), which provides that mere defects of form are not to invalidate proceedings, and he contends that this is a defect which does not cause any substantial injustice and, therefore, ought to be disregarded. That argument seems to me to be discredited by a number of cases, of which the latest is Re A Debtor (No. 21 of 1950). Ex p. Debtor v. Bowmaker, Ltd. (6), in which HARMAN, J., and I had to consider that very matter. The distinction is this. It is not necessary to prove that any debtor has actually been misled. It is sufficient if the possibility of his being misled exists. In the present case it is clear that the debtor could have been misled on the subject of set-off or counterclaim, whether or not he was in fact misled. It has been laid down by the courts again and again that bankruptcy notices are matters of strict form in which defects will be fatal, because they are penal proceedings and, therefore, very closely guarded by the courts. It seems to me that both the bankruptcy notice and the petition in the present case were bad in form, that the proceedings, therefore, for bankruptcy are ineffective, and the appeal should be allowed.

UPJOHN, J.: I agree. For the reasons given by DANCKWERTS, J., I think that the bankruptcy notice was bad in that it was wrongly entitled. It should have been entitled "Ex parte Marvel Paper Products, Ltd." It was also bad in that the statement, "you must satisfy this court that you have a counterclaim, set-off, or cross-demand against him," referring to the liquidator, ought to have referred to a counterclaim, set-off or cross-demand against him as liquidator of the company. I should desire to reserve for further consideration the point taken by DANCKWERTS, J., that the notice did not follow exactly the terms of the order in that it did not indicate that the debtor must pay to Archibald William Hunter as liquidator of Marvel Paper Products, Ltd. As I think that the notice was plainly bad on the other two grounds, I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Warren & Co. (for the debtor); Hextall, Erskine & Mudford (for the liquidator and the official receiver).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

In the Estate of BROMHAM. WASS AND OTHERS v. TREASURY SOLICITOR.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P.), November 20, 1951.]

Will—Dependent relative revocation—Expressed intention to alter will—Delay in carrying out intention.

PROBATE ACTION.

By his will, dated Oct. 3, 1945, the testator, Herbert Henry Bromham, made certain gifts to the three plaintiffs. In 1948 the testator became ill and was taken to hospital. Early in 1949, while he was in hospital, he expressed his intention to alter his will and asked his solicitor to attend on him for instructions. The solicitor died before he could call at the hospital. On hearing this the testator put off the making of a new will and later he became too ill to attend to his affairs. On his death on Jan. 10, 1950, the will was found among his private papers, mutilated. The plaintiffs contended that the revocation of the will by the testator was conditional on the preparation of a new will, and, therefore, the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applied. It was contended for the Treasury Solicitor that, as the precise date of destruction of the will was unknown and there was a long interval between the date when the testator expressed his intention to make a new will and the date of his death, it was impossible to say that the destruction, whenever it took place, was made conditional on the making of a new will.

AS TO DEPENDENT RELATIVE REVOCATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 89, para. 127; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 361-365, Nos. 1944-1978.

Cases referred to:

- (1) In the Goods of Weston, (1869), L.R. 1 P. & D. 633; 38 L.J.P. & M. 53; 20 L.T. 330; 33 J.P. 312; 44 Digest 362, 1951.
- (2) Powell v. Powell, (1866), L.R. 1 P. & D. 209; 35 L.J.P. & M. 100; 14 L.T. 800; 44 Digest 361, 1944.
- (3) In the Goods of Appelbee, (1828), 1 Hag. Ecc. 143; 162 E.R. 536; 44 Digest 363, 1960.
- (4) In the Goods of Eeles, (1862), 2 Sw. & Tr. 600; 32 L.J.P.M. & A. 4; 7 L.T. 338; 27 J.P. 9; 164 E.R. 1130; 44 Digest 363, 1962.
- (5) In the Goods of Cockayne, (1856), Dea. & Sw. 177; 164 E.R. 541; 44 Digest 363, 1961.
- (6) In the Goods of Mitcheson, (1863), 32 L.J.P.M. & A. 202; 44 Digest 355, 1866.
- (7) In the Goods of De Bode, (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 189; 44 Digest 352, 1831.

William Latey, K.C., for the plaintiffs.

Victor Russell for the Treasury Solicitor.

LORD MERRIMAN, P., said that, in considering whether the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applied in any case, the question of the intention with which the will was destroyed was one of fact. The length of the interval between the formation of the intention and the destruction of the will was not necessarily decisive of the question one way or the other. In the present case there was a considerable lapse of time between the date when the testator discussed his intention to make a new will and his death, and it was urged on behalf of the Treasury Solicitor that he might very well have changed his mind. If, at the time when he intended to make a new will, the testator destroyed the existing will with reference to that intention, it did not seem to matter how long a time elapsed before the death, because it was his intention at the time of the destruction of the existing will which mattered. Whether the period which elapsed during which the intended will was not made was a day, a week, a month, or a year could not affect the question of the testator's intention at the time the existing will was destroyed. The lapse of time was important in considering whether the inference could be drawn that, whenever the testator did destroy the existing will, he did so with the intention of making a new will. The lapse of time in the present case left some uncertainty whether the act of destruction coincided with the expressed intention to destroy the existing will before making a new will, but in the circumstances he (HIS LORDSHIP) had no doubt that the destruction of the existing will took place with reference to the testator's intention to make a new will. That being so, the act of revocation was conditional and the subsequent lapse of time immaterial.

Grant of probate of complete draft of mutilated will.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, agents for Marchant & Co., Mansfield (for the plaintiffs); Treasury Solicitor.

A.T.H.

NOTE.Re CAMBRIDGE COFFEE ROOM ASSOCIATION, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), November 26, 1951.]

Company—Winding-up—Petition to wind-up dissolved company—Procedure—Effect of order to wind-up on title to company's property—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 352 (1), s. 353 (5) (6).

PETITION by two directors of the Cambridge Coffee Room Association, Ltd., that (i) the name of the company might be restored to the register of companies, and (ii) the company be wound-up.

On Mar. 19, 1920, the company was incorporated as a company limited by guarantee to encourage temperance and thrift, to acquire and take over a business then being conducted on certain premises, and to carry on the business of caterers and canteen keepers. In 1934 the premises of the company were demolished, and, no alternative premises being found, the work of the company ceased, and its activities thereafter were limited to applying its funds to charitable purposes. In 1939 the secretary retired, and a new secretary was appointed who carried on the affairs of the company from her own address. She overlooked the necessity of notifying her appointment and the company's new address to the Registrar of Companies and was unaware that the company had to submit annual returns. On Aug. 23, 1949, the company was dissolved and its name was struck off the register under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 353 (5), notice being given in the "London Gazette" of that date. In consequence, the property of the company vested in the Crown as bona vacantia under s. 354. None of the letters for which s. 353 makes provision was received by the company from the Registrar of Companies. The memorandum of association provided, inter alia, that on a winding-up or dissolution any property remaining after payment of debts and liabilities should not be distributed among the members, but should be transferred to an institution or institutions which had objects similar to or cognate with the objects of the company. In October, 1950, the management committee of the company desired to wind-up the company and discovered that the company had already been struck off the register. Two of the directors of the company presented a petition to have the company wound-up, but, doubt having arisen whether a simple order for the company to be wound-up would divest the Crown of the property of the company and re-vest it in the company, the petition was amended to ask for the relief stated.

Case referred to:

- (1) Re Dixon, Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 279; [1947] Ch. 251; [1947] L.J.R. 783; 177 L.T. 127; 2nd Digest Supp.

K. W. Mackinnon for the petitioners.

Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

WYNN-PARRY, J.: The only question is whether or not it is more convenient to restore the name of the company to the register before making a compulsory winding-up order. In my judgment, it is more convenient to do so, but I do not intend to cast doubt on past cases where a compulsory winding-up order has been made without the name of the company having been restored to the register. In the present case the company has been struck off the register under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 353 (5), and no question is raised as to the correctness of that action.

By s. 353 (5):

"At the expiration of the time mentioned in the notice the registrar may, unless cause to the contrary is previously shown by the company, strike its name off the register, and shall publish notice thereof in the 'Gazette,' and on the publication in the 'Gazette' of this notice the company shall be dissolved: Provided that (a) the liability, if any, of every director, managing officer and member of the company shall continue and may be enforced as if the company had not been dissolved; and (b) nothing in this sub-section shall affect the power of the court to wind-up a company the name of which has been struck off the register."

By s. 352 (1):

"Where a company has been dissolved, the court may at any time within two years of the date of the dissolution, on an application being made for the purpose by the liquidator of the company or by any other person who appears to the court to be interested, make an order, upon such terms as the court thinks fit, declaring the dissolution to have been void, and thereupon such proceedings may be taken as might have been taken if the company had not been dissolved."

Doubt has been raised whether s. 354 could have any application in view of the terms of s. 352 and s. 353.

By s. 354:

"Where a company is dissolved, all property and rights whatsoever vested in or held on trust for the company immediately before its dissolution (including leasehold property but not including property held by the company on trust for any other person) shall subject and without prejudice to any order which may at any time be made by the court under the two last foregoing sections, be deemed to be bona vacantia and shall accordingly belong to the Crown, or to the Duchy of Lancaster or to the Duke of Cornwall for the time being, as the case may be, and shall vest and may be dealt with in the same manner as other bona vacantia accruing to the Crown, to the Duchy of Lancaster or to the Duke of Cornwall."

In Re Dixon, Ltd. (1) the court made an order declaring that the dissolution of a company was void under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 294 (1) (which is replaced in the Act of 1948 by s. 352 (1)), and it was held that the result was that any property which purported to have been vested in the Crown never so vested, and, therefore, that no order for the re-vesting of such property in the company was necessary.

By s. 353 (6) of the Act of 1948:

"If a company or any member or creditor thereof feels aggrieved by the company having been struck off the register, the court on an application made by the company or member or creditor before the expiration of twenty years from the publication in the 'Gazette' of the notice aforesaid may, if satisfied that the company was at the time of the striking off carrying on business or in operation, or otherwise that it is just that the company be restored to the register, order the name of the company to be restored to the register, and upon an office copy of the order being delivered to the registrar for registration the company shall be deemed to have continued in existence as if its name had not been struck off; and the court may by the order give such directions and make such provisions as seem just for placing the company and all other persons in the same position as nearly as may be as if the name of the company had not been struck off."

Where an order has been made under s. 352 (1) or under s. 353 (6), no question as to bona vacantia can arise under s. 354 because of the words in s. 354

"... subject and without prejudice to any order which may at any time be made by the court under the two last foregoing sections ..."

Section 353 (5) contains no saving provisions similar to those to be found in s. 352 (1) and in s. 353 (6). Section 353 (5) gives no power to wind-up a company, and, for that, jurisdiction must be sought under that Part of the Act dealing with winding-up.

There appears to me to be force in the submission that doubt exists whether a compulsory winding-up order alone amounts to an order "made by the court under the two last foregoing sections" so as to exclude s. 354. I do not propose to construe the sections as I have no desire to cast doubt on previous decisions. In all the circumstances it appears desirable that the petition in such cases should follow the form of this amended petition which asks that the name of the company be restored to the register and then that the company be wound-up.

Solicitors: Waterhouse & Co. (for the petitioners); Treasury Solicitor.

R.D.H.O.

R. v. BLANCHARD.

[LEEDS ASSIZES (Ormerod, J.), December 7, 10, 1951.]

Criminal Law—Evidence—Wife—Competence as witness—Husband charged with committing buggery with wife.

On a charge against a husband of buggery with his wife, the wife is competent to give evidence against her husband.

AS TO EVIDENCE OF THE WIFE OR HUSBAND OF THE DEFENDANT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 217-220, paras. 304-306; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 14, pp. 450-452, Nos. 4757-4785, and Digest Supp.

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Leary (unreported), Leeds Assizes, March, 1942.
- (2) R. v. Lapworth, [1931] 1 K.B. 117; 100 L.J.K.B. 52; 144 L.T. 126; 95 J.P. 2; Digest Supp.
- (3) Reeve v. Wood, (1864), 5 B. & S. 364; 34 L.J.M.C. 15; 34 L.J.Q.B. 24; 11 L.T. 449; 29 J.P. 214; 122 E.R. 867; 14 Digest 450, 4762.
- (4) R. v. Jellyman, (1838), 8 C. & P. 604; 14 Digest 451, 4770.
- (5) R. v. Wakefield, (1827), 2 Lew. C.C. 279; 2 Town St. Tr. 112; Mood. & M. 197n.; 14 Digest 451, 4774.

TRIAL on indictment.

At Leeds Assizes before ORMEROD, J., and a jury Ernest William Blanchard was charged on an indictment with committing buggery with Violet Blanchard, his wife, in September, 1951. When she was called to give evidence counsel for the defence submitted that she was not a competent witness against her husband, and the case is reported on this point only.*

Veale, K.C., and J. S. Taylor for the Crown.

A. W. Stephenson for the defendant.

ORMEROD, J.: In this case Ernest William Blanchard is indicted for committing an unnatural offence on his wife. Counsel for the accused submits that the wife is not a competent witness against her husband on this charge. He submits that it is a well-established general principle at common law that the husband or the wife of a prisoner is not a competent witness against his or her spouse. There have been certain statutory exceptions to that rule which are set out in ARCHBOLD'S CRIMINAL PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE (32nd ed.), at p. 477. None of these exceptions affects this case. There are, in addition, certain other exceptions to the rule, and one well-established exception is that the wife is a competent witness against her husband in cases of personal injury to her. The question I have to decide here is whether in this case, where the husband is accused of buggery against his wife, the offence comes within that exception. I am satisfied that it does.

It was decided by BIRKETT, J., in R. v. Leary (1), that in a case of this kind the wife is a competent witness against her husband, but I think the principle was established long before that. The object of the exception is that in cases of this kind—cases where violence is offered, for instance, by a husband to a wife—it must frequently happen that the only person able to give evidence against the husband is the wife herself. If she were not a competent witness, clearly the ends of justice would be defeated. That in itself, I think, would be sufficient grounds for including an offence of this kind within the exception, but it really goes further than that, because cases of personal injury within the exception have been defined by authority as cases which affect the person or the liberty of the spouse who is being called on to give evidence. I find it impossible to hold that a charge of this kind, which is certainly an offence against the person of the spouse, can be regarded as anything other than a case affecting the person, although not necessarily the liberty, of the spouse. In those circumstances I am satisfied that the wife is competent to give evidence on this charge.

* The defendant was found Not Guilty and was discharged.

Solicitors: E. H. Bullock, town clerk, Hull (for the Crown); Payne and Payne, Hull (for the defendant).

[Reported by G. M. SMAILES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WHITEHILL AND OTHERS v. BRADFORD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Birkett, L.J., and Upjohn, J.), December 10, 11, 12, 13, 1951.]

Trade—Covenant in restraint of trade—Medical practice—Retiring partner prohibited from “directly or indirectly carrying on or being interested or concerned in carrying on the business or profession of medicine . . . within a radius of ten miles”—Reasonableness.

National Health Service—Medical practitioner—Partnership—Goodwill—Clause in partnership agreement prohibiting retiring partner from carrying on practice within ten-mile radius—Validity—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 35 (1)—National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949 (c. 93), s. 1 (1).

The plaintiffs and the defendant carried on the practice of general medical practitioners in Atherstone, in the county of Warwickshire, under a deed of partnership, dated Feb. 9, 1945, cl. 21 of which provided that a retiring and outgoing partner should for twenty-one years be prohibited “from directly or indirectly carrying on or being interested or concerned in carrying on the business or profession of medicine, surgery, midwifery, or pharmacy, or any branch thereof, anywhere within a radius of ten miles of the parish church of Atherstone . . . but the above prohibition shall only apply to a retiring or outgoing partner carrying on or being interested or concerned in the profession of a general medical practitioner.” In 1945 one third of the partnership income was derived from patients living within the ten-mile radius, but outside a five-mile radius. In 1951 ninety-nine per cent. of the patients resorting to the partnership lived within the five-mile radius. Each of the partners had entered his name on the list of medical practitioners undertaking to provide general medical services under the National Health Service Act, 1946. On Sept. 29, 1951, the defendant retired from the partnership, but he continued to carry on his practice in the district.

HELD: (i) on the true construction of cl. 21, the effect of the words at the end of the clause for the purposes of the present case was to limit the prohibition contained in the first part of the clause to the exercise of the profession of medicine, surgery, midwifery, or pharmacy as part of the profession of a general medical practitioner; the words “directly or indirectly” could not be eliminated from the clause, but, as the contract was a partnership agreement between professional men, the words did not carry the effect of the clause beyond what was reasonably required to protect the continuing partners against competition, which was, in such a case, a proper subject-matter for protection; and, on the facts of the case, the prohibition imposed on a retiring partner was not unreasonable as to radius: Empire Meat Co., Ltd. v. Patrick ([1939] 2 All E.R. 85), distinguished; or as to period of time.

(ii) although under the National Health Service Act, 1946, s. 35 (1), a medical practitioner whose name was entered on a list of medical practitioners undertaking to provide general medical services could no longer sell the goodwill or part of the goodwill of his medical practice, that prohibition did not have the effect of destroying the goodwill or of vesting it in the State; as the National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949, s. 1 (5), provided that, in the case of an agreement like the present one, the share of the goodwill of a retiring partner should be transferred to the continuing partners on the terms provided in the agreement except that the purchase price should not be payable by the partners, and that, in lieu thereof, the retiring partner should receive compensation from the State, the goodwill remained one of the assets of the partnership subject only to the limitation that it could not be sold; from s. 1 (5) and s. 1 (12) of the Act of 1949, which provided that the provisions of a partnership agreement which were to take effect on the purchase of a share of the goodwill of the practice should take effect in like manner on a transfer of that share in accordance with s. 1, notwithstanding that the transfer did not constitute a purchase, it was clear that the ordinary principles which applied to covenants in restraint of trade were not affected by the National Health Service Acts, but were still effective, and, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from practising in contravention of cl. 21.

AS TO REASONABLENESS OF CONTRACT IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 403-418, paras. 675-698; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 21-24, Nos. 135-147.

FOR THE NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE ACT, 1946, s. 35, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 15, p. 367.

FOR THE NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1949, s. 1, see ibid., Vol. 28, p. 945.

Cases referred to:

(1) Fitch v. Dewes, [1921] 2 A.C. 158; 90 L.J.Ch. 436; 125 L.T. 744; 43 Digest 34, 276.

(2) Routh v. Jones, [1947] 1 All E.R. 179; affd. C.A. [1947] 1 All E.R. 758; 2nd Digest Supp.

(3) Empire Meat Co., Ltd. v. Patrick, [1939] 2 All E.R. 85; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant, a medical practitioner, from an order of DANCKWERTS, J., dated Oct. 29, 1951, in an action by three medical practitioners, with whom the defendant was formerly in partnership, to enforce a clause in the partnership agreement which prohibited a retiring partner, for a period of twenty-one years from the date of retirement, from directly or indirectly carrying on a practice within a radius of ten miles from the town where the main premises of the partnership business were situated. The agreement was made in 1945 and the defendant retired from the partnership on Sept. 29, 1951, but continued to practise in the district. He contended (a) that the restrictive covenant in the partnership agreement was unreasonably wide in time and space, and (b) that the National Health Service Act, 1946, s. 35 (1), had destroyed the subject-matter of the protection (viz., the goodwill of the business) or had vested it in the Minister of Health. His contentions were rejected by the learned judge, who granted an injunction restraining the defendant from practising in breach of the covenant.

Lindner for the defendant.

Salt, K.C., and H. E. Francis for the plaintiffs.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: The proceedings in the present case afford another illustration of the difficult topic which finds many expressions in the law reports, namely, that of covenants in restraint of trade. The topic is notoriously troublesome, and I confess that I have not found the present case an easy one. I do not propose to add to what LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in Fitch v. Dewes (1) called ([1921] 2 A.C. 163) the generous elucidation of the law in relation to these matters, in that regard adhering to my own example in Routh v. Jones (2). Indeed, the principles may be taken now to be well established, the difficulty being that of their application to the facts of particular cases. The court is here dealing with a covenant entered into mutually between four doctors on the occasion of their executing a partnership agreement for the purpose of carrying on together as partners the business or profession of general medical practitioners.

In cases between master and servant it is, I think, clear that the court looks somewhat closely into the terms of any covenant entered into by the servant and is not disposed to enforce such a covenant if it goes further than is reasonably necessary to protect some subject-matter of contract or proprietary interest legitimately entitled to protection. This approach is adopted by the court, first, because it cannot be otherwise than that a servant on such occasions is at some disadvantage vis-à-vis his employer when the service agreement is made, and, secondly, because it is contrary to the general policy of the law that a man should be impeded in earning his livelihood, according to his own trade, business, or profession, more than is properly requisite for the due protection of his master. In cases arising between vendor and purchaser, or in cases, such as the present, of mutual covenants between professional men, or others, the test of reasonableness still, no doubt, remains, but in cases such as those last mentioned it is not open to question that there is always a proper subject-matter for protection and that protection comprehends that which it does not comprehend in master and servant cases, namely, protection against competition as such. Consequently, in the class of cases with which we are now concerned, it is apparent from the authorities that the court applies what may be called a reasonable construction to the language which is used. The court will not, I conceive, look for fanciful or extravagant possibilities and then reject the covenant because it may be said that some one or more of such possibilities might be comprehended by the strict language of the covenant. If there is still, in the cases now under discussion, a general policy of the law that a man should not be unduly hampered in his capacity to carry on his trade or profession, it is also the policy of the law that contracts freely entered into should, prima facie, be enforced.

In the present case the parties to the contract, each of them educated men with medical qualifications, must be taken to have known what was comprehended, and what they intended should be comprehended, within the ambit of the practice of general medical practitioners on which they were together embarking and in what manner such a practice or profession would be liable to be injured by competition. To that extent what I have said is relevant, but, at the end, the question to be determined has to be determined, not by the understanding between the parties, but on the view taken by the court. I turn, accordingly, to the partnership deed which was made on Feb. 9, 1945. The parties were Dr. Fisher [who retired shortly afterwards, Dr. Spark being taken to the partnership in his place], Dr. Whitehill, Dr. Egan and the defendant, Dr. Bradford. Clause 2 provided that the partnership should commence on Feb. 1, 1945, and should continue for the period of twenty-one years, determinable as therein provided. The business to be carried on was that of general medical practitioners, in continuation of a like business formerly carried on by other persons who are referred to. I suppose that most people have in their minds a general idea of what exactly is comprehended by practice as a general medical practitioner, but, as LORD GREENE, M.R., pointed out ([1947] 1 All E.R. 761) in Routh v. Jones (2), it is not proper for members of the court to rely too much on individual knowledge of these matters. There is, however, some evidence of the nature of such a practice in the answer given by the first plaintiff, Dr. Whitehill, when he was asked in the court below what he meant by "general medical practitioner", his answer being:

"We undertook to advise and treat all cases of medicine, midwifery and surgery. Any cases requiring specialised treatment we would send to the consultants concerned."

Clause 19 of the agreement provided that a partner could serve notice determining the partnership, and the other partners thereupon acquired an option (which was exercised in the present case when the defendant proposed leaving the partnership) of acquiring the share in the business of the outgoing partner. Clause 21 provided:

"A retiring and outgoing partner shall for the period of twenty-one years from the date of such retirement be prohibited from directly or indirectly carrying on or being interested or concerned in carrying on the business or profession of medicine, surgery, midwifery, or pharmacy, or any branch thereof, anywhere within a radius of ten miles of the parish church of Atherstone . . . under a forfeiture of £1,000 to be payable as liquidated damages and not as a penalty and without prejudice to the right of the continuing partner or partners his or their successors or assigns to an injunction to restrain him therefrom but the above prohibition shall only apply to a retiring or outgoing partner carrying on or being interested or concerned in the profession of a general medical practitioner."

The first duty of the court is to construe that clause. Those responsible for its final formulation rendered the task somewhat more difficult by the unusual method of first stating a prohibition and then appending some words with the obvious intention of limiting in some regard the extent of the prohibition originally inserted. The difficulty is evidenced by the fact that, at the end of the appendage, not all the words to which recourse has been had in the earlier part of the clause were repeated. Therefore, the first question is whether, by the effect of what I have called the appendage, the words "directly or indirectly" are eliminated from the prohibition. It is also to be noticed that, whereas in the main part of the clause the formula is used "interested or concerned in carrying on the business or profession", in the appendage the phrase is "interested or concerned in the profession." The construction which I give to this clause does not have the effect of eliminating from the covenant the language "directly or indirectly." In other words, I think that the true effect of the appendage was to limit what otherwise might have been the scope of the phrase "the business or profession of medicine, surgery, midwifery or pharmacy." Without the appendage the result would, on the face of it, have been to have prevented an outgoing partner from carrying on any one of those professions as a specialist, e.g., as a specialist surgeon. Such an activity would not prima facie have involved any competition with the general medical practice carried on by the firm, as in cases requiring a specialist the partners would send the patient to a specialist and not treat him themselves. I think, therefore, that the effect of the words at the end of the clause was to limit the prohibition only in this regard, that the ban on the exercise of the arts of medicine, surgery, midwifery or pharmacy was limited to their exercise as part of, or in connection with, the profession of a general medical practitioner. The result, therefore, for practical purposes, I think, is the same as though, instead of saying "the business or profession of medicine, surgery, midwifery or pharmacy," the clause had read "the business or profession of a general medical practitioner," I am not saying that for all purposes that is the result of the construction, but, so far as this case is concerned, the effect is, I think, the same. There remains, accordingly, as part of the prohibition the somewhat wide and vague formula:

“ . . . directly or indirectly carrying on or being interested or concerned in carrying on the business . . . ”

The main burden of the attack on cl. 21 in the court below by counsel for the defendant was as regards the radius of ten miles. [HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence on the point which showed (a) that, at the date of the trial, as many as ninety-nine per cent. of the number of patients resorting to the partnership were persons living within a five-mile radius, which only included a number of small townships while the ten-mile radius included a number of larger towns, such as Nuneaton, and (b) that, though the number of patients more or less on the periphery of the ten-mile radius was small, it included a number of more affluent persons who had not taken advantage of the National Health Service but paid for the attention which they received, and, at the date when the covenant was entered into, these persons contributed about one-third of the total partnership income. HIS LORDSHIP continued:] As I have said, this is not a case of master and servant. It is a case in which the remaining or continuing partners are entitled to have themselves protected against the competition of an outgoing partner. I quite agree that, as a general principle, if the court concludes that in any respect, e.g., in respect of area, a covenant is wider than reasonable for the protection of that which is entitled to protection, it is not a good answer to say: “ Well, it is only just a little bit too wide and unreasonable.” Empire Meat Co., Ltd. v. Patrick (3), which was cited by counsel for the defendant, illustrates that principle in the case of master and servant. In that case the plaintiffs were butchers, the defendant had been their servant, and a restriction was put on him which barred him from various activities within an area of five miles from certain premises in the city of Cambridge. Delivering the judgment of this court, FINLAY, L.J., said ([1939] 2 All E.R. 93):

“ It is clear on the evidence, and it is found by the judge, that the great bulk of the plaintiffs’ business was within a radius of two miles. If it were necessary, we should be prepared to go further, and to say that the great bulk of it was within a one mile radius, but it is sufficient to say that beyond a two miles radius the customers appear to be quite negligible in number.”

That led the court in a master and servant case to say that it was unreasonable to restrict the ex-employee from earning his livelihood anywhere within a radius of as much as five miles, because there was no appreciable subject-matter which would entitle the plaintiffs to so much protection. It seems to me that the present case is different, and that, in considering whether the radius suggested is too wide properly to protect the continuing partners against the competition of a former partner, it is not sufficient merely to point to the fact that a very small percentage in numbers of the patients which the firm had in 1945 were beyond the five-mile and within the ten-mile radius. I think that the learned judge may, perhaps, have laid less emphasis than counsel for the defendant was entitled to require on the large numerical superiority of the first five miles, so to speak, as against the second, but there is, I think, nothing in his judgment which involves any misapprehension of the facts of the case, and on the whole, therefore, I have come to the conclusion that in a case of this kind there is no sufficient ground for saying that we should interfere with the judge when he held that ten miles was a reasonable area to impose on an outgoing partner.

The next point taken was with regard to the length of time of twenty-one years. Twenty-one years, of course, is a long time, and in practice might, no doubt, well be equivalent to a life banishment from the area concerned, but, again, I am not persuaded that in a case of this kind there is anything vicious in so long a period of time. The partnership, as is evidenced by the second clause, was intended to continue for a long period. A man like the defendant, with his professional qualifications, is a relatively mobile person and the whole of the rest of the United Kingdom is open for the application by him of his professional skill. I am not, therefore, satisfied that twenty-one years is over long.

Now I come to consider the effect of the formula in cl. 21 of the agreement;

“ . . . directly or indirectly carrying on or being interested or concerned in carrying on the business or profession of medicine, surgery, midwifery or pharmacy.”

I agree with counsel for the defendant that there ought not to be any “ common form ” in covenants of this kind. I think it is somewhat unfortunate that the tendency appears to persist of using such formulae as this in covenants of this kind, perhaps without any close reflection on what the results may be. But in considering the language in this case it is important, to my mind, to note that we are here dealing with professional men. If we were dealing with the business of butchers, to revert to the illustration of Empire Meat Co., Ltd. v. Patrick (3), it is clear from the name of the plaintiffs in that case that the business or trade is one which may be carried on by or through the medium of a limited liability company. And if one imposes on a covenantor a prohibition against directly or indirectly being concerned or interested in the particular business which is, or is likely to be, carried on by a limited company, one may be saying that he cannot hold a few shares in a trust company which itself holds the majority of the shares in another company or concern which carries on the trade of butchers. That may very well be fatal to the covenant, but no one has ever suggested (and I cannot think that it will happen in the near future) that the business of a general medical practitioner can be carried on by a limited company. These professional businesses require that professional men having certain professional qualifications shall themselves carry on the business or profession, and, therefore, in such a case as the present this formula cannot, I think, have so wide an effect as it would have in the example I have taken of butchers. Indeed, it has not been easy for the learned counsel in this case to think of examples to which this formula might apply. It may even be that it was inserted in the belief that it really meant nothing or added nothing, and, if it did, my only comment is that it would have been much better left out. Still, there are, perhaps, illustrations which are not extravagant to which the words might have application. To take an example given by counsel for the plaintiffs, if the outgoing partner carried on the business by entering into a partnership with another doctor, that other doctor doing all the work while he, the outgoing partner, remained what is called a sleeping partner, he might then be said to be interested or concerned in carrying on the business though he did nothing himself actively within the area. There is, also, the illustration of financing another to enable that other to carry on the business in the area, or (without being a mere menial servant of a doctor), being an assistant to a doctor carrying on within the area, the nature of his assistance being such as would involve some participation in the conduct of the profession itself. All these cases seem to me to provide some scope for the formula. No one has suggested any obvious or clear meaning which would involve something to my mind altogether unreasonable. The illustrations which I have given do not seem to me to carry the effect of this clause beyond what is reasonably required to protect the continuing partners against competition.

Another point which was debated can be best stated by reference to an example. Suppose that the defendant set up a business with his name on a plate and established a surgery in the centre of the city of Coventry outside the ten-mile radius, would he then, without infringing his obligation, be entitled to go inside the ten-mile limit and attend to patients there or to attend to patients who came from inside the area to his surgery in Coventry? My own view is that the formula which has been used would prevent the outgoing partner from coming in and acting as a doctor to patients within the area although his name-plate and place of business were outside the area. At any rate, I am prepared to assume for this purpose that that is the effect of the clause. Even so, however, I cannot conclude that it goes further than is required to protect the continuing partners against the competition of the former partner, and, this being a case of covenants between professional men, I do not think that there is anything unreasonable in the provision. Finally, I do not think that, if we add all these various points together—the extent of the radius, the length of time, the width and liberality of the language used—one gets a result that in its totality produces something unreasonably wide.

There only remains for discussion the question: What is the result of the impact on this matter of the National Health Service Act, 1946? By s. 35 (1) of the Act medical practitioners who participated in the scheme of the Act could no longer sell their goodwill. That formerly valuable asset of a doctor's practice became no longer saleable by a doctor whose name was entered on a list of medical practitioners undertaking to provide general medical services, and in the present case each of the four partners was a listed doctor. But that prohibition does not, in my judgment, have the effect of destroying the goodwill. Still less does it have the effect of vesting it in the State or in any emanation of the State. The goodwill remains one of the assets of the firm, but it is subject to the limitation that it cannot be sold to other people. So long as the firm carries on, the goodwill must necessarily remain one of its most valuable assets, for by goodwill one means in this case the tendency that patients whom the doctors have treated will continue to resort to that firm for further treatment. The partners' livelihood, therefore, as doctors depends very substantially on the goodwill which they have created and on the extent to which they are able to preserve it. So much, indeed, seems to me to be necessarily implicit in the National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949. Section 1 (5) provides:

"Where any agreement to which this section applies [i.e., a partnership agreement such as the present] imposes an obligation or confers an option on a listed or new listed partner to purchase the share of another partner being a listed partner in the goodwill of the partnership practice . . . that share shall be transferred at the time and on the terms (except as to the payment of the purchase price) provided in the agreement . . ."

Section 1 (5) goes on to provide that the continuing partners do not have to pay the purchase price, but the outgoing partner becomes entitled, at some time (which may or may not have occurred in the present case), to receive compensation. Section 1 (12) provides:

"Where any agreement to which this section applies contains provisions which take effect on the purchase of any share or part of a share of the goodwill of the partnership practice, those provisions shall take effect in like manner on the transfer of that share or part in accordance with this section, notwithstanding that the transfer does not constitute a purchase."

As I understand the purpose and effect of the Acts, it seems to me, in face of these amending provisions, impossible to say that the element of goodwill is so taken away that the ordinary principles which would otherwise have applied in regard to restraint of trade covenants are no longer effective. I think we must consider this covenant apart from the new legislation, and, if we were satisfied that when it was made in 1945 it was a good covenant and one which the court would enforce, then nothing that has happened as the result of the National Health Service Act, 1946, has altered that result. I think, therefore (with the learned judge), that the matter is not affected in the circumstances by the Act of 1946. I do not think that this is a case in which the court ought in any way to limit, or refrain from imposing, any injunction which would otherwise have been granted, and I, accordingly, think that the appeal should be dismissed.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I agree completely with the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.

UPJOHN, J.: I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Kingsford, Dorman & Co., agents for Restall, Round & Gloster, Birmingham (for the defendant); Carleton-Holmes & Co., agents for A. H. Sale & Hill, Atherstone (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. NORTHUMBERLAND COMPENSATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL. Ex parte SHAW.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Singleton, Denning and Morris, L.J.J.), December 4, 5, 6, 7, 19, 1951.]

Certiorari—Statutory tribunal—Error of law on face of decision—Form of record—Affidavit evidence—Admissibility—National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1475), reg. 12.

Under reg. 10 of the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948, the applicant claimed compensation for loss of employment attributable to the passing of the National Health Service Act, 1946. Being dissatisfied with the amount which the compensating authority awarded him, he appealed to the appeal tribunal under reg. 12. The tribunal upheld the decision of the compensating authority. On an application by the applicant for an order of certiorari to remove the order of the tribunal into the High Court to be quashed it was admitted that an error of law appeared on the face of the tribunal.

HELD: certiorari to quash the decision of a statutory tribunal lay, not only where the tribunal had exceeded its jurisdiction, but also where an error of law appeared on the face of the record, and, therefore, the application would be granted.

Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (1878) (4 App. Cas. 30), and R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. ([1922] 2 A.C. 128), applied.

Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air ([1944] 1 All E.R. 60), not applied by SINGLETON, L.J., distinguished by DENNING, L.J., and doubted by MORRIS, L.J.

Per DENNING, L.J.: The record must contain at least the document which initiates the proceedings, the pleadings, if any, and the adjudication, but not the evidence, nor the reasons, unless the tribunal chooses to incorporate them. If the tribunal does state its reasons, and those reasons are wrong in law, certiorari lies to quash the decision . . . Affidavit evidence is admissible on an application for certiorari to show that the record is incomplete. When certiorari is granted on the ground of want of jurisdiction, or bias, or fraud, affidavit evidence is not only admissible, but it is, as a rule, necessary. When it is granted on the ground of error of law on the face of the record, affidavit evidence is not, as a rule, admissible, for the simple reason that the error must appear on the record itself . . . An error admitted openly in the face of the court can be corrected by certiorari as well as an error that appears on the face of the record.

Decision of DIVISIONAL COURT ([1951] 1 All E.R. 268), affirmed.

AS TO ERROR ON FACE OF PROCEEDINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 887-889, paras. 1491-1493; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 16, pp. 427-430, Nos. 2870-2908.

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. London County Council. Ex p. Entertainments Protection Assocn., Ltd., [1931] 2 K.B. 215; 100 L.J.K.B. 760; 144 L.T. 464; 95 J.P. 89; Digest Supp.
- (2) R. v. Electricity Comrs. Ex p. London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1920), Ltd., [1924] 1 K.B. 171; 93 L.J.K.B. 390; 130 L.T. 164; 88 J.P. 13; Digest Supp.
- (3) R. v. Minister of Health. Ex p. Davis, [1929] 1 K.B. 619; 98 L.J.K.B. 636; 141 L.T. 6; 93 J.P. 49; Digest Supp.
- (4) Ricelip Parish v. Henden Parish, (1698), 5 Mod. Rep. 416; 87 E.R. 739; 37 Digest 299, 995.
- (5) R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd., [1922] 2 A.C. 128; 91 L.J.P.C. 146; 127 L.T. 437; 16 Digest 419, 2795.
- (6) Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1878), 4 App. Cas. 30; 48 L.J.M.C. 65; 39 L.T. 453; 43 J.P. 108; 16 Digest 186, 920.
- (7) R. v. Bolton, (1841), 1 Q.B. 66; 10 L.J.M.C. 49; 5 J.P. 370; 113 E.R. 1054; 16 Digest 418, 2775.
- (8) Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air, [1944] 1 All E.R. 60; [1944] Ch. 114; 113 L.J.Ch. 129; 170 L.T. 29; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Williams v. Bagot (Lord), (1824), 4 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 315; 2 L.J.O.S.K.B. 152; 16 Digest 436, 2999.
- (10) R. v. Chandler, (1702), 1 Ld. Raym. 581; 1 Salk. 377; 91 E.R. 1288; 33 Digest 350, 595.
- (11) R. v. Daman, (1819), 1 Chit. 147.
- (12) R. v. Burnaby, (1703), 1 Com. 131 (92 E.R. 998); 3 Salk. 217 (91 E.R. 786); sub nom. R. v. Barnaby, (1704), 1 Salk. 181 (91 E.R. 166); 33 Digest 353, 632.
- (13) R. v. March, (1824), 4 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 260.
- (14) R. v. Inhabitants of Audly, (1700), 2 Salk. 526; 91 E.R. 448.
- (15) R. v. Devon JJ., (1819), 1 Chit. 34; 33 Digest 440, 1495.
- (16) R. v. Dobbyn, (1696), 2 Salk. 474; 91 E.R. 408; 33 Digest 309, 285.
- (17) R. v. London, (1703), 3 Salk. 261; 91 E.R. 814.
- (18) Ditton's Case, (1701), 2 Salk. 490; 91 E.R. 421.
- (19) Talbury (Inhabitants) v. Foston (Inhabitants), (1696), 2 Salk. 475; 91 E.R. 409.
- (20) Commins v. Massam, (1666), March. N.R. 196; 82 E.R. 473.
- (21) Grenville v. College of Physicians, (1700), 12 Mod. Rep. 386 (88 E.R. 1398); sub nom. Groenvelt v. Burnell, Carth. 491 (90 E.R. 883); Holt, K.B. 184 (90 E.R. 1000); Holt, K.B. 536 (90 E.R. 1195); 1 Com. 76 (92 E.R. 967); 1 Salk. 144 (91 E.R. 134); 16 Digest 400, 2440.
- (22) Cardiffe Bridge Case, (1700), 1 Salk. 146; 91 E.R. 135; sub nom. R. v. Glamorganshire (Inhabitants), 12 Mod. Rep. 403; 88 E.R. 1409; 16 Digest 401, 2458.
- (23) R. v. White, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 309; revsd. C.A. (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 358; 52 L.T. 116; 49 J.P. 294; sub nom. R. v. Sibly, 54 L.J.M.C. 23; 38 Digest 591, 1222.
- (24) Kent v. Elstob, (1802), 3 East. 18; 102 E.R. 502; 2 Digest 522, 1601.
- (25) Hodgkinson v. Fernie, (1857), 3 C.B.N.S. 189; 27 L.J.C.P. 66; 140 E.R. 712; 2 Digest 527, 1645.
- (26) Apsley's Case, (1671), Sty. 85; 82 E.R. 549.
- (27) R. v. Levermore, (1700), 1 Salk. 146; 91 E.R. 135; 16 Digest 471, 3511.
- (28) Ashley's Case, (1697), 2 Salk. 479; 91 E.R. 412; 16 Digest 470, 3494.
- (29) R. v. Warnford, (1825), 5 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 489.
- (30) Anon., (1697), 2 Salk. 479; 91 E.R. 412; 33 Digest 390, 1011.
- (31) South Cadbury (Inhabitants) v. Braddon, Somerset (Inhabitants), (1710), 2 Salk. 607; 91 E.R. 515; 33 Digest 403, 1131.

- (32) R. v. Anon., (1816), 2 Chit. 137.
- (33) R. v. Essex (Inhabitants), (1792), 4 Term Rep. 591; 100 E.R. 1193; 33 Digest 110, 736.
- (34) R. v. Tower Hamlets Sewers Comrs., (1843), 5 Q.B. 357; 13 L.J.Q.B. 12; 2 L.T.O.S. 167; 8 J.P. 214; 114 E.R. 1284; 16 Digest 461, 3353.
- (35) R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire JJ. Ex p. Broadbent, [1910] 2 K.B. 192; 79 L.J.K.B. 731; sub nom. R. v. Morris, etc., West Riding JJ. Ex p. Broadbent, 102 L.T. 814; 74 J.P. 271; 19 Digest 567, 87. A
- (36) General Medical Council v. Spackman, [1943] 2 All E.R. 337; [1943] A.C. 627; 112 L.J.K.B. 529; 169 L.T. 226; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (37) R. v. Dickenson, (1857), 7 E. & B. 831; 26 L.J.M.C. 204; 29 L.T.O.S. 180; 22 J.P. 243; 119 E.R. 1455; 33 Digest 450, 1605.
- (38) Kydd v. Liverpool Watch Committee, [1907] 2 K.B. 591; revsd. H.L., [1908] A.C. 327; 77 L.J.K.B. 947; 99 L.T. 212; 72 J.P. 395; 33 Digest 450, 1607. B

APPEAL by the Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, constituted under the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948, from an order of the Divisional Court dated Dec. 14, 1950, and reported [1951] 1 All E.R. 268. C

Under reg. 10 of the regulations the applicant had been awarded compensation for loss of employment as clerk to a joint hospital board by the Gosforth Urban District Council as compensating authority, and he had appealed against the award to the tribunal on the ground that the compensating authority had failed to take into account his service with the district council, as required by the regulations. The tribunal upheld the decision of the compensating authority. The applicant moved in the Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division for an order of certiorari to remove the decision of the tribunal into the High Court to be quashed on the ground that the decision was erroneous on the face thereof. In the Divisional Court both the tribunal and the compensating authority were respondents to the motion and both admitted that their decisions were wrong and that an error of law appeared on the face of the decision of the tribunal, but they contended that the court had no power to make an order of certiorari, since the tribunal had not acted without jurisdiction. The Divisional Court made an order of certiorari, and from that order the tribunal appealed. In the Court of Appeal the tribunal repeated its contention that certiorari did not lie on the ground of an error of law appearing on the face of the decision of the tribunal. In addition it contended that, although it was admitted that the tribunal had made an error of law, the error did not appear on the face of the record. D E F

The Attorney-General (Sir Lionel Heald, K.C.), J. P. Ashworth and H. A. P. Fisher for the tribunal.

Gardiner, K.C., and Maurice Lyell for the applicant.

Cur. adv. vult. G

Dec. 19. The following judgments were read.

SINGLETON, L.J. [having stated the facts]: Before this court the submission of the Attorney-General on behalf of the tribunal was twofold: (i) that an order of certiorari could not be granted in respect of a decision of a tribunal of this nature on the ground of error on the face of the record; and (ii) that, in any event, there was no error on the face of the record. It was said that the court could only look at the decision itself, and that that did not disclose any error on the face of it. Though the Attorney-General admitted that a mistake had been made, he submitted that the decision could not be inquired into by any court. H

On the first point the Lord Chief Justice in the Divisional Court gave a judgment which the Attorney-General described as "as clear and as forcible as any judgment could be." I find myself in complete agreement with the reasoning of the Lord Chief Justice, and there is little that I would add to his judgment, but, having regard to the argument before us and to the authorities cited, it is right that I should express my views. I now come to R. v. London County Council. Ex p. Entertainments Protection Assn., Ltd. (1), in which SCRUTTON, L.J., said ([1931] 2 K.B. 233):

"The writ of certiorari is a very old and high prerogative writ drawn up for the purpose of enabling the Court of King's Bench to control the action of inferior courts and to make it certain that they shall not exceed their jurisdiction; and therefore the writ of certiorari is intended to bring into the High Court the decision of the inferior tribunal, in order that the High Court may be certified whether the decision is within the jurisdiction of the inferior court. There has been a great deal of discussion and a large number of cases extending the meaning of 'court.' It is not necessary that it should be a court in the sense in which this court is a court; it is enough if it is exercising, after hearing evidence, judicial functions in the sense that it has to decide on evidence between a proposal and an opposition; and it is not necessary to be strictly a court; if it is a tribunal which has to decide rights after hearing evidence and opposition, it is amenable to the writ of certiorari; and I do not discuss further the nature of the writ, because very elaborate discussions of it will be found in the recent cases of R. v. Electricity Comrs. Ex p. London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1920), Ltd. (2) and R. v. Minister of Health. Ex p. Davis (3)."

There is no doubt that the tribunal is an inferior court within the meaning of those words as explained by SCRUTTON, L.J. That was not in dispute.

Error on the face of the proceedings has always been recognised as one of the grounds for the issue of an order of certiorari. I can find no authority for saying that in this respect there is any distinction to be drawn between proceedings of a criminal nature and civil proceedings. Ricelip Parish v. Henden Parish (4) was a settlement case. In R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (5), an appeal before the Privy Council, LORD SUMNER said ([1922] 2 A.C. 154):

"There is no reason to suppose that, if there were any difference in the rules as to the examination of the evidence below on certiorari before a superior court, it would be a difference in favour of examining it in criminal matters, when it would not be examined in civil matters, but, truly speaking, the whole theory of certiorari shows that no such difference exists. The object is to examine the proceedings in the inferior court to see whether its order has been made within its jurisdiction. If that is the whole object, there can be no difference for this purpose between civil orders and criminal convictions, except in so far as differences in the form of the record of the inferior court's determination or in the statute law relating to the matter may give an opportunity for detecting error on the record in one case, which in another would not have been apparent to the superior court, and therefore would not have been available as a reason for quashing the proceedings. In this connection, reliance was placed on a passage in the opinion of LORD CAIRNS in Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (6). The question for decision there was simply whether or not the Court of Appeal had jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from an order of the Court of Queen's Bench, discharging a rule nisi for a certiorari to quash an order of quarter sessions in a rating matter. LORD CAIRNS, speaking of certiorari generally, said (4 App. Cas. 39): 'if there was upon the face of the order of the court of quarter sessions anything which showed that that order was erroneous, the Court of Queen's Bench might be asked to have the order brought into it, and to look at the order, and view it upon the face of it, and if the court found error upon the face of it, to put an end to its existence by quashing it.' He then turned to the kind of order under discussion, and after stating how much in that matter, both of fact and of law, the sessions were bound to set out on the face of their order, he proceeded to point out that the statement of what had led to the decision of the court made the order 'not an unspeaking or unintelligible order', but a speaking one, and an order which on certiorari could be criticised as one which told its own story, and which for error could accordingly be quashed. It is to be observed on this passage, that the key of the question is the amount of material stated or to be stated on the record returned and brought into the superior court. If justices state more than they are bound to state, it may, so to speak, be used against them, and out of their own mouths they may be condemned, but there is no suggestion that, apart from questions of jurisdiction, a party may state further matters to the court, either by new affidavits or by producing anything that is not on or part of the record. So strictly has this been acted on, that documents returned by the inferior court along with its record, for example, the information, have been excluded by the superior court from its consideration. That the superior court should be bound by the record is inherent in the nature of the case. Its jurisdiction is to see that the inferior court has not exceeded its own, and for that very reason it is bound not to interfere in what has been done within that jurisdiction, for in so doing it would itself, in turn, transgress the limits within which its own jurisdiction of supervision, not of review, is confined. That supervision goes to two points: one is the area of the inferior jurisdiction and the qualifications and conditions of its exercise; the other is the observance of the law in the course of its exercise."

Later, LORD SUMNER said (ibid., 159):

"R. v. Bolton (7), undoubtedly, is a landmark in the history of certiorari, for it summarises in an impeccable form the principles of its application under the regime created by what are called Jervis's Acts, but it did not change, nor did those Acts change the general law. When the Summary Jurisdiction Act provided, as the sufficient record of all summary convictions, a common form, which did not include any statement of the evidence for the conviction, it did not stint the jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench, or alter the actual law of certiorari. What it did was to disarm its exercise. The effect was not to make that which had been error, error no longer, but to remove nearly all opportunity for its detection. The face of the record 'spoke' no longer: it was the inscrutable face of a sphinx."

LORD SUMNER shows how, and why, certiorari fell into disuse in the case of convictions before magistrates, yet there was no alteration in the law as to certiorari. Thus it appears to me that in a case such as the one before this court certiorari will lie if there be error on the face of the proceedings. The Attorney-General, in submitting the contrary, relied on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air (8). Unfortunately, neither the Nat Bell case (5) nor the Walsall case (6), was cited when the Racecourse Betting Control Board case (8) was before the court. The reasons given for the decision appear to me to be in conflict with the views of EARL CAIRNS, L.C., and LORD PENZANCE in the Walsall case (6) and of LORD SUMNER in the Nat Bell case (5), though it may be that the judgment could have been affirmed on other grounds. The decision of the tribunal was a "speaking order" in the sense in which that term has been used. The court is entitled to examine it, and if there be error on the face of it, to quash it—

"... not to substitute another order in its place, but to remove that order out of the way, as one which should not be used to the detriment of any of the subjects of Her Majesty," as LORD CAIRNS said in the Walsall case (6) (4 App. Cas. 39).

[HIS LORDSHIP then dealt with the second submission of the Attorney-General that in fact no error appeared on the record of the decision of the tribunal. He came to the conclusion that error did appear, but in any event he considered that the point was not open to the tribunal, in view of the fact that the tribunal had admitted the error before the Divisional Court.]

The appeal fails. If it had succeeded, the applicant would have been deprived of some part of the compensation for loss of office to which he is entitled under the regulations, and to which everyone now agrees that he is entitled.

There was no way other than this by which the mistake could be rectified. The Attorney-General pointed out the undesirability of the court interfering with the decisions of tribunals set up by Parliament. I agree with him that the Divisional Court cannot extend its powers. It can only act according to the well-recognised rules. It is equally important that the court should not hesitate to act to prevent an injustice being done if the remedy sought is within the scope of its powers. Much time has been expended in recent years in considering whether in particular circumstances certiorari, or prohibition, will lie. A great deal of it could be saved. The regulations under the National Health Service Act, 1946, are of great complexity. The interpretation of them is left to the tribunal; there is no provision for an appeal to the courts. That position arises frequently nowadays. I most earnestly wish that in such cases, where difficult questions of law, and of interpretation, must arise, that there should be given some right of appeal. Perhaps the most convenient form is that adopted in s. 37 of the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946, under which any question of law arising in connection with the determination of certain questions may, if the Minister thinks fit, be referred to the decision of the High Court, and any person aggrieved by the decision of the Minister on any question of law not so referred may appeal from that decision to the High Court. And there is provision in sub-s. (5) that the decision of the High Court shall be final, a provision which may be thought desirable in such cases. After all, it is the function of the courts to determine questions of law. Tribunals are sometimes given an unduly difficult task. There must be a feeling of dissatisfaction if it is recognised that a decision of a tribunal is wrong in law and yet there is no power to correct it—in other words, if there is no right to obtain the opinion of the court. I am satisfied that the course I have suggested would result in a saving of time, and of expense, and would be for the public good.

DENNING, L.J.: The question in this case is whether the Court of King's Bench can intervene to correct the decision of a statutory tribunal which is erroneous in point of law. No one has ever doubted that the Court of King's Bench can intervene to prevent a statutory tribunal from exceeding the jurisdiction which Parliament has conferred on it, but it is quite another thing to say that the King's Bench can intervene when a tribunal makes a mistake of law. A tribunal may often decide a point of law wrongly while keeping well within its jurisdiction. If it does so, can the King's Bench intervene? There is a formidable argument against any intervention on the part of the King's Bench at all. The statutory tribunals, like the one in question here, are often made the judges both of fact and law, with no appeal to the High Court. If, then, the King's Bench should interfere when a tribunal makes a mistake of law, the King's Bench may well be said to be exceeding its own jurisdiction. It would be usurping to itself an appellate jurisdiction which has not been given to it. The answer to this argument, however, is that the Court of King's Bench has an inherent jurisdiction to control all inferior tribunals, not in an appellate capacity, but in a supervisory capacity. This control extends not only to seeing that the inferior tribunals keep within their jurisdiction, but also to seeing that they observe the law. The control is exercised by means of a power to quash any determination by the tribunal which, on the face of it, offends against the law. The King's Bench does not substitute its own views for those of the tribunal, as a court of appeal would do. It leaves it to the tribunal to hear the case again, and in a proper case may command it to do so. When the King's Bench exercises its control over tribunals in this way, it is not usurping a jurisdiction which does not belong to it. It is only exercising a jurisdiction which it has always had.

The origin of this controlling power was the writ of certiorari by which the King commanded the judges of any inferior court of record to certify the record of any matter in their court with all things touching the same and to send it to the King's court to be examined. The wording of the writ was for many centuries as follows, being originally in Latin and afterwards in English:

"We being willing for certain reasons that all and singular orders made by you (as is said) be sent by you before us, do command that you do send forthwith before us all and singular the said orders with all things touching the same, as fully and perfectly as they have been made by you and now remain in your custody or power, together with this our writ, that we may cause further to be done thereon what of right and according to the law and custom of England we shall see fit to be done."

I would pause for a moment to notice the amplitude of this writ. The record of the inferior court is to be sent up so that the King's Bench may cause to be done thereon "what of right and according to the law and custom of England" ought to be done. The width of these words is only matched by the width of the words used by the great masters of the law in speaking of certiorari. Thus JOSEPH CHITTY, in his book on GENERAL PRACTICE, 3rd ed., vol. II, p. 353a, said:

"As an essential mode of exercising a control over all inferior courts, [the Court of Queen's Bench] has a most extensive power to bring before it their proceedings, and fully to inform itself upon every subject essential to decide upon the propriety of the proceedings below. This is effected by a writ called certiorari . . . The writ issues in civil as well as criminal cases. Thus, such a writ was ordered to be issued to the judge of an inferior jurisdiction, to return and certify the practice of his court [see Williams v. Lord Bagot (9)]."

Ninety years later LORD SUMNER used words of equal width in R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (5) ([1922] 2 A.C. 156). The supervision by certiorari

" . . . goes to two points: one is the area of the inferior jurisdiction and the qualifications and conditions of its exercise; the other is the observance of the law in the course of its exercise."

Of recent years the scope of certiorari seems to have been somewhat forgotten. It has been supposed to be confined to the correction of excess of jurisdiction, and not to extend to the correction of errors of law, and several learned judges have said as much. But the Lord Chief Justice has, in the present case, restored certiorari to its rightful position and shown that it can be used to correct errors of law which appear on the face of the record, even though they do not go to jurisdiction. I have looked into the history of the matter, and find that the old cases fully support all that the Lord Chief Justice says. Until about one hundred years ago, certiorari was regularly used to correct errors of law on the face of the record. It is only within the last century that it has fallen into disuse, and that is only because there has, until recently, been little occasion for its exercise. Now, with the advent of many new tribunals and the plain need for supervision over them, recourse must once again be had to this well-tried means of control. I will endeavour to show how the writ of certiorari was used in former times, so that we can take advantage of the experience of the past to help us in the problems of the present.

Let me start with convictions by magistrates in summary proceedings under Acts of Parliament. Ever since the days of LORD HOLT, C.J., the Court of King's Bench has been extremely strict to see that all was in order. Everything necessary to support the conviction had to appear on the face of the record. The conviction had to recite the information in its precise terms. It had to set out the evidence of each witness as nearly as possible in his actual words. It had to state the adjudication with complete certainty. It had to show that the case was brought within the terms of the Act of Parliament creating the offence. If there was any defect in point of form, or any error in point of law, appearing on the face of the record, the conviction would be moved into the King's Bench by certiorari and quashed. Nothing could be supplied by argument or intendment. The principles on which the court acted will be found well stated by LORD HOLT, C.J., in R. v. Chandler (10), and by BAYLEY, J., and HOLROYD, J., in R. v. Daman (11). An entertaining illustration will be found in R. v. Barnaby (12) and specimen convictions in CHITTY'S GENERAL PRACTICE OF THE LAW, vol. II, p. 198, and in R. v. March (13), where the conviction was drawn up by counsel on both sides so as to raise the point of law. The result of all this strictness, however, was that many convictions were quashed for defects of form and not of substance. The legislature, therefore, intervened in 1848 to make the record of a conviction much more simple. Instead of a detailed speaking record, there was provided an unspeaking common form which rarely disclosed any error. Thenceforward there was not so much room for certiorari in the case of convictions, but the fundamental principles remained untouched: see R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (5), per LORD SUMNER ([1922] 2 A.C. 159).

Next I will turn to the orders of justices in civil matters. The Court of King's Bench was never so strict about these as it was about convictions. It did not require a detailed speaking record to be sent up to them. The record had to contain everything necessary to show that the justices had jurisdiction to deal with the matter, and it had to set out their adjudication, but it was not necessary to set out either the evidence or the reasons. If a point of law arose, however, on which either party desired the ruling of the King's Bench, he could ask the justices to make a speaking order, that is, to make a special entry on the record of the reasons for their judgment. The justices were not bound to do this, but they usually did so if they entertained a doubt about the point. When their reasons thus appeared on the record, the Court of King's Bench would on certiorari inquire into their correctness, and if the reasons were wrong, would quash the decision. Sometimes the justices would find the facts and state them specially as part of the record so as to enable the Court of King's Bench to say whether their judgment on those facts was in law right or wrong. It was then known as a Case Stated, and the King's Bench would again on certiorari determine whether the decision was correct or not. The principles on which the court acted will be found well-stated by LORD HOLT, C.J., in R. v. Inhabitants of Audly (14) and Ricelip Parish v. Henden Parish (4), and in the argument before ABBOTT, C.J., and his colleagues in R. v. Devon JJ. (15), and by LORD CAIRNS in Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (6). Interesting illustrations will be found in R. v. Dobbyn (16), R. v. London (17), Ditton's Case (18), and Talbury (Inhabitants) v. Foston (Inhabitants) (19). The procedure in these cases was, however, simplified in 1857 when the legislature intervened to enable justices to state a Case for the opinion of the court without the record being removed by a writ of certiorari: see s. 10 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857. Thenceforward there was not so much room for certiorari in the case of orders of justices, but again the fundamental principles remained untouched.

So far, I have considered only the convictions or orders of justices, which were by far the most numerous cases in which certiorari was used. I now come to the orders of statutory tribunals. The Court of King's Bench has from very early times exercised control over the orders of statutory tribunals, just as it has done over the orders of justices. The earliest instances that I have found are the orders of the commissioners of sewers, who were set up by statute in 1531 to see to the repairs of sea walls and so forth. The Court of King's Bench used on certiorari to quash the orders of the commissioners for errors on the face of them, such as when they failed to set out the facts necessary to show that they had jurisdiction in the matter, or when they contained some error in point of law. It is recorded that on one celebrated occasion the commissioners refused to obey a certiorari issued out of the King's Bench, and for this the whole body of them were "laid by the heels." The control thus exercised over the commissioners of sewers was used by LORD HOLT, C.J., as a precedent to control by certiorari the orders of any tribunal set up by Parliament, such as the College of Physicians and the commissioners for the repair of Cardiff bridge. Since that time it has never been doubted that certiorari will lie to any statutory tribunal. It was suggested before us on behalf of the tribunal that, in the case of these statutory tribunals, the Court of King's Bench only interfered by certiorari to keep them within their jurisdiction, and not to correct their errors of law. There are, however, many cases in the books where certiorari was used to correct errors of law on the face of the record. A striking instance was where the commissioners of sewers imposed an excessive fine, and it was quashed by the Court of King's Bench on the ground that in law their fines ought to be reasonable. Other instances are the numerous cases where certiorari was used to determine the validity of a sewer's rate imposed by the commissioners of sewers. There are several cases where an auditor's certificate has been quashed for error of law on the face of it. And I have no doubt that many more instances could be found throughout the books. The principles on which the court acted in the case of the commissioners of sewers will be found set out in Commings v. Massam (20), CALLIS ON SEWERS, 4th ed. (1824), pp. 203 and 204, and 342 to 344, and CHITTY'S GENERAL PRACTICE OF THE LAW, vol. II, at p. 379. The decisions of LORD HOLT are reported in Grenville v. College of Physicians (21), and the Cardiffe Bridge Case (22). A case of an auditor's certificate is R. v. White (23).

Leaving now the statutory tribunals, I turn to the awards of arbitrators. The Court of King's Bench never interfered by certiorari with the award of an arbitrator, because it was a private tribunal and not subject to the prerogative writs. If the award was not made a rule of court, the only course available to an aggrieved party was to resist an action on the award or to file a bill in equity. If the award was made a rule of court, a motion could be made to the court to set it aside for misconduct of the arbitrator on the ground that it was procured by corruption or other undue means: see the statute 9 and 10 Will. III, c. 15. At one time an award could not be upset on the ground of error of law by the arbitrator because that could not be said to be misconduct or undue means, but ultimately it was held in Kent v. Elstob (24) that an award could be set aside for error of law on the face of it. This was regretted by WILLIAMS, J., in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (25), but is now well established. This remedy by motion to set aside is, however, confined to arbitrators. It does not extend to statutory tribunals: see Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air (8). I look on that decision as merely a decision as to the scope of the remedy of setting aside on motion. It is not a decision on substantive law. It does not take away or diminish the inherent jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench to interfere by certiorari.

It will have been seen that throughout all the cases there is one governing rule—certiorari is only available to quash a decision for error of law if the error appears on the face of the record. What, then, is the record? It has been said to consist of all those documents which are kept by the tribunal for a permanent memorial and testimony of their proceedings: see BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES, vol. III, p. 24. But it must be noted that, whenever there was any question as to what should, or should not, be included in the record of any tribunal, the Court of King's Bench used to determine it. It did it in this way. When the tribunal sent their record to the King's Bench in answer to the writ of certiorari, this return was examined, and, if it was defective or incomplete, it was quashed: see Apsley's Case (26), R. v. Levermore (27), and Ashley's Case (28). Alternatively, the tribunal might be ordered to complete it: Williams v. Lord Bagot (9) and R. v. Warnford (29). It appears that the Court of King's Bench always insisted that the record should contain, or recite, the document or information which initiated the proceedings and thus gave the tribunal its jurisdiction and also the document which contained their adjudication. Thus in the old days the record sent up by the justices had, in the case of a conviction, to recite the information in its precise terms, and in the case of an order which had been decided by quarter sessions by way of appeal, the record had to set out the order appealed from: see Anon. (30). The record had also to set out the adjudication, but it was never necessary to set out the reasons: see South Cadbury (Inhabitants) v. Braddon, Somerset (Inhabitants) (31), nor the evidence, save in the case of convictions. Following these cases, I think the record must contain at least the document which initiates the proceedings, the pleadings, if any, and the adjudication, but not the evidence, nor the reasons, unless the tribunal chooses to incorporate them. If the tribunal does state its reasons, and those reasons are wrong in law, certiorari lies to quash the decision.

The next question which arises is whether affidavit evidence is admissible on an application for certiorari. When certiorari is granted on the ground of want of jurisdiction, or bias, or fraud, affidavit evidence is not only admissible, but it is, as a rule, necessary. When it is granted on the ground of error of law on the face of the record, affidavit evidence is not, as a rule, admissible, for the simple reason that the error must appear on the record itself: see R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (5).^{*} Affidavits were, however, always admissible to show that the record was incomplete, as for instance, that a conviction omitted the evidence of one of the witnesses: see CHITTY'S GENERAL PRACTICE OF THE LAW, vol. II, p. 222, note (d), or did not set out the fact that the justices had refused to hear a competent witness for the defence: see R. v. Anon. (32), whereupon the court would either order the record to be completed, or it might quash the conviction at once.

Notwithstanding the strictness of the rule that the error of law must appear on the face of the record, the parties could always by agreement overcome this difficulty. If they both desired a ruling of the Court of King's Bench on a point of law which had been decided by the tribunal, but which had not been entered on the record, the parties could agree that the question should be argued and determined as if it were expressed in the order. The first case I have found in which this was done was in 1792, R. v. Essex (Inhabitants) (33), but thereafter it was quite common. It became a regular practice for parties to supplement the record by affidavits disclosing the points of law that had been decided by the tribunal. This course was only taken if no one objected. It seems to have been adopted by litigants as a convenient alternative to asking the tribunal to make a speaking order. Thus, in the numerous cases on the validity of a sewer's rate it was the regular course of proceeding for affidavits to be lodged stating the objections in law to the rate, and the case was decided on the objections stated in the affidavits: see, for instance, R. v. Tower Hamlets Sewers Comrs. (34). Recent cases such as R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire JJ. Ex p. Broadbent (35) and General Medical Council v. Spackman (36) show that the practice continues today. The explanation of all these cases is, I think, that the affidavits are treated by consent as if they were part of the record and make it a speaking order. Apart from these consent cases, it is often a very nice question whether an error which does not appear on the record is one which goes to jurisdiction or is only an error of law within the jurisdiction. If it goes to jurisdiction, affidavits are admissible, but otherwise not. I do not venture on a discussion of what does, or does not, go to jurisdiction, because it does not arise in this case. Nor do I venture on a discussion of the cases where Parliament has intervened to restrict the use of certiorari except to say that those restrictions can often be overcome by consent: see R. v. Dickenson (37). No such restriction appears in this case. We have here a simple case of error of law by a tribunal, an error which they frankly acknowledge. It is an error which deprives the applicant of the compensation to which he is by law entitled. So long as the erroneous decision stands, the compensating authority dare not pay him the money to which he is entitled lest the auditor should surcharge them. It would be quite intolerable if in such a case there were no means of correcting the error. The authorities to which I have referred amply show that the King's Bench can correct it by certiorari.

It is true that the record which has been sent up to the court does not distinctly disclose the error, but that is only because the record itself is incomplete. The tribunal has sent up its decision, but it has not sent up the claim lodged with the compensating authority or the order made by them on it or the notice of appeal to the tribunal. Those documents would, I think, properly be part of the record. They would, I understand, have disclosed the error. If it had been necessary, the court could have ordered the record to be completed. But that is unnecessary, having regard to the fact that it was admitted in open court by all concerned that the decision was erroneous. I am clearly of opinion that an error admitted openly in the face of the court can be corrected by certiorari as well as an error that appears on the face of the record. The decision must be quashed, and the tribunal will then be able to hear the case again and give the correct decision. In my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed.

MORRIS, L.J., stated the facts, held that the submission made on behalf of the tribunal that in fact no error appeared on the record of the decision of the tribunal was not open to the tribunal as it had conceded before the Divisional Court that error was apparent on the face of the tribunal's order, and continued: The appeal really resolves itself into the question whether certiorari lies in a case where the decision of an inferior court or tribunal manifestly reveals legal error. That an order of certiorari will go to the respondent tribunal does not admit of doubt. The tribunal is an inferior court in the sense discussed by SCRUTTON, L.J., in his judgment in R. v. London County Council. Ex p. Entertainments Protection Assocn., Ltd. (1) and by ATKIN, L.J., in his judgment in R. v. Electricity Comrs. Ex p. London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1920), Ltd. (2). In the former of the two cases just referred to SCRUTTON, L.J., spoke of the writ of certiorari as enabling the Court of King's Bench to control the action of inferior courts and to make it certain that they shall not exceed their jurisdiction. In the other case ATKIN, L.J., said that the controlling jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division was exercised when the inferior court acted in excess of their legal authority. But in neither passage was there more than a broad and general description of the nature of the writ. I do not read the judgments as embarking on or as intending to lay down an exhaustive or delimiting definition of the scope of, or the occasions for the issuing of, the writ.

Cases were cited in argument before us which showed that in times past certiorari lay where justices recorded decisions which were on the face of them bad in law. It was said, however, that this was not shown to have been the practice in the case of non-judicial tribunals. But there is no warrant for the view that the controlling power exercised by certiorari over inferior courts varies according to the description of, or the composition of, the inferior court. Once the body concerned is properly to be described as an inferior court in the sense in which this expression is now well understood, then, subject to any statutory provision, an order of certiorari will issue on any of the grounds recognised by law. It was further said that, though these grounds were formerly wide enough to include cases where decisions were, on the face of them, bad in law, there has in recent years been a contraction, with the result that certiorari no longer lies for such reason. It is said that this basis for the exercise of the controlling power has fallen into abeyance. I can find no justification for this contention. The speeches in the House of Lords in Walsall Overseers v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (6) demonstrated that, if that which was stated on the face of an order of an inferior court showed that the order was erroneous in law, then the order could be removed by certiorari and its existence could be ended by quashing. The Walsall case (6) was in 1878. No reason was suggested in argument why it should be held that in the subsequent period (a brief one in comparison to the antiquity of the writ) the efficacy of certiorari should be diminished or why it should lose part of its virtue and strength. In Kydd v. Liverpool Watch Committee (38) FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., said ([1907] 2 K.B. 603) in reference to cases when courts of quarter sessions had prior to 1879 given their decisions in the form of a Special Case for the opinion of the superior courts:

"The court of quarter sessions in such cases chose to embody the material and grounds of its decision in the decision itself. Any error in law in the decision became thereby an error on the face of the record, and therefore cognizable by the superior courts, should the record be brought up before them by the ordinary writ of certiorari. It was not as a court of appeal that the superior court sat when considering such Special Cases: it sat in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction to quash decisions of inferior courts, when those decisions were on the face of them bad in law."

The survey of the law by LORD SUMNER in 1922 in R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (5) lends no countenance to the view urged on behalf of the tribunal, but on the contrary negatives it. In my judgment, the law as laid down in the House of Lords in the Walsall case (6) must take precedence over any observations made in Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary of State for Air (8) which may be in conflict.

It is plain that certiorari will not issue as the cloak of an appeal in disguise. It does not lie in order to bring up an order or decision for re-hearing of the issue raised in the proceedings. It exists to correct error of law where revealed on the face of an order or decision or irregularity, or absence of, or excess of, jurisdiction where shown. The control is exercised by removing an order or decision, and then by quashing it. A consideration of the authorities leads me to the same result as that reached by the Divisional Court, and I find myself in full agreement both with the conclusion and the reasoning of the judgment there delivered.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal); Gwylym T. John (for the applicant).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re A SOLICITOR (1951 M. No. 234).

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), December 13, 1951].

Solicitor—Clients' account—Bankruptcy of solicitor—Account not to vest in trustee in bankruptcy—Removal of solicitor from trusteeship of account—Appointment of new trustees—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 18 (1), s. 38 (1)—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 41 (1).

In accordance with the Solicitors' Accounts Rules, 1945, made by the Law Society under the Solicitors Act, 1933, s. 1, a solicitor had opened a clients' account with certain bankers. On Feb. 7, 1951, the solicitor was adjudicated a bankrupt, and on Mar. 6, 1951, the Council of the Law Society, in pursuance of para. 5 of sched. I to the Solicitors Act, 1941, applied for and obtained an order that no payment should be made out of any account (including the clients' account) of the bankrupt with the said bankers.

HELD: (i) the clients' account was property held by the bankrupt on trust for another person within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 38 (1), and did not vest in the trustee in bankruptcy under s. 18 (1) of that Act, but remained vested in the bankrupt.

(ii) the court had jurisdiction under the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 41 (1), to remove the bankrupt from his trusteeship of the clients' account and appoint new trustees in his place.

Re Henderson ([1940] 3 All E.R. 295), applied.

AS TO ACCOUNTS OF CLIENTS' MONEYS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 307-310, paras. 334-340.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Plunkett v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 653; [1936] 2 K.B. 107; 105 L.J.K.B. 379; 154 L.T. 465; Digest Supp.
- (2) Roberts v. Death, (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 319; 51 L.J.Q.B. 15; 46 L.T. 246; 21 Digest 629, 2131.
- (3) Hancock v. Smith, (1889), 41 Ch.D. 456; 58 L.J.Ch. 725; 61 L.T. 341; 43 Digest 1022, 4615.
- (4) Loescher v. Dean, [1950] 2 All E.R. 124; [1950] Ch. 491; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Henderson, [1940] 3 All E.R. 295; [1940] Ch. 764; 109 L.J.Ch. 363; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS by which the trustee in the bankruptcy of a solicitor applied for an order that, notwithstanding an order dated Mar. 6, 1951, and made on the application of the Law Society under the Solicitors Act, 1941, sched. I, para. 5, the Midland Bank, Ltd., at their Birkenhead branch, might be at liberty to pay to the trustee in bankruptcy moneys out of any bank account standing with them in the name of the solicitor.

C. A. Settle for the applicant, the trustee in bankruptcy.

J. L. Arnold for a creditor and for the solicitor.

N. S. S. Warren for the Law Society.

ROXBURGH, J.: The solicitor concerned in this case was adjudicated bankrupt on Feb. 7, 1951, and the applicant on this summons is his trustee in bankruptcy.

The Solicitors Act, 1933, s. 1, provides:

“The Council of the Law Society shall make rules (a) as to the opening and keeping by solicitors of accounts at banks for clients’ moneys . . .”

The phrase “accounts at banks for clients’ moneys” is, in my judgment, of some significance. It is not accounts for solicitors’ moneys, nor mixed accounts for solicitors’ and clients’ moneys. Section 8 provides:

“(1) Subject to the provisions of this section no bank shall, in connection with any transaction on any account of any solicitor kept with it or with any other bank (other than an account kept by a solicitor as trustee for a specified beneficiary) incur any liability or be under any obligation to make any inquiry or be deemed to have any knowledge of any right of any person to any money paid or credited to any such account which it would not incur or be under or be deemed to have in the case of an account kept by a person entitled absolutely to all the money paid or credited to it: Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall relieve a bank from any liability or obligation under which it would be apart from this Act. (2) Notwithstanding anything in the preceding sub-section, a bank at which a solicitor keeps an account for clients’ money shall not, in respect of any liability of the solicitor to the bank, not being a liability in connection with that account, have or obtain any recourse or right, whether by way of set off, counterclaim, charge, or otherwise, against moneys standing to the credit of that account.”

That section seems to me to reinforce the inference which I draw from s. 1, that the moneys in the clients’ account are clients’ moneys.

Rules have been made, and the rules now in force are the Solicitors’ Accounts Rules, 1945 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 781). Rule 2 (1) of those rules provides:

“In these rules, unless the context otherwise requires—‘Solicitor’ shall mean a solicitor of the Supreme Court and shall include a firm of solicitors; ‘Client’ shall mean any person on whose account a solicitor holds or receives client’s money; ‘Client’s money’ shall mean money held or received by a solicitor on account of a person for whom he is acting in relation to the holding or receipt of such money either as a solicitor or, in connection with his practice as a solicitor, as agent, bailee, stakeholder or in other capacity.”

Rule 3 provides:

"Subject to the provisions of r. 9 hereof, every solicitor who holds or receives client's money, or money which under r. 4 hereof he is permitted and elects to pay into a clients' account . . ."

By r. 4:

"There may be paid into a client account—(a) trust money; (b) such money belonging to the solicitor as may be necessary for the purpose of opening or maintaining the account; (c) money to replace any sum which may by mistake or accident have been drawn from the account in contravention of sub-r. (2) of r. 8 of these rules; and (d) a cheque or draft received by the solicitor, which under r. 5 of these rules he is entitled to split but which he does not split."

One other statutory provision is relevant, viz., the Solicitors Act, 1941, sched. I, para. 5, which provides:

"If the council [of the Law Society] are satisfied that a solicitor or his clerk or servant has been guilty of any such dishonesty as is mentioned in s. 2 of this Act, they may apply to the High Court or a judge thereof for an order, and the court or a judge thereof may on such application make an order, that no payment shall be made without the leave of the court, or a judge thereof by any banker named in the order out of any banking account in the name of such solicitor or his firm."

I note in passing that there is no provision there for getting what I will call a "stop order" removed.

Under that power, on Mar. 6, 1951, the council applied for and obtained a stop order on all the banking accounts (of which there were three) of this bankrupt at a particular bank. Two of the accounts were overdrawn, and accordingly of not much importance, and the third was the clients' account established in accordance with the Act of 1933 and the rules of 1945. There was a large sum of money to the credit of the latter account on the date of adjudication, Feb. 7, 1951, and there is no doubt that the creditor who is before me will be entitled to a major proportion of that money. The stop order having been made, no one knew what to do next, and that is not surprising, because that matter seems to have escaped the attention of the draftsman of sched. I to the Act of 1941, but the trustee has taken out the summons now before me which asks that, notwithstanding the stop order, the Midland Bank, Ltd., at their branch at Birkenhead (the relevant branch) may be at liberty to pay moneys out of any bank account in the name of the solicitor to the applicant, the trustee in bankruptcy, while he shall be acting as such trustee.

The summons raises two separate questions. One is procedural, viz.: What is the proper way of getting a stop order removed?, but in limine arises the important question: What is the nature of the clients' account—in other words, what happens to a clients' account on the bankruptcy of a solicitor? That question, in my judgment, primarily depends on those portions of the Solicitors Act, 1933, to which I have referred when read in conjunction with the Bankruptcy Act, 1914.

The Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 38, provides:

"The property of the bankrupt divisible amongst his creditors, and in this Act referred to as the property of the bankrupt, shall not comprise the following particulars:—(1) Property held by the bankrupt on trust for any other person."

Section 18 (1) of that Act provides that on adjudication

"... the property of the bankrupt shall become divisible among his creditors and shall vest in a trustee."

It is to be noted that the only property which vests in the trustee is that which is divisible among the creditors. Section 38 indicates what is meant in the Act by the property of the bankrupt. Accordingly, this clients' account is not vested, and will not vest, in the trustee if it is property held by the bankrupt on trust for any other person. The words "on trust for any other person," in my judgment, are of very wide import. It is not unusual to find in books and judgments the phrase "trustee in the full sense of the term," or some such words, but the truth of the matter is that, as the principles of equity permeate the complications of modern life, the nature and variety of trusts ever grow, and it is, perhaps, rash to think of some conception of a trust having certain characteristic attributes and then to say that a trust which lacks one or some of those attributes is not a trust in the full sense. In my judgment, the question what are the terms or conditions of a trust has to be solved by reference to the express, or, in many cases, the implied, terms which are to be derived either from some instrument or from the situation, and I think that, if you can say of any asset that, though the title is in the bankrupt, a beneficial interest therein resides in some person other than the bankrupt, even though the bankrupt himself may also have a beneficial interest therein, the asset does not vest in the trustee, though any beneficial interest which the bankrupt himself may have would vest in the trustee.

That this is the right approach seems to me to be indicated not only by the nature of the account as indicated by the Solicitors Act, 1933, but by some dicta since the Act came into force. In Plunkett v. Barclays Bank, Ltd. (1) DU PARCQ, J., said ([1936] 1 All E.R. 657) of a sum of money which was assumed to have been paid in under the Solicitors' Accounts Rules, 1935, r. 3, then in force, which corresponds with r. 4 of the rules of 1945:

"It was accordingly trust money as is the money recovered by a judgment creditor in an action which he brings as trustee for another person (see Roberts v. Death (2)), or the money paid by a stock-broker into an account into which he pays nothing but moneys received on behalf of clients (see Hancock v. Smith (3))."

In Loescher v. Dean (4) HARMAN, J., refers to the question. He cites the passage which I have cited from the judgment of DU PARCQ, J., and then says ([1950] 2 All E.R. 126):

"Therefore, although that was not the point he was deciding, the learned judge did assume that money in a client account is trust money, and so in a sense no doubt it is . . ."

I note, of course, the qualification "in a sense" which HARMAN, J., there places on the statement. I think that he was referring to the fact that the terms of the trust might not be identical with those which characterise what is commonly called a trust in the full sense, but, at any rate, I do not think that there is anything in that qualification which should lead me to suppose that HARMAN, J., would have thought that a clients' account would vest in a trustee in bankruptcy. Therefore, my conclusion on this part of the case is that a clients' account constituted in pursuance of s. 1 of the Solicitors Act, 1933, or, more accurately, the chose in action represented by such an account, is property held by the bankrupt on trust for another person within the meaning of s. 38 (1), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and, accordingly, does not vest in the trustee in bankruptcy under s. 18 of that Act.

I am informed by counsel, and believe, that there is no express statutory provision for the removal of the stop order provided for by the Solicitors Act, 1941, sched. I, para. 5, and no express statutory indication as to what is to happen to the clients' account in the event of the bankruptcy of a solicitor, i.e., no express statutory provision for winding-up a clients' account. In those circumstances, the legal position seems to me to be reasonably clear. The Trustee Act, 1925, s. 41, as construed by BENNETT, J., in Re Henderson (5), will provide a satisfactory solution for all the problems, except one. I will mention that one to dispose of it. So far as a trustee nominated by the Law Society may be concerned, the society, apparently, do not wish to ask for any remuneration for their nominee. So far as a trustee in bankruptcy is concerned, if he is appointed trustee, his position is quite different. I think I am right in saying that he is remunerated on a percentage basis, and, accordingly, he would get no remuneration for any services which he might render as trustee of the client's fund. That seems to me not to be altogether fair, but I know of no power to give him any remuneration. There is, of course, the procedure in connection with the appointment of judicial trustees which might be relevant in this connection, but I do not think that that would provide a satisfactory solution. Therefore, I have to confess myself unable to deal with that particular problem, viz., the remuneration of the trustee in bankruptcy and of the trustee nominated by the Law Society if the society wanted him to receive remuneration. I must leave those problems, I think, for future statutory consideration. Apart from that problem, I find no difficulty, and I think a simple procedure can be evolved.

The Trustee Act, 1925, s. 41 (1), provides:

"The court may, whenever it is expedient to appoint a new trustee or new trustees, and it is found inexpedient difficult or impracticable so to do without the assistance of the court, make an order appointing a new trustee or new trustees either in substitution for or in addition to any existing trustee or trustees, or although there is no existing trustee. In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, the court may make an order appointing a new trustee in substitution for a trustee who . . . is a bankrupt . . ."

That is clear enough, and BENNETT, J., has held in Re Henderson (5) that that section enables the court to remove a bankrupt trustee against his will. The trustee was not a bankrupt in Re Henderson (5), but BENNETT, J., dealt with the case of a bankrupt. Secondly, Re Henderson (5) shows that an application for such removal may be made by originating summons when there is no dispute of fact. There might be a dispute of fact before the bankrupt was adjudicated, but there could hardly be a dispute of fact afterwards because, ex hypothesi, if he has been adjudicated, he is bankrupt. It seems to me that, other things being equal, the court would be inclined to appoint two trustees—it seldom appoints only one—and that it would be inclined to appoint the nominee of the Law Society because under the Solicitors Act, 1941, s. 2, they administer a compensation fund which is available for compensating what I might call the professional, as opposed to the domestic, creditors of the solicitors, and, accordingly, they have a very strong duty to their own members to do their best to see that funds which ought to be applied in paying professional creditors are not applied in paying domestic creditors. On the other hand, the trustee in bankruptcy also has an interest. It is his affair to try to get as much as he can for the general creditors, and, therefore, in that capacity he represents the other point of view. Moreover, he will have all the books of the bankrupt and obviously will be in a good position to investigate the situation. Therefore, it seems to me there is a great deal to be said, other things being equal, for the appointment of the nominee of the Law Society and of the trustee in bankruptcy as trustees.

That being so, I think a very simple form of procedure is available. The summons should be intitled "In the Matter of the Solicitors Act" and also "In the Matter of the Trustee Act." It will be in the form which is not inter partes, but which does require entry of appearance, and it will ask in separate paragraphs for a stop order—I am using that short phrase to describe the order for which para. 5 of sched. I to the Act of 1941 makes provision—and for the appointment of trustees. It is almost certain that, if it is a case in which a stop order is justified, it is likely to be one in which the removal of the solicitor from the trusteeship of the fund will be justified. Therefore, there will be no difficulty or objection in asking for both forms of relief, even though the bankruptcy may not have actually occurred. Then the existing procedure will be followed. The summons will come in the first instance before the master ex parte and he will, if it is a proper case for making an order, make an order in the form of the order now before me which is dated Jan. 22, 1951. It says:

"Upon the application of the Law Society by originating summons . . . it is ordered that no payment be made until [a certain date] without the leave of this court or of a judge thereof by the bank out of any banking account in the name of [the solicitor]. It is ordered that the said originating summons be heard [on a date specified] before the master and that the order [the interim ex parte stop order] be served forthwith on the solicitor together with the originating summons."

When that comes again before the master, the solicitor may have been adjudicated bankrupt or he may not. If he has not, then, if it is a case for making the stop order, the stop order will be made, and the other matter will stand over. But if he has by then already been adjudicated bankrupt, there is no reason why the stop should not then be removed simultaneously with the appointment of the trustees in his place. I suppose a vesting order would be made on the appointment of the trustees, which would presumably vest the account in the trustees. As far as I can see, that procedure will work. So far as I am concerned, at any rate, there will be no need for the Law Society to produce an affidavit of the fitness of the person whom they have nominated, being an officer in their employment, and, so far as the trustee in bankruptcy is concerned, there will be no necessity, so far as I am concerned, for an affidavit of fitness because he already gives security as a trustee in bankruptcy. Prima facie the Law Society would not be a person who could make application under s. 41 of the Trustee Act, 1925. If, however, the Law Society make a token payment, say of £1, out of their compensation fund to a professional creditor of the solicitor, being a person interested in the clients' account, then, on such payment, they become, under s. 2 (8) of the Act of 1941 subrogated to the rights of that professional creditor against the client's account and thus would, in my judgment, be a person or persons beneficially interested in the clients' account, and, therefore, a person or persons able to make an application under s. 41.

In this particular case I am able to short-circuit this procedure because the bankrupt has most fortunately appeared by counsel and is willing to undertake to sign cheques which will exhaust the clients' account. I have before me all the necessary parties, the trustee in bankruptcy, who protects the general body of creditors, the Law Society, and the bankrupt and the main creditor. The only persons who are not before me are the four creditors who are admitted to take precedence. Therefore, it is quite simple.

The bankrupt, in pursuance of his undertaking, will draw a cheque for the appropriate amounts in favour of the creditors (subject to provision for costs), and I will remove the stop order so far as is necessary to enable the bank to honour those cheques so drawn, which will in fact exhaust the whole fund. The bank will have notice of this and, of course, will not honour any other cheques, if perchance any other cheques should be drawn.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Kinch & Richardson, agents for Percy Hughes & Roberts, Birkenhead (for the applicant, a creditor, and the solicitor); Hempsons (for the Law Society).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ARMSTRONG AND ANOTHER v. STRAIN AND OTHERS.

COURT OF APPEAL (Singleton, Birkett and Romer, L.J.J.), November 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, December 20, 1951.]

Misrepresentation—Principal and agent—Liability of principal for misrepresentation of agent—Innocent misrepresentation by agent—Knowledge of true facts by principal—No fraud on part of principal.

In the course of negotiations by the plaintiffs for the purchase of a bungalow belonging to the first defendant, the agents of the first defendant made certain statements as to the value of the property. Owing to the defective condition of the bungalow the statements were untrue, but the agents were not aware of the existence of any defects and so made the statements innocently, believing them to be true. The first defendant, who was aware of the defective structural condition, had not authorised his agents to make the statements, nor had he deliberately kept them in ignorance with the dishonest intention that they should mislead a prospective purchaser, and he did not know that the statements were being made. Relying on the agents' representation, the plaintiffs bought the property. On discovering its defective condition, they sued the first defendant and his agents for damages for fraudulent misrepresentation.

HELD: in the absence of actual fraud or dishonesty on the part of a principal, knowledge by him of facts which render false a statement made innocently by his agent does not render the principal guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation, and, therefore, the action failed.

London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd. ([1936] 2 All E.R. 1039), criticised and explained.

Derry v. Peek (1889) (14 App. Cas. 337), applied.

Observations of ATKINSON, J., in Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corpn., Ltd. v. Spalding Urban District Council ([1937] 3 All E.R. 335), approved.

AS TO PRINCIPAL'S LIABILITY FOR AGENT'S MISREPRESENTATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, p. 289, para. 475; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 1, pp. 587-594, Nos. 2245-2281.

Cases referred to:

- (1) London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 1039; 155 L.T. 190; Digest Supp.
- (2) Gordon Hill Trust, Ltd. v. Segall, [1941] 2 All E.R. 379; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Pearson & Son, Ltd. v. Dublin Corpn., [1907] A.C. 351; 77 L.J.P.C. 1; 97 L.T. 645; 1 Digest 588, 2250.
- (4) Derry v. Peek, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337; 58 L.J.Ch. 864; 61 L.T. 265; 54 J.P. 148; 9 Digest 125, 642.
- (5) Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corpn., Ltd. v. Spalding Urban District Council, [1937] 3 All E.R. 335; [1937] 2 K.B. 607; 106 L.J.K.B. 885; 157 L.T. 450; Digest Supp.
- (6) Nocton v. Ashburton (Lord), [1914] A.C. 932; 83 L.J.Ch. 784; 111 L.T. 641; 35 Digest 55, 493.
- (7) Cornfoot v. Fowke, (1840), 6 M. & W. 358; 9 L.J.Ex. 297; 151 E.R. 450; 1 Digest 589, 2255.
- (8) Ludgater v. Love, (1881), 44 L.T. 694; 45 J.P. 600; 1 Digest 589, 2254.
- (9) Evans v. Edmonds, (1853), 13 C.B. 777; 1 C.L.R. 653; 22 L.J.C.P. 211; 21 L.T.O.S. 155; 138 E.R. 1407; 35 Digest 32, 235.
- (10) Pasley v. Freeman, (1789), 3 Term Rep. 51; 2 Smith, L.C., 12th ed., 71; 100 E.R. 450; 1 Digest 24, 194.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs from an order of DEVLIN, J., dated Mar. 21, 1951, dismissing the plaintiffs' claim for damages for fraudulent misrepresentation.

The plaintiffs had purchased a bungalow belonging to the first defendant, and alleged, as the first and second charges of fraud, that they had been induced to do so by fraudulent misrepresentations made by the fifth defendant and the second defendant, who were respectively a partner in an independent firm of estate agents (the sixth defendants) employed by the first defendant to find a purchaser, and a partner in the first defendant's own firm of estate agents (the third defendants). Another partner in the independent firm was joined as fourth defendant. DEVLIN, J., found that the fifth defendant had made an untrue statement, but that he had made it innocently. As regards the second defendant, he found that the statement made by him was neither fraudulent nor did it deceive the plaintiffs.

In addition to the charges of fraud against the fifth and second defendants, the plaintiffs alleged, as third and fourth charges of fraud, that the first defendant was guilty of fraud because (a) he had deliberately kept the fifth and second defendants in ignorance of the true facts with the dishonest intention that they should mislead a prospective purchaser, and (b) alternatively, that the representations made by the fifth and second defendants were untrue to the knowledge of the first defendant, and that, principal and agent being one in law, fraud was thereby established. DEVLIN, J., did not find fraud proved under the third head. With all the above findings under the first, second and third heads of charge, the Court of Appeal refused to interfere. As regards the fourth head (on which alone this case is reported), DEVLIN, J., found, as stated above, that a false representation was made by the fifth defendant, but was made innocently, and that it was admitted that the facts which falsified it were known to the first defendant, but he held that there was no principle of law which compelled him to find, and he declined to find, that the first defendant was guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation by reason of the false statement made by his agent.

Marlowe, K.C., and Eric Myers for the plaintiffs.

N. Lawson and Percy Bloomfield for the first three defendants.

Pollock, K.C., and N. C. Bridge for the fourth, fifth and sixth defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. The following judgments were read.

SINGLETON, L.J., after stating the facts and giving his reasons for not interfering with DEVLIN, J.'s, finding as regards the first, second and third charges of fraud, continued: Under the fourth head the judge said that he had already reached the conclusion that the representation of the agent, the fifth defendant, was a false and a material statement of fact, and he added that it was admitted that the facts which falsified it were known to the principal, the first defendant. He then proceeded to consider the decision in London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd. (1), on which the claim under this head was based. He was of opinion that it was an authority supporting the proposition for which the plaintiffs contended, and, subject to any other authority, binding on him. After a careful examination of the authorities, DEVLIN, J., arrived at the conclusion that a later decision of the Court of Appeal, Gordon Hill Trust, Ltd. v. Segall (2), was in direct conflict with the decision in the London County Properties case (1). He preferred the decision in Segall's case (2), and, accepting it, he held that the plaintiffs' claim under this head failed. I should say that it does not appear that the earlier case was cited when Segall's case (2) was before the court.

In my view, there has been in some quarters a misunderstanding of the decision in the London County Properties case (1). It does not provide any support for the plaintiffs' case in the absence of proof of fraud or of dishonesty. In that case GODDARD, J., had found that there was a breach of warranty, and had awarded damages. The defendants appealed, and the plaintiffs cross-appealed, submitting that there ought to have been a finding of fraud on the part of the defendants' agent, Addis, a finding which GODDARD, J., had declined to make. Both appeal and cross-appeal succeeded. As the report shows ([1936] All E.R. 1040):

" . . . the plaintiffs asked, in substance, that the finding of the learned judge as to fraud be reversed and that there be judgment for the plaintiffs on that issue . . ."

The whole of the argument of counsel on the cross-appeal was directed to the issue of fraud or no fraud on the part of Addis: vide the submissions of Mr. Norman Birkett, K.C., on the one side, and of Mr. H. J. Wallington, K.C., on the other side ([1936] 2 All E.R. 1041). And it is clear from the judgment of SLESSER, L.J. (ibid., 1046), that Addis knew the purpose for which his answer or statement was to be used. In those circumstances, it was open to the Court of Appeal on the cross-appeal to find that Addis was fraudulent if they were clearly satisfied that the judge's finding on this point was wrong. It cannot have been open to them to find that there was some form of liability in the absence of fraud—a case which had not been argued or suggested so far as the report shows. Nor did they do so. The considered judgment of SLESSER, L.J., and his examination of the facts show that his mind was directed to the question of fraud on the part of Addis. The uncertainty as to the true meaning of the decision may well arise from the other judgments. It may be, though I hesitate to say it, that ROMER, L.J., overlooked the fact that the arguments in Pearson & Son, Ltd. v. Dublin Corpn. (3) were founded on an allegation of fraud on the part of the engineers who had prepared the plans. The citation of the learned Lord Justice from that case embraces the words "guilty knowledge." Those words are an essential part of the judgment from which they are taken. "Guilty knowledge" means knowledge of fraud or dishonesty on the part of someone, and without it there can be no finding of fraudulent misrepresentation. Again, as LORD HERSCHELL said in Derry v. Peek (4) (14 App. Cas. 374):

"First, in order to sustain an action of deceit, there must be proof of fraud, and nothing short of that will suffice."

maintain that, at least since the year 1889, it has not been open to any court to find for the plaintiff in an action of fraudulent misrepresentation unless there is proof of fraud or dishonesty.

In Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corpn., Ltd. v. Spalding Urban District Council (5) ATKINSON, J., was called on to consider the London County Properties case (1), and in the course of a masterly analysis of it and of the authorities on the subject, he said ([1937] 3 All E.R. 346):

"I cannot myself see how a principal can be held liable for fraud when there has been no fraud, no element of fraud, either on the part of himself or on the part of anyone for whose acts he is responsible."

Later (ibid., 347) he said it was decided in that case

" . . . that a principal is liable for fraud where the fraudulent information supplied by one agent is handed on to a third party through an innocent agent."

I agree with the reasoning of ATKINSON, J., and, with all respect, I think that DEVLIN, J., took a wrong view of the decision of the Court of Appeal in the London County Properties case (1). That may well have arisen from the somewhat nebulous way in which the judgments in the case are expressed.

Difficulties may arise in a claim against a company which can only speak or act through its agents or officers, but if an officer of a company writes and represents that which is untrue when many other officers of the company know the true facts, it may well be found that he made the representation without belief in its truth, or that he made it recklessly, careless whether it was true or false. That must depend on the evidence. In the case before us the principal is an individual; it was the agent who made the representation which was false. The judge negatived fraud on the part of both. In those circumstances an action for fraudulent misrepresentation cannot succeed against either.

London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property Investment Co., Ltd. (1) has led to much misunderstanding. For myself, I feel that it should not be treated as an authority except and in so far as the decision was based on the fraud of Addis. DEVLIN, J., took a different view of it. That does not affect the result of this appeal, for he preferred to follow the decision in Segall's case (2). In my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I agree with the judgment which has just been delivered. It covers so fully the matters of fact and the questions of law which have been the subject of this appeal that I can state my own conclusions quite briefly. The court was occupied for some days in considering the evidence given before DEVLIN, J., and it was impossible not to feel considerable sympathy for the plaintiffs. There was great force in the plea made by counsel for the plaintiffs that the law should be able in some way to give the plaintiffs redress, and he relies on two main matters to bring about that result. [HIS LORDSHIP dealt with the first three heads of charge of fraud, agreed with the conclusions of DEVLIN, J., and continued:] Counsel for the plaintiffs argued that, notwithstanding the findings of the learned judge, the decision of the Court of Appeal in London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd. (1) still allowed the plaintiffs to succeed, and that DEVLIN, J., should have applied it to the facts of this case.

The all-important question is: What does that case decide? The acutest controversy has raged about it and still rages, and, I suppose, will continue to rage. DEVLIN, J., and ATKINSON, J., are on opposite sides. Both these learned judges have discussed the case in its relation to other authorities with great learning and force, DEVLIN, J., in the present case, and ATKINSON, J., in Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corpn., Ltd. v. Spalding Urban District Council (5). The essential point of difference between them is that ATKINSON, J., took the view that the basis of the decision in the London County Properties case (1) was a finding of fraud against one Addis, an agent of the company, whereas DEVLIN, J., took the view that the Court of Appeal made no such finding of fraud against Addis and came to its decision against the company notwithstanding the absence of any such finding. He interpreted the decision as meaning that, if an agent makes a representation on behalf of his principal which is untrue in fact, but which he honestly believes to be true, the principal is guilty of fraud if the true facts are known to another agent, although that other agent knows nothing of the representation, supplies no inaccurate information, and in no way fails in his duty. ATKINSON, J., rejected that interpretation altogether, for the reasons he gave at some length. It is enough for me for the purposes of this judgment to say that I agree with the judgment of ATKINSON, J., but I will just add a word or two.

It is to be observed in the London County Properties case (1) that the only point argued for the plaintiffs in the Court of Appeal was that Addis, who was the manager of the department which collected the rents of the flats for the defendant company and answered the questions of the plaintiffs, was guilty of fraud, and that GODDARD, J., should have so found. No argument was submitted to the court that the plaintiffs would be entitled to succeed if none of the servants of the company was guilty of fraud. It is true that none of the lords justices said expressly: "We base our decision on the fraud of Addis and we reverse the finding of the trial judge." This was a point which influenced DEVLIN, J., a great deal, but it is equally true that none of the lords justices said: "Although the only point argued before us was that Addis was fraudulent, we need not decide that point, for we propose to decide the appeal on another point altogether, although it was never raised or argued by either side." These two features by themselves are enough to make the case remarkable, but nowhere do the lords justices seem to be impressed by the novelty or the vast importance of their decision. When the decision in Derry v. Peek (4) is kept in mind and the language that has been used to define fraud in that case and in scores of others, it would have been a natural thing for some emphasis to be laid on the novelty of the decision and its far-reaching importance if the interpretation of the case be such as DEVLIN, J., has suggested.

In the present case counsel for the plaintiffs contended that the decision covered the facts even if the first, fifth and second defendants were found to be guiltless of fraud, for, although the fifth defendant made a representation quite innocently and although the first defendant had not authorised him to make it at all—and, indeed, was completely without knowledge that the fifth defendant was making it—nevertheless, as the first defendant knew the facts which would make the fifth defendant's innocent representation false, the first defendant is, therefore, to be held liable for fraudulent misrepresentation because the plaintiffs were in fact deceived. I cannot think that the decision in the London County Properties case (1) justifies any such view. In the Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar case (5) ATKINSON, J., said ([1937] 3 All E.R. 345):

"There is nothing whatever in that judgment to suggest the principle contended for by Mr. Wallington. There is nothing there to suggest that SLESSER, L.J., would have held the defendant company liable if the fact had been that Mr. Addis had not been communicated with in any way at all, and if he had not communicated any untrue information to Mr. De Rees. On the contrary, it seems to me to indicate that the fraud of Mr. Addis was essential for a judgment against the defendant company. His knowledge could fairly and properly be described as guilty knowledge. He knew that the statement was going to be made, he knew that it was untrue, and he knew that it was untrue because of the wrong information which he had himself supplied. That is the basis of the judgment of SLESSER, L.J."

In his judgment in the present case DEVLIN, J., said:

"Now, it is precisely that conscious knowledge—whether it be termed 'a mens rea,' 'a wicked mind,' or 'a dishonest purpose'—which can never be present in the case of an innocent division of ingredients, as in such a case the knowledge which the principal has is impliedly the knowledge which a man is able to display under direct questioning . . . There is no way of combining an innocent principal and agent so as to produce dishonesty. You may add knowledge to knowledge, or, as SLESSER, L.J., put it, state of mind to state of mind. But you cannot add an innocent state of mind to an innocent state of mind and get as a result a dishonest state of mind."

The chief difficulty in the London County Properties case (1) is, as my Lord has already pointed out, the judgment of ROMER, L.J. ([1936] 2 All E.R. 1050), mentioned in Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corpn., Ltd. v. Spalding Urban District Council (5):

"There was at one time a difference of judicial opinion upon the question whether a representation made by an agent innocently on behalf of a principal can be treated as a fraudulent representation for which the principal is liable, when the principal, though having no knowledge that the representation is made, knows that it is untrue. But it has now been laid down by the House of Lords that in such a case the principal is as much liable as though he had himself made the representation knowing it to be untrue: Pearson & Son, Ltd. v. Dublin Corpn. (3). In that case it was said by LORD LOREBURN, L.C. ([1907] A.C. 354) that: 'the principal and agent are one, and it does not signify which of them made the incriminated statement or which of them possessed the guilty knowledge'."

The facts of Pearson & Son, Ltd. v. Dublin Corpn. (3) have been referred to by my Lord, and the principle extracted from the case by ROMER, L.J., does not appear to be justified. In Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corpn., Ltd. v. Spalding Urban District Council (5) ATKINSON, J., said that, in his opinion, all that was decided in the London County Properties case was that a principal was liable for fraud where the fraudulent information supplied by one agent was handed on to a third party by an innocent agent. I think the appeal ought to be dismissed.

ROMER, L.J.: I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. Notwithstanding the searching analysis to which the evidence was subjected before us by counsel for the plaintiffs, I can see no sufficient ground for disturbing any of the learned judge's findings of fact. Of these findings the most important, for present purposes, were that neither the first defendant, nor either of his agents, the second and fifth defendants, was fraudulent. Inasmuch as there are no intermediate stages recognised by the law between fraud, on the one hand, and innocence, on the other, the case has, accordingly, on these findings, to be approached on the footing that each of these men was entirely guiltless in relation to the sale transaction in general and, in particular, to the representations on which the plaintiffs bought the bungalow. The first, second, and fifth defendants are, however, being sued for deceit, and the essentials of such an action have been prescribed by the highest authority. LORD HERSCHELL in Derry v. Peek (4) (14 App. Cas. 375) said:

"... fraud is essential to found an action of deceit, and ... it cannot be maintained where the acts proved cannot properly be so termed."

LORD DUNEDIN in Nocton v. Ashburton (Lord) (6) said ([1914] A.C. 963):

"... the fraud proved must be actual fraud, a mens rea, an intention to deceive. It is an action of deceit."

LORD PARMOOR said (ibid., 978):

"... in an action founded on deceit, and in which deceit is a necessary factor, actual dishonesty, involving mens rea, must be proved."

Having regard to the law as so formulated, the position may be syllogistically presented somewhat as follows. An action of deceit cannot succeed against defendants who are guiltless of fraud. This is an action of deceit against defendants who are guiltless of fraud. The action, therefore, cannot succeed.

I myself think it is true to say (as DEVLIN, J., thought) that the observations of ROMER, L.J., in London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd. (1)—in which EVE, J., apparently concurred—would lead to a different conclusion if applied to the present case. So applied, it appears to me that, as the first defendant knew facts which falsified the fifth defendant's representation, he must be treated as having vicariously made a fraudulent misrepresentation, notwithstanding that he never authorised the fifth defendant to give the assurance which he, in fact, gave nor knew that the fifth defendant was giving it. I feel sure that ROMER, L.J., in expressing the views which would seem to lead to this result, had no intention of enunciating any doctrine that was new. His impression seems to have been that the doctrine or principle which he was stating emerged from Pearson & Son, Ltd. v. Dublin Corpn. (3). After a most careful consideration, however, of the facts and speeches in that case, I cannot but think that that impression was mistaken. I respectfully agree with what ATKINSON, J., said ([1937] 3 All E.R. 343) in Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corpn., Ltd. v. Spalding Urban District Council (5), as to Pearson & Son, Ltd. v. Dublin Corpn. (3). The case decided, he said, that "... a principal was liable for the fraudulent representations of his agent, although those representations reached the third party through and by the innocent channel of the principal, just as the principal would be liable if he, the principal, fraudulently caused an innocent agent to communicate a misrepresentation to the third party."

It does not appear to me that the decision of the House of Lords went further than this, and I cannot find that it affords any authority for the view that the innocent acts or intentions of a principal or his agents, whatever detrimental effect they may have on a third party, can amount to a fraudulent misrepresentation on which such third party can bring an action in deceit.

If that be so, the force of the judgments of ROMER, L.J., and EVE, J., on this point in the London County Properties case (1) must largely disappear. For, as I have said, I think that the lord justice was doing no more than applying to the facts before him a principle which he believed derived from Pearson's case (3), and if it did not so derive it has but little independent basis, for my impression is that the lord justice was not intending to found it on his own authority. In these circumstances, and inasmuch as the principle, if accepted, would lead to results in conflict with (a) the essentials in actions for deceit to which I have above referred, (b) the decision in Cornfoot v. Fowke (7) and (c) one of the two grounds on which the decision in Gordon Hill Trust, Ltd. v. Segall (2) was based, the principle should not, in my judgment, now receive the recognition of this court.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Manley & Cooke (for the plaintiffs); Richardson Sowerby, Holden & Co., agents for William Bygott & Co., Rayleigh, Essex (for the first three defendants); Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless (for the fourth, fifth and sixth defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re ELLIOTT (deceased). LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. BURTON-ON-TRENT HOSPITAL MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE AND OTHERS.

CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), November 21, December 19, 1951.]

Will—Condition precedent—Illegal condition—Gift of personalty subject thereto—Malum prohibitum and not malum in se—Validity of gift.

By his will, dated May 26, 1943, the testator, who died in August, 1950, directed his trustee to convert his whole estate, both real and personal, into money, and, after payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and expenses incurred in connection with his gravestone, he gave: "... the sum of £100 to the [B. infirmary] to be invested as the [trustee] shall direct for the purpose of maintaining and renovating my grave and headstone and subject to the [B. infirmary] accepting the above £100 and the terms as above attaching thereto then I give to the said ... infirmary the ... residue ... of my estate to be applied to the general purposes of the ... infirmary."

HELD: on construction of the will, the legacy of £100 was intended to be set apart in perpetuity for maintaining the testator's grave, and, therefore, it was void as transgressing the rule against perpetuities and the condition precedent attached to the gift of residue was an illegal one which the residuary legatee could not lawfully carry into effect, but, as the gift of residue was a gift of personalty and the condition was not malum in se, but merely malum prohibitum, the condition was avoided and the gift of residue took effect free from the condition.

Dictum of LORD HARDWICKE, L.C., in Reynish v. Martin (1746) (3 Atk. 332), cited by BOWEN, L.J., in Re Moore (1888) (39 Ch.D. 131), applied.

AS TO EFFECT OF INVALIDITY OF CONDITION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 104, para. 140.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Morgan's Will Trusts, [1950] 1 All E.R. 1097; [1950] Ch. 637; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Meyers (decd.), [1951] 1 All E.R. 538; [1951] Ch. 534.
- (3) Egerton v. Brownlow (Earl), (1853), 4 H.L. Cas. 1; 8 State Tr. N.S. 193; 23 L.J.Ch. 348; 21 L.T.O.S. 306; 10 E.R. 359; 44 Digest 460, 2806.
- (4) Re Turton, [1926] Ch. 96; 95 L.J.Ch. 136; 134 L.T. 439; 44 Digest 480, 2971.
- (5) Re Moore, (1888), 39 Ch.D. 116; 57 L.J.Ch. 936; 59 L.T. 681; 52 J.P. 596; 44 Digest 438, 2646.
- (6) Re Thomas's Will Trusts, [1930] 2 Ch. 67; 99 L.J.Ch. 286; 144 L.T. 64; Digest Supp.
- (7) Louther v. Cavendish, (1758), 1 Eden, 99; Amb. 356; 28 E.R. 621; 44 Digest 440, 2663.
- (8) Reynish v. Martin, (1746), 3 Atk. 330; 26 E.R. 991; sub nom. Rhenish v. Martin, 1 Wils. 130; 95 E.R. 532; 44 Digest 486, 3057.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine (a) whether, on the true construction of the will of Arthur Elliott, a gift of £100 for the purpose of maintaining the testator's grave, was a valid gift, and (b) if the gift of £100 was void as transgressing the law against perpetuities, whether a gift of personalty (viz., the testator's residuary estate), subject to the acceptance by the residuary legatee of the gift of £100 and the terms attached to it, was a valid gift and took effect freed from the condition.

M. J. Albery for the plaintiff, the trustee under the will.

F. E. Skone James for the first defendant, the residuary legatee.

Sir Lynn Ungood-Thomas, K.C., and A. A. B. Fuller for the second and third defendants, next of kin.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 19. HARMAN, J., read the following judgment. This case raises a curious point as to the validity of a gift of personalty on a condition precedent. The testator, Arthur Elliott, by his will, dated May 26, 1943, appointed the plaintiff bank to be executor and trustee and directed the bank to convert the whole of his estate, both real and personal, into money, and, after payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, including any expenses incurred in removing the stone of his grave, re-lettering, renovating, and replacing the same, he gave " . . . the sum of £100 to the Burton-on-Trent Infirmary to be invested as the bank shall direct for the purpose of maintaining and renovating my grave and headstone and subject to the Burton-on-Trent Infirmary accepting the above £100 and the terms as above attaching thereto then I give to the said Burton-on-Trent Infirmary the rest residue and remainder of my estate to be applied to the general purposes of the said infirmary."

At the date of the will there was an unincorporated charitable association in Burton-on-Trent known as the Burton-on-Trent Infirmary managed by a board of management. Its assets were vested in a trust corporation. Before the death of the testator in August, 1950, the National Health Service Act, 1946, had come into force and the infirmary, together with other local institutions, had come under the jurisdiction of the first defendant, the Burton-on-Trent Hospital Management Committee, under a scheme submitted by the Birmingham Regional Hospital Board and duly approved by the Minister of Health. The work of the infirmary has since been carried on by the first defendant, and the infirmary continues to be known by its old name and is carrying on its former work. In the circumstances, if there had been no condition attached to the gift, I should have had no hesitation in holding that it went to the first defendant in accordance with Re Morgan's Will Trusts (1), a decision of ROXBURGH, J., followed by myself in Re Meyers (decd.) (2), on the footing that the gift was a gift for the work still being carried on under the new regime. This, however, not an absolute gift, but is, in my judgment, a gift subject to a condition precedent under which the infirmity is to take the residue only if it accepts the legacy of £100 and accepts the terms, which are to maintain and renovate the testator's grave and headstone. It appears from the evidence that the testator was the owner of a grave in the Burton-on-Trent Corporation cemetery, where his wife and daughter, who predeceased the date of his will, were already then buried. Having regard to the terms of the gift, I have come to the conclusion that it was the testator's intention that the £100 legacy should be set apart in perpetuity for the purpose of maintaining and renovating the grave out of its income and that the legatee was not intended to have the right to spend the corpus of the fund. I come to this conclusion because the initial renovation of the grave is to be done by the bank before setting aside the legacy and because the legacy is directed to be invested.

It was admitted before me, and, I think, rightly, that, if this were a perpetual gift of a legacy for the purpose of preserving a grave unconnected with the fabric of a church, it was void as creating a perpetuity. If, then, the legacy be void, the £100 falls into residue. Nevertheless, the condition remains, but it is an illegal condition which the residuary legatee cannot lawfully carry into effect. The question is, therefore, whether the illegality of the condition avoids the gift of residue or whether it can be disregarded. Now, if this were a gift of real property, it is clear that failure to perform the condition must avoid the gift. This is and always has been the English law and is illustrated by the well-known case of Egerton v. Earl Brownlow (3). Compare the decision of ASTBURY, J., in Re Turton (4). ROPER ON LEGACIES, 4th ed. (1847), vol. 1, p. 754, contains the following statement:

"It is a general rule of the common law, applicable to real estates, that where an interest is so devised as only to arise upon a preceding condition, it cannot vest until that condition be performed, or the event happen, upon which it is given. This rule has been acknowledged and acted upon ever since the time of LORD COKE. The principle is, that there is no devise until the happening of the event, or performance of the terms upon which the disposition is made; a principle which applies to every case, so that although the condition require the performance of an impossible act, as for the devisee to go to Paris in half an hour, or it require the devisee to do an illegal act, as to kill B. or to burn his house (conditions mala in se); or whether it require a woman to separate from her husband (a condition against the policy of law); or whether the devise be made on condition that the legatee have criminal connection with a particular person (a condition contra bonos mores); the before stated principle authorises the conclusion, that, as all such conditions are void, the dispositions to arise only upon their performance are also void. But the rule of the civil law is different . . ."

This, however, is a gift of personalty and different rules apply, drawn from the ecclesiastical law which contains a great number of refinements on the subject, as is apparent by a consideration of SWINBURNE ON WILLS, 7th ed. (1803), vol. 1, p. 387 et seq. This work, however, deals with the ecclesiastical law and not all its niceties were adopted by the equity courts when they took over the administration of estates from the ecclesiastical courts. A deal of learning on this subject is to be found in Re Moore (5) where COTTON, L.J., citing from JARMAN ON WILLS, 4th ed., vol. II, p. 12, said (39 Ch.D. 128):

"The rule is thus stated by MR. JARMAN: 'But with respect to legacies out of personal estate, the civil law, which in this respect has been adopted by courts of equity, differs in some respects from the common law in its treatment of conditions precedent; the rule of the civil law being that where a condition precedent is originally impossible, or is made so by the act or default of the testator, or is illegal as involving malum prohibitum, the bequest is absolute, just as if the condition had been subsequent. But where the performance of the condition is the sole motive of the bequest, or its impossibility was unknown to the testator, or the condition which was possible in its creation has since become impossible by the act of God, or where it is illegal as involving malum in se, in these cases the civil agrees with the common law in holding both gift and condition void.' According to English law if a condition subsequent which is to defeat an estate, is against the policy of the law, the gift is absolute, but if the illegal condition is precedent there is no gift. In the civil law a distinction is taken between what is malum in se and what is only malum prohibitum . . . "

It was argued before me that the present case was governed by the decision of BENNETT, J., in Re Thomas's Will Trusts (6). In that case the testator was desirous of pledging his legatee to pursue an action in which the testator had been engaged connected with an undivided share in real property. Before the date of the will, however, this undivided share was converted into personal property by the Law of Property Act, 1925, and, therefore, the pursuit of the action had become impossible. BENNETT, J., held the condition not binding and relied ([1930] 2 Ch. 70) on a passage in SWINBURNE ON WILLS (Part IV, s. 6), cited by SIR R. HENLEY, Lord Keeper (1 Eden, 116) in Lowther v. Cavendish (7), but, with all deference to him, it seems doubtful whether that passage sufficed because the judge did not notice an exception which, apparently, provides that, where the impossibility was unknown to the testator the gift is avoided. However that may be, I am of opinion that Re Thomas's Will Trusts (6) does not govern the present case. That was a case of impossibility, it being physically impossible to bring an action about something which did not exist. There is no such impossibility here. There is only illegality.

Precedent conditions which are illegal are dealt with in ROPER ON LEGACIES, 4th ed., vol. 1, p. 757:

"It is a rule of the civil law, that, if a precedent condition require the performance of an act malum in se, as to kill B., burn his house, etc.; not only the condition, but the disposition itself is void; a rule, which being in unison with the common law in devisees of real estate, it is presumed that similar dispositions of personal property will receive the like construction in courts of equity. When, however, the illegality of the condition does not concern any thing malum in se, but is merely against a rule or the policy of law, the condition only is void, and the bequest single and good; for the condition not being lawful, it is held in the phrase of the civil law pro non adjecta."

It appears from this passage that, if the illegality involves malum in se the disposition is void, but, if it be merely malum prohibitum, then the condition is void and the bequest good. The present illegality is of the second kind, and, therefore, if this doctrine of the civil law has been imported into the English law, the condition can be disregarded. Mr. Roper is of the opinion that this rule was imported into equity, and for this there appears to be the authority of LORD HARDWICKE, L.C. (3 Atk. 332) in Reynish v. Martin (8), quoted and accepted by BOWEN, L.J. (39 Ch.D. 131) in Re Moore (5). This view is also agreeable to the observations in JARMAN ON WILLS, 4th ed., vol. II, p. 12 (cited by COTTON, L.J., in Re Moore (5)), which only states that illegality avoids the gift where it involves malum in se. I conclude, therefore, that the condition is avoided. If this be so, the gift is what the older authorities call pure and may be accepted by the legatee. Treating it, therefore, as a gift unfettered by a condition, I conclude that the first defendant can take the residue and disregard the condition.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Wright & Bull, agents for R. W. Skinner & Son, Burton-on-Trent (for the trustee); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. (for the residuary legatee); George Thatcher & Son, agents for A. H. & H. W. Timms, Burton-on-Trent (for next of kin).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ERRINGTON v. ERRINGTON AND ANOTHER.

DURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Denning and Hodson, L.J.J.), October 25, 26, December 10, 19, 1951.]

ence—Licence to occupy premises—Occupation conditional on payments being made to third party.

ndlord and Tenant—Tenancy—Tenancy at will—Permission to occupy premises conditional on payments being made to third party.

In 1936 a father bought a house for his son and daughter-in-law. He paid £250 in cash and borrowed £500 from a building society on the security of the house, the loan being repayable with interest by instalments of 15s. a week. The house was in the father's name, and he was responsible to the building society for the payment of the instalments. He told the daughter-in-law that the £250 was a present to her and her husband, handed the building society book to her, and said that if and when she and her husband had paid all the instalments the house would be their property. From that date onwards the daughter-in-law paid the instalments as they fell due out of money given her by her husband. In 1945 the father died and by his will left the house to his widow. Shortly afterwards the son left his wife. In an action by the widow against the daughter-in-law for possession, HELD: (i) the occupation of the house by the son and the daughter-in-law was not determinable by the widow on demand, since they were entitled to remain in possession so long as they paid the instalments to the building society, and, therefore, they were not tenants at will of the premises.

(ii) the payments of instalments could not be regarded as payments of rent made for convenience to the building society and not to the father, since the daughter-in-law and her husband were not bound under any agreement with the father to make those payments, and, therefore, they were not weekly tenants or tenants for the period during which the instalments fell to be paid.

(iii) the daughter-in-law and her husband were licensees, having a permissive occupation short of a tenancy, but with a contractual or equitable right to remain in possession so long as they paid the instalments which would grow into a good equitable title to the house when all the instalments were paid, and, therefore, the widow was not entitled to an order for possession.

AS TO A LICENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 8-12, paras. 6; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Replacement Vol. 30, pp. 526-543, Nos. 35-1773.

es referred to:

- (1) Foster v. Robinson, [1950] 2 All E.R. 342; [1951] 1 K.B. 149; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Lynes v. Snaitth, [1899] 1 Q.B. 486; 68 L.J.Q.B. 275; 80 L.T. 122; 31 Digest, Replacement, 34, 1909.
- (3) Thomas v. Sorrell, (1673), Vaugh. 330; 124 E.R. 1098; 19 Digest 196, 1496.
- (4) Doe d. Tomes v. Chamberlaine, (1839), 5 M. & W. 14; 9 L.J.Ex. 38; 151 E.R. 7; 31 Digest, Replacement, 36, 1927.
- (5) Peakin v. Peakin, (1895), 2 I.R. 359; Digest Supp.
- (6) Howard v. Shaw, (1841), 8 M. & W. 118; 10 L.J.Ex. 334; 151 E.R. 973; 40 Digest 194, 1628.
- (7) Booker v. Palmer, [1942] 2 All E.R. 674; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Minister of Health v. Bellotti, [1944] 1 All E.R. 238; [1944] K.B. 298; 113 L.J.K.B. 436; 170 L.T. 146; 2nd Digest Supp.

- (9) Southgate Borough Council v. Watson, [1944] 1 All E.R. 603; [1944] K.B. 541; 113 L.J.K.B. 337; 171 L.T. 26; 108 J.P. 207; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (10) Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries v. Matthews, [1949] 2 All E.R. 724; [1950] 1 K.B. 148; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (11) Marcroft Wagons, Ltd. v. Smith, [1951] 2 All E.R. 271; [1951] 2 K.B. 496.
- (12) Webb, Ltd. v. Webb, [1951] Oct. 24 (unreported).
- (13) Bramwell v. Bramwell, [1942] 1 All E.R. 137; [1942] K.B. 370; 111 L.J.K.B. 430; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (14) Pargeter v. Pargeter, [1946] 1 All E.R. 570; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (15) Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Alexander, [1949] 2 All E.R. 822; [1950] 1 K.B. 311; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (16) Middleton v. Baldock, [1950] 1 All E.R. 708; [1950] 1 K.B. 657; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (17) Wood v. Leadbitter, (1845), 13 M. & W. 838; 14 L.J.Ex. 161; 4 L.T.O.S. 433; 9 J.P. 312; 30 Digest, Replacement, 542, 1771.
- (18) Thompson v. Park, [1944] 2 All E.R. 477; [1944] K.B. 408; 113 L.J.K.B. 561; 170 L.T. 207; 30 Digest, Replacement, 539, 1736.
- (19) Winter Garden Theatre (London), Ltd. v. Millennium Productions, Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 678; revsd. H.L. [1947] 2 All E.R. 331; [1948] A.C. 173; [1947] L.J.R. 1422; 177 L.T. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (20) Rogers v. Hyde, [1951] 2 All E.R. 79; [1951] 2 K.B. 923.
- (21) Thompson v. Earthy, [1951] 2 All E.R. 235; [1951] 2 K.B. 596; 115 J.P. 407.

APPEAL of the plaintiff from an order of His Honour JUDGE RICHARDSON, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne County Court, made on July 25, 1951, in an action for possession.

In 1936 the plaintiff's husband bought a house through a building society for his son and daughter-in-law, the first defendant, and agreed that so long as they kept up the repayment of the instalments on the mortgage they could occupy the house, and that when the mortgage was finally paid off the property would be theirs. In 1945 the father died and left the house by will to the plaintiff. At about the same time the first defendant's husband left her and she continued in occupation with her sister, the second defendant. In the claim by the plaintiff for possession the defendants contended that the first defendant and her husband were tenants at will and that the claim was barred by the Limitation Act, 1939, or, alternatively, that they were occupying the premises as tenants at a rent represented by the instalments paid to the building society and were protected by the Rent Acts. The plaintiff contended that the first defendant and her husband were in occupation under a bare licence revocable at will. The learned county court judge held that they were tenants at will and that the claim was statute-barred.

Hanlon and J. D. B. Richardson for the plaintiff.

Marnan for the defendants.

Dec. 19. The following judgments were read.

Cur. adv. vult.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: In 1936 the plaintiff's husband, who was the father-in-law of the first defendant, bought a house, 27, Milvain Avenue. The purchase was financed through a building society part of the purchase price being paid down and the rest left on mortgage repayable with interest by instalments over a period. The details were not before us, but the instalments are still running. The plaintiff's son had recently married and the father bought the house as a home for the son and his wife. The total purchase price was £750. The father paid £250, and the couple went into the house and paid the instalments. The question is: What was the agreement between the father and the son and his wife, the first defendant?

In 1945 the plaintiff's husband died leaving all his property by will to the plaintiff. Up till almost that time the first defendant and her husband had lived in the house. Differences then arose between husband and wife. The husband wanted his wife to come and live with his mother. She did not want to do so. Since about that time he has lived with his mother and the first defendant has lived at 27, Milvain Avenue. The second defendant is the wife's sister who has lived with her since the husband left. In these proceedings the plaintiff claims possession. The defences were (i) that the plaintiff's claim is barred by the Limitation Act, 1939, on the basis that the first defendant and her husband were tenants at will; (ii) alternatively, they were paying a rent and are protected by the Rent Acts. The learned county court judge decided that the first defence succeeded. He decided that they were tenants at will and that on this basis the claim was barred by the Limitation Act, 1939. He went on to say that, if the instalments were regarded as rent, the claim for possession also failed under the Rent Acts.

There is no written agreement or record of what happened between the plaintiff's husband and his son and daughter-in-law in 1936. At the trial the son gave evidence for the plaintiff and the first defendant gave evidence in support of her case. I will read the learned judge's findings as to the facts.

"The marriage took place in 1932 and in 1936 the husband of the plaintiff bought 27, Milvain Avenue with a building society mortgage of £500. The first defendant and her husband were on good terms until after the death of his father, and the first defendant was on very affectionate terms with her father-in-law. He wanted them to have a house of their own and said he would foot the bill for 27, Milvain Avenue for her and her husband to occupy. The first defendant said that he told her he 'would put down £250, as a present for Stan and I, but the house would go into his name.' He left her with 15s. a week to pay to the building society. The first defendant later went to see him about the rates which were 10s. a week and he told her, first, that he would give her 10s. to pay all rates and later said he would pay them himself. He handed the building society book to her and told her not to part with this and that the property would be hers and her husband's when the mortgage was paid. She made the payments to the building society from that date out of the housekeeping moneys paid to her by her husband. Her father-in-law died in July, 1945, and by his will left the house with all his other property to his wife, who after his death was living at Woolsington Gardens alone. After her father-in-law's death the first defendant went away for a short holiday. She was exhausted with looking after him in his last illness. When she came back her husband met her at the Central Station and told her that they would both go to Woolsington Gardens. She said she would go home to 27, Milvain Avenue. He said he would see her tomorrow, but he never came. She went and saw him and pleaded with him to return. He said his mother was in need of him and he has never been back to his wife since. For a time he paid her £2 10s. per week which was subsequently reduced to £2, and at periods went down to £1. Since 1945 it was not disputed that the first defendant had continued to pay the instalments either out of the money provided by her husband or from other resources, if any."

After the conclusion of the argument we came provisionally to the opinion that under the agreement the son and his wife were neither tenants at will nor tenants paying rent, but that the plaintiff was nevertheless not entitled to possession. We, therefore, had the case re-argued and had the assistance of counsel on both sides as to the terms of the agreement as they appeared to us to be on the findings of the learned judge.

I will state what seem to me to be the intended terms of the agreement and then consider whether there are any legal obstacles to their enforcement. The father was undertaking to convey the house to the son and his wife if and when they had paid all the instalments. If and when they had done that they would, of course, have paid with interest two-thirds of the purchase price. The gift of the £250 was not a future gift in the sense that the father was undertaking to convey the house for two-thirds of the price which the vendor was charging. The son and his wife were to occupy the house in consideration of their paying the instalments to the building society. Two further questions remain to be considered which are connected. First, were they undertaking to pay the instalments? If they failed, would they have committed a breach of the agreement? I have hesitated about this. It would have been on the face of it advantageous for them so to undertake. They would be getting a house on ordinary building society terms for two-thirds of its price. I do not think that the transaction as found by the learned judge justifies finding that they had so undertaken. Further, if this had been the intention it is difficult to see why the father did not convey the house then and there. If the instalments were not paid I think their rights were at an end. If this happened towards the end of the period the father or his successors in title would have a good bargain, but the parties were not considering future possibilities at arm's length and the contemplation was that the son and his wife would complete the payments. Secondly, were their rights assignable? I think not. The father desired to benefit his son and daughter-in-law by making a present of the £250. He wanted to assist them to get a house to live in on advantageous terms. If they did not want it to live in, then, I think, the proper inference from the fact that he remained the owner is that he intended it should come back into his control.

I find it impossible to regard the son and his wife as tenants at will. In Foster v. Robinson (1) ([1950] 2 All E.R. 347) SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., considered the possibility of a tenancy at will with a promise that the tenancy should not be determined. Without deciding whether a tenancy could remain "at will" with such a promise annexed I find the conception a difficult one.

We were invited to find a tenancy, for the period of the instalments, the latter, though paid to a third party, being rent as between the parties to the agreement. In the absence of any express agreement to that effect, it seems to be impossible to treat as rent payments made to a third party which differed in kind from rent in that they were instalments of the purchase price with interest payable under a mortgage. The position here was, as it seems to me, analogous to that of a purchaser who is admitted into possession before completion. One can imagine an ordinary contract of sale in which the purchase price was payable by instalments over a long period. If one also imagines a term that, if instalments were not paid, the vendor would have a right to rescind, but no other right, one gets near to the present position. It might be suggested that the title of the son and his wife so long as the instalments were paid was the same as that of a purchaser who goes into possession before completion under an ordinary contract of purchase and sale. The transaction in the present case, although it seems a not unnatural one, is, so far as the researches of counsel and ourselves have gone, legally novel. The equitable title under which a purchaser in possession before completion can rely is based, as I understand it, on the contract of sale under which he has undertaken to purchase and he is regarded in equity as owner subject to his fulfilling his part of the bargain. The contract here was different.

I think, therefore, that the son and his wife were licensees, and for the reasons elaborated by DENNING, L.J., in his judgment, which I have had the advantage of reading, there is no legal obstacle to holding that as licensees possession cannot be claimed so long as the instalments are paid. The right to a conveyance if and when the instalments are paid might raise a question under s. 53 (1) and s. 55 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, as the contract was oral. The issue is not directly before us, but it would seem to me that the doctrine of part performance would clearly apply. Counsel for the defendants argued that, if it was a licence, there would be no relief if an instalment was in arrear for however short a time. Assuming this is so, it would be explicable on the ground that the transaction is an unusual one and neither equity nor the legislature have intervened to modify the letter of the bond.

The position as between the husband and the wife does not arise in these proceedings. The wife only was defendant, but subject to any proceedings between husband and wife she was, of course, entitled to rely on the joint contract as showing she was not a trespasser. With regard to the second defendant, she, as I have said, is a sister of the first defendant, and if, as I have said, the first defendant is entitled to retain possession, no question arises as to her. The payment of rates by the father should, I think, on the evidence be regarded as a gift from week to week which could have been stopped at any time and does not affect the position. I think, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed.

DENNING, L.J.: The facts are reasonably clear. In 1936 the father bought the house for his son and daughter-in-law to live in. The father put down £250 in cash and borrowed £500 from a building society on the security of the house, repayable with interest by instalments of 15s. a week. He took the house in his own name and made himself responsible for the instalments. The father told the daughter-in-law that the £250 was a present for them, but he left them to pay the building society instalments of 15s. a week themselves. He handed the building society book to the daughter-in-law and said to her: "Don't part with this book. The house will be your property when the mortgage is paid." He said that when he retired he would transfer it into their names. She has, in fact, paid the building society instalments regularly from that day to this with the result that much of the mortgage has been repaid, but there is a good deal yet to be paid. The rates on the house came to 10s. a week. The couple found that they could not pay those as well as the building society instalments so the father said he would pay them and he did so.

It is to be noted that the couple never bound themselves to pay the instalments to the building society, and I see no reason why any such obligation should be implied. It is clear law that the court is not to imply a term unless it is necessary, and I do not see that it is necessary here. Ample content is given to the whole arrangement by holding that the father promised that the house should belong to the couple as soon as they had paid off the mortgage. The parties did not discuss what was to happen if the couple failed to pay the instalments to the building society, but I should have thought it clear that, if they did fail to pay the instalments, the father would not be bound to transfer the house to them. The father's promise was a unilateral contract—a promise of the house in return for their act of paying the instalments. It could not be revoked by him once the couple entered on performance of the act, but it would cease to bind him if they left it incomplete and unperformed, which they have not done. If that was the position during the father's lifetime, so it must be after his death. If the daughter-in-law continues to pay all the building society instalments, the couple will be entitled to have the property transferred to them as soon as the mortgage is paid off, but if she does not do so, then the building society will claim the instalments from the father's estate and the estate will have to pay them. I cannot think that in those circumstances the estate would be bound to transfer the house to them, any more than the father himself would have been.

What is the result in law of those facts? The relationship of the parties is open to three possible legal constructions: (i) That the couple were tenants at will paying no rent. That is what the judge thought they were. He said that in the present case, just as in Lynes v. Snaith (2), the defendant "was in exclusive possession, and was, therefore, not a mere licensee, but in the position of a tenant at will." But, in my opinion, it is of the essence of a tenancy at will that it should be determinable by either party on demand, and it is quite clear that the relationship of these parties was not so determinable. The father could not eject the couple as long as they paid the instalments regularly to the building society. It was, therefore, not a tenancy at will. I confess that I am glad to reach this result because it would appear that, if the couple were held to be tenants at will, the father's title would be defeated after the lapse of thirteen years, long before the couple paid off the instalments, which would be quite contrary to the justice of the case. (ii) That the couple were tenants at a rent of 15s. a week, such rent being for convenience paid direct to the building society instead of to the father and the tenancy being either a weekly tenancy or a tenancy for the duration of the mortgage repayments. [But I do not think that 15s. can possibly be regarded as rent, for the simple reason that the couple were not bound to pay it. If they did not pay it, the father could not sue for it or distrain for it. He could only refuse to transfer the house to them. If the 15s. was not rent, then it affords no ground for inferring a tenancy.] (iii) That the couple were licensees, having a permissive occupation short of a tenancy, but with a contractual right, or, at any rate, an equitable right to remain so long as they paid the instalments, which would grow into a good equitable title to the house itself as soon as the mortgage was paid. This is, I think, the right view of the relationship of the parties. I will explain how I arrive at it.

The classic definition of a licence was propounded by VAUGHAN, C.J., in the seventeenth century in Thomas v. Sorrell (3) (Vaugh. 351):

"A dispensation or licence properly passeth no interest, nor alters or transfers property in any thing, but only makes an action lawful, which without it had been unlawful."

The difference between a tenancy and a licence is, therefore, that in a tenancy an interest passes in the land, whereas in a licence it does not. In distinguishing between them, a crucial test has sometimes been supposed to be whether the occupier has exclusive possession or not. If he was let into exclusive possession, he was said to be a tenant, albeit only a tenant at will: see Doe d. Tomes v. Chamberlaine (4), Lynes v. Snaith (2); whereas if he had not exclusive possession he was only a licensee: Peakin v. Peakin (5). This test has, however, often given rise to misgivings because it may not correspond to realities. A good instance is Howard v. Shaw (6), where a person was let into exclusive possession under a contract for purchase. ALDERSON, B., said that he was a tenant at will, and PARKE, B., with some difficulty agreed with him, but LORD ABINGER, C.B., said (8 M. & W. 122):

"While the defendant occupied under a valid contract for the sale of the property to him, he could not be considered as a tenant."

Now, after the lapse of a hundred years, it has become clear that the view of LORD ABINGER was right. The test of exclusive possession is by no means decisive. The first case to show this was Booker v. Palmer (7) where an owner gave some evacuees permission to stay in a cottage for the duration of the war, rent free. This court held that the evacuees were not tenants, but only licensees. LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1942] 2 All E.R. 677):

"To suggest there is an intention there to create a relationship of landlord and tenant appears to me to be quite impossible. There is one golden rule which is of very general application, namely, that the law does not impute intention to enter into legal relationships where the circumstances and the conduct of the parties negative any intention of the kind."

Those emphatic words have had their effect.

We have had many instances lately of occupiers in exclusive possession who have been held to be not tenants, but only licensees—when a requisitioning authority allowed people into possession at a weekly rent: Minister of Health v. Bellotti (8), Southgate Borough Council v. Watson (9), Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries v. Matthews (10); when a landlord told a tenant on his retirement that he could live in a cottage rent free for the rest of his days: Foster v.

Robinson (1); when a landlord, on the death of the widow of a statutory tenant, allowed her daughter to remain in possession paying rent for six months: Marcroft Wagons, Ltd. v. Smith (11); when the owner of a shop allowed the manager to live in a flat above the shop, but did not require him to do so, and the value of the flat was taken into account at £1 a week in fixing his wages: Webb, Ltd. v. Webb (12). In each of those cases the occupier was held to be a licensee and not a tenant. Likewise there are numerous cases where a wife who has been deserted by her husband and left by him in the matrimonial home has been held to be, not a tenant of the husband owner, Bramwell v. Bramwell (13), Pargeter v. Pargeter (14), nor a bare licensee, Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Alexander (15), but to be in a special position—a licensee with a special right—under which the husband cannot turn her out except by an order of the court, Middleton v. Baldock (16).

The result of all these cases is that, although a person who is let into exclusive possession is, prima facie, to be considered to be a tenant, nevertheless he will not be held to be so if the circumstances negative any intention to create a tenancy. Words alone may not suffice. Parties cannot turn a tenancy into a licence merely by calling it one. But if the circumstances and the conduct of the parties show that all that was intended was that the occupier should be granted a personal privilege with no interest in the land, he will be held only to be a licensee. In view of these recent cases I doubt whether Lynes v. Snaitth (2), and the case of the gamekeeper referred to therein ([1899] 1 Q.B. 490) would be decided the same way today.

Applying the foregoing principles to the present case, it seems to me that, although the couple had exclusive possession of the house, there was clearly no relationship of landlord and tenant. They were not tenants at will, but licensees. They had a mere personal privilege to remain there, with no right to assign or sub-let. They were, however, not bare licensees. They were licensees with a contractual right to remain. As such they have no right at law to remain, but only in equity, and equitable rights now prevail. I confess, however, that it has taken the courts some time to reach this position. At common law a licence was always revocable at will, notwithstanding a contract to the contrary: Wood v. Leadbitter (17). The remedy for a breach of the contract was only in damages. That was the view generally held until a few years ago: see, for instance, what was said in Booker v. Palmer (7) ([1942] 2 All E.R. 677); Thompson v. Park (18) ([1944] 2 All E.R. 479). The rule has, however, been altered owing to the interposition of equity. Law and equity have been fused for nearly eighty years, and since 1948 it has become clear that, as a result of the fusion, a licensor will not be permitted to eject a licensee in breach of a contract to allow him to remain: see Winter Garden Theatre (London), Ltd. v. Millennium Productions, Ltd. (19) ([1946] 1 All E.R. 680), per LORD GREENE, M.R. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 336), per VISCOUNT SIMON; nor in breach of a promise on which the licensee has acted, even though he gave no value for it: see Foster v. Robinson (1) ([1950] 2 All E.R. 346), where SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., said that as a result of the oral arrangement to let the man stay, he "was entitled as licensee to occupy the cottage without charge for the rest of his days . . ." This infusion of equity means that contractual licences now have a force and validity of their own and cannot be revoked in breach of the contract. Neither the licensor nor anyone who claims through him can disregard the contract except a purchaser for value without notice.

I ought, perhaps, to mention two cases which appear at first sight to revert to the former view. The first is Rogers v. Hyde (20), where a landlord promised that a sharing arrangement (which was really a licence) should be within the Rent Acts. It was held by this court that the licensee was not protected, because the Rent Acts operate only on tenancies, and that, just as parties could not contract out of the Acts, so they could not contract into them. No argument was put forward that the landlord's promise was equivalent to saying: "I promise to give you, my licensee, the same protection as the Rent Acts give to tenants."

If that argument had been put forward, the very point might have arisen which arises in the present case, but, as it happened, the point was not taken, so there was no decision on it. The other case is Thompson v. Earthy (21), where a husband, for good consideration, gave an undertaking that he would allow his wife and children to remain in his house rent free. It was held that the husband was entitled to defeat his promise by selling the house over the wife's head, even though the purchaser took with full knowledge of the promise. I notice, however, that, in coming to this decision, ROXBURGH, J., emphasised that the wife was not a licensee, basing himself on something I said in Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Alexander (15) ([1949] 2 All E.R. 825), but the later decision of this court in Foster v. Robinson (1) ([1950] 2 All E.R. 346) shows that she was a licensee and that the husband could not have ejected her in breach of his promise. I cannot help thinking that, if that case had been cited to the learned judge, the decision might have been different. I see nothing, therefore, in these recent cases to shake the view I have expressed about contractual licences.

In the present case it is clear that the father expressly promised the couple that the property should belong to them as soon as the mortgage was paid, and impliedly promised that, so long as they paid the instalments to the building society, they should be allowed to remain in possession. They were not purchasers because they never bound themselves to pay the instalments, but nevertheless they were in a position analogous to purchasers. They have acted on the promise and neither the father nor his widow, his successor in title, can eject them in disregard of it. The result is that, in my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed and no order for possession should be made. I come to this conclusion on a different ground from that reached by the learned judge, but it is always open to a respondent to support the judgment on any ground. If there is a dispute between the son and the daughter-in-law as to their respective rights in the house, that must be decided under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. If the father's widow should cease to pay the rates, the actual occupier must pay them, because the father did not bind himself to pay them. He only did so out of paternal affection.

HODSON, L.J.: I agree that the appeal fails. The problem is to decide what, on these apparently simple set of facts, is the true legal relationship between the parties. The learned county court judge thought that a tenancy at will had been created. This disregards the promise that the tenancy should not be determined. The promise not to determine the tenancy seems to me to be inconsistent with a tenancy at will, and I, like SOMERVELL, L.J., find the conception which was referred to by SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R., in Foster v. Robinson (1) ([1950] 2 All E.R. 347) a difficult one. The alternate finding that there was a weekly tenancy is not, I think, maintainable, since the payments of the instalments by the supposed tenants to the building society cannot be regarded as rent payable to the landlords.

Counsel for the defendants put forward as a possible solution a tenancy for the term of years during which the instalments were payable. One objection to this solution is that the length of the term of years would depend on the contract between the father and the building society which might be varied in length as, for example, by the instalments being spread over a longer period. Would such a tenancy be assignable and subject to forfeiture? These questions do not admit of an easy answer. If there was not a tenancy, there is some attraction in the view that here there was a contract of sale followed by part performance when the son and daughter-in-law went into possession to be completed on payment of the last instalment. If this had been the intention of the parties, there seems to be no reason why the father should have taken the conveyance in his own name, and, moreover, there is the further difficulty that it would be necessary to imply a promise by the son and daughter-in-law to pay the instalments.

The plaintiff contends that there was nothing more than a bare licence vocable at will. She argues that the evidence taken at its highest shows no more than an imperfect gift which failed on the death of the father so that the son and daughter-in-law remained in occupation as licensees so long as the mother was willing for them to do so. I think that the real position is that they did occupy the house as licensees, but did so under a personal contract providing that the son and daughter-in-law should, so long as they occupied the house, pay the instalments to the building society. In consideration of their promise to pay the instalments, the father, and the mother (as his successor), agreed to permit them to occupy the house as long as the instalments were running and being paid by them. If they left the house, the contract would be at an end, and when the instalments are fully paid the question will arise whether the mother is bound to convey the property to her son and daughter-in-law. Any question between the son and the daughter-in-law, who are now, it appears, at the mother's length, will fall to be decided under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless, agents for Criddle, Ord & Muckle, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (for the plaintiff); Hyde, Mahon & Pascall, agents for Frank J. Lambert & Co., Gateshead (for the defendants).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DAVIS COHEN & SONS, LTD. v. HALL.

COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Birkett and Romer, L.JJ.),
December 18, 19, 1951.]

Issues—De-rating—Industrial hereditament—Adapting for sale—Wholesale distributive business—Sorting, identification and arrangement of goods—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (1) (c) (iii)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1).

The ratepayers occupied premises in which they stored twenty-five thousand cases of government surplus stores, the cases being there opened and their contents being identified and arranged, but no other work was done on them.

HELD: in the circumstances the premises were primarily occupied and used for the purpose of a distributive wholesale business and not for that of adapting an article for sale, and, therefore, they were not an industrial hereditament within the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, s. 3 (1).

Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., in James A. Jobling & Co., Ltd. v. Sunderland County Borough Assessment Committee ([1944] 1 All E.R. 501), applied.

Kaye (Dewsbury Revenue Officer) v. Burrows & Dewsbury Assessment Committee ([1931] A.C. 454), and Hines (Ipswich Revenue Officer) v. Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Assn., Ltd. ([1931] A.C. 456), distinguished.

AS TO RATING RELIEF FOR FACTORIES AND WORKSHOPS, see HALSBURY, Willsham Edn., Vol. 27, pp. 439-459, paras. 876-887; and FOR CASES, see GUEST Supps.

FOR THE RATING AND VALUATION (APPORTIONMENT) ACT, 1928, s. 3 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 20, p. 176.

Cases referred to:

(1) Cockram v. Tropical Preservation Co., Ltd., [1951] 2 All E.R. 520; [1951] 2 K.B. 827; 115 J.P. 459.

- (2) Bailey (Stoke-on-Trent Revenue Officer) v. Potteries Electric Traction Co., Ltd., [1931] 1 K.B. 385; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 94 J.P. 177; revsd. H.L. sub nom. Potteries Electric Traction Co., Ltd. v. Bailey (Stoke-on-Trent Revenue Officer), [1931] A.C. 151; 101 L.J.K.B. 153; 144 L.T. 410; 95 J.P. 64; Digest Supp.
- (3) Hines (Ipswich Revenue Officer) v. Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Assocn., Ltd., [1931] 1 K.B. 385; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 94 J.P. 177; affd. H.L., [1931] A.C. 456; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; Digest Supp.
- (4) Kaye (Dewsbury Revenue Officer) v. Burrows & Dewsbury Assessment Committee, [1931] 1 K.B. 385; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 94 J.P. 177; affd. H.L., [1931] A.C. 454; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; Digest Supp.
- (5) Richardson & Son v. Middlesbrough Borough Assessment Committee, [1947] 1 All E.R. 884; [1947] K.B. 958; 177 L.T. 103; 111 J.P. 357; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Moon (Lambeth Revenue Officer) v. London County Council, [1931] A.C. 151; 100 L.J.K.B. 153; 144 L.T. 410; 95 J.P. 64; Digest Supp.
- (7) Jobling (James A.) & Co., Ltd. v. Sunderland County Borough Assessment Committee, [1944] 1 All E.R. 500; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by the Lands Tribunal under s. 3 (4) of the Lands Tribunal Act, 1949.

The ratepayers appealed to the Lands Tribunal against the decision of a local valuation court that a hereditament occupied by them was not an industrial hereditament within the meaning of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, s. 3 (1). On Feb. 28, 1951, the tribunal affirmed the decision of the local valuation court, and the ratepayers required the tribunal to state this Case for the opinion of the court.

The hereditament consisted of three floors of a disused cotton mill at Blackburn. The ratepayers, who were wholesale dealers in government surplus stores, bought twenty-five thousand cases of miscellaneous surplus ex-service stores comprising about two thousand five hundred different kinds of articles. The goods were stored in the mill, and were there sorted and arranged in sets where parts of one article had been packed in separate cases. Articles of clothing were brushed, but no cleansing agent was used. No repair work was done on the premises, the articles being sent out to outside firms where repairs were required. The articles brought into the mill were not in any sense altered and nothing was actually done on the premises to make them different from what they were when they came in. Eight unskilled men were employed on the work, and the goods were sent for sale to various places according to orders received from the ratepayers' sales department in London.

Sir Arthur Comyns Carr, K.C., and C. N. Glidewell for the ratepayers.

Lawrence, K.C., and de Ferrars (Maurice Lyell with them) for the valuation officer.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: In Cockram v. Tropical Preservation Co., Ltd. (1) I cited at the beginning of my judgment a sentence of SCRUTTON, L.J., which I venture to quote again. It was taken from Bailey (Stoke-on-Trent Revenue Officer) v. Potteries Electric Traction Co., Ltd. (2) ([1931] 1 K.B. 495) and was as follows:

"In many cases, it is a question of degree, which is in my view fact and not law, and not properly the subject of a Special Case," but I went on to say, and I say again, that these matters cannot always be properly or safely regarded as being questions of fact, involving, as they do, the construction of the relevant Acts of Parliament.

I have started my judgment with that reference because, in opening the appeal, counsel for the ratepayers, after observing for our encouragement that this was a sorting case, went on to observe, for our further encouragement, that it was a sorting case." During the course of argument it became clear that in matters of sorting there may be a great gulf between operations conducted by one person and operations conducted by another. I hope I am not taking up time unduly. I give an example of the purchase of twenty-five thousand pairs of boots, mingled together so that the operation had to be performed of sorting them and finding the relative rights and lefts of each pair, so that eventually instead of a heap of unsorted boots, there was a number of pairs of boots. I do not think that counsel for the ratepayers suggested that such an operation would amount—certainly I should be prepared to hold that it would not amount to an "adaptation for sale" within the meaning of the Factory Act, 1901, s. 149 (1) (c) (iii). At the other end of the scale there is Hines (Ipswich Revenue Officer) v. Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Assn., Ltd. (3), the "seeds case", and Kaye (Dewsbury Revenue Officer) v. Burrows & Dewsbury Assessment Committee (4), the "rag case," which were among those heard in 1931. In each of those cases—I take the "rag case" to illustrate my point—what took place was certainly something a great deal more than mere arrangement and identification. It appears from the report ([1931] A.C. 479) that there were some 296 varieties of rags which ultimately emerged from what had been an amorphous mass of discarded material. In the process of arriving at the final state of affairs fifty-six skilled operatives were employed who had, among other things, to separate the materials, or some of them, into their component parts, sorting the cotton parts from the wool, the darns from the socks, and so on.

In the present case what has been done has been fully considered and specified by the Lands Tribunal in the course of the Special Case. I do not propose to read the entire Case though I wish to be taken to have referred to all of it. I think, for my present purposes, I should summarise the operations in this way. The ratepayers, who have carried on for half a century the business of wholesale dealers in government surplus stores, acquired in Hamburg a quantity of such stores which were contained in twenty-five thousand cases. These cases had been divided into seventeen lots, which would mean there were about fifteen hundred cases in each lot. It appears that some description of what each lot contained was given, but the cases themselves bore no labels or other means of informing a buyer of their contents. These cases were placed in the premises which are the subject of the present appeal, premises which were specially required for the purpose. There, with the assistance of eight unskilled men, the secrets of these boxes were one by one unfolded. The ratepayers then proceeded so to arrange the contents that, as from time to time occasion made convenient, they were able to dispatch for sale to their London premises the articles which they had acquired. They divided the goods into six general heads, including, for example, clothing, textile goods, and wireless sets, and each of these headings was itself sub-divided according to the age and condition of the particular article—used, damaged, good as new, and so on.

What I have so far described seems to me to be, whatever may be the result under the Act, no more than identification and arrangement. It is, however, not to say that as regards certain of the goods some other and more specialised activities were performed. I use that phrase because in the Special Case those activities are called specialist jobs. For example, among the articles bought were haversacks. It appears that the haversacks and the straps which are normally attached to them were not in the same cases, so that they had to be assembled. I do not understand that there was actual attachment of the straps to the haversacks, but there were assembled haversack straps in addition to the haversacks—that when a parcel of haversacks was required in London there would be sent with them the appropriate number of haversack straps. That would appear to be a simple operation. Simple also would be that of assembling the component parts of a webbing belt. Slightly more elaborate would be the assembly of wireless sets where they were not already assembled. In this connection it must, I think, clearly be the fact that no such assembly was called for as would require any degree of electrical knowledge, because we are informed (and the Case finds) that the men were unskilled. I, therefore, assume that nothing more was required than that, if the set required a battery, a battery should be placed with it, or if it required a loud speaker a loud speaker should be placed with it. Finally, there was a number of anti-gas boots which had rubber soles and oilskin tops. In that case the operation was destructive of the identity of the boots. The soles were stripped so as to be available for sale as mere rubber soles, and the tops were sent elsewhere for treatment and, when returned, were sold as fabric. That last operation in isolation would, I should have thought, have been likely to have been held to be an adaptation for sale, but I need not occupy time about it because those "specialist jobs" were plainly of an entirely subsidiary character, and counsel for the ratepayers made no point that they give a colour or character to the whole of the rest of the operations. I, therefore, proceed to consider my answer to the problem posed on the footing that at most the operations conducted on these premises were those of assembly to some extent and substantially of identification and arrangement. I have said enough to show that the operations so described were substantial. Therefore, the case, at the very least, may be said to come somewhere in the considerable region which lies between my illustration of boots and the decided cases of seeds and rags.

No one would be so arrogant as to say that these cases are simple. They depend often enough on rather elaborate sets of facts and require the application of a complex and composite statutory definition, and there is, as BERKETT, L.J., observed in Cockram v. Tropical Preservation Co., Ltd. (1) ([1951] 2 All E.R. 527), at least a richness of judicial utterances about this subject-matter which are quoted on one side or the other. All that is some reason for suggesting that where it is not shown that the tribunal has in some regard misdirected itself, this court should be a little slow to reverse the conclusion at which it has been arrived on the particular facts of the case. In my judgment, in the present case we should not disturb the view taken by the tribunal.

I am not going to read the whole of the relevant sections. It is sufficient to say that by s. 3 (1) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, an industrial hereditament for the purpose of that Act is stated not to include, among other premises, premises primarily occupied and used for "the purposes of distributive wholesale business"; but, subject to that exemption, they include premises described as a workshop in the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149 (1) (c) (iii) and, therefore, and so far as is relevant for this case, premises in which " . . . manual labour is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to . . . the adapting for sale of any article . . . "

The Lands Tribunal considered whether the operations which I have briefly summarised amounted to an adaptation for sale of the articles which eventually emerged from the Blackburn premises. Reference was made to the cases, including Richardson & Son v. Middlesbrough Borough Assessment Committee (5), commonly called the "egg case." The tribunal's decision, so far as relevant, was this:

" This case seems to me to be very near the line on the question whether or not the premises are a workshop and it may be that by a narrow application of the legal authorities they might be held to fall within the definition. I am, however, not under the necessity of deciding that point, because, as I see it, there can be no doubt but that the sorting and cleaning and possibly other minor jobs which may from time to time be done on the premises are ancillary and subsidiary to the primary purpose for which the premises are occupied."

counsel for the ratepayers criticised that method of considering the matter. He argued that there was—and we have eliminated the subsidiary matters such as the anti-gas boots—but one series of operations, and either those operations amounted to an adaptation of articles for sale or they did not. If they did, it is nil ad rem that the ratepayers were wholesale dealers in government surplus stores and that the operations were a stage in the process of the business which they conducted of distributing the goods. Thus, it was contended, this court should decide the question: Aye or no, was there here an adaptation for sale? At least should say that, in the absence of a finding on that matter, the decision cannot be regarded as satisfactory.

I am not prepared to accept that view. I think, as has been pointed out in the House of Lords, in Moon (Lambeth Revenue Officer) v. London County Council (1), that there is here in truth a composite definition. I think it is open to a tribunal to say: "Well, those activities in some contexts, conducted by some persons or businesses, might be held to be an adaptation of the articles in question for sale, but I find that those operations, as conducted by this particular company and having regard to the character of the company's particular business, are really no more than a mere stage in their distributive business transactions." Of course, the words "adaptation for sale" are capable of very wide scope and meaning. I think it would be impossible to say that any dealing in goods so that they might be more suitably sold, involving no alteration of the character of the goods at all, amounted to an adaptation for sale. I refer to my illustration of the boots.

I think the same point was in the mind of LORD GREENE, M.R., in James A. Hobling & Co., Ltd. v. Sunderland County Borough Assessment Committee (7), when he used this language in regard to an argument that premises used for storing, sorting, and stacking a certain class of goods amounted to use of the premises as a "workshop." He said ([1944] 1 All E.R. 501):

"An argument was put forward that the process of storing, sorting, packing and dispatch of these finished products was a process of adapting for sale so as to be in itself a process which would be sufficient to bring the hereditaments within the meaning of factory or workshop as defined in the Factory Acts. In my opinion, that argument cannot bear examination for a moment. All that is done is to sort, store and pack and dispatch these articles. Nothing is done to the articles themselves, and it is a complete misuse of language to say that that amounts to adapting them for sale. There is no adaptation whatsoever. The article remains precisely the same article after it is sorted and packed as it was before. That point, therefore, I can put aside."

In the present case, if it be necessary, I would be prepared to hold on the facts as found that there was here no adaptation for sale of the articles which emerged. I again exclude from consideration those minor activities relating to the anti-gas boots and so forth. Apart from them there was nothing which could, in my judgment, be fairly called any kind of industrial process with regard to these goods. I do not wish by that phrase to suggest a necessary test to be used in other cases, but it seems to me to be a brief way of emphasising, not inaccurately, the distinction that I draw between this case and Hines (Ipswich Revenue Officer) v. Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Assn., Ltd. (3) and Kaye (Dewsbury Revenue Officer) v. Burrows & Dewsbury Assessment Committee (4). I think counsel for the valuation officer is entitled to say that in this case you start, not with an amorphous mass, but with an unarranged and unidentified aggregation of individual articles. At the end of the operations you have found what they were, identified them, and suitably arranged them, but you have done nothing more to them.

I think it is unnecessary to say anything about the correctness or otherwise of Hines (Ipswich Revenue Officer) v. Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Assn., Ltd. (3). That case depended on the conclusions of fact which were arrived at in regard to it. This case is also to be decided on its facts. I think that the tribunal, in deciding as it did, thought that what took place was but a stage in the wholesale business of the ratepayers, and that, therefore, the primary, principal, and substantial use of the premises was that of wholesale distribution, and that the tribunal inferentially negatived the argument that there was here an adaptation for sale. I think it was legitimate for the tribunal to find as a fact that there was in this particular case a primary use for wholesale distribution without necessarily finding that there was no adaptation for sale, and on that ground I should myself support the decision. In so far as it is necessary or appropriate in this case to express a view thereon, I think on the facts of this case that there was no adaptation for sale within the meaning of that phrase in s. 149 (1) (c) (iii) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. For these reasons, therefore, I think that the ratepayers fail to show that the tribunal came to a wrong decision, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I agree.

ROMER, L.J.: I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Kingsford, Dorman & Co., agents for Shasha & Hamwee, Manchester (for the ratepayers); Solicitor, Inland Revenue (for the valuation officer).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. C.A. [1952] 2 All E.R. 201.

Re LAMBTON'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. MAY AND ANOTHER v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), November 29, 30, December 19, 1951.]

Estate Duty—Passing—Cesser of wife's annuity on husband's death—Wife becoming entitled to whole income of trust fund—Allowance for annuity—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 5 (3) (as amended by Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 48).

By an ante-nuptial settlement made on July 20, 1912, certain funds, the property of the husband, were settled on trust during the joint lives of the husband and the wife to pay out of the income an annuity of £400 to the wife and to pay the rest of the income to the husband. Subject thereto, the income of the settled fund was payable to the survivor of the husband and wife during his or her life (or widowhood in the case of the wife) with remainder after the death of the survivor to the children of the marriage absolutely, with an ultimate limitation, in default of issue, to the husband. After the solemnisation of the marriage, certain further investments were transferred to the trustees on the trusts of the settlement. In 1949 the husband died, leaving him surviving his wife and two children of full age, and the Crown claimed estate duty on the entire funds without any allowance in respect of the wife's annuity.

HELD: the cesser of the wife's annuity and the creation in her of a new interest in the entirety of the income constituted a passing on the death of the husband of the "slice" of the trust fund required to produce the annuity under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 1, and, therefore, s. 5 (3) of that Act, as amended by the Finance Act, 1938, s. 48 (which provides that where the interest of any person "under a settlement fails or determines by reason of his death before it becomes an interest in possession and subsequent limitations continue to subsist the property shall not be deemed to pass on his death by reason only of such failure or determination), did not operate to exempt the "slice" from estate duty because the passing occurred apart from the failure of the husband's interest in the "slice."

Earl Cowley v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1899] A.C. 198), applied.
A.-G. v. Glossop ([1907] 1 K.B. 163), explained.

AS TO SETTLED PROPERTY IN WHICH THE INTEREST FAILED BEFORE POSSESSION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, p. 249, para. 240; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 14, 15, Nos. 68-71.

Cases referred to:

- (1) A.-G. v. Glossop, [1906] 1 K.B. 284, affd. C.A., [1907] 1 K.B. 163; 76 L.J.K.B. 199; 95 L.T. 823; 21 Digest 14, 69.
- (2) Cowley (Earl) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1899] A.C. 198; 68 L.J.Q.B. 435; 80 L.T. 361; 63 J.P. 436; 21 Digest 7, 27.
- (3) De Trafford v. A.-G., [1935] A.C. 280; 104 L.J.K.B. 396; 153 L.T. 17; Digest Supp.
- (4) Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] K.B. 718; 113 L.J.K.B. 513; 171 L.T. 113; 37 B.W.C.C. 51; affd. H.L., [1946] 1 All E.R. 98; [1946] A.C. 163; 115 L.J.K.B. 63; 174 L.T. 39; 38 B.W.C.C. 48; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Braybrooke (Lord) v. A.-G., (1861), 9 H.L. Cas. 150; 31 L.J.Ex. 177; 4 L.T. 218; 25 J.P. 531; 11 E.R. 685; 21 Digest 94, 694.
- (6) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Harrison, (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 1; 43 L.J.Ex. 138; 30 L.T. 274; 21 Digest 110, 828.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, on the true construction of a marriage settlement, dated July 20, 1912, and of the Finance Act, 1894, and amending Acts, and in the events which had happened, estate duty became payable on the death of the Hon. Charles Lambton on Dec. 5, 1949, (a) on the principal value of the property comprised in the said settlement at the date of his death, or (b) on that value less the value of so much of the capital of the said property as was attributable at that date to the production of the yearly sum of £400 made payable by the said settlement to his wife, Marion Lavinia Lambton, during their joint lives, or (c) on that value less some other, and, if so, what, deduction in respect of the said yearly sum.

Sir Lynn Ungood-Thomas, K.C., and J. A. Armstrong for the plaintiffs, the trustees of the settlement.

Pennyquick, K.C., and J. H. Stamp for the Inland Revenue Commissioners.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 19. HARMAN, J., read the following judgment. By a settlement made on July 20, 1912, in consideration of the marriage then intended of the Hon. Charles Lambton to Marion Lavinia Garforth certain funds the property of the husband and by him transferred to trustees were settled on trust during the joint lives of the husband and the wife to pay out of the income an annuity of £400 to the wife and to pay the rest of the income to the husband. Subject to these limitations the income of the settled fund was made payable to the survivor of the husband and the wife during his or her life (or widowhood in her case) with remainder after the death of the survivor in the events which have happened to children of the marriage absolutely with an ultimate limitation in default of issue to the husband.

The marriage was solemnised shortly after the settlement, and in 1914 certain further investments were transferred to the trustees on the trusts of the settlement. The husband died in 1949, leaving him surviving his widow and two children of full age. The trustees of the settlement were then the plaintiffs and the trust funds were of a value of rather over £17,000. The amount of capital necessary to satisfy by its income the wife's annuity was about £11,000. On the husband's death, the Crown has claimed estate duty on the entirety of the funds as passing on his death without any allowance in respect of the wife's annuity on what has become known as the "slice" principle, and the question on this summons is whether that claim is justified.

It appears that for a number of years it has been the practice of the Crown in circumstances like these to allow a deduction on the principle mentioned and the trustees claim that this practice is right and that the £11,000 ought to be deducted from the principal value of the property passing for estate duty purposes. The Crown, however, has been, it appears, recently advised that this deduction has been wrongly allowed in deference or supposed deference to the decision in A.-G. v. Glossop (1), and that the true view is that the whole property passes without any deduction and that A.-G. v. Glossop (1), so far as inconsistent with this, is wrong as being in conflict with the decision of the House of Lords in Earl Cowley v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (2) as followed in De Trafford v. A.-G. (3): The case was opened before me as a test case in which the Crown was willing to pay the costs of both parties having regard to its previous practice, and I was invited to disregard the decision in A.-G. v. Glossop (1), notwithstanding that it is a decision of the Court of Appeal. It was said that I am bound by the decision in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd. (4) and by a recent pronouncement of LORD GODDARD, C.J., to the same effect, if I find a decision of the House of Lords inconsistent with a decision of the Court of Appeal even though later in date, to follow the former and reject the latter. This is a hard doctrine for a puisne judge where the contending courts are both appellate tribunals. Admittedly, the Crown has professed to follow A.-G. v. Glossop (1) for about thirty-five years without ever noticing that it was wrong, and I should be most unwilling to decline to follow so long established a decision if it does in fact apply to this case. I must, therefore, examine the decisions in question to see, if I can, what they do decide.

Now it is clear enough in fact that Mr. Lambton's widow is not by reason of her husband's death the richer by the whole income of the settled fund. She is only richer by that income less £400 a year which she already received out of the fund and will continue to receive. This, however, is, of course, not conclusive. There can be no doubt that in law the £400 a year payable to her during the joint lives of herself and her husband ceased on his death and that there has arisen a new interest in her, namely, a life interest (if she so long continue his widow) in the whole fund. Similarly, in Earl Cowley's case (2) a son was entitled to an annuity during his father's life out of the estate in which on his father's death he took a life interest, but the House of Lords nevertheless decided that no deduction in respect of the annuity was allowable. The case was mainly concerned with another question, viz., whether a mortgage overriding the interests of both father and son could be deducted, and it was held that it could. The annuity point was very shortly dealt with and was described by the EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C., as hardly intelligible ([1899] A.C. 207). LORD WATSON said (ibid., 208):

"With regard to the second deduction claimed by the appellant, I have had no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the decisions of both courts below were right. Very little was said about the point in the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant, and, so far as I can see, their reticence was not injudicious. The annuity, the capitalised value of which forms the subject of the claim, was regularly paid to the appellant during his father's lifetime, and ceased to be payable on his death. No part of it formed a charge upon the equitable estate to which the appellant has succeeded, under the deed of resettlement, not in fee but in life-rent. In these circumstances I do not think it can, with any degree of plausibility, be maintained that the estate which passed to the appellant upon his father's death has been thereby diminished or affected."

LORD MACNAGHTEN said (ibid., 216):

"As regards the minor point urged by Mr. Haldane, I think the claim to deduct the value of the £3,000 annuity must fail. There is no foundation for it; the property passed free from the annuity, and the Act makes no provision for any such allowance. There was a provision to that effect in the Succession Duty Act. At any rate, s. 38 of that Act was so construed in this House: Lord Braybrooke v. A.-G. (5); Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Harrison (6). But there is no analogous provision in the Finance Act, 1894."

As for De Trafford's case (3), that simply purported to follow Earl Cowley's case (2). LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN said ([1935] A.C. 288):

"The first [disputed point] is concerned with the annual sum of £8,000 of which the present baronet was in receipt and had been in receipt since he had attained the age of thirty-five years on Nov. 29, 1925. That annual sum, since it was only payable out of the annual income arising during his father's life, came to an end with his father's death; but on the happening of that event he became tenant for life in possession of the estates, and as such entitled, during his life, to the whole income arising therefrom subsequently to his father's death. In these circumstances it is argued by the appellants (who are the trustees and have accepted liability for the duty payable) that a notional portion of the estates (namely, so much as was required to produce £8,000 per annum) neither passed on the death of the late baronet within the meaning of s. 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, nor should be deemed to be included in property so passing by reason of s. 2 of that Act. Alternatively it is contended that no benefit accrued or arose to the present baronet by reason of the cesser of his right to receive the £8,000 a year. My Lords, these are contentions which in my opinion we are precluded by authority from adopting. I am unable to distinguish this case from Earl Cowley v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (2) . . . I see no distinction of substance on the facts; for the fact that the life estate had been divested from the tenant for life and vested in trustees during his life, can of itself cause no different answer to be given to the question what property passed on his death. The mortgage in the Cowley case (2) was outside and anterior to the settlement, and independent of it. The annual sum of £8,000 in the present case was payable out of income arising under the settlement. The reasoning which decided the first point in the Cowley case (2) cannot therefore apply. Nor can I see any justification for the exclusion of any portion of the estates from the property passing on the death. The present baronet's right to an annual sum of £8,000 gave him no right to the receipt of any particular items of the annual income, or to the income of any particular portion of the estates. His right to receive an annual sum of £8,000 ceased on the death of the late baronet; his right, which then arose, to receive all the rents was a new and a different right."

It is urged by the Crown that the principle here illustrated applies exactly to the present case and that the decision in A.-G. v. Glossop (1) must be wrong. In that case also there were two points decided, one concerning the Finance Act, 1896, which is not material here. The facts were that a joint fund consisting partly of a husband's property and partly of his wife's property was settled on trust to pay during their joint lives an annuity of £400 to the wife, and to pay the rest of the income to the husband. Subject thereto, the whole income was limited after the death of the wife to the husband for life and after his death to her for life with remainder to the children of the marriage, whom failing each fund reverted to the settlor of the fund. The wife survived the husband, and it was held that estate duty became payable on the part of the fund representing her fortune except the slice of it which produced her annuity of £400. That, indeed, seems at first sight very similar to the present case, and Earl Cowley's case (2) was cited to the court. WALTON, J., at first instance ([1906] 1 K.B. 284) held that Earl Cowley's case (2) would have applied but for s. 5 (3) of the Finance Act, 1894. The learned judge said (ibid., 292):

"The Attorney-General contended that the judgment of the House of Lords in Earl Cowley v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (2) afforded an answer to the contention of the defendants upon s. 5 (3). It is quite clear that this section was not referred to in the arguments or judgments in Earl Cowley's case (2). And I think it had no application to the facts in that case. Earl Cowley's case (2) shows that if s. 5 (3) did not apply to the facts of this case no deduction could be made in considering what property passed on the death of the husband in respect of the annuity of £400 a year payable to the wife during the lifetime of the husband. Earl Cowley's case (2) is not an authority upon the construction of s. 5 (3)."

It is clear, therefore, that in that court, at any rate, the decision in favour of the subject turns solely on s. 5 (3). In the Court of Appeal, SIR RICHARD COLLINS, M.R., was of the same opinion. He said ([1907] 1 K.B. 174):

"I come now to the cross-appeal in respect of that portion of the wife's fortune which WALTON, J., held not to be subject to estate duty. The learned judge has decided that 'the Crown is entitled to succeed except as to so much of the "wife's fortune" as is her share of the capitalised value of the fund which produced the income of £400 a year.' This part of the case turns on other considerations. The question is whether the case comes within s. 5 (3) of the Finance Act, 1894 . . ."

—and he then discusses that question. COZENS-HARDY, L.J., was, I think, of the same opinion (ibid., 177), but it is said and has, I think, since been considered that FARWELL, L.J., went further. He said (ibid., 180):

"Then, with regard to the second question, I also think that the learned judge was right. That question turns on s. 5 (3), of the Finance Act, 1894, which provides that, 'In the case of settled property, where the interest of any person under the settlement fails or determines by reason of his death before it becomes an interest in possession, and subsequent limitations under the settlement continue to subsist, the property shall not be deemed to pass on his death.' In this case there was in the first place a trust, during the joint lives of the husband and wife, to pay out of the entire income an annuity of £400 to the wife and to pay the residue of the income to the husband, and, then, after the death of either of them, there was a trust to pay the whole income to the survivor. It seems to me clear that the husband failed to take any interest in possession in such part of the wife's fortune as is property attributable to the production of the £400 annuity. To my mind it is a perversion of language to say that, in the events that happened, the husband ever had an interest in possession in the whole income, subject only to a charge of £400. He never had anything but a right to receive the residue remaining after payment of the annuity of £400 to the wife; and the trustees would have been guilty of a breach of trust if they had let him into possession of the whole income on his undertaking to keep down the annuity. Counsel for the Crown likened the case to that of a charge, but, if there could be said to be any charge in favour of the wife, it would only be a continuing charge on income so that there would be a right to make up deficiency of income in one year by having recourse to the income of another year; but there is no charge on corpus, and no right in the husband to be let into possession."

In my judgment, the lord justice did base his decision on s. 5 (3) and did not intend to go any further. So long, therefore, as that section applies there seems to me no necessary inconsistency between Earl Cowley's case (2) and A.-G. v. Glossop (1) and I shall certainly follow the latter. The matter, however, does not rest there because in 1938, s. 5 (3) of the Act of 1894 was amended by the Finance Act, 1938, s. 48, by the addition of these words: "by reason only of the failure or determination of that interest." As the argument proceeded counsel for the Crown was inclined to limit his argument, so far as this court is concerned, to the point that this addition to the section has made it inapplicable, so that, even if A.-G. v. Glossop (1) applied up to 1938, it had ceased to apply since then, and this, I think, is the real point for my decision. Now A.-G. v. Glossop (1) decided that the interest of the husband in the £400 a year failed because, his wife surviving him, it never became an interest in possession and, therefore, his interest in that property, i.e., the slice producing the £400 a year, ought not to be deemed to pass on his death. The amending words confine the exemption to cases where the passing is brought about only by the failure of the interest. Now it seems to me that in the instant case the failure of the husband's interest in the slice did not bring about the passing of the property. It passed in fact, if I follow, as I am bound to do, LORD MACNAGHTEN's speech in Earl Cowley's case (2), under s. 1 of the Act of 1894 and not under s. 2, and what caused it to pass was the death of the husband which caused the determination of the wife's annuity and created in her a new interest in the entirety of the income.

It was argued before me for the subject that the fund must be looked at as divided between the husband and the wife as they each had an aliquot share in it, but I cannot accept this view, for it is clear that she had the prior charge, namely, £400 a year and that her husband only had whatever was left. The rise and fall of the income so long as it exceeded £400 a year did not affect the wife but only the husband and she was not a person sharing the income with him. In my judgment, therefore, the Crown's claim succeeds, not on the ground on which it was originally put, viz., that A.-G. v. Glossop (1) is wrong, but that the amendment in 1938 of s. 5 (3) of the Act of 1894 has rendered it inapplicable.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Cooper & Jackson, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (for the plaintiffs); Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BUTT (deceased). BUTT v. KELSON AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Birkett and Romer, L.JJ.),
December 6, 10, 17, 19, 1951.]

Company—Shares held by trustees—Right of beneficiaries to inspect company's documents.

Trust and Trustee—Shares in limited company—Trustees shareholders and directors—Rights of beneficiaries to inspect company's documents.

A testator formed a private company to take over from him and develop certain properties. The voting power was confined to the 22,852 ordinary shares, all of which, except two qualification shares, were held by the testator. By his will the testator appointed the three defendants (two of whom were already directors of the company and the third of whom was appointed a director after the testator's death) to be his executors and trustees and directed that 750 ordinary shares were to be transferred to certain legatees in satisfaction of their pecuniary legacies. Of the rest of the shares, one thousand were to be held by the executors as trustees on certain trusts and the remainder formed part of the residuary estate. The plaintiff had a substantial interest in the residuary estate (largely in the income thereof), but he was not a registered shareholder of the company. The articles of the company provided that no member, not being a director, should have any right to inspect any account, book, or document of the company, except as conferred by statute or authorised by the directors or by resolution of the company in general meeting. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled, as a beneficiary under the will, to see all documents of the company to which the defendants had access as directors by reason of their trust shareholding.

HELD: the plaintiff was not entitled to call on the defendants to use their powers as directors as though they held those powers on trust for the plaintiff. The rights of the beneficiaries (as a whole) were that they should be treated as though they were the registered shareholders in respect of trust shares with the advantages and disadvantages (e.g., restrictions imposed by the articles) which would be involved in that position, and they could compel the trustee directors, if necessary, to use their votes as the beneficiaries (or as the court, if the beneficiaries themselves were not in agreement), thought proper, even to the extent of altering the articles of association if the trust shares carried votes sufficient for that purpose.

AS TO RIGHT OF BENEFICIARY TO SEE ACCOUNTS AND DOCUMENTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, p. 228, para. 410; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 861-863, Nos. 3067-3096.

Case referred to:

(1) Re Cowin, (1886), 33 Ch.D. 179; 56 L.J.Ch. 78; 43 Digest 863, 3091.

APPEAL by the defendants from a decision of HARMAN, J., dated June 11, 1951.

The plaintiff, as a beneficiary under the will of the testator, claimed to be entitled to inspect and take copies of papers, books, documents, and records, which had come into the custody, power, or control of the defendants, as directors of a private company, the bulk of the shares in which were held by the defendants as trustees of the testator's estate. HARMAN, J., made a declaration in favour of the plaintiff.

Sir Lynn Ungood-Thomas, K.C., and T. A. C. Burgess for the defendants, the trustees.

Cross, K.C., and Newsom for the plaintiff, the beneficiary.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: I will ask ROMER, L.J., to give the first judgment.

ROMER, L.J.: On Oct. 13, 1937, the testator formed a private company, the object of which was to take over from the testator and develop certain properties consisting of blocks of flats. The subscribers to the memorandum of association were the testator in respect of two shares, the first defendant (Mr. Kelson) in respect of one share, and the third defendant (Mr. Jutsum) also in respect of one share. The capital of the company was £115,000, divided into eighty thousand £1 preference shares and thirty-five thousand £1 ordinary shares. Of those, seventy-five thousand preference and 22,852 ordinary shares were issued. The voting power is confined (unless certain events happen which have not in fact happened) to the ordinary shares. The testator held all of the 22,852 ordinary shares, except the said shares held by the first and third defendants. These defendants were and are directors of the company. The testator was the chairman and managing director of the company, and had very wide and overriding powers. He made his will on June 13, 1944, and appointed the defendants his executors and trustees. By the will he gave certain legacies and annuities. He gave a £250 legacy to a grandson, £250 to a grand-daughter and £250 to the second defendant, who was another grandson of the testator. He directed his executors to transfer ordinary shares in the company to the legatees in satisfaction of their legacies. That was done after his death. In addition to these 750 shares, which were allocated in satisfaction of the legacies, the trustees were directed to retain one thousand ordinary shares on certain trusts. Subject to that, there was a residuary trust clause under which the plaintiff took certain interests in income and otherwise. He is to have an annuity of £250 from the death of the testator for fourteen years, and then, subject to certain other annuities and dispositions, he is to receive during the life of the first defendant three-tenths of certain income described by the testator in his will as the residue of the income of his residuary estate. Thereafter, at the expiration of fourteen ars, he is to receive £1,000 and certain other benefits, including the right to receive after the death of the first defendant during his life three-tenths of the income of the ultimate residue of the testator's estate.

The testator died on Nov. 7, 1944. His will was proved by the first and third defendants on July 18, 1945, and there was power reserved to the second defendant to prove. On Sept. 3, 1946, the second defendant was appointed a director of the company and had two shares presented to him, as I understand on account of the shares to which he was entitled in respect of his legacy. On Sept. 11, 1946, the second defendant proved the will. The will contained a clause authorising the trustees to retain the shares of the company as authorised investments for the purposes of the trusts of the will, and, in fact, the shares have been retained. It will be seen that the plaintiff, although having a fairly substantial interest in the residuary estate, which includes the bulk of the shares in question, is not himself a shareholder of the company. He became dissatisfied with the time went on with the way in which the company was being managed by the defendants. Apparently he had some reason to suppose that the defendants were making a profit for themselves out of the management of the company's affairs. So he sought to get from the defendants, in their capacity as directors of the company, an inspection of the company's papers and other documents in order that he might ascertain how matters were proceeding. Although the directors, the trustees, were prepared to give some form of inspection and to show the plaintiff balance sheets and other such material—and, indeed, were prepared to show him all the documents which he would have been entitled to see had he himself been a registered shareholder of the company—they were not prepared to give him inspection or allow him to take copies of documents which came into their possession or under their consideration, not as shareholders, but as directors of the company. That did not satisfy the plaintiff.

The matter of the company's documents and papers is dealt with, to some extent, by the company's articles, and, in particular, under art. 121 there is the usual provision that the directors shall cause proper accounts to be kept and that the books of account shall be kept at the office or such other place as the directors may think fit and shall be always open to the inspection of the directors. Article 122 is of some importance. It provides:

"The directors shall from time to time determine whether, in any particular case or class of cases, or generally, and to what extent, and at what times and places and under what conditions or regulations, the accounts and books of the company, or any of them, shall be open to the inspection of members, and no member (not being a director) shall have any right of inspecting any account or book or document of the company, except as conferred by statute or authorised by the directors or by a resolution of the company in general meeting."

It is clear that, had the plaintiff been a shareholder of the company himself, he would have held his shares subject to the disability of inspection which is imposed by art. 122. Nevertheless, he said that his rights as a beneficiary against the trustee directors were wider than the rights which he would have had had he been a registered shareholder himself. As he could not persuade the directors to share his views, he issued his writ in this action on Nov. 10, 1950.

By the statement of claim, after setting out the relevant facts, he said:

"The defendants contend that the plaintiff is only entitled to receive from the defendants as the testator's executors and trustees such information only as to the affairs of the company as would be available to him if he was a shareholder therein but not a director thereof. The plaintiff contends that since substantially the whole of the share capital of the company forms part of the estate of the testator, and since the defendants are directors of the company now (and have respectively been since [the date mentioned earlier]) solely by virtue of their voting power in respect of the shares comprised in such estate, each of their acts as directors of the company since such dates have been and are acts done in the execution of their duties as executors of the testator and trustees of his will and that all papers, books, documents and records which have since such dates come into the hands or into the power or control of the defendants as directors of the company or of any one of the defendants as a director of the company have come to them him or her as executors of the testator and trustees of his will and that accordingly the plaintiff as a beneficiary under such will is entitled to see all such papers, books, documents and records, and to take copies of them at his own cost."

In the prayer to the statement of claim he asks for a declaration to give effect substantially to the contentions which I have read.

When the matter came before HARMAN, J., he stated that the attitude of the defendants was that the plaintiff could see everything which came into their custody, power, or control by virtue of their shareholding in the company because they were shareholders qua trustees, but they refused to allow him to see anything which came into their hands as directors. The learned judge said:

"That, in my view, is entirely untrue. They are directors because they are trustees and for no other reason. It is true that two of these people were directors of the company before the death of the testator, but they have retired by rotation and have re-elected themselves by virtue of their shareholding in the trust estate and by virtue of no other right, title or interest. Why, if that which comes to them as shareholders by virtue of the trust shareholding is discloseable, that which comes to them as directors by virtue of the trust shareholding is not, I entirely fail to appreciate, but it may well be that the defendants have made too much of a concession and that they ought to make none, and I am asked to consider what is the right of a beneficiary in those circumstances. In this case I am not going to lay down any wide proposition of law, but, in my judgment, where there is no outside interest in the company (which is merely the creature of the testator, or the settlor, or, indeed, the creation of the trustees under the powers conferred on them by the will or settlement), the beneficiaries are no less entitled to see documents of that kind or to inquire into the company's accounts and affairs than they would be if the property in question were being managed by the trustees without the intervention of a company with limited liability. We are often reminded that a corporation is a personality independent of the corporators. That doctrine, however, can be carried far beyond its logical conclusion if it is going to be argued that where you get a company of this sort, in which nobody outside the estate has any interest, the trustees can put themselves into a position of security and secrecy merely by interposing a limited company between the beneficiaries and themselves."

The order so far as appealed from (because a part of it directed an account of profits made by the defendants and that has not been appealed from) is in the following terms:

"This court doth declare that so long as the plaintiff is beneficially interested in the property subject to the trusts of the will of the above named testator Robert Henry Coate Butt and so long as the defendants or any of them are directors of the company in the pleadings mentioned by virtue of their being registered holders of the shares in the company which are comprised in the testator's estate the plaintiff is entitled to inspect and take copies at his own expense of all papers books documents and records which shall come into or which have come into the custody power or control of the defendants or any of them as such directors or director."

The order gave liberty to apply "for production of the above mentioned documents."

The defendants have appealed against that order and the gist of their complaint is, first, that it does not distinguish between the position of the defendants merely as trustees, on the one hand, and the position of the defendants as directors of the company, on the other hand. Secondly, they say that it ignores the right of the shareholders in the company other than the trustees themselves, and the legatees to whom shares have been transferred. Counsel for the defendants said that it is vital to bear in mind the distinction between a business which is being carried on by trustees of an estate and a business which is being carried on by a limited liability company in which the trustees merely hold shares. The rights of the beneficiaries in the former case prima facie would be to see such documents and papers relating to the business as the trustees might have in their hands on the ground that in effect the beneficiaries are the owners of the business. That is a principle which has been well established and was recognised, for example, in Re Cowin (1). But, he says, where the business is carried on by a limited company and the beneficiaries are interested, not in the business itself but as cestuis que trustent of shares held by the trustees, they have no rights the beneficiaries have are to see that the trustees use the voting power attaching to the trust holding in the best interests of the beneficiaries themselves and the only control over the trustee directors which the beneficiaries can ask the court to enforce is a control operated through the medium of the shares. The right of a beneficiary, or of the beneficiaries if they are united, is to compel the trustees to use their voting power in the best interests of the trust estate in so far as the articles of association. But, he says, the beneficiaries have no right to regard the directors' powers as forming part of the trust estate. He says that it is precisely what the plaintiff in the present case is trying to do and what the court in Re Manby, J., has held that he is entitled to do.

After the form of declaration had been discussed from various angles, counsel for the plaintiff very rightly admitted that it went beyond what he could ask this court to uphold. The learned judge disclaimed any intention of laying down any general proposition of law and was obviously intending to confine his order (at least so I think) to a case where the whole of the shares of a private company were held by trustees for the benefit either of only one beneficiary or of two or three beneficiaries all of whom are exactly of the same mind as to what they want to have done. It appeared to him that in such a case it would be very wrong that the directors should set the beneficiaries at defiance and say: "Although you are virtually the owners of the company in equity, nevertheless we are not going to tell you what is going on, because we are directors." When one analyses this declaration one is confronted with a series of difficulties. A declaration in this form would result in a beneficiary who was not on the register being entitled to information which not only would not be available to him if he were a registered shareholder, but also might be very greatly prejudicial to the company and the interests of his fellow beneficiaries who might not wish him to have access to the documents at all. For example, one could readily imagine a case where a company was carrying on the exploitation of some secret process, and, if the principle underlying this declaration were to be right, a beneficiary, who himself was already carrying on a rival business or was contemplating doing so, could call on the trustee directors to furnish him with information which might be very detrimental to the company. It is to be observed that the declaration provides that:

"So long as the defendants or any of them are directors of the company . . . by virtue of their being registered holders of the shares."

That is, apparently, a reference to the fact that in this case the directors have more than fifty per cent. of the holding and can vote themselves into or out of office as they like. That would have to be altered in some sense so that it was limited to such times as the trust shareholding represented more than fifty per cent. of the total issued capital. That would not be enough, however, because it may be that, if the plaintiff was to be entitled to the inspection he desired, the articles would have to be altered and the directors could not do that unless they held seventy-five per cent. of the issued capital and so could pass a special resolution. So, to meet that case the declaration would have to be varied so as to operate only so long as the director trustees held seventy-five per cent. of the issued capital by virtue of the shares comprised in the testator's estate. Again, the declaration makes no provision for the fact that other shareholders in the company might take a grave objection to the plaintiff being allowed to see documents which they themselves are not allowed to see—especially as he is not a shareholder of the company—and, more especially, that he should be allowed to take copies without being put on any undertaking, or any safeguard being provided, as to the use to which he would put them. Taking those and other considerations into account, counsel for the plaintiff was fain to admit that the declaration went further than he could legitimately ask this court to support, although it is to be observed that it goes no further than the declaration which in the statement of claim the plaintiff asked the court to make. I am not sure to what extent the learned judge intended the principle to apply that a beneficiary can call on a trustee director to furnish him with information and allow him inspection. Is it to be limited to cases where there are no outside interests in the sense that there are no interests apart from the trust interest, or is it to include cases (and, indeed, this is such a case) where, although there are no outside interests in that sense, nevertheless there are, or may be, conflicting interests as between the beneficiaries themselves? For myself, I think that, if one accepts the principle at all, it is difficult to confine it within any properly definable limit. In my judgment, it is a principle which it is dangerous to accept and which ought not to be accepted at all. It might, as I have indicated, result in very unfortunate consequences.

I think the true way of looking at the matter is that which was presented to this court by counsel for the defendants—that the beneficiaries are entitled to be treated as though they were the registered shareholders in respect of trust shares with the advantages and disadvantages (e.g., restrictions imposed by the articles) which would be involved in that position and that they could compel the trustee directors, if necessary, to use their votes as the beneficiaries—or as the court, if the beneficiaries themselves are not in agreement—should think proper, even to the extent of altering the articles of association if the trust shares carry votes sufficient for that purpose. In the present case, the trust holding gives complete control over the management of the company, and the way in which I would approach the plaintiff's right in this matter would be that, if he (i), specifies the documents of the company which he wishes to see, (ii) makes out a proper case for seeing them, and (iii) is not met by any valid objection by the other beneficiaries or by the directors from the point of view of the company, the directors should give inspection, not because they, as directors, can be compelled to do so, but as a short circuit, if one may so describe it, to an order compelling them to use their voting powers so as to bring about what the plaintiff desires to achieve. If that be the right way of approaching this matter, I do not think any further difficulties arise in this case. If the plaintiff abandons the idea that he is entitled to call on these directors to use their powers as directors as though they held those powers on trust for him and if he realises that his rights in relation to the trust holding are as I have briefly described them, I do not think that any difficulty should arise. If difficulty does arise because some of the beneficiaries object to the plaintiff seeing a document which he wants to see or because the directors think that it is not right that the plaintiff should see it, he can make an application to have the matter determined by the court. Accordingly, I would propose that the declaration which has been made be discharged, but that there should be inserted into the order liberty to the plaintiff to apply in these proceedings in relation to any document which he may hereafter desire to see and of which the defendants decline to give him inspection.

BIRKETT, L.J.: I agree.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: I also agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Waterhouse & Co., agents for John Hodge & Co., Weston-super-Mare (for the defendants); Darley, Cumberland & Co. (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A. [1952] 2 All E.R. 32.

THOMAS v. MARSHALL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).
MARSHALL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. THOMAS.

CHANCERY DIVISION (Donovan, J., sitting as a judge of the Division), December 18, 20, 1951.]

Income Tax — Settlement — Transfer of assets — Deposits to child's account in Post Office Savings Bank and purchases of Defence Bonds for child — Absolute gift — Aggregation of settlements to determine whether income exceeds £5 a year — Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 21 (1), s. 21 (4), s. 21 (9) (b).

A father opened Post Office Savings Bank accounts in the names of his two infant unmarried children, and from time to time paid sums to the credit of those accounts. He also bought holdings of Defence Bonds in the names of the children. The total interest arising from each child's Post Office Savings Bank account exceeded £5 per annum, but the interest arising from each separate sum from time to time deposited did not. It was admitted that each separate sum constituted a separate settlement. On the question whether the interest arising from the Post Office Savings Bank accounts and from the Defence Bonds fell to be treated as the father's income for tax purposes under the Finance Act, 1936, s. 21 (1),

HELD: (i) the definition of "settlement" in s. 21 (9) (b) of the Act as including a "transfer of assets" was wide enough to cover a transfer by way of absolute gift, and, therefore, the deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank and the purchase of the Defence Bonds were "settlements" within the meaning of that sub-section and the income arising thereunder fell to be treated as the settlor's income for tax purposes under s. 21 (1).

Hood-Barrs v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 768), applied.

(ii) in determining whether the aggregate income paid to or for the benefit of any one child exceeded £5 a year for the purpose of the exemption under s. 21 (4), the income arising by virtue or in consequence of all settlements to which s. 21 applied must be added together.

FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1936, s. 21, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, pp. 361, 363.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Chamberlain v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 200; 25 Tax Cas. 317; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Vestey's Executors v. Inland Revenue Comrs. Vestey's Executors v. Colquhoun, [1949] 1 All E.R. 1108; 31 Tax Cas. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Morton, 1941 S.C. 467; 24 Tax Cas. 259; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Hood-Barrs v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1946] 2 All E.R. 768; 176 L.T. 283; 27 Tax Cas. 385; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASES STATED by general commissioners of income tax.

The taxpayer was assessed to income tax on interest arising from Post Office Savings Bank accounts in which he had deposited moneys in the names of his infant unmarried children and from Defence Bonds which he had bought in their names. The assessments were made on the taxpayer in purported pursuance of s. 21 (1) of the Finance Act, 1936, which requires income arising by virtue or in consequence of certain settlements to be treated as the settlor's income for tax purposes. The general commissioners considered themselves bound by the decision in Hood-Barrs v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (4) to hold that the deposits and purchases were "settlements" within the meaning of s. 21 (1), notwithstanding that they constituted absolute gifts to the children. They held, however, that so much of the interest as arose from each separate deposit and did not exceed £5 a year was not to be treated as the settlor's income, as they considered that the "aggregate amount" mentioned in s. 21 (4) referred to the aggregate amount of income under each settlement regarded separately. The taxpayer appealed against the finding that the transactions constituted settlements, and the Crown against the finding that the income under the separate settlements was not to be aggregated.

C. Lawson for the taxpayer.

Pennycuik, K.C., and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. DONOVAN, J., read the following judgment. The taxpayer appealed to the general commissioners for the division of the Tower of London against assessments made on him under case III of sched. D for the years 1942-43 to 1949-50 inclusive in varying amounts. Those assessments were in respect of interest paid on deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank and on three per cent. Defence Bonds. It was all treated as the taxpayer's income for income tax purposes.

The taxpayer has two infant and unmarried children, Michael and Heather. On Dec. 20, 1933, he put £50 in the Post Office Savings Bank in the name of Michael. On May 28, 1936, he put £50 in the same bank for Heather. Thereafter, he put further sums in the same bank for each of them. Various drawings were made from time to time and expended for the children's benefit. By Dec. 31, 1948, there was left in the bank £844 odd for Michael and £844 odd for Heather. The accounts are in their respective names. On May 24, 1945, the taxpayer bought £1,000 three per cent. Defence Bonds for each of Michael and Heather. These bonds were absolute gifts to the children by him, as were the sums he paid into the Post Office Savings Bank.

The Inspector of Taxes treated the interest on the moneys in the Post Office Savings Bank and the interest on the bonds, both of which items of interest are not income of the taxpayer in fact, as nevertheless being his income for the purposes of income tax. This was done in purported obedience to s. 21 (1) of the Finance Act, 1936. That section, so far as material, provides as follows:

"Where, by virtue or in consequence of any settlement to which this section applies and during the life of the settlor, any income is paid to or for the benefit of a child of the settlor in any year of assessment, the income shall, if at the commencement of that year the child was an infant and unmarried, be treated for all the purposes of the Income Tax Acts as the income of the settlor for that year and not as the income of any other person."

Sub-section (9) provides:

"In this section . . . (b) the expression 'settlement' includes any disposition, trust, covenant, agreement, arrangement or transfer of assets."

It may be convenient here to say that in 1938 further legislation was enacted with a view to the prevention of tax avoidance by means of settlements, and Part IV of the Finance Act, 1938, contained the relevant provisions. Section 41 (4), which appeared in Part IV, provided:

"For the purposes of this Part of this Act . . . (b) the expression 'settlement' includes any disposition, trust, covenant, agreement or arrangement . . ."

The definitions of "settlement" in s. 21 (9) (b) of the Finance Act, 1936, and s. 41 (4) (b) of the Finance Act, 1938, are, therefore, identical, save for the omission in the latter provision of the expression "transfer of assets."

The taxpayer resisted the Crown's claim, and said that outright gifts such as were made in this case are not "settlements" within the meaning of the definition contained in s. 21. In support of that contention, he argued before the commissioners, to whom he appealed, that the House of Lords had defined, in a sense favourable to him, the meaning of "settlement" for the purposes of Part IV of the Finance Act, 1938, in two cases, namely, Chamberlain v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1) and Vestey's Executors v. Inland Revenue Comrs. Vestey's Executors v. Colquhoun (2), and that these decisions are of equal application to the word "settlement" in s. 21 of the Act of 1936. The commissioners decided against the taxpayer on these points, and he now appeals to this court.

Before me, additional arguments were deployed with which I will deal. The case of Chamberlain (1) did not call for a decision as to what constitutes a "settlement" within the expanded definition of that term contained in s. 41 (4) (b) of the Finance Act, 1938. The question at issue was: What was the property comprised in the settlement? LORD THANKERTON says this ([1943] 2 All E.R. 202):

"I may premise that, in seeking the due application of the Finance Act, 1938, s. 38, each case is apt to depend on its own facts, and other cases are not likely to be of material assistance. Further, it seems to me that, while the word 'settlement' is defined in the widest terms, the more crucial point is likely to be the determination of what the 'property comprised in the settlement' consists of in the particular case. The present case affords, in my opinion, a good illustration of this point, and the question may be thus stated. Did the property comprised in the settlement consist of the whole assets of Staffa, or is the property comprised in the settlement to be found separately comprised in each of the five deeds of settlement, the formation of Staffa being part of the arrangement conceived by the appellant, whereby a convenient and profitable investment was made available for the moneys respectively settled under the five deeds of settlement?"

The case decided that only the property comprised in the five deeds was the "property comprised in the settlement." In the course of his speech in the same case, LORD MACMILLAN said this (ibid., 203):

"In order that the income of the Staffa Investment Co. may, under the Finance Act, 1938, s. 38 (2), be treated as the income of the appellant, that income must be shown to be income arising under a settlement made by the appellant from property comprised in the settlement; it must further be shown that the settlement or some provision thereof is revocable or otherwise determinable, and that, if such revocation or determination should be effected, the appellant or his wife would become beneficially entitled to the whole or part of the settled property or to the whole or part of the income of the settled property. The term 'settlement' includes any disposition, trust, covenant, agreement or arrangement (s. 41 (4) (b)) and has thus a wider meaning than in the vocabulary of the strict conveyancer. The first, and, indeed, the decisive question in the case is whether the appellant made a settlement comprising the whole assets of the Staffa Investment Co."

After stating the facts in the case, LORD MACMILLAN continued (ibid., 204):

"The contention of the Crown, which was upheld by the Special Commissioners and has been affirmed by LAWRENCE, J., and the Court of Appeal, is that the formation and structure of the Staffa Investment Co., together with the sale agreement of Dec. 23, 1935, the settlement of Mar. 10, 1936, and the four settlements of Dec. 7, 1936, 'constitute an arrangement and a settlement within the Finance Act, 1938, s. 41 (4) (b).' LAWRENCE, J., in affirming the decision of the Special Commissioners, did not deliver a reasoned opinion as it was admitted before him that the case was governed by the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session in the Scottish case of Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Morton (3). I find myself unable to agree with the Crown's contention. I accept the view that the statutory expansion of the term 'settlement,' which includes an 'arrangement,' justifies and, indeed, requires a broad application of s. 38 of the Act of 1938, but a settlement or arrangement to come within the statute must still be of the type which the language of the section contemplates. I agree with LORD MONCRIEFF that the settlement or arrangement must be one whereby the settlor charges certain property of his with rights in favour of others (Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Morton (3))."

Relying on these last words, the taxpayer says that only property charged with rights in favour of others is a settlement within the meaning of s. 21 of the Finance Act, 1936, and that, therefore, an out-and-out transfer is not such a settlement, for the property so transferred is not charged with rights in favour of others.

The validity of this argument depends in the first place on what LORD MACMILLAN meant by the expression "charged with rights." If he meant what conveyancers usually mean by that term, then an absolute gift would be excluded. LORD MACMILLAN in fact went on, in my view, to explain what he meant by "charged with rights," for he proceeded thus (dealing with a settlement for the purposes of the section) (ibid.):

"It must comprise certain property . . . it must confer the income of the comprised property on others, for it is the income so given to others that is to be treated as, nevertheless, the income of the settlor."

An out-and-out gift satisfies those conditions just as much as a gift conferring limited interests, and, in view of this and of the circumstance that the case did not call for such a decision, I find it impossible to construe LORD MACMILLAN's words as laying down the proposition that the definition of "settlement" in the Act of 1938, as expanded, can be ignored, and the word given the more restricted meaning that it usually bears. LORD MACMILLAN himself says that the expanded definition requires that the word "settlement" shall be given a meaning wider than the ordinary one. It is, I think, useful to point out that LORD ROMER said this in the same case (ibid., 207):

"Although, therefore, it may be possible to say, in view of the Finance Act, 1938, s. 41 (4) (b), that on Mar. 10, 1936, there came into existence a compound settlement in the form of an arrangement consisting of the forming of Staffa, the agreement for the sale to it of the 470 shares in Commercial Structures, the trust deed of that date and the subscription by the trustees of 350 ordinary shares, the property comprised in that settlement consisted of nothing but the last mentioned shares."

Here, again, LORD ROMER indicates the difference between the issue which arose in the Chamberlain case (1), and the one which arises in the case now before me.

I have already noticed that the definition of "settlement" contained in s. 21 (9) of the Finance Act, 1936, includes the words "transfer of assets," which do not appear in the definition contained in the Act of 1938 which the House of Lords was considering in the Chamberlain case (1), but I do not found my decision on that, although the difference between the two definitions is there, for what it is worth. Each definition contains, however, the word "disposition," and what transfer of assets there could be which would not also be a disposition, I do not know.

The view I have just expressed regarding what was decided, and not decided, in the Chamberlain case (1) disposes of the argument by the taxpayer here that the House of Lords in Vestey's case (2) had endorsed what LORD MACMILLAN said in the former case. If my interpretation of LORD MACMILLAN's speech be right, that argument carries the matter no further. For Vestey's case (2), so far as here relevant, was also a decision on the Act of 1938, and again the House of Lords did not have to decide the exact meaning of the definition of "settlement" in that Act. Once more the question was: What property was comprised in the settlement? In view of the expanded meaning given to the word "settlement" by the statute, it would be just as fallacious to conclude that, once you had determined that question, you had also determined what the settlement was, as it would be to conclude that once you knew what rooms were comprised in a house you knew precisely what the house was.

The taxpayer argued that the words "disposition, trust, covenant" and so on in the expanded definition are simply indications by the legislature of the ways in which a settlement, strictly so-called, can be effected. The language of the definition is wholly adverse to such a construction. Moreover, it is not easy to picture the legislature telling us that one of the ways in which you can make a strict settlement is by "an arrangement." On the other hand, there is sense, though little clarity, in the legislature saying that an arrangement, as a consequence of which a taxpayer diverts some of his income, may be a settlement for the purposes of the section. Counsel for the taxpayer next argued that s. 21 of the Finance Act, 1936, dealt only with the settlement of income—for example, the settlement of an existing annuity. I can find no warrant in the language of the section for holding that it does not cover the case where capital is settled and income from such capital is paid to or for the benefit of an infant and unmarried child of the settlor. The indications are the other way: see sub-s. (8), where a distinction is drawn between income and assets, and the definition of "settlor" in sub-s. (9) containing a reference to "funds" provided for the purposes of the settlement, the word "funds" being obviously wide enough to cover capital. Then it was said that, in a case of an out-and-out transfer of assets, the settlement is both created and terminated at the same moment, and, therefore, no income can arise from any settlement to be caught by s. 21. The case was instanced of a father first making a parol trust of property in favour absolutely of his child, and then actually transferring the property to the child. The parol trust, it is said, would itself be a settlement within the definition of s. 21 (9). A subsequent transfer would put an end to that settlement, leaving nothing. There was, in fact, no parol trust in the present case, but, in any event, I do not regard the argument as sound. I should have thought the transfer simply implemented the trust, and in any event the two things can be considered together for the purposes of s. 21 as together constituting the settlement.

So far, I have considered the matter independently of any authority directly bearing on the taxpayer's contention. But the decision of the Court of Appeal in Hood-Barrs v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (4), a decision of the Court of Appeal given after the decision of the House of Lords in Chamberlain's case (1), is directly in point and binds me. No doubt, in these circumstances, it would have been easier simply to have said that, but, in deference to the vigour and the courage of the argument for the taxpayer, I have considered the matter in the first place independently of that decision. I do not think the verdict in the Court of Appeal was in any way at variance with the decision of the House of Lords in Chamberlain's case (1), or with the passage from LORD MACMILLAN's speech on which reliance was placed. My reasons have already been given.

Finally, it was contended for the taxpayer that absurd results would follow if one treated any transfer of assets to a child as being within s. 21. Suppose a business was transferred by father to son. Is that caught? Again, if stock-in-trade is transferred absolutely, and then sold by the child, can it be said that income is "paid" to a child by virtue or in consequence of the settlement? It is his income already. And what about the case of a purchase for full consideration by a child from its father? I agree that neither the transfer of a business nor a sale for full consideration is specifically exempt, but I refrain from indicating any views on the problems they present, for the case I am considering raises none of them. They have long been matters of interest and speculation, and they had better be left to be dealt with if and when the occasion arises.

As regards the argument that income had not been "paid" to or for the benefit of the child, the decision in Hood-Barrs case (4) must be taken as negating it. I think that the commissioners were right in deciding against the taxpayer on the question whether s. 21 applied at all.

I now turn to the Crown's appeal. Section 21 (4) of the Finance Act, 1936, provides as follows:

"Income paid to or for the benefit of a child of a settlor shall not be treated as provided in sub-s. (1) of this section for any year of assessment in which the aggregate amount of the income paid to or for the benefit of that child, which, but for this sub-section, would be so treated by the foregoing provisions of this section, does not exceed £5."

It is said in the Stated Case that it is agreed between the parties that the accounts in the Post Office Savings Bank were not a settlement within the meaning of s. 21. I suppose that means simply that the relevant entries in the bank books were not a settlement, for it is agreed that each deposit by the taxpayer is a separate settlement within the meaning of the section, assuming that he failed on his main point. The taxpayer contends that you must look at each settlement separately and ask: Is the total income under that settlement in the year £5 or less? If so, s. 21 does not apply. The Crown maintains that if there is more than one settlement on a child which comes within s. 21, then you look at all the income arising in the year under all the settlements to see whether the total is £5 or less. Section 21, I may recall, opens with these words: "Where, by virtue or in consequence of any settlement to which this section applies," and it goes on to enact that, other conditions being fulfilled, the income paid to or for the benefit of a child shall be treated as the settlor's income. That means, obviously, the income which arises under "any" such settlement which is so paid or applied. So that, if there were four settlements, each producing, let us say, £1 of income in the year which was paid to or for the benefit of a child, all that £4 is caught by s. 21 (1). Now, however, comes sub-s. (4), and that speaks of the aggregate income which would, but for the sub-section itself, be caught by s. 21. What is that, except, in the example I have given, £4? Now, says sub-s. (4), since that aggregate interest is less than £5, sub-s. (1) shall not apply. All that seems perfectly clear, but the taxpayer says: "No; you take each settlement separately." In the example I have given, of course, it would make no difference if you did. But it would make a difference if, instead of each settlement producing £1, it produced £4. I can see no warrant for this contention at all. The expression is "the aggregate amount of the income . . . which . . . would be so treated by the foregoing provisions of this section," which means which would be treated as the settlor's income. In the case of more than one settlement, what can that mean except the aggregate of the income arising under them all? Otherwise, the word "aggregate" is meaningless. I ought to say that I was told at the Bar that this was not the taxpayer's contention in the first place, but was suggested to him by the clerk to the commissioners. The commissioners accepted it. I am afraid I must reject it.

Taxpayer's appeal dismissed. Crown's appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Tyrrell Lewis & Co. (for the taxpayer); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

THRASYVOULOS IOANNOU AND OTHERS v. PAPA
CHRISTOFOROS DEMETRIOU AND OTHERS.

RIVY COUNCIL (Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord Reid and Lord Tucker), October 31, November 1, 5, 6, 7, December 5, 1951.]

document—Admissibility in evidence—Continuous record—Public document—
Report of inquiry by surveyor of land registry as to rights of irrigation—Filing with documents of similar nature—Inquiry not held with object that report be made public—Report not at all times open to public inspection—Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) (i) (b).

The appellants were inhabitants of a village in Cyprus situated at a point where two rivers united to form the river K. The respondents' village lay at the mouth of the river K. In 1941 the appellants diverted water from one of the upper rivers into irrigation channels over their land. The respondents claimed that by ancient user they were entitled to the full natural flow of the river K., including that of the upper rivers. In support of this claim they tendered in evidence a document dated Aug. 13, 1901, and produced by a witness from the local land registry, which consisted of a report and "reference" by a surveyor of the registry, since dead, after an inquiry made by him under Law 5 of 1880 of the laws of Cyprus on the instructions of the registrar-general into (inter alia) the rights of the respondents to the water. Since its date the document had been kept in the office of the Land Registry in a file containing a collection of reports on the water of the river K., and the respondents contended that it was, therefore, admissible as forming part of a "continuous record" within the meaning of s. 4 (1) (a) (ii) of the Evidence Law of Cyprus (No. 14) of 1946, which is in the same terms as s. 1 (1) (i) (b) of the Evidence Act, 1938. Alternatively, it was contended that the document was admissible as a public document under the English rules of evidence at common law which had been made applicable to Cyprus.

HELD: (i) the mere existence of a file containing one or more documents of a similar nature dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter did not necessarily make the contents of the file a continuous record within the meaning of s. 4 (1) (a) (ii), and, therefore, the document was not admissible under that section.

(ii) for a document to be admissible as a public document it should not only be available for public inspection, but should also have been brought into existence for that purpose; in the present case, it had not been proved that the inquiry was held with the object that the report should be made public or that the report was at all times open to public inspection; and, therefore, it was not admissible in evidence on that ground: dictum of LORD BLACKBURN in Sturla v. Freccia (1880) (5 App. Cas. 643), applied; doubts expressed by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., in Mercer v. Denne ([1905] 2 Ch. 558), not approved; nor had it been shown, as was necessary, that it was the duty of the surveyor to inquire into and report on the matters dealt with in the document: Nothard v. Pepper (1864) (17 C.B.N.S. 49, 52) and A.-G. v. Antrobus ([1905] 2 Ch. 194), applied.

AS TO PUBLIC DOCUMENTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 656-698, paras. 726-769; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 22, pp. 314-350, Nos. 3072-3548.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Sturla v. Freccia, (1880), 5 App. Cas. 623; 50 L.J.Ch. 86; 43 L.T. 209; 44 J.P. 812; 22 Digest 314, 3072.
- (2) Irish Society v. Derry (Bp.), (1846), 12 Cl. & Fin. 641; 8 E.R. 1561; 22 Digest 350, 3543.

- (3) Arnold v. Bath & Wells (Bp.), (1829), 5 Bing. 316; 7 L.J.O.S.C.P. 120; 130 E.R. 1083; 22 Digest 338, 3391.
- (4) Pettit v. Lilley, [1946] 1 All E.R. 593; [1946] K.B. 401; 115 L.J.K.B. 385; 175 L.T. 119; 110 J.P. 218; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Duncan v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd., [1942] 1 All E.R. 587; [1942] A.C. 624; 111 L.J.K.B. 406; 166 L.T. 366; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Mercer v. Denne, [1905] 2 Ch. 538; 74 L.J.Ch. 723; 93 L.T. 412; 70 J.P. 65; 22 Digest 382, 3907.
- (7) Nothard v. Pepper, (1864), 17 C.B.N.S. 39; 144 E.R. 16; sub nom. Northard v. Pepper, 10 L.T. 782; 42 Digest 708, 1254.
- (8) A.-G. v. Antrobus, [1905] 2 Ch. 188; 74 L.J.Ch. 599; 92 L.T. 790; 69 J.P. 141; 22 Digest 382, 3911.

APPEAL by the inhabitants of the village of Kakopetria, Cyprus, from a decision of the Supreme Court of Cyprus, dated Apr. 6, 1950, confirming an order of the district court of Nicosia, dated Nov. 6, 1948, whereby it granted an injunction to the respondents, the inhabitants of the village of Petra, restraining the appellants from unlawfully interfering with the water rights of the respondents.

The respondents alleged that by ancient user they were entitled to the full natural flow of certain rivers, and they supported their claim by the production of a document which, they contended, was admissible as a "continuous record" under the law of evidence obtaining in Cyprus (in the same terms as the Evidence Act, 1938), or as a public document under the English rules of evidence at common law which had been made applicable to Cyprus. Both the district court and the Supreme Court admitted the document on both grounds.

Harvey, K.C., and Megaw for the appellants.

Pearson, K.C., J. C. Clerides (of the Bar of Cyprus) and K. D. Potter for the respondents.

Dec. 5. LORD TUCKER: This appeal arises out of litigation between the inhabitants of two villages in Cyprus concerning their rights to the water of the river Karkotis for the purpose of irrigating their lands. The plaintiffs in the action were the present respondents (hereafter referred to as "the Petrans") and the defendants the present appellants (hereafter referred to as "the Kakopetrians").

The village of Petra is situate at the mouth of the river Karkotis some twelve miles distant as the crow flies to the north of Kakopetria which lies just above the confluence of two rivers called Ayios Nicolaos and Karvounas which unite at this spot to form the river Karkotis. There was some dispute at the trial whether the name Karkotis applied to one or both of the two confluent rivers above Kakopetria or was confined to the river below the junction. It was, however, agreed by counsel on both sides that this dispute had no bearing on any issue before the Board and, accordingly, it will be convenient to confine the use of the word Karkotis to the river below the confluence and to refer to the two confluent rivers by the names Ayios Nicolaos and Karvounas. Between Kakopetria and Petra there are some ten or eleven other villages on the banks of the Karkotis river. These villages (with the exception of Galata) draw their water supply for irrigation purposes from the Karkotis by means of dams, sluices and channels by which the water is diverted in the required direction. The village of Petra claims that it relies for this purpose on four dams situate in or near the villages of Evrychou, Tembria and Korakou a few miles up stream. In the Ayios Nicolaos river there are four dams, two of which are said to serve the village of Galata, which is the first village just below the confluence, and the other two are claimed by Kakopetria, as also are two other dams in the Karvounas river. One of the two dams in the Ayios Nicolaos is called the Frantziko dam and was the scene of the incidents giving rise to the present litigation. The summer of 1941 was dry and on May 27 and 28 in that year the Kakopetrians diverted the water or part of it at the Frantziko dam into the Kakopetrian irrigation channels despite the protests of watermen who were present at the spot and who had been deputed by the Petrans to attend for the purpose of ensuring that the whole of the water of the river was allowed to flow down without interception so as to reach their dams at Evrychou, Akkou and Tembria. The writ in this action was issued by the Petrans on 26, 1941, and the issue between the parties may for present purposes be fully and sufficiently stated as follows. The Petrans claimed that by ancient law they were entitled to have for their own use the full natural flow of the water of Karkotis, including the full natural flow of the water of the upper rivers of Ayios Nicolaos and Karvounas, between certain specified times on certain days of the week at certain seasons of the year. The Kakopetrians, on the other hand, contended that the Petrans had no such right, but that they by ancient and uninterrupted user had the right to take from certain dams and sluices in the rivers Ayios Nicolaos and Karvounas (including, in particular, the Frantziko dam) such quantity of water as is proportionate to the area of irrigable land in Kakopetria, viz., approximately three hundred donums being the equivalent of one hundred acres.

The present appeal is concerned with the admissibility of a certain document which was tendered in evidence by the Petrans at the trial before the district court of Nicosia. The document was received in evidence and its admissibility was upheld by the Supreme Court of Cyprus who, however, gave the appellants leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The district court granted the Petrans an injunction in the terms claimed, and this judgment was confirmed on appeal, subject to a slight variation in the terms of the injunction, to the effect that the Kakopetrians are restrained from unlawfully interfering with the respondents' rights to take or irrigate their lands from the water of or running through the rivers Ayios Nicolaos, Karvounas and Karkotis and/or of the dams Ayios Nicolaos, Frantziko, Appliki and Karidhi at the times specified in the statement of claim.

The document tendered and received in evidence is called "Report and Reference of Salim Effendi" and is in two parts, the first being the report signed and dated Aug. 13, 1901, and the second headed "Reference" and signed and dated Aug. 10, 1901. Annexed to this document is a sketch which shows the course of the rivers from above the confluence at Kakopetria down to the mouth of the Karkotis at Petra. On it there are a number of spots marked with numbers from one to twenty-eight and the reference contains explanations of these numbers. The report is headed L.E. 164 with the figures /900 beneath and is addressed to the registrar-general. It begins as follows:

"In compliance with your instructions respecting the inquiries to be made to the taxims [divisions], etc. of the running water of Petra described in papers L.E. 164/900 I have the honour to report . . ."

The report proceeds to deal with the rights of the inhabitants of Petra inter se to the Karkotis water. It later states that Petra water was never assessed for verghi (tax), but the lands irrigated by it were assessed at a higher rate than those which were not irrigated by this water. It concludes as follows:

"Although the water of Petra has not been separately assessed for verghi during the Tahrir Emlak it is perfectly clear that the value of the water is assessed with the lands which can be irrigated by this water, but notwithstanding to that the Muhtar and the commission of Petra gave a village certificate on behalf of the villagers of Petra declaring that the water running to their village of Petra has never been assessed to verghi and they agree that the value described in the attached certificate may be assessed on every four of water. They gave this V. certificate for the anticipation that the water be registered in the names of the present holders as Mulk so as to enable them to deal with as they like. I prepared 148 forms showing the present possessors of the water of Petra and enclosed herewith."

The report—as distinct from the reference—contains no mention of the rights of the Kakopetrians or of the rights of Petra village vis-à-vis Kakopetria or any of the other intervening villages. The document was produced by a witness from the Land Registry from a file which he said related to local inquiries made in respect of Karkotis water. He added "This local inquiry was made under Law 5 of 1880." He stated that Salim was a surveyor of the Land Registry and that he is now dead. Since the date of the report it had been kept in the office of the Land Registry. Objection having been taken to the admissibility of this document the court adjourned to enable the witness to ascertain how the local inquiry was held and whether it was for record purposes or otherwise. On the resumption the witness did not produce any instructions in writing given to Salim, but stated:

"It was made on the instructions of the director of the L.R.O. to register those lands which were sold or purchased and for the other lands to make a note that they have the right of irrigation."

In cross-examination the witness stated that Salim's instructions were the same as those given to Yusuf Zia which he produced. This document is dated Aug. 11, 1893, and relates to the registration of water at Flasso, Linou and Katydata which are villages on the Karkotis river. The instructions refer to previous instructions which had not been properly carried out and conclude

"Please make a list of water other than that flowing from sources and running through wells entered separately in the Field Books of Flasso, Linou, Katydata, and explain why you did not follow your instructions."

Law 5 of 1880 gives power in s. 1 to the High Commissioner to direct a survey. By s. 2 he can appoint a director of survey. Section 3 requires owners and others to attend and give information when required with liability to be fined if they refuse. Section 4 gives power to enter lands for the purpose of survey and by s. 8 occupants are required to point out boundaries. Such was the material before the district court on which the admissibility of this document fell to be decided.

For the Petrans it was contended before the Board that the document was admissible under s. 4 of Law 14 of 1946 of the Laws of Cyprus (the Evidence Law, 1946) which corresponds with the provisions of s. 1 and s. 6 (2) of the English Evidence Act, 1938. Further, or alternatively, it was submitted that it was admissible as a "public document" under English common law rules of evidence which are made applicable to Cyprus by s. 3 of Law 14 of 1946 which enacts:

"Save in so far as other provision is made in this Law or has been or shall be made in any other Law in force for the time being, every court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction in any civil or criminal proceeding, shall apply, so far as circumstances may permit, the law and rules of evidence as in force in England on Nov. 5, 1914."

The material parts of s. 4 of Law 14 of 1946 are as follows:

"(1) In any civil proceedings where direct oral evidence of a fact would be admissible, any statement made by a person in a document and tending to establish that fact shall, on production of the original document, be admissible as evidence of that fact if the following conditions are satisfied, that is to say—(a) if the maker of the statement either—(i) had personal knowledge of the matters dealt with by the statement; or (ii) where the document in question is or forms part of a record purporting to be a continuous record, made the statement (in so far as the matters dealt with thereby are not within his personal knowledge) in the performance of a duty to record information supplied to him by a person who had, or might reasonably be supposed to have, personal knowledge of those matters; and subject to sub-s. (2) of this section, if the maker of the statement is called as a witness in the proceedings: Provided that the condition that the maker of the statement shall be called as a witness need not be satisfied if he is dead . . . ”

Section (2) provides that the court may, if satisfied that undue delay or expense would otherwise be caused, admit the statement in evidence notwithstanding that the maker of the statement is available but is not called as a witness, and that the original document is not produced, if a certified copy is produced in lieu thereof. Sub-section (5) provides:

“For the purpose of deciding whether or not a statement is admissible as evidence by virtue of the foregoing provisions, the court may draw any reasonable inference from the form or contents of the document in which the statement is contained, or from any other circumstances . . . and the court may in its discretion reject the statement notwithstanding that the requirements of this section are satisfied with respect thereto, if for any reason it appears to it to be inexpedient in the interests of justice that the statement should be admitted.”

The district court admitted this document under s. 4 of Law 14 of 1946. They

“These exhibits, apart from being ancient documents (being prepared on Aug. 10, 1901), satisfy the requirements of s. 4 of Law 14 of 1946.”

Little later they say:

“These have been produced from the archives of the Land Registry, i.e., they were in proper custody and we have no doubt that these documents are purported to be a continuous record.”

In the judgment of the Supreme Court the matter was dealt with in the following passage:

“The document which seems to have had most influence on the trial court and which has certainly influenced us, was a report accompanied by a map made by a surveyor in the Lands Office, on the instructions of his superiors, on Aug. 13, 1901. It is an official document, produced from proper custody and it is nearly fifty years old. It was admitted by the district court under s. 4 of the Evidence Act, 1946, and also as an ancient document. Whether or not this document is part of a continuous record, as mentioned in s. 4 (a) (ii) of the Law, seems at least doubtful, but the maker must be supposed to have had personal knowledge of some at least of the matters that the records, particularly the physical situations that he describes and records in his map. Moreover, the document is an ancient document produced from proper custody. We think, therefore, that the trial court was right in admitting both the report and the map and there is no reason to think that the court gave improper weight to them.”

There appears to have been some confusion in both courts as to the ground for admitting this document apart from the provisions of s. 4 of Law 14 of 1946. It was not contended before the Board that its admissibility depended on its being an “ancient document,” though its age and production from proper custody dispensed with the requirement of formal proof provided it was otherwise admissible in evidence. The ground on which its acceptance is sought to be justified—apart from s. 4 of Law 14 of 1946—is that it is a “public document” in the meaning of these words as appearing from a long line of English authorities. Before considering these contentions it may be convenient at this point to set out an extract from the reference which contains the statements the admission in evidence of which was clearly the purpose for which this document was tendered, to which statements both the district court and the Supreme Court attached considerable weight as tending to corroborate the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses. The first three paragraphs of the reference referring to the sketch plan are as follows:

"No. 1 represents the dam of the channel called Frandjiko through which the people of Kakopetria take their water every day except Tuesday. They take their water from the Karioti river and convey it through the aforesaid channel by blocking up the river with brushwood and stone so much as the channel could carry. The people of Kakopetria take their water on Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Thursday from the appearance in their village of Pleiades till the sunrise, and on Friday from the appearance of Pleiades until the shadow of a standing man will approach 7 feet, a.m., from the spot standing to the shadow of his head. They continue to take their water in the aforesaid time from June 14 to Aug. 14, and from Aug. 15 to June 13 of the following year they commence to take their water from the appearance of Orion's belt instead of Pleiades."

Apart from the question of the admissibility of this document, counsel for the Petrans contended that he had concurrent findings of fact in his favour which could be supported even if the document should have been excluded. Their Lordships have carefully considered the judgments of the district and the Supreme Court from this angle, but have reached the clear conclusion that this document played a large part in the determination of the questions of fact and that it is, to say the least, open to considerable doubt whether in the absence of this document the trial court would have arrived at the same conclusion. If, therefore, this document was not properly received in evidence a new trial cannot be avoided. Their Lordships will, accordingly, proceed to address themselves to the question of the admissibility of this document as the determining factor in this appeal.

The applicability of s. 4 of Law 14 can be dealt with quite shortly. Counsel for the respondents did not contend that the report and reference together with the attached sketch was of itself a "continuous record" within the meaning of the section, but he argued that the document came from a file which contained a collection of inquiries and reports on one subject-matter, viz., Karkotis water, and was, therefore, admissible as forming part of a record purporting to be a continuous record. Their Lordships are unable to accept this submission. The evidence with regard to the file was very scanty and amounted to little more than that it appeared to contain the instructions given to Yusuf Zia in connection with the registration of water at Flasso, Linou, and Katydata in the year 1893. Without attempting to give a definition of "continuous record" it is sufficient to say that the mere existence of a file containing one or more documents of a similar nature dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter does not necessarily make the contents of the file a "continuous record" within the meaning of the section. It is not necessary to consider in this connection whether in any event the court could reasonably infer that there was any duty imposed on Salim to record the matters set out in the opening paragraphs of the reference, but this question will be dealt with hereafter in relation to the admissibility of the exhibit as a public document. Their Lordships are, accordingly, of opinion that the necessary foundation for the admissibility of this document under s. 4 of Law 14 of 1946 was never established.

It remains to consider its admissibility as a "public document." Public documents in this connection may be classified under different heads, but the class with which the Board is now concerned is that class which comprises documents which are brought into existence as a result of a survey, inquiry or inquisition carried out or held under lawful authority and it is to this class of document that the observations which follow are confined. The classic authority on this question is the speech of LORD BLACKBURN in Sturla v. Freccia (1). That case was concerned with the report of a committee appointed by a public partment of a foreign State and acted on by the government of that State, it held to be inadmissible as a public document. LORD BLACKBURN, referring to the judgment of PARKE, B., in Irish Society v. Derry (Bp.) (2), used these words (5 App. Cas. 643):

"Now, my Lords, taking that decision, the principle upon which it goes, is, that it should be a public inquiry, a public document, and made by a public officer. I do not think that 'public' there is to be taken in the sense of meaning the whole world . . . But it must be a public document, and it must be made by a public officer. I understand a public document there to mean a document that is made for the purpose of the public making use of it, and being able to refer to it. It is meant to be where there is a judicial, or quasi-judicial, duty to inquire, as might be said to be the case with the bishop acting under the writs issued by the Crown. That may be said to be quasi-judicial. He is acting for the public when that is done; but I think the very object of it must be that it should be made for the purpose of being kept public, so that the persons concerned in it may have access to it afterwards."

Referring to Arnold v. Bath & Wells (Bp.) (3) he said (ibid., 646):

"The bishop made his visitation, and recorded it with the wish and intent that it should be kept publicly as a register, to be seen by everybody in his diocese. If the bishop had not the right to make such an inquiry, so as to make it evidence in future, that is another affair; but if he had, then he was a public officer performing what he thought a public duty, with the view and intent it should be public."

These passages stress the dual requirements that the document should not only be available for public inspection, but that it shall also have been brought into existence for this very purpose, and LORD BLACKBURN was explaining his interpretation of the judgment in Irish Society v. Derry (Bp.) (2) where PARKE, B., in the year 1846 had said (12 Cl. & Fin. 668):

"In public documents, made for the information of the Crown, or all the King's subjects who may require the information they contain, the entry by a public officer is presumed to be true when it is made, and is for that reason receivable in all cases, whether the officer or his successor may be concerned in such cases or not."

Nine hundred years later LORD GODDARD, C.J., sitting as a member of the Appellate Division in Pettit v. Lilley (4), had occasion to consider this language of PARKE, B., in the light of LORD BLACKBURN's speech in Sturla v. Freccia (1) and said ([1946] 1 All E.R. 595):

"In my opinion, it is quite clear that PARKE, B., did not mean to lay down that every document that may be prepared by a servant of the Crown for the information of His Majesty is a public document. It may be that the words 'for the information of the Crown, or all the King's subjects who may require the information they contain' should be read as meaning 'for the information of the Crown, that is to say, all the King's subjects who may require the information they contain.' But however that may be, he was there dealing with documents of record in the courts. Many documents are prepared for the information of the Crown (i.e., the Executive), which are of a highly confidential nature and it is well known, as has recently been held by the House of Lords, that the Crown has an absolute right to object to produce any document on the ground that it would be against the public interest so to do: see Duncan v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd. (5). It is difficult, therefore, to see how a document to which the public can have no access and which the Crown can refuse to produce under a subpoena could by any possibility be described as a public document."

Later, LORD GODDARD observed (ibid., 596):

"It seems to me clear from LORD BLACKBURN's speech that to be a public document it must be one made for the purpose of the public making use of it. Its object must be that all persons concerned in it may have access to it."

Save for the doubts expressed by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J. ([1905] 2 Ch. 558) (which doubts were not shared by the other two members of the Court of Appeal, viz., STIRLING and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.J.) in Mercer v. Denne (6) whether LORD BLACKBURN's speech may not have been expressed in rather too wide terms, his definition has now been generally accepted for over seventy years and their Lordships can see no reason for attempting to qualify it in any respect.

A number of cases prior in date to Sturla's case (1) were cited by leading counsel for the respondents in support of his submission that the document, being a revenue survey made for the Crown under a public statute, was admissible as a public document made in the public interest regardless of whether it was preceded by a public inquiry or was subsequently available to the public. If this were the true test it would be contrary to LORD BLACKBURN's definition, but their Lordships find nothing in the authorities relied on which is necessarily inconsistent with Sturla's case (1) which, as stated above, they regard as containing an authoritative statement of the law as to the admissibility of this class of document.

Applying LORD BLACKBURN's test to the document in question their Lordships consider that it was not shown by the plaintiffs in the action either intrinsically from the contents of the document itself or from other evidence (i) that a judicial or semi-judicial inquiry was ever held by Salim as to the rights of the Kakopetrians to Karkotis water or as to the conflicting claims of Petra and Kakopetria to such water; (ii) that the inquiry in fact held by Salim was held with the object that his report thereon should be made public; or (iii) that the report was in fact at all times open to public inspection or that an inference to this effect should be drawn from the fact that it was produced in evidence without objection by the Land Registry authorities. Furthermore, they are of opinion that, in any event, it was not established that it was any part of the duty of Salim to record the matters set out in the opening paragraphs of the "reference" which have been set out above, and they consider that it is implicit in the authorities and, indeed, it was expressly so stated in Nothard v. Pepper (7) (17 C.B.N.S. 49, 52) and A.-G. v. Antrobus (8) ([1905] 2 Ch. 194) that the statements in a document tendered in evidence as a public document should be statements with regard to matters which it was the duty of the public officer holding the inquiry to inquire into and report on.

For these reasons, their Lordships are of opinion that the report and reference were wrongly admitted in evidence, and they will, accordingly, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and the judgments of the district court of Nicosia and the Supreme Court of Cyprus set aside and the action remitted to the district court for a new trial.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: E. F. Turner & Sons (for the appellants); Bischoff & Co. (for the respondents).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

v. GOVERNOR OF BRIXTON PRISON AND ANOTHER.
Ex parte PAWEL SLIWA.

JUDGMENT OF APPEAL (Singleton, Birkett and Romer, L.J.J.), December 3, 4, 20, 1951.]

n—Deportation—Order that alien “shall be deported”—Validity—Aliens Order, 1920 (S.R. & O., 1920, No. 448), art. 12 (1).

On Oct. 6, 1950, the Home Secretary made an order that the applicant, an alien, “shall be deported from the United Kingdom and shall remain thereafter out of the United Kingdom,” and further directed that he should be placed in the custody of a police officer until deportation. In September, 1951, the order was served on the applicant, who was detained in order to be placed on board a Polish ship. It was contended that the order was invalid and the applicant’s detention unlawful because (i) the order did not “require” him to leave the United Kingdom and, therefore, failed to comply with art. 12 (1) of the Aliens Order, 1920, and (ii) that he was not given an opportunity of leaving the United Kingdom voluntarily and thereby enabled to escape deportation to Poland.

HELD: under the Aliens Order, 1920, art. 12 (1), the Home Secretary had power to make an order compelling an alien to leave the United Kingdom, as distinguished from requesting him to do so; there was no provision in the order of 1920 that before a compulsory order was made against an alien he must first be given the opportunity of leaving, and no special form of deportation order was provided; and, therefore, the order made against the applicant was valid.

R. v. Home Secretary. Ex p. Chateau Thierry (Duke) ([1917] 1 K.B. 922), applied.

AS TO THE DEPORTATION OF ALIENS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., 1, pp. 484-488, paras. 820-827; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 2, pp. 194-Nos. 542-553, and Digest Supp.

FOR THE ALIENS ORDER, 1920, see HALSBURY’S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, Vol. 2, p. 7.

as referred to:

) R. v. Home Secretary. Ex p. Chateau Thierry (Duke), [1917] 1 K.B. 552; revsd. C.A., 1 K.B. 922; 86 L.J.K.B. 923; 116 L.T. 226; 81 J.P. 125; 2 Digest 196, 552.

) R. v. Home Secretary. Ex p. Bressler, (1924), 131 L.T. 386; 88 J.P. 89; Digest Supp.

PEAL of applicant from a decision of the Divisional Court (LORD GODDARD, HILBERY and SLADE, JJ.), dated Oct. 18, 1951.

the applicant, who was detained in Brixton prison under a deportation order made by the Secretary of State for Home Affairs, applied for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground (i) that the order was bad because it did not comply with the words of art. 12 (1) of the Aliens Order, 1920, and did not give the applicant the option to leave the country voluntarily; (ii) that the order was not served on the applicant; and (iii) that he was a political refugee opposed to the present Polish government and it was intended to send him on board a Polish ship on Oct. 5, 1951. The order was as follows: “Whereas the Aliens Restriction Acts, 1914 and 1919. Deportation Order made by the Secretary of State in pursuance of powers conferred by the Aliens Restriction Acts, 1914 and 1919, and art. 12 of the Aliens Order, 1920. Whereas under art. 12 (6) (c) of the Aliens Order, 1920, I deem it to be conducive to the public interest to make a deportation order against Pawel Sliwa, an alien, in pursuance of the above mentioned powers I hereby order that the said Pawel Sliwa shall be deported from the United Kingdom, and shall remain thereafter out of the United Kingdom. And further, I direct that, from and after the service of this order upon the above-named alien he shall, until he can be conveniently conveyed to and placed on board the ship on which he is to leave the United Kingdom . . . be in custody."

The Divisional Court refused the application on the ground (i) that the order was made in proper form and that the alien had no right of choosing the country where he wanted to go; (ii) that the order was served on the applicant; and (iii) that the choice of the country to which the alien was to be deported was left by Parliament to the Home Secretary; and, therefore, what happened after the alien was put in the ship was a matter which did not concern the executive government or the court. The applicant appealed to the Court of Appeal where only the first point was argued.

Weitzman, K.C., and Ogilvie Jones for the applicant.

J. P. Ashworth for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. The following judgments were read.

SINGLETON, L.J.: This is an appeal from an order of the Divisional Court by which a motion for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of one Pawel Sliwa, an alien, was refused. The applicant is now in custody under an order of the Secretary of State for Home Affairs. The order was made on Oct. 6, 1950, though it was not served until almost a year later. It purports to be made under the Aliens Restriction Acts, 1914 and 1919, and art. 12 of the Aliens Order, 1920.

Three questions were raised before the Divisional Court, but only one of them was argued before us and this can be stated shortly. It is claimed that the order of deportation made by the Secretary of State is bad in that it is not in form an order under art. 12 of the Aliens Order, 1920. It is said that art. 12 (1) gives the Secretary of State power to make an order requiring an alien to leave and thereafter to remain out of the United Kingdom, whereas the order made does not "require" any such thing, but orders that the applicant be deported. Therefore, it is submitted, the order is not an order within art. 12 (1), nor does it become such merely because the order contemplated is referred to in the article as a deportation order.

The Aliens Restriction Acts, 1914 and 1919, are to be read together, and they have been reviewed year by year. Section 1 of the Act of 1914 provided that restrictions might be imposed on aliens by Order in Council, and, by para. (c), that provision might be made by the order for the deportation of aliens from the United Kingdom. The Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916 (S.R. & O., 1916, No. 122), made under the Act, by art. 12 (1) provided that the Secretary of State might order the deportation of any alien, and that any alien with respect to whom such an order was made should forthwith leave the United Kingdom, and art. 12 (2) provided that where an alien was ordered to be deported under the order, he might, until he could, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, be conveniently conveyed to and placed on board a ship about to leave the United Kingdom, be detained in such manner as the Secretary of State directed, and, while so detained, be deemed to be in legal custody.

This article was considered in R. v. Home Secretary. Ex p. Duke of Chateau Thierry (1), where VISCOUNT READING, C.J., said ([1917] 1 K.B. 556) that the alien " . . . must have the opportunity of leaving this country when the order for deportation is made, and he may go to any country he pleases."

In the Court of Appeal a different view of the order was taken: see SWINFEN EADY, L.J. ([1917] 1 K.B. 931), PICKFORD, L.J. (ibid., 933), and BANKES, L.J. (ibid., 936). I cite a short passage from the judgment of PICKFORD, L.J. (ibid., 933):

" The Secretary of State has two courses open to him. If he considers it safe to leave the alien at large he may rest himself only on sub-s. (1), and then

It seems to me the alien is at liberty to choose his ship and his destination. If, on the other hand, he considers it right that the alien should not be left at large, he may act under sub-s. (2) and detain him as therein provided."

In 1919 there was a change made in art. 12 (1), and that change was maintained in the order of 1920 which is now in force and under which the Secretary of State acted in the present case. Article 12 provides:

"(1) The Secretary of State, may, if he thinks fit, in any of the cases mentioned in this article make an order (in this order referred to as a deportation order) requiring an alien to leave and to remain thereafter out of the United Kingdom. (2) An order made under this article may be made subject to any condition which the Secretary of State may think proper. (3) An alien with respect to whom a deportation order is made shall leave the United Kingdom in accordance with the order, and shall thereafter so long as the order is in force remain out of the United Kingdom. (4) An alien with respect to whom a deportation order is made, or a certificate is given by a court with a view to the making of a deportation order, may be detained in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary of State, and may be placed on a ship about to leave the United Kingdom, and shall be deemed to be in legal custody whilst so detained, and until the ship finally leaves the United Kingdom . . . (6) A deportation order may be made in any of the following cases . . . (c) If the Secretary of State deems it to be conducive to the public good to make a deportation order against the alien."

It will be seen that the wording of art. 12 (1) differs from the wording of the order of 1916. Now the Secretary of State may make an order requiring an alien to leave and to remain thereafter out of the United Kingdom. The order here is still referred to as a deportation order.

It is a little surprising that, notwithstanding the change in art. 12 (1), the form of order used by the Home Office has remained just as it was previously, apart from an alteration made consequent on the judgment of BANKES, L.J., in R. v. Home Secretary. Ex p. Bressler (2). The order in the present case is an order that Pawel Sliwa shall be deported from the United Kingdom . . . followed by directions for his detention meanwhile. Article 12 (6) of the order of 1920 sets out the cases under which an order may be made, and the present case fell under para. (c). Great importance was attached by counsel for the applicant to the change in the form of art. 12 (1). He submitted that as it now stands (a) it presupposes a document or notice addressed to the alien, and (b) it is intended to give the alien an opportunity to leave the United Kingdom voluntarily on receiving notice under art. 12. There is some force in this argument, but I feel that it does not pay sufficient regard to art. 12 (4), under which an alien with respect to whom a deportation order is made

" . . . may be detained in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary of State, and may be placed on a ship about to leave the United Kingdom, and shall be deemed to be in legal custody whilst so detained . . . "

There is no reason why the Secretary of State should not use art. 12 (1) and art. 12 (4) together if he thinks fit so to do. In other words, once an order is made under art. 12 (1) the Secretary of State may direct detention of the alien under art. 12 (4). Virtually the power of the Secretary of State is just the same as it was under the order of 1916, though the wording of art. 12 has been changed. In the present case, if the Secretary of State thinks it right, the alien is given an opportunity to leave. The order in this case was made on Oct. 6, 1950, and clearly the alien was aware of it. The alien, in fact, applied for a passport at the Polish Consulate in London in November, 1950. The order was not served on him until Sept. 28, 1951. Thus, the position of the alien is just the same as it would have been if the order had been made in the terms in which counsel for the applicant submits that it ought to have been in order to comply with art. 12 (1). It is not directed to the alien, but it names him, and it was served on him. It is an order and makes it clear what is required. The latter part of it contains provision for his detention meanwhile, and the facts deposed to by the alien and his legal adviser would seem to show that he was given an opportunity to make arrangements for his departure from this country, though I do not consider that the Secretary of State was bound to allow that.

The objection raised is a technical one, based on the wording of the order. It is none the worse for that if it is sound. I think it fails, and I state my reasons shortly. (i) That which the Secretary of State is empowered to do is to make an order as distinguished from a request. (ii) An order requiring a person to leave envisages compelling him to leave. The Secretary of State can thus make an order which compels the alien to leave. Whatever else can be said about the order, it is clear on that point. (iii) No special form of order is provided for use. That which was served was headed: "Deportation Order" (vide art. 12 (1)) and the powers under which it was made are set out. (iv) I do not think that there is any more substance in the argument that under the order of 1920 the alien must be given an opportunity to leave than there was in that addressed to the court under the order of 1916. To my mind, art. 12 (4) disposes of that. I am in favour of dismissing the appeal.

BIRKETT, L.J.: In the ordinary way I should have been content to express my agreement with the judgment that has just been delivered, but as the appeal is concerned with the liberty of a foreigner who alleges that he has particular reason to fear being deported to Poland I will state my own view quite briefly. The submission of counsel for the applicant was that the order of Oct. 6, 1950, made by the Secretary of State was a bad order, and his client was, therefore, illegally detained in custody. The order of Oct. 6, 1950, purported to be made in pursuance of powers conferred by the Aliens Restriction Acts, 1914 and 1919, and art. 12 of the Aliens Order of 1920.

Counsel for the applicant emphasised the importance of the difference between the wording of the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, and the Aliens Order, 1920. Under art. 12 of the order of 1916 the Secretary of State was empowered to "order the deportation of any alien," and the alien should "forthwith leave and thereafter and so long as the order remained in force remain out of the United Kingdom." Article 12 (1) of the Aliens Order of 1920 empowered the Secretary of State to make an order "requiring an alien to leave and to remain thereafter out of the United Kingdom." The order made in this case does not follow the wording "requiring an alien to leave," but uses the words "shall be deported from the United Kingdom," and it is on that ground that counsel for the applicant submits that the order is bad in law. The Secretary of State, he says, should have made an order addressed to the alien requiring him to leave the United Kingdom, and he has not done so, but has made an order of deportation in the words: "He shall be deported from the United Kingdom." We listened to considerable argument on the meaning of the words "requiring him to leave the United Kingdom," and I think the meaning of the words must be that for which counsel for the respondents contended, that is, "which requires" him to leave. Counsel for the applicant suggested that the words were more in accordance with a request to leave rather than an order to leave.

The order of 1920 has been in force for over thirty years, and the order of Oct. 6, 1950, followed the form which has been used throughout that period. It seems to me to be of importance to observe that the powers of the Secretary of State under the orders of 1916 and 1920 to order the alien to be detained in custody until he can be placed in a suitable ship and deported are substantially the same, although there is a slight difference in the wording. If, for example, the words "requires you to leave" had been in the order of Oct. 6, 1950, the Secretary of State could have ordered the detention of the alien immediately the service of the order, and he could have been kept in custody until placed aboard a suitable ship. This seems to be opposed to the view, for which counsel the applicant contends, that the wording of the order of 1920 prescribes nothing in the nature of a request to leave addressed to the alien. I must say I think it unfortunate that in a matter of such very great moment man's liberty it should be possible for a point of this kind to arise so that of the judges in the Divisional Court, SLADE, J., should have thought it imperative to put on record the doubts and difficulties he felt in concurring in decision. On careful consideration of the whole matter I am of opinion that order of Oct. 6, 1950, was a valid order. I do not think that the Aliens Order, by the change in language gave to the alien the opportunity to leave the country of his own accord, and only thereafter was the power of deportation to be exercised. I do not think that the absence of the words "I require you to leave" from the order of Oct. 6, 1950, makes the order invalid, nor do I think the presence of the words "shall be deported" does so either. I think that the Secretary of State exercising his powers under art. 12 (6) (c) of the order of 1920, which gave him power to make a deportation order if he deemed it to be conducive to the public good, was not bound to use the words: "I require you to leave," but by ordering the deportation of the alien made an order which required the alien to leave.

ROMER, L.J.: I agree with the judgments which have just been delivered.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Miles Griffiths & Co. (for the applicant); Treasury Solicitor (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MARJORIBANKS' INDENTURE. FRANKLAND v. MINISTRY OF HEALTH AND ANOTHER.

COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Birkett and Romer, L.J.J.),
December 5, 6, 19, 1951.]

National Health Service—Hospital—Transfer of property—"Held by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital"—Power of trustees to sell property and apply proceeds of sale to other charitable purposes—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 6 (1).

By a deed, dated June 27, 1884, land which was the site of a home for incurables was conveyed to trustees on trust to sell any part thereof (not being the main building used for the patients of the home), if authorised thereto by a resolution of the committee of management of the home, and to sell the whole, or any part thereof, if authorised thereto by a resolution of the subscribers to the fund out of which land for the home was bought and the home endowed (such resolution being consequent on resolutions of the committee and subscribers to the effect that by reason of insufficiency of funds, or for any other reason, the home should be closed), and on trust in the meantime to permit the land to be used for the purposes of the home. On the sale of the land or any part thereof, the income of the invested proceeds of sale would be applicable inter alia to the payment of pensions to persons who, though suffering from some incurable malady, did not receive treatment or services at the home, and, on the sale of the whole land (viz., on the contingency of the enterprise of the home ceasing to exist), the trust property would be applicable for such other charitable purposes as the committee and the subscribers might determine. On July 4, 1948, i.e., immediately before the appointed day (July 5, 1948) under the National Health Service Act, 1946, the land was used by the trustees for the purposes of the home.

HELD: under the deed of 1884 the land was held by the trustees on July 4, 1948, solely for the purposes of the home for incurables, notwithstanding (a) the remote remainder in favour of other charitable purposes to be determined on the contingency of the home ceasing to exist, or (b) the provision enabling income of the invested proceeds of sale to be applied in payment of pensions to persons suffering from some incurable malady, and, therefore, the land was an interest "held immediately before" July 5, 1948, "by trustees solely for the purposes of" a voluntary hospital, within the meaning of s. 6 (1) of the Act of 1946, and passed to the Minister of Health on that date under the sub-section.

Ministry of Health v. Fox ([1950] 1 All E.R. 1050), approved in part.

FOR THE NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE ACT, 1946, s. 6 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 15, p. 339.

Cases referred to:

(1) Ministry of Health v. Fox, [1950] 1 All E.R. 1050; [1950] Ch. 369.

(2) Marlborough (Duke) v. A.-G. (No. 2), [1945] 1 All E.R. 165; [1945] Ch. 145; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of WYNN-PARRY, J., dated June 7, 1950.

The plaintiff, a member of the general committee of the Royal Midland Counties Home for Incurables at Leamington Spa, suing on behalf of himself and all the other members of the committee, took out a summons to determine whether, on the true construction of a trust deed, dated June 27, 1884, and of the National Health Service Act, 1946, s. 6 (1), and on the footing that the home was a hospital within the meaning of the Act, land which immediately before July 5, 1948, was vested in the second defendant, Lloyds Bank, Ltd., as the trustee under the deed, and formed the site of the home was on that date transferred to and vested in the Minister of Health by virtue of s. 6 (1) of the Act. By the deed the land was conveyed to trustees on trust to permit it to be used for the purposes of the home. The deed empowered the trustees to sell the land in the event of the home ceasing to exist, and, on the sale of the land, the trust property was to be applicable for such other charitable purposes as might then be determined. It was contended by the plaintiff that s. 6 (1) of the Act of 1946 had no application to the land as the trusts affecting it were not limited to the purposes of the home for incurables. WYNN-PARRY, J., held that on July 4, 1948, the land was held by the trustee solely for the purposes of a voluntary hospital, within the meaning of s. 6 (1), and, therefore, on July 5, 1948, it vested in the Minister of Health under the sub-section.

Russell, K.C., and H. E. Francis for the plaintiff.

Sir Lynn Ungood-Thomas, K.C., and Denys B. Buckley for the first defendant, the Ministry of Health.

Raymond Walton for the second defendant, Lloyds Bank, Ltd. (the trustee).

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 19. SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., read the following judgment of the court. The question raised by the present proceedings is whether a few words in the National Health Service Act, 1946, s. 6 (1):

"... interests held immediately before [July 5, 1948] ... by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital ..."

on their true interpretation apply so as to have vested in the Minister of Health on the date mentioned (being the appointed day within the meaning of the Act) certain land previously, and (if the order under appeal be wrong) still, vested in the second defendant, Lloyds Bank, Ltd., which land has for some two generations been the site of an institution in Leamington known as the Royal Midland Counties Home for Incurables. WYNN-PARRY, J., held that it had so vested. He followed his own previous decision in Ministry of Health v. Fox (1), in which he had based his conclusion on the view that the words we have quoted to be construed exclusively by reference to the user to which the land in question was in fact being put on July 4, 1948, and without reference to any "purposes" or trusts which might at any future date become operative by virtue of the deed or deeds of trust affecting the land or otherwise. The defendant, The Bank, Ltd., has maintained a passive attitude in the proceedings, but the plaintiff sues on behalf of the committee of management of the home established by an indenture of June 27, 1884, by which the land in suit was conveyed to the predecessors in title of the defendant bank, and he now appeals to this court against the judgment and order of WYNN-PARRY, J. In the court below the plaintiff was (by reason of the earlier decision of the same judge) restrained to limit his argument to an attempt to distinguish the present case on the facts from Ministry of Health v. Fox (1). In this court counsel for the plaintiff have, more boldly, challenged the validity of the reasoning on which Ministry of Health v. Fox (1) is based. The burden of their case is that s. 6 (1) of the Act of 1946 has no application to a case (such as the present and that of Ministry of Health v. Fox (1)), where, on reference to the relevant trust deed, it appears that trusts exclusively limited to the purposes of the particular institution are not the only trusts which the deed in all circumstances comprehends.

The material terms of the deed of June 27, 1884, are as follows. There were three parties to it, the trustees of the second part being the trustees of the land and the trustees of the third part being the so-called endowment trustees. The first recital is:

Whereas an institution known as the Midland Counties Home for the Destitute at Leamington (hereinafter referred to as 'the home') has been carried on and is now carried on under rules published in regard thereto a copy of which rules as circulated for the year 1883 and indicating the objects of the home and the regulations affecting the same (so far as the same are necessary to be hereinafter referred to) is set forth in sched. I to these presents and the expression 'the rules' hereinafter used means the rules or other the regulations for the time being validly enacted and made binding for the government of the home . . . "

The third recital is:

And whereas considerable sums of money have been received by way of donations and subscriptions to enable the committee and the board of management to carry on and extend the home as indicated by the rules and whereas further sums are expected to be received hereafter And whereas part of the moneys received as aforesaid were in pursuance of the objects for which the same were subscribed expended in the purchase of lands and hereditaments situate at Leamington Priors and known as the Arboretum and the said lands and hereditaments were by the several indentures specified in sched. II to these presents conveyed to the said William Marjoribanks and other persons] and it is intended that the same shall be held by the trustees (hereinafter called 'the general trustees') upon the trusts hereinafter mentioned . . . "

The last two recitals are:

And whereas it was the intention of donors and subscribers of the moneys so received as aforesaid that such of these moneys as have not been invested in land and buildings as aforesaid might if required be used for the current expenses of the home and it is intended that all such moneys which have not been so invested or expended or are not required for the current expenses of the home together with the proceeds of sale of such furniture and property as shall be sold as last aforesaid and together with any further moneys which may hereafter be specifically subscribed or given for this purpose or may in accordance with the rules be devoted to this purpose shall be held by trustees (hereinafter called 'the endowment trustees') upon the trusts hereinafter declared And whereas the parties hereto of the second part have consented to be the first general trustees and the parties hereto of the third part have consented to be the first endowment trustees."

Then comes the operative part:

"Now this indenture witnesseth that in consideration of the premises they the said William Marjoribanks, James Lancaster Ranking and George Radcliffe as trustees and according to their estate as such do and each of them doth hereby convey unto the parties hereto of the second part all those lands and hereditaments situate at Leamington Priors aforesaid and known as the Arboretum . . . to hold the said lands hereditaments and premises . . . unto and to the use of the said parties hereto of the second part in fee simple and to hold the said furniture to the use of the said parties hereto of the second part absolutely upon trust that they or other the general trustees for the time being shall if authorised thereto by a resolution of the committee sell any part or parts (not being the main building used for the patients of the home) of the said land buildings furniture and premises in the manner hereinafter mentioned and with the powers and subject to the declarations hereinafter contained and shall if authorised thereto by a resolution of the subscribers sell the whole or any part whatsoever of the said lands buildings furniture and premises for the time being subject to the trusts of these presents in the manner hereinafter mentioned and with the powers and subject to the declarations hereinafter contained And shall in the meantime permit the same to be used for the purposes of the home and in accordance with the rules . . ."

Later, the deed proceeds:

"And it is hereby declared that the moneys to arise from any such sale as aforesaid shall be applied first in payment of the expenses of such sale and other (if any) the unpaid expenses of the general trustees and subject thereto the proceeds of sale of any sale made under the authority of a resolution of the committee shall be paid to the endowment trustees or applied under the authority of a resolution of the committee to any purposes to which the endowment fund might be lawfully applied with the like authority and the proceeds of sale of any sale made under the authority of a resolution of the subscribers shall be applied in such manner for the purposes of the home as shall be directed by a resolution of the subscribers and subject to such direction shall be paid to the endowment trustees and held upon the trust affecting the funds in their hands."

The trusts of the endowment fund include that the endowment trustees

" . . . shall pay the income of such investments to the treasurer or such other person as may be appointed in that behalf by resolution of the committee".

The deed continues:

"And upon further trust that the endowment trustees shall (if and when directed by a resolution of the committee confirmed by a resolution of the subscribers to convert into money any investments specified in such resolution for the purchase of land or the erection of buildings or the acquisition of property for the purpose of the home) sell and convert into money the investments specified in such resolution . . . And upon further trust that if and when a resolution of the committee shall have been passed to the effect that by reason of insufficiency of funds or for any other reason the home should be closed and such resolution shall have been confirmed by a resolution of the subscribers the endowment trustees shall hold the trust fund then in their hands (including any proceeds of sale of the said lands buildings and other property) upon such trusts in favour or for the benefit of charitable objects in the Midland counties or some of them as may be directed by any scheme proposed and passed by a resolution of the committee and confirmed by a resolution of the subscribers or in default of such direction in such manner as may be directed by the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales."

Finally, there is a declaration that " . . . every regulation for the government of the home shall from time to time be deemed to have been validly enacted if passed by a resolution of the committee and confirmed by a resolution of the subscribers."

Since the date of the deed the rules, certain of which are set out in the schedule to the deed, have at some date and in some manner not stated in the evidence been in some respects altered. Under the rules in force immediately before the appointed day the second, or "objects", clause of the rules was as follows:

"The object shall be to give relief by admission to the home or by pensions as hereinafter provided, to persons of good character, of limited or reduced income who are suffering from incurable or chronic diseases, or incapacity owing to injury or wounds . . ."

From the provisions of the deed which we have recited it, therefore, appears that the income of the invested proceeds of sale of the land in question or any part thereof, if sold, would be applicable (inter alia) to the payment of all pensions to persons who, though suffering from some incurable malady, do not receive any kind of medical treatment or services at the home itself, and, in fact, some part of the income of the endowment fund mentioned in the deed (to a transfer to himself of which the Minister of Health makes no claim) is now being so applied, and (ii) that, in the event of the enterprise of the home ceasing to exist, the trust property would be applicable for such other charitable purposes as the committee and subscribers might determine. It is on these two characteristics that counsel for the plaintiff has hung his argument. Both being comprised within the terms of the deed, neither (says he) can properly be described "solely for the purposes" of the home—the second obviously, and the first because the payment of the pensions is wholly distinct from and unconnected with the physical institution of the home, to which alone, by reason of the context and the definition of s. 79 (1) in the Act of 1946, the words "that hospital" in the vital phrase in s. 6 (1) can be related.

The material parts of s. 6 (1) are:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, there shall, on the appointed day, be transferred to and vest in the Minister by virtue of this Act all interests in or attaching to premises forming part of a voluntary hospital or used for the purposes of a voluntary hospital . . . being interests held immediately before the appointed day by the governing body of the hospital or by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital . . ."

Counsel for the plaintiff sought to derive some support for his general argument from reference to the provisions relating to local authority hospitals in s. 6 (2) of the Act corresponding to the provisions of s. 6 (1) relating to voluntary hospitals. The opening phrases of s. 6 (2) differ from those of s. 6 (1), but the formula which we are called on to construe occurs in both. Counsel for the plaintiff also drew attention to the fact that s. 9 (4) of the Act (which exempts in its operation premises used temporarily by local authorities for hospital purposes) does so by exempting such premises from the term "hospital" and by reference to the formula in question. In our judgment, these considerations do not materially assist in the solution of the present problem.

On the other side, counsel for the Ministry of Health, by way of prelude to his main answer to counsel for the plaintiff, made two submissions particular to the facts of the case, viz., (i) that, on a proper view of the terms and intent of the deed, there was no trust for sale at all, so that consideration of the trusts affecting the proceeds of any sale was irrelevant; and (ii) that in any case, and contrary to its apparent effect, already noticed, the deed did not permit the application of any part of the capital or income of the proceeds of sale of land towards payment of pensions, such an application not being contemplated or provided by the rules specified in the schedule to the deed. We are unable to accept either of these submissions. As was observed by this court in Duke of Marlborough v. A.-G. (No. 2) (2), it is now too late to reverse the direction taken by the courts as regards the conveyancers' technique of the primary trust for sale, and we cannot see any sensible or logical basis for distinguishing the present case from that, e.g., of a disposition of land on trust for sale if requested by or with the consent of the first tenant for life. As regards the second preliminary point taken by counsel for the Ministry of Health, the court must, as it seems to us, assume that the changes in the rules of the home were validly made and within the amending powers originally conferred. The word "rules" in the deed itself will, therefore, by definition include the now existing rules. Moreover, the purchase of the site of the home did not absorb the whole of the sums originally subscribed, the balance being employed to establish the endowment fund.

The matter, then, turns on the proper application of the few and simple words to the premises of the Royal Midland Counties Home for Incurables then subject to the trusts of the deed of 1884 which we have recited and, so far as material, construed. The arguments have presented us with a choice between two extreme views, and each has itself—quite properly—been subjected to the test of extreme cases with a view to showing that each, in such cases, tends to unreality or absurdity. Thus, it is, in our judgment, the most formidable of the criticisms directed to the view of WYNN-PARRY, J., as expressed in Ministry of Health v. Fox (1), that in a case in which land is held on trusts for the purposes of a hospital for some limited period and thereafter for some other public or private purposes, the effect of the Act would be to destroy those later interests, which, in the case of private interests, would be equivalent to an expropriation for which no kind of compensation is provided. Moreover, as it seems to us, the view taken in Ministry of Health v. Fox (1) by WYNN-PARRY, J., appears to treat the word "held" as equivalent to "used in fact." In his judgment now under appeal the learned judge cited the passage from his judgment in Ministry of Health v. Fox (1) where he said ([1950] 1 All E.R. 1055):

" . . . being interests held immediately before the appointed day by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital . . . "

"In my view, the sense of this series of provisions is that one takes one's stand once and for all on the appointed day and sees for what purpose the property was being held then, and, if the property was then being held for purposes of the hospital and for no other purposes in fact, that is an end of the matter, and property falling within that description passes under the sub-section to the Minister."

He then proceeded to say, in his judgment now under appeal:

"As I have already observed, it is the fact, and it is not disputed, that at the appointed day the premises concerned were being used solely for the purpose of . . . the home."

On the other hand, the plaintiff's argument appears to have (at least) the effect of excluding from the Act altogether every case of hospital land held under the terms of a trust deed which contains any provision directed to the application of the trust property to some other purpose in the possible event of the discontinuance for any reason of the specified "hospital" trust, and, unless, in looking for the existence of such possibilities, it is illegitimate to look outside the express provisions of the relevant trust instrument—notwithstanding the absence of any language in s. 6 (1) of the Act of 1946 requiring such a confinement of the search—the exempting effect of the phrase under discussion might well, under the doctrine of resulting trust, extend to a large proportion of the land sold on July 4, 1948, on trust for the purposes of voluntary hospitals.

Neither of the extreme views, when so examined and tested, appears readily to conform to the intention naturally attributable to Parliament. But, in our judgment, it is unnecessary for the court to choose between the two alternatives presented. The relevant words require, as we think, in each case the simple question to be asked and answered in reference to July 4, 1948: "On that day, for what purposes did the trustees hold the land?" In the present case the proper answer would have been: "For the purposes of the Royal Midland Counties Home for Incurables and no other." In our judgment, that answer could be plainly in conformity with common sense. Nor can we think that its faithfulness would in any sense be qualified by the presence of the remote remainder in favour of other charitable purposes determined by the committee and subscribers on the contingency of the home ceasing to continue or by the provision enabling income of the invested proceeds of sale to be applied in payment of pensions, for, in our view, the payment of such pensions, though distinct from the activities of the home as a physical entity, is nevertheless fairly to be regarded as a purpose of the home, whether regarded from its material or institutional aspect. It is a purpose so closely connected with, and so much a part of, the purposes of the home as such that it must, in our judgment, necessarily cease if for any reason the home itself ceased to exist.

In our judgment, a similar question posed in reference to the maternity home which was the subject-matter in Ministry of Health v. Fox (1) would have properly obtained a corresponding answer. In that case the argument against the Ministry rested on the presence in the deed constituting the home of a clause providing:

"The trustees shall apply and deal with all moneys which shall arise from any sale mortgage or other disposition of the said premises either for the general purposes of the maternity home aforesaid or for such other public charitable purpose and in such manner as the trustees shall think fit . . ."

Both in this case, therefore, and in Ministry of Health v. Fox (1), we think that the requirements of s. 6 (1) were satisfied at the relevant date and that a contrary result would give to the material language of the sub-section an altogether unnatural and artificial preciseness. As we have said, every case must, in accordance with the well-established principle of English law, be determined on its own facts and we find it unnecessary (as it might be embarrassing) to attempt any exposition of the terms of the sub-section that would anticipate the answer in all cases. We take one example suggested in the course of the argument—that premises held on trust for the purpose of providing hospital services to men wounded in the second world war and on the exhaustion of that purpose (as must necessarily happen in a relatively short time) on trust for some educational purpose, the premises being in fact used for the former purpose on July 4, 1948. In that case an answer to the relevant question which referred only to the former purpose and neglected to make any reference to the latter would, in our judgment, fail to satisfy the ordinary requirements of common sense or accuracy. We, therefore, think that WYNN-PARRY, J., rightly answered the question raised by the present case, and that he rightly concluded the question raised by Ministry of Health v. Fox (1), though, for the reasons which we have given, we think the grounds of his judgment went further than were required by the answer which he gave and further than we are prepared ourselves to go. In our judgment, the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Farrer & Co., agents for Field & Sons, Leamington Spa (for the plaintiff); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the first defendant); Farrer & Co. (for the second defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COMMISSIONER OF STAMP DUTIES OF NEW SOUTH WALES v. WAY AND OTHERS.

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Normand, Lord Oaksey and Lord Radcliffe), October 30, 31, November 1, December 10, 1951.]

Estate Duty—"Trust to take effect after death"—Reservation of benefit—New South Wales Stamp Duties Act, 1920-1949, s. 102 (2) (a) (c) (d).

The Stamp Duties Act, 1920-1949, of New South Wales by s. 102 (2) charges to duty on the death of any person: "(a) All property which the deceased has disposed of . . . by will or by a settlement containing any trust in respect of that property to take effect after his death . . . Provided that the property deemed to be included in the estate of the deceased shall be the property which at the time of his death is subject to such trust . . . (c) Any property passing under any settlement, trust or other disposition of property made by the deceased . . . (i) by which an interest in or benefit out of or connected with that property, or in the proceeds of sale thereof, is reserved either expressly or by implication to the deceased for his life or for the life of any other person, or for any period determined by reference to the death of the deceased or of any other person; or (ii) which is accompanied by the reservation or assurance of, or a contract for, any benefit to the deceased for the term of his life or of the life of any other person, or for any period determined by reference to the death of the deceased or of any other person; or (iii) by which the deceased has reserved to himself the right, by the exercise of any power, to restore to himself or to reclaim that property or the proceeds of the sale thereof. (d) Any property comprised in any gift made by the deceased at any time . . . of which bona fide possession and enjoyment has not been assumed by the donee immediately upon the gift and thenceforth retained to the entire exclusion of the deceased, or of any benefit to him of whatsoever kind or in any way whatsoever whether enforceable at law or in equity or not . . ."

On Sept. 5, 1928, the deceased made a trust disposition under which the deceased, as settlor, transferred and assigned to himself and two others certain funds and property ("the trust fund") to be held by them as trustees on trust to pay and apply the trust fund and its annual income towards lawful charitable purposes under the heads of "(a) education, (b) the relief of poverty in Australia, and (c) the general benefit of the community in Australia not falling under the preceding head", but subject to certain provisions including: "3. The time manner and the head or heads under which the application and appropriation of the said trust fund and the said income shall be made and all other details and particulars as to such application and appropriation shall be in the absolute discretion of the trustees but during the lifetime of the settlor subject to his direction and approval and the settlor places on record his belief that it will be found advisable to have completely distributed the trust fund and wound-up the trust within ten or fifteen years. . . . 24 The trustees may also apply and appropriate any property belonging to the trust in its then present condition for any trust purposes and may also use any of the moneys of the trust either corpus or income or both in purchasing any land or land and buildings or in erecting buildings or in altering or in improving buildings to be used or applied for any such purpose. The trustees may whether during the lifetime of the settlor or afterwards and shall during the lifetime of the settlor if he so directs apply and appropriate any property including moneys belonging to the trust for the purposes of acquiring by purchase or exchange from the settlor or his executors any real or personal property valued for the purposes of such purchase or exchange at a sum at least five per cent. below the valuation of such real or personal property so acquired as ascertained by some independent valuator appointed by the trustees other than the settlor."

HELD: (i) the settlement created one trust and could not be said, by virtue of cl. 3, to be a trust for one group of beneficiaries before the deceased's death and another group thereafter so as to fall within s. 102 (2) (a); nor was a mere right of selection, such as that in cl. 3, a trust to take effect after the deceased's death within s. 102 (2) (a).

Burrell & Kinnaird v. A.-G. ([1936] 3 All E.R. 758), distinguished.

Rabett v. Stamp Duties Comr. ([1929] A.C. 444), explained.

(ii) the deceased's power of direction under cl. 24 was to be taken to be fiduciary because, in its context, it was merely a right to secure that his views would, in the event of disagreement, prevail over the views of the other trustees, and there was, therefore, no ground for regarding it as a benefit or interest of the kind with which s. 102 (2) (c) and (d) were concerned, but, whether or not the power was fiduciary, it did not amount to a reservation to the deceased of any interest in the trust fund or of a right to reclaim or restore it to himself so as to bring it within the charge to duty under s. 102 (2) (c) or (d).

EDITORIAL NOTE. Cases in New South Wales which fall under the New South Wales Stamp Duties Act, 1920-1949, s. 102 (2) (a), would, if occurring in England, usually be charged to duty under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 1, or, possibly, s. 2 (1) (b) or s. 2 (1) (d). There was in the present case no change in the composition of the group of beneficiaries in connection with the deceased's death, and that circumstance distinguishes Burrell & Kinnaird v. A.-G. (1), a case under s. 1 of the Act of 1894. Paragraphs (c) and (d) of s. 102 (2) of the New South Wales Act correspond roughly with the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, s. 38 (2) (c) and s. 38 (2) (a) respectively, as amended by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, s. 11 (1). The comparable charging provision in England would be s. 2 (1) (c) of the Act of 1894.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Burrell & Kinnaird v. A.-G., [1936] 3 All E.R. 758; [1937] A.C. 286; 106 L.J.K.B. 134; 156 L.T. 36; Digest Supp.
- (2) Rabett v. Stamp Duties Comr., [1929] A.C. 444; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the Crown from a decision of the High Court of Australia reversing decision of the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

The Crown claimed that death duties were payable in connection with the death of Sir Robert Gillespie, deceased, who died on Aug. 2, 1945, under the Stamp Duties Act, 1920-1949 (of New South Wales), s. 102 (2) (a), or, alternatively, under s. 102 (2) (c), or, alternatively, s. 102 (2) (d), in respect of funds settled by the deceased by a trust disposition dated Sept. 5, 1928. The Supreme Court of New South Wales upheld the claim under s. 102 (2) (a) by a majority, and upheld the Crown's contentions in relation to s. 102 (2) (c) and (d) unanimously.

Sir Frank Soskice, K.C., and Gahan for the Crown.

G. E. Barwick, K.C. (of the Australian Bar) and J. H. A. Sparrow for the taxpayers.

Dec. 10, 1951. LORD RADCLIFFE: This appeal relates to a claim for death duties on the death of one Robert Winton Gillespie who died on Aug. 2, 1945. The property which is said to be subject to the claim consists of certain funds which at the date of his death were held on the trusts of a settlement for charitable purposes made by him many years previously. Two clauses in that settlement are founded on by the appellant, the Commissioner of Stamp Duties for the State of New South Wales, as bringing the trust funds within the charge to duty imposed by the Stamp Duties Act, 1920-1949 (to use its current citation), of New South Wales.

The material section for the purposes of the claim is s. 102 of that Act. Alternative claims are preferred under sub-s. (2) (a), sub-s. (2) (c), each of the three sub-divisions of which is relied on, and sub-s. (2) (d). The relevant portions of the section are thus as follows, it being common ground that, if these trust funds fall within any of the categories there described, they will be liable to A a charge for duty:

“(2) (a) All property which the deceased has disposed of . . . by will or by a settlement containing any trust in respect of that property to take effect after his death . . . Provided that the property deemed to be included in the estate of the deceased shall be the property which at the time of his death is subject to such trust . . . (c) Any property passing under any settlement, trust or other disposition of property made by the deceased . . . (i) by which an interest in or benefit out of or connected with that property, or in the proceeds of sale thereof, is reserved either expressly or by implication to the deceased for his life or for the life of any other person, or for any period determined by reference to the death of the deceased or of any other person; or (ii) which is accompanied by the reservation or assurance of, or a contract for, any benefit to the deceased for the term of his life or of the life of any other person, or for any period determined by reference to the death of the deceased or of any other person; or (iii) by which the deceased has reserved to himself the right, by the exercise of any power, to restore to himself or to reclaim that property or the proceeds of the sale thereof. (d) Any property comprised in any gift made by the deceased at any time . . . of which bona fide possession and enjoyment has not been assumed by the donee immediately upon the gift and thenceforth retained to the entire exclusion of the deceased, or of any benefit to him of whatsoever kind or in any way whatsoever whether enforceable at law or in equity or not . . .” B C D

At first sight it is not easy to see what there is in the settlement made by Sir Robert Gillespie which could bring its funds within the charging provisions of this section. The settlement, which was made on Sept. 5, 1928, was a trust disposition under which Sir Robert, as settlor, transferred and assigned to himself and two other gentlemen certain specified funds and property to be held on the trusts and subject to the conditions and provisions set out in the deed. In effect, the trust fund was to be held by the trustees on trust to pay and apply it and its annual income towards lawful charitable purposes under the heads of E

“(a) educational, (b) the relief of poverty in Australia, and (c) the general benefit of the community in Australia not falling under the preceding head,” F

but subject to such provisions and conditions as were set out in later portions of the document. G

Two of such provisions are put forward as bringing the property within the charge of s. 102. The first is a clause, cl. 3, which immediately follows the declaration of the charitable purposes. It runs:

“3. The time manner and the head or heads under which the application and appropriation of the said trust fund and the said income shall be made and all other details and particulars as to such application and appropriation shall be in the absolute discretion of the trustees but during the lifetime of the settlor subject to his direction and approval and the settlor places on record his belief that it will be found advisable to have completely distributed the trust fund and wound up the trust within ten or fifteen years.” H

The appellant argues that the effect of this clause is that on the settlor's death, when his power of direction and approval necessarily determined, a trust took effect after his death within the meaning of s. 102 (2) (a), because a new trust arose for the objects of the charity, those objects being thereafter selected by the existing trustees freed from the settlor's power of direction and approval.

The second provision, cl. 24, occurs, inappropriately, in a chapter of the deed entitled "Application of income." It immediately precedes a clause dealing with the trustees' powers of investment and it runs as follows:

"24. The trustees may also apply and appropriate any property belonging to the trust in its then present condition for any trust purposes and may also use any of the moneys of the trust either corpus or income or both in purchasing any land or land and buildings or in erecting buildings or in altering or in improving buildings to be used or applied for any such purpose. The trustees may whether during the lifetime of the settlor or afterwards and shall during the lifetime of the settlor if he so directs apply and appropriate any property including moneys belonging to the trust for the purposes of acquiring by purchase or exchange from the settlor or his executors any real or personal property valued for the purposes of such purchase or exchange at a sum at least five per cent. below the valuation of such real or personal property so acquired as ascertained by some independent valuator appointed by the trustees other than the settlor."

The appellant argues that the effect of this clause is to reserve to the settlor an interest in or benefit out of or connected with the trust property or a right to reclaim or to restore it to himself, and that, by one or other of the trusts offered by s. 102 (2) (c) and (d), the appellant is entitled to succeed in his claim for duty.

It will be convenient to deal first with cl. 3 and s. 102 (2) (a) and to defer consideration of cl. 24, the effect of which depends, primarily, on a conclusion as to the construction that ought to be placed on its words. The appellant's argument on s. 102 (2) (a) succeeded with the majority of the Supreme Court of New South Wales. It was rejected on appeal by the High Court of Australia. The basis of the Supreme Court's decision was that the settlement contained two trusts, one for those recipients of charitable bounty whom the settlor might select during his life, the other, "to take effect after his death," for those recipients whom the trustees might select in the period following on his death. The situation was thus likened to that which arose in Burrell & Kinnaird v. G. (1), although it must be observed that Burrell's case (1) was a decision as to what constitutes a "passing" of property for the purposes of s. 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, of the United Kingdom and it has no direct bearing on the meaning of the words "to take effect after death" in the Stamp Duties Act of New South Wales. The High Court, on the other hand, treated the settlement as creating one trust and one trust only, a trust for charitable purposes, and this trust, in their view, took effect immediately the settlement was created and continued as one despite the fact that during its continuance different persons might have the right or duty of deciding in what manner the trust funds were to be applied.

Their Lordships agree with the view of the High Court. First, this trust was not in any true sense a trust for different groups of beneficiaries. It was from beginning to end a trust for charity or specified charitable purposes, and those persons who may from time to time receive payments or other benefits out of the trust funds are less beneficiaries than objects of the charitable purpose. This circumstance alone distinguishes the case from Burrell & Kinnaird v. G. (1), in which the situation that had to be considered was one where there were two groups of beneficiaries, changing in their composition on the occasion of a death, though including persons common to each group. The real issue was whether the trust fund as a whole ought to be treated as passing notwithstanding the continuing membership of those persons. Here there was no separate trust for any new group of owners that took effect after the settlor's death. But, secondly, it is apparent from the judgment of JORDAN, C.J., which expresses the views of the majority of the Supreme Court, that the two trusts which he extracted from the provisions of cl. 3 consisted as much of the powers of selection exercisable first by the settlor and then by the remaining trustees as of the trusts properly called for the charitable purposes which the trust deed defined. To look at the matter in this way is to treat a mere right or duty of exercising a discretion or taking a decision in the course of the administration of the trust as if it were itself a trust to take effect after the death within the meaning of s. 102 (2) (a). Their Lordships do not think that this is a sound construction of that sub-section, nor do they think that the decision of the Board in Rabett v. Stamp Duties Comr. (2), which clearly weighed with the Supreme Court in their decision, ought to be regarded as an authority for such a proposition.

In Rabett's case (2) the settlement to be considered was a marriage settlement of personality in common form. The death which was said to attract duty was that of the husband and settlor, and, since the wife had been given the first life interest in the settled fund, the situation of affairs as at the husband's death was that the wife's life interest, already in possession, continued to subsist, and, as there were surviving children of the marriage, their interests in reversion remained interests in reversion, but subject to the effect of any appointment which the wife might make in exercise of the special power of appointment among children and remoter issue created by the settlement. Even if the children's interests alone were to be considered it would be difficult to say of such a settlement that it did not contain a trust to take effect after the settlor's death. Nor was such an argument preferred until the case came to be argued before the Board. Until then it had been assumed that a claim for duty did arise, the issue being whether the whole value of the settled property ought to be included in the dutiable estate or only so much of that value as exceeded the value of the widow's life interest. That, indeed, was the sole question which the Commissioner of Stamp Duties had submitted for the consideration of the court. LORD BUCKMASTER, who delivered the opinion of the Board, dealt with the appeal without strictly distinguishing between the two lines of argument. The foundation of his decision is to be found in the following words ([1929] A.C. 448):

"... but the words of the section do not provide that the duty only attaches to property in respect of which the trust arises or takes effect on the death of the settlor but after his death, and their Lordships see no escape from the conclusion that property of the deceased settled by an instrument which contains trusts that take effect after and by reference to his death is to be deemed part of the estate."

This conclusion was sufficient to dispose of the appeal.

Difficulty has arisen because of certain words that LORD BUCKMASTER went on to use in meeting one branch of the argument that, even if the settled property itself was deemed to pass, the value of the widow's life interest ought to be deducted from the dutiable estate. He said (ibid.):

"Nor can their Lordships assent to the view that as the testator might, had he thought fit, have given his wife in cash the present value of her life interest and then settled the remainder, the result is the same when he adopted a different method of disposition. The section assumes that the testator has disposed of the property, and the only condition required for duty to attach is that the settlement contains trusts to take effect after his death. In the present case the trusts that took effect after his death were: (1) a trust enabling his widow alone to sell and vary investments;

(2) a trust enabling her if the joint power was unexercised to appoint among the children by deed or will; and (3) a trust for the benefit of the children in default of appointment and subject to their mother's life interest; and these trusts affected the whole settled property, and not that part only which would be left if the value of the wife's life interest were taken away."

Their Lordships have given careful attention to this passage, but they are satisfied that it ought not to be taken as a decision that each of the three provisions which are listed under the heads (1), (2) and (3) constitutes by itself a trust to take effect after the death for the purposes of s. 102 (2) (a). What LORD BUCKMASTER was concerned to establish was that there was a trust within the meaning of the section that affected the whole settled property and not merely the "value" represented by the value of the reversions. This is plainly right. So long as there was one such trust, it did not matter whether there were others as well, and it is only fair to assume that, had LORD BUCKMASTER intended to give a binding decision as to the status of each of the "trusts" that he mentions, he would have been altogether more precise in his language. On the contrary, he seems to have been at no pains to state them accurately. Trust No. (1) was neither a trust nor even a power. Under the settlement, a copy of which has been made available to their Lordships in this appeal, the widow had nothing but the usual right to give or withhold her consent to a proposed change of investment. Trust No. (2) was not a trust. It was the usual special power of appointment among children or remoter issue. No doubt, had there been an appointment, there would have been a trust for the appointees and LORD BUCKMASTER's language may have been intended to extend to such a trust. Trust No. (3) was, of course, a trust. Having regard to these considerations their Lordships are of opinion that the first branch of the appellant's argument must fail.

Clause 24 of the trust deed is not in itself a complete piece of machinery. But the mere fact that it is formally incomplete is no reason for reading into it more than the provisions of the clause actually contain. Its main purport, at least, is reasonably clear. It is to afford authority for the use or application of trust funds for certain purposes or in certain ways that would not otherwise be permissible. It is thus something analogous to, but not the same as, the investment clause which immediately follows. The second half of the clause is designed to authorise the use of trust funds for the purpose of acquiring property from the settlor who was in the inception, and was, no doubt, likely to remain, one of the trustees. But for the power of direction given to the settlor the nature of the clause would be quite plain. There has, however, been engrafted on the authority thus given to the trustees a right for the settlor during his lifetime to require that trust funds shall be applied to the purpose of such an acquisition, and it is argued that this right to control the action of the trustees brings the trust property within one or other of the categories of s. 102 (2) (c) and (d). This contention prevailed with all the members of the Supreme Court of New South Wales who held that an interest in the settled property had been reserved to the settlor during his life. It was rejected by the High Court partly on the ground that the power of direction given to the settlor was a fiduciary power to be exercised only for the benefit of the settlement and partly because, whatever the power was, it did not amount to a reservation to the settlor of an interest in the settled property or of a right to reclaim or restore it to himself.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the views of the High Court are well founded, and it is unnecessary to make any material addition to what is said in the judgment of WILLIAMS, J., which gives the reasons of the court. The settlor's power of direction is to be taken as fiduciary because, in its context, it is merely a right to secure that his views would, in the event of disagreement, prevail over the views of the other trustees. It was not, of course, inevitable that he would always remain a trustee during his life, but the circumstances were such that it was natural to assume that he would. Even if he did not, the question that he was given power to decide was the question how trustees should apply their trust funds, and in the absence of express provision to the contrary the presumption would be that his decision was to be given for the benefit of the settlement, not of himself. Indeed he had inserted in the clause a stipulation that, if the trust did acquire property from him, it must be on terms that would be to his own pecuniary disadvantage and to the trust's advantage. It was argued that the presence of this stipulation showed that his direction was regarded as non-fiduciary, since otherwise it would not need to be controlled by this limitation. But this can hardly be. The stipulation operates even if the trustees acquire property from him without a direction, so it is not aimed at his special power of direction, and it seems a curious way of establishing that a power is beneficial to show that by its terms it cannot be exercised in a way that affords a benefit.

If the power of direction is, as their Lordships think, a fiduciary one, there is no ground for regarding it as the kind of benefit or interest with which s. 102 (2) (c) and (d) are concerned. Apart from that, however, the power is not one that amounts to an interest in or benefit out of or connected with the trust property. It does not extend far enough to reach the trust property. All that it could do would be to substitute the settlor's decision that trust funds should be used to acquire property from himself for a resolution of the other trustees to the same effect. Given the achievement of that resolution, the settlor would have no power under the clause to decide what items of the trust fund should be used for that purpose. The decision on that point would lie with the trustees generally, and, if they decided to proceed by way of exchange, not of purchase, it would be for them again to decide at what value they would be prepared to release the item or items selected in exchange for the settlor's property valued as the trust deed requires. All this goes to show that, whether the settlor's power of direction was fiduciary or not, it was not in any event such a power as gave him any hold over the trust funds. Their Lordships were pressed with the consideration that the settlor could at least achieve this much—by tendering property of his own worth five per cent. more than the value of the whole trust property (assuming that to be capable of undisputed appraisal) and by exercising his power of direction he could make sure of recovering any single item of the trust funds since he would be entitled to get back the whole. But this is at best to describe an incidental consequence of the power of direction, rather than to describe the nature of the power itself, and it does nothing to establish that a right is a benefit when it can only be exercised to the detriment of its holder. Whether or not a power having such a possible consequence could properly be described as a right to restore to the holder or to reclaim the settled property within the meaning of sub-s. (2) (c) (iii), it cannot amount to such a right if the settlor can only act by way of effecting a change of investment in the interests of the settlement.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal from the order of the High Court of Australia dated Aug. 18, 1949, should be dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Light & Fulton (for the Crown); Ashurst, Morris Crisp & Co. (for the taxpayers).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

USHER v. BARLOW.

COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins and Morris, L.JJ.), November 16, 29, December 20, 1951.]

Copyright—Artistic work—Wall plaque produced before Jan. 1, 1950—Capable of registration under Patents and Designs Act, 1907—Exclusion from registration after Jan. 1, 1950—Copyright Act, 1911 (c. 46), s. 22 (1)—Registered Designs Act, 1949 (c. 88), s. 1 (4)—Designs Rules, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 2368), r. 26 (2).

Design—Validity of Designs Rules, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 2368), r. 26 (2).

In an action for infringement of the copyright in a wall plaque which had been produced and published by the plaintiff before Jan. 1, 1950, the defendant pleaded that under the Copyright Act, 1911, s. 22 (1), at the date of the publication no copyright could subsist in the plaque because at that date it was capable of being registered under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, and neither the Registered Designs Act, 1949 (which was passed on Dec. 16, 1949, and came into operation on Jan. 1, 1950), nor r. 26 (2) of the Designs Rules, 1949 (which was made on Dec. 16, 1949, and came into operation on Jan. 2, 1950) had the effect of altering that position.

HELD: (i) under the Copyright Act, 1911, prima facie copyright subsisted in the plaque as an "original artistic work" within s. 1 (1) and s. 35 (1) of the Act, but, down to Jan. 1, 1950, under s. 22 (1) of the Act the plaque was excluded from copyright under the Act since it was capable of being registered under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907; the Act of 1907, however, was repealed as from Jan. 1, 1950, by the Registered Designs Act, 1949, s. 48 and sched. II, and, in view of that repeal, from that date it could not be said that the plaque was capable of being registered under the Act of 1907.

(ii) under s. 38 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889, and s. 48 (7) of the Act of 1949 the reference in s. 22 (1) of the Act of 1911 to the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, must be construed as referring to the Act of 1949, and by r. 26 (2) of the Designs Rules, 1949, made under s. 1 (4) and s. 36 (1) of the Act of 1949, wall plaques were excluded from registration under that Act.

(iii) section 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, was not confined to the exercise between the passing and coming into operation of an Act of powers without which the Act could not come into operation at all, but was apt to authorise the making of such rules as the Designs Rules, 1949, as affording material on which the Act could operate and so being "expedient for the purposes of bringing the Act into operation at the date of the commencement thereof", and, therefore, these rules were valid.

R. v. Minister of Town & Country Planning. Ex p. Montague Burton, Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 282, applied.

(iv) therefore, the plaque was no longer excluded by s. 22 (1) of the Copyright Act, 1911, from being the subject of copyright under that Act.

FOR THE INTERPRETATION ACT, 1889, s. 37 and s. 38, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 24, pp. 228, 229; FOR THE COPYRIGHT ACT, 1911, s. 22, see ibid., vol. 4, p. 800; FOR THE REGISTERED DESIGNS ACT, 1949, s. 1, see ibid., Vol. 17, p. 723.

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Minister of Town & Country Planning. Ex p. Montague Burton, Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 282; 114 J.P. 411; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Pytram, Ltd. v. Models (Leicester), Ltd., [1930] 1 Ch. 639; 99 L.J.Ch. 381; 143 L.T. 227; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant from an order made by SIR LEONARD STONE, V.-C., in the Palatine Court of Lancaster on Sept. 12, 1951, in an action for alleged infringement of copyright in a wall plaque.

The Special Case submitted to the court raised as a point of law the question whether copyright in a plaque known as "A Garden Interior" was incapable of subsisting on July 19, 1951, the date of the issue of the writ in the action. In the agreed statement of facts it was stated that: (i) the plaque was produced and published before Jan. 1, 1950; (ii) at the date when the plaque came into existence it was intended by the plaintiff that it should be reproduced in more than fifty single articles by a process of making a model in clay, and thence a rubber mould, and lastly therefrom the plaques in plaster; and (iii) the plaque was not registered as a design under the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907 to 1919, because the Comptroller of the Patents Office would not register wall plaques as designs under those Acts. The pictures or sketches made before the work began were made for no other purpose than as part of the process of making the plaque.

In his statement of claim the plaintiff pleaded that the defendant had infringed his copyright by offering for sale a plaque which was a reproduction or colourable imitation of the plaintiff's plaque. He asked for damages for infringement of copyright and conversion and for an injunction to prevent the further reproduction or sale of the plaque. The defendant contended that the material date was that of the publication of the plaintiff's plaque, and that, as that was before Jan. 1, 1950, and the design was then capable of registration under the Act of 1907, copyright under the Copyright Act, 1911, was excluded under s. 22 (1) of the latter Act.

The Vice-Chancellor held that, on the facts stated in the Special Case, copyright in the design of the plaque was not incapable of subsisting under the Copyright Act, 1911, on the date of the issue of the writ, July 19, 1951. He said that the decision of the Comptroller of the Patents Office not to register wall plaques as designs was not binding on the court, and it was clear that before Jan. 1, 1950, the design of the plaque could have been registered. As that had not been done, up to Jan. 1, 1950, the Copyright Act, 1911, did not apply to the plaque. On that date, however, there came into operation the Registered Designs Act, 1949, and by r. 26 of the Designs Rules, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 2368), made under the Act, designs to be applied to wall plaques were expressly excluded from registration. The Patents and Designs Act, 1907, was repealed by the Patents Act, 1949, and the Registered Designs Act, 1949, which, with certain modifications, re-enacted Part II of the Act of 1907 dealing with the registration of designs. The question turned on the construction to be placed in the circumstances on s. 22 (1) of the Copyright Act, 1911, having regard to the state of the law on July 19, 1951, the date of the writ. The Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 38, provided that where an Act repealed and re-enacted, with or without modifications, any provision of a former Act, reference to the repealed provisions should, unless a contrary intention appeared, be construed as a reference to the provisions so re-enacted. Therefore, in the Copyright Act, 1911, s. 22 (1), the words "capable of being registered under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907," must now be read as "capable of being registered under the Patents Act, 1949, or the Registered Designs Act, 1949", and by r. 26 of the rules of 1949 designs for wall plaques were not capable of being registered.

During the argument in the Court of Appeal the validity of the Designs Rules, 1949, was called into question and the hearing was adjourned to hear counsel for the Board of Trade on this point.

FitzHugh for the defendant.

P. I. Bell for the plaintiff.

The Attorney-General (Sir Lionel Heald, K.C.) and P. J. S. Bevan as amici curiae.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. The following judgments were read.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: In my judgment, this appeal fails and should be dismissed. On the main question argued, namely, that of the effect of s. 22 of the Copyright Act, 1911, in the light of the new Registered Designs Act, 1949, I desire to add nothing to the judgment of JENKINS, L.J., which I am about to read. On the matter raised during the argument, on which the Attorney-General assisted us as amicus curiae, namely, the question of the validity of r. 26 of the Designs Rules, 1949, I also agree with the conclusion of JENKINS, L.J., though I am bound to say that I have felt greater difficulty respecting it than he has. So far as this particular rule is concerned, it seems to me that the problem is in many respects different from that considered by this court in R. v. Minister of Town & Country Planning. Ex p. Montague Burton, Ltd. (1). In that case the effect of the repeals in the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, would have had the result that all the machinery which had operated under the previous Act would have ceased to be effective unless some step were taken to keep it alive. In other words, on the coming into operation of the new Act there would have been an administrative vacuum and pending applications would have lost all force and effect. The direction, therefore, issued by the Minister had the effect of preserving the validity of those applications and of securing that when the new Act came into force it would operate effectively.

I agree, accordingly, on the authority of that case, that the phrase in s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889,

“so far as may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation at the date of the commencement thereof,” extends to something more than that which is requisite to enable the Act to come into operation at all. In other words, I think, particularly having regard to the words “or expedient,” that the section covers such steps as would be required to enable the Act to operate effectively. My difficulty in the present case has been caused by the fact that the rule-making power in s. 1 (4) of the Registered Designs Act, 1949, clearly contemplates that from time to time, as the Board of Trade may think proper, provision may be made, while the Act is in operation, for excluding from registration certain types of design, and I have not found it easy to persuade myself that in order to enable the Act effectively to operate it was requisite to exclude from registration a type of design which for many years had, apparently, been within the ambit of the previous legislation, but which the registrar had in practice not accepted for registration. I should, therefore, for myself have felt difficulty in treating as valid a rule made by virtue of s. 1 (4), and solely relating to an exclusion under that sub-section. If such a rule were validated by the language of s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, it would appear to me difficult to give any sensible effect to the words “for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation,” etc. In the present case, however, the rule in question is part of a larger body of rules made under the general powers of s. 36 of the Registered Designs Act, 1949, and clearly justifiable as “expedient”, if not “necessary”, so as to give the new Act a working machinery when it came into operation. That being so, I do not think it would be right to pick out one rule because, taken in isolation, that rule might be said to fail to satisfy the requirements of s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889. I have been satisfied on the whole that in its context, as part of a general body of rules providing the machinery for the effective operation of the new Act, this rule can fairly be said to satisfy the conditions of validity.

JENKINS, L.J. (read by SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.): This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of the Vice-Chancellor in the Palatine Court of Lancaster, dated Sept. 12, 1951, which decided in favour of the plaintiff a question of law raised in an agreed statement of facts, pursuant to Ord. 32, r. 1, of the rules of that court, in an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for infringement of the plaintiff's copyright in a wall plaque known as “A Garden Interior”. The question of law raised for the Vice-Chancellor's decision was whether, on the facts appearing on the agreed statement of facts, copyright in this plaque was, at the date of the issue of the writ in the action, i.e., July 19, 1951, incapable of subsisting, on the grounds that the plaque was (a) a design capable of being registered under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, and (b) was used and intended to be used as a model or pattern to be multiplied by an industrial process.

The two grounds stated in the question are, in effect, the grounds on which certain designs are, by s. 22 of the Copyright Act, 1911, excluded from copyright under that Act, s. 22 (1) being in these terms: A

“ This Act shall not apply to designs capable of being registered under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, except designs which, though capable of being so registered, are not used or intended to be used as models or patterns to be multiplied by any industrial process.” B

Sub-section (2) provides for the making of rules. The case may be said to turn on (a) the position as regards copyright of the plaintiff's plaque down to Jan. 1, 1950, when the Registered Designs Act, 1949, came into operation; and (b) the effect (if any) on that position of the Registered Designs Act, 1949, and the rules made thereunder, the Registered Designs Act, 1949, and the Patents Act of the same year having repealed (with certain immaterial exceptions) the whole of the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907 to 1946, and the Registered Designs Act, 1949, having re-enacted, with important modifications, the provisions of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (as amended by subsequent legislation), relating to registered designs. I do not think that anything turns, for the purposes of the present case, on the intermediate Patents and Designs Act, 1949, which came into operation on Jan. 1, 1950, immediately before, and with immaterial exceptions was forthwith repealed by, the Patents Act, 1949, and the Registered Designs Act, 1949. C D

The agreed statement of facts is, shortly, to the effect that the plaque in question was produced and published prior to Jan. 1, 1950; that at the date when the plaque came into existence it was intended by the plaintiff to be reproduced in more than fifty single articles; that the plaque was not registered as a design under the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907 to 1919, because the Comptroller of the Patent Office would not register wall plaques as designs under those Acts; that the method of manufacture of such plaques (which need not be described in detail) comprised the modelling by hand in clay or plasticine of the desired subject in relief on a flat base, followed by a process resulting in the production of a rubber mould, from which any desired number of casts of the plaque could be taken in plaster, the finished article being the plaster cast after painting by hand. The result, as I understand it, is a coloured pictorial scene moulded in relief on a flat and approximately circular plate or disc and intended for hanging on a wall by way of decoration. The reference in the agreed statement to the plaintiff's intention to reproduce the plaque in more than fifty single articles shows it to be common ground that the conditions laid down by the Designs Rules, 1932, pursuant to s. 22 (2) of the Copyright Act, 1911, under which a design is to be deemed to be used as a model or pattern to be multiplied by any industrial process within the meaning of s. 22 (1) are fulfilled in the present case, as, indeed, is suggested by the process of manufacture as described in the agreed statement. E F G

It is not open to doubt that the plaque in question was an “ artistic work ” within the meaning of the Copyright Act, 1911, having regard to the definition of that expression contained in s. 35 (1) of the Act. The originality of the plaque as an artistic work is not in dispute. Prima facie, therefore, the plaque was, and is, a proper subject of copyright under s. 1 of the Copyright Act, 1911, but as the law stood down to Jan. 1, 1950, the plaque was excluded from copyright by the provisions of s. 22 of the Act, if it was capable of being registered under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907. H

This turns on the definitions of "design" and "article" contained in s. 93 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, as amended by s. 19 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1919, which are in these terms. I read, first, s. 93 of the Act of 1907, which contains the following definition of "article":

" 'Article' means (as respects designs) any article of manufacture and any substance artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural."

Section 19 of the Act of 1919 substitutes for the definition of "design" in the earlier Act the following definition:

" 'Design' means only the features of shape, configuration, pattern, or ornament applied to any article by any industrial process or means, whether manual, mechanical, or chemical, separate or combined, which in the finished article appeal to and are judged solely by the eye; but does not include any mode or principle of construction, or anything which is in substance a mere mechanical device."

Comprehensive as these definitions are, it appears that the difficulty of drawing an exact line between designs proper to be registered under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, and those which were proper subjects of copyright under the Copyright Act, 1911, had long been recognised. The question is discussed at length in COPINGER AND SKONE JAMES ON THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT, 8th ed., p. 72 et seq., where the writers, in effect, point out that on a literal reading of the above-quoted definitions such articles as engravings of pictures, photographs, and Christmas cards would, where more than fifty copies were produced, be capable of being registered as designs under the Act of 1907 and, therefore, excluded from copyright under the Act of 1911 which, in his submission, could not have been the intention of the legislature. The writer's own view of the question is stated at p. 72, in these terms:

" It is submitted, however, that the fundamental distinction between a 'design' and a simple 'artistic work' lies in the applicability of the former to another article; that is to say, an artistic work is bought purely and simply for its artistic properties, an article to which a design has been applied is bought not simply because of the artistic qualities of the design, but because of the utility of the article apart from the design, and that this distinction may be implied from the obvious purpose of the Designs Acts, and from the use of the words 'pattern or ornament', which are not properly applicable to such designs as are not merely appurtenances, but are the essence of the thing created. For example, the plate from which an engraving is to be printed is intended to be applied to a sheet of paper or other material, but an engraving is not usually purchased for the material on which it is printed. Therefore, engravings are prima facie entitled to protection under the Copyright Act."

Similar observations also appear in earlier editions of the same work.

The Comptroller, in refusing registration of the plaque here in question, would seem to have been in effect accepting the distinction drawn in the passage quoted above and taking the view that such a plaque was in the same category as the engraving instanced in the text-book, with the immaterial substitution of mould, plaster and paint, for plate, paper and ink. If the view on which I take the Comptroller to have acted was the right view, then the plaque was never capable of registration under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, but at all times was, and is, a proper subject of copyright under the Copyright Act, 1911, and was never excluded from such copyright by s. 22 of that Act. On this footing the question raised in the case would clearly call for an answer in the sense that copyright was capable of subsisting in the plaintiff's plaque at the date of the issue of the writ in the action, and the Registered Designs Act, 1949, would have no bearing on the result. If, on the other hand, the view which I have ventured to impute to the Comptroller was wrong and the plaque was capable of registration as a design under the Act of 1907, the position of the plaque as regards copyright under the law as it stood before Jan. 1, 1950, was this: (i) The plaque was capable of registration as a design under the Act of 1907, and, as it was admittedly intended for reproduction in more than fifty single articles, it was excluded from copyright under the Act of 1911; but (ii) the plaque had not been so registered, and (iii), having been published, it was disqualified from being so registered inasmuch as s. 49 of the Act of 1907 restricts registration to new and original designs "not previously published in the United Kingdom", and, therefore, (iv) the plaintiff could neither claim copyright protection for his plaque under the Copyright Act, 1911, nor obtain such protection by registration under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907. On this view, the question raised can only be answered in the plaintiff's favour if it can be shown that the Registered Designs Act, 1949, and the rules made thereunder, read in conjunction with the Copyright Act, 1911, and, in particular, s. 22 of that Act, have had the effect of extending to the plaintiff's plaque copyright under the Act of 1911, from which it was previously excluded by s. 22 of that Act read in conjunction with the Patents and Designs Act, 1907.

The learned Vice-Chancellor declined to regard the question whether the plaque was capable of being registered under the Act of 1907 as concluded for the purposes of these proceedings by the Comptroller's refusal to register it, and, having considered this question himself, he came to the conclusion that the plaque was capable of being so registered. In so holding he founded himself largely on the decision of CLAUSON, J., in Pytram, Ltd. v. Models (Leicester), Ltd. (2), where the "artistic work" in respect of which copyright under the Copyright Act, 1911, was claimed was a model of a wolf cub's head produced in papier-mâché from a mould and intended to be displayed as a totem on the tops of poles by the Boy Scouts Association. CLAUSON, J., held this to be a design capable of registration under the Act of 1907 and as such excluded from copyright under the Act of 1911, by virtue of s. 22 of that Act. Assuming that decision to have been correct and assuming that there is no sufficient reason for holding that for this purpose there can be any relevant distinction between a model of a wolf cub's head produced in papier-mâché from a mould and a plaque bearing a pictorial scene in relief produced in plaster from a mould, in my judgment, the result is still the same, namely, that the plaintiff is now entitled to copyright in the design in question, having regard to the effect of the Registered Designs Act, 1949, and the rules made thereunder.

The Registered Designs Act, 1949, provides by s. 1:

"(1) Subject to the following provisions of this section, a design may, upon application made by the person claiming to be the proprietor, be registered under this Act in respect of any article or set of articles specified in the application. (2) Subject to the provisions of this Act, a design shall not be registered thereunder unless it is new or original and in particular shall not be so registered in respect of any article if it is the same as a design which before the date of the application for registration has been registered or published in the United Kingdom in respect of the same or any other article or differs from such a design only in immaterial details or in features which are variants commonly used in the trade. (3) In this Act the expression 'design' means features of shape, configuration, pattern or ornament applied to an article by any industrial process or means, being features which in the finished article appeal to and are judged solely by the eye, but does not include a method or principle of construction or features of shape or configuration which are dictated solely by the function which the article to be made in that shape or configuration has to perform. (4) Rules made by the Board of Trade under this Act may provide for excluding from registration thereunder designs for such articles, being articles which are primarily literary or artistic in character, as the Board think fit."

"Article" is defined by s. 44 (1) (so far as relevant), as meaning "any article of manufacture." Section 48 (1), effects certain repeals, including (with material exceptions) the whole of the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907 to 1946. The remaining sub-sections of s. 48 include the following, to which reference could be made:

"(2) Subject to the provisions of this section, any Order in Council, rule, order, requirement, certificate, notice, decision, direction, authorisation, consent, application, request or thing made, issued, given or done under any enactment repealed by this Act shall, if in force at the commencement of this Act, and so far as it could have been made, issued, given or done under this Act, continue in force and have effect as if made, issued, given or done under the corresponding enactment of this Act . . . (4) Any design registered before the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to be registered under this Act in respect of articles of the class in which it is registered . . . (6) Any document referring to any enactment repealed by this Act shall be construed as referring to the corresponding enactment of this Act. (7) Nothing in the foregoing provisions of this section shall be taken as prejudicing the operation of s. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (which relates to the effect of repeals)."

Section 49 (2) provides that the Act (which was passed on Dec. 16, 1949)

" . . . shall come into operation on Jan. 1, 1950, immediately after the coming into operation of the Patents and Designs Act, 1949."

Section 36 confers on the Board of Trade the general rule-making power to which s. 1 (4) has reference. The relevant rules are contained in the Designs Rules, 1949. They were made on Dec. 16, 1949, laid before Parliament on Dec. 22, 1949, and expressed to come into operation on Jan. 2, 1950. Rule 26, made pursuant to s. 1 (4) of the Act, provides as follows:

"There shall be excluded from registration under the Act designs to be applied to any of the following articles, namely . . . (2) wall plaques and medals."

Apart from the question raised in the course of the hearing as to the validity of the rules, it is plain that, even if the plaque had not been disqualified from registration under the Act of 1907 by reason of its publication, it became incapable of registration under the Act of 1907 on Jan. 1, 1950, when the Patents Act, 1949, and the Registered Designs Act, 1949, came into operation and repealed the Act of 1907 and amending Acts. It is also plain that, even if the plaque had not been so disqualified, it became incapable of registration under the Registered Designs Act, 1919, on Jan. 2, 1950, when the Designs Rules, 1949, came into operation, by virtue of the express exclusion from registration of "wall plaques and medals" effected by r. 26 (2).

What effect, if any, did these consequences of the 1949 legislation have on the position of the plaque as regards copyright under the Copyright Act, 1911. The plaque, as an "original artistic work", prima facie carried copyright under the Act of 1911 unless excluded therefrom by s. 22. Down to Jan. 1, 1950, it was so excluded, because, on the hypothesis under discussion, it was capable of registration under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907. That exclusion surely ceased to have effect when the Act of 1907 was repealed and replaced by the Registered Designs Act, 1949, and the rules made thereunder, with their express exclusion from registration of wall plaques and medals. A design can hardly be said to be "capable" of registration under a repealed enactment. Moreover, s. 48 (7) of the Act of 1949 contains an express saving of " . . . the operation of s. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (which relates to the effect of repeals)."

Section 38 (1) so far as material for the present purpose, provides as follows:

"Where this Act or any Act passed after the commencement of this Act repeals and re-enacts, with or without modification, any provisions of a former Act, references in any other Act to the provisions so repealed, shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as references to the provisions so re-enacted."

I take it that the effect of this provision in the present case must be (as the Vice-Chancellor held) that the references in s. 22 of the Copyright Act, 1911, to the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, must be construed as references to the Registered Designs Act, 1949, no contrary intention appearing in the relevant legislation. The plaque, not being capable of registration under the Act of 1949, is, therefore, no longer excluded by s. 22 of the Act of 1911 from copyright under that Act, and the result, in my opinion, must be (as the Vice-Chancellor held) that, being in other respects duly qualified for copyright under the Act of 1911, the plaque did, by virtue of the legislation of 1949, acquire the copyright from which (I am assuming) it had previously been excluded.

Counsel for the defendant would not, I think, have been disposed to challenge this conclusion, but for the fact that the plaque had been published before Jan. 1, 1950, and thus disqualified from registration under the Act of 1907. This argument, as I understand it, was really in the nature of an argument ab inconvenienti. It was in substance to the effect that it could not have been intended to confer, as it were by a side wind, copyright on a design which had been capable of registration under the Patent and Designs Act, 1907, and, therefore, excluded from copyright under the Copyright Act, 1911, had not been registered under the Act of 1907, had lost its claim to such registration by being published, and had thus (perhaps in some cases many years ago) become common property, which anybody could "pirate" at will.

If s. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, has the effect above attributed to it on s. 22 (1) of the Copyright Act, 1911, as, in my view, it must, the result stated above seems to me to be inescapable. Effect could only be given to the exception, mentioned by counsel for the defendant, of published designs registrable under the Act of 1907, but not under the Act of 1949, by an arbitrary re-modelling of s. 22 of the Act of 1911, for which I can see no justification and which, for my part, I would have great difficulty in formulating, and, if it could be done, I am by no means satisfied that other difficulties, not less formidable than those suggested by counsel for the defendant, might not ensue. Clearly, if s. 22 of the Act of 1911 were treated as still referring to the Act of 1907, the utmost confusion would result. Moreover, I think that the argument based on inconvenience and unreasonableness is one to which undue weight should not be attributed. It must be borne in mind that r. 26 of the rules of 1949 deals only with what may be described as marginal cases, the proper treatment of which as between registration under the Act of 1907 and copyright under the Act of 1911 had long been a matter of doubt. Rule 26 may be described as giving statutory effect to what had previously been the practice of the Comptroller in these doubtful cases. In these circumstances it is not, I think, unreasonable that designs such as the plaintiff's plaque, registrable (but published without registration) under the Act of 1907, particularly when, as in the plaintiff's case, they were so published owing to the Comptroller's refusal to register them, should by virtue of the 1949 legislation become subjects of copyright under the Act of 1911, from which they had only been excluded by their doubtful (and in practice officially unrecognised) capability of registration under the Act of 1907.

There remains the question raised in the course of the argument concerning the validity of the Designs Rules, 1949. That is obviously a question of great public importance, and the court invited and obtained the assistance of the Attorney-General on it at an adjourned hearing. The validity of the rules made, as they were, between the passing and the coming into operation of the Registered Designs Act, 1949, depends on s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, which is in these terms:

"Where an Act passed after the commencement of this Act is not to come into operation immediately on the passing thereof, and confers power to make any appointment, to make, grant, or issue any instrument, that is to say, any Order in Council, order, warrant, scheme, letters patent, rules, regulations, or byelaws, to give notices, to prescribe forms, or to do any other thing for the purposes of the Act, that power may, unless the contrary intention appears, be exercised at any time after the passing of the Act, so far as may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation at the date of the commencement thereof, subject to this restriction, that any instrument made under the power shall not, unless the contrary intention appears in the Act, or the contrary is necessary for bringing the Act into operation, come into operation until the Act comes into operation."

Reference should also be made to s. 36 (1) of the same Act, which provides:

"In this Act, and in every Act passed either before or after the commencement of this Act, the expression 'commencement', when used with reference to an Act, shall mean the time at which the Act comes into operation."

The question was, in effect, whether on the true construction of s. 37 rules such as r. 26 of the Designs Rules, 1949, could be held to be "necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing" the Registered Designs Act, 1949, "into operation" within the meaning of the section. In my opinion, the answer should be in the affirmative. I think the point is covered in principle by what was said in this court in R. v. Minister of Town & Country Planning. Ex p. Montague Burton, Ltd. (1), where the effect of s. 37 was considered in relation to the Town and Country Planning Acts of 1944 and 1947. In that case TUCKER, L.J., said [1950] 2 All E.R. 285):

"In my view, s. 37 applies to the present case. It clearly gives power to take the necessary steps to set up the machinery for bringing the Act of 1947 into operation as well as for doing such an act as appointing a day for the Act to come into operation. The words in s. 37 dealing with regulations, byelaws, notices, prescribed forms, and so forth, make it, I think, clear that matters of that kind may be dealt with under the provisions of s. 37 so that the necessary machinery will function as soon as the Act comes into operation and things shall not come to a standstill by reason of the repeal of an existing Act. In the present case these applications were pending under s. 1 of the Act of 1944. I think that that is just the kind of thing which is contemplated by s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, and that, having regard to the provisions of para. 16 of sched. X, the order contained in the letter of June 16, 1948, was a valid order, although it was made before the appointed day."

SQUITH, L.J., said (ibid.):

"I agree. I think that the only point of substance raised by counsel for the applicants was when he argued that s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, did not apply because the giving of the directions contained in the letter of June 16, 1948, was not necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act of 1947 into operation. He appeared to submit that nothing could be necessary or expedient for this purpose except such a thing as fixing the appointed day. I cannot agree that the words should receive so restricted an interpretation. It seems to me that the preservation of applications made under the Act of 1944 was necessary and expedient for the purpose of giving the Act of 1947 material on which to operate, and that this is enough to satisfy the words 'for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation'."

The legislation with which that case was concerned was of an entirely different character from the legislation here in question. Nevertheless, I think it does involve a decision of general application to the effect that s. 37 is not confined to the making of rules and so forth without which the Act in question would be wholly incapable of coming into operation. Moreover, on consideration of the question de novo, and apart from the guidance afforded by the case just quoted, it seems to me that s. 37, on its true construction in accordance with the natural meaning of the language used, is apt to authorise the making of rules such as those here concerned between the passing and the coming into operation of the relevant Act. As pointed out by TUCKER, L.J., in the passage cited above, the section extends to a comprehensive enumeration of matters: "Orders in Council, order, warrant, scheme, letters patent, rules, regulations, or byelaws." Clearly many of these matters are matters requiring to be dealt with under the Act when in operation, in order that it may operate effectively, rather than matters without which the Act cannot come into operation at all. Further, the vital words of the section are

"so far as may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation at the date of the commencement thereof."

If the section had been confined to matters without which the Act could not come into operation at all, the words "or expedient" would, so far as I can see, have been not only otiose, but wholly inappropriate. A matter without which an Act cannot come into operation at all is necessary for the purpose of bringing it into operation, and cannot be anything less than that. A matter which is merely expedient for the purpose of bringing an Act into operation is by definition not necessary for that purpose. It is a matter without which the Act can come into operation, but with which the Act will come into operation more conveniently or effectively.

The view which I have formed is, I think, reinforced by the application to s. 37 of the definition of "commencement" contained in s. 36 (1). So applied it makes s. 37 read:

"... necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation at the date or the time at which the Act comes into operation," which must, I think, mean "at the date fixed or prescribed as the time at which the Act comes into operation". In relation to Acts which themselves fix the date on which they are to come into operation (such as the Registered Designs Act, 1949) as distinct from Acts in which such date is left to be fixed by some rule-making authority, this becomes a wholly idle provision if the section is regarded as limited to that which is necessary (in the strict sense) to bring about the coming into operation of the Act, meaning thereby simply the bringing of the Act as such into force. In cases like the present, nothing could be said to be "necessary" or even "expedient" for that limited purpose beyond passively awaiting the arrival of the date fixed by the Act itself. The truth is, I think, that "operation" is used in the section in two different senses, namely, the sense in which it appears in the definition of "commencement" and in the sense of "effective operation," and I think that in the phrase "bringing into operation" it is used in the latter sense. On this view s. 37 should be construed as extending to whatever is necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act into effective operation at the date fixed or prescribed as the time at which the Act comes into operation.

It would obviously be in the highest degree inconvenient in the present case if the making of rules under s. 1 (4) of the Act of 1949, prescribing the designs to be excluded from registration under the Act, had to await the coming into operation of the Act, as this would inevitably involve a period of confusion and uncertainty, even to the point of bringing the machinery of registration to a standstill. I should add that I am satisfied that the rules must be assumed to been made after the passing of the Registered Designs Act, 1949, which, will have been observed, took place on the same day, that is, Dec. 16, 1949. Accordingly, in the view I take the doubt raised as to the validity of the rules ill-founded. For these reasons I hold that this appeal fails and should be dismissed.

MORRIS, L.J.: I have had the advantage of reading and considering the judgment prepared by JENKINS, L.J., and I express my concurrence with the conclusions and the reasoning of it. Until I had considered the submissions pressed to us by the Attorney-General I entertained doubt as to the validity of r. 26 of the Designs Rules, 1949. I am, however, in agreement with the conclusion in regard to this matter expressed by JENKINS, L.J., though I have not shared and share the difficulties felt by SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., which has been indicated in his judgment.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Charles Russell & Co., agents for Skelton & Co., Manchester (for plaintiff); Turner, Osborn & Chatterton, agents for T. H. Hinchcliffe & Son, Manchester (for the defendant); Solicitor, Board of Trade.

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

JACKSON v. MAYFAIR WINDOW CLEANING CO., LTD. AND ANOTHER.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Barry, J.), October 22, 23, 24, November 1, December 21, 1951.]

Cases—County court—Action commenced in High Court—Less than £100 recovered—Whether action founded on contract or on tort—Chandelier damaged by negligence of person contracting to clean it—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 47 (1) (b) (i) (ii).

In the course of its being cleaned by a cleaners under contract with the owner a chandelier fell from the ceiling of a room in the owner's flat. In an action for damages for negligence brought in the High Court against the cleaning company the court held that the company had failed to exercise sufficient care in the cleaning and gave judgment for the owner for £90. On the question of costs,

HELD: as the cause of action was not nonfeasance or failure of the company to clean the chandelier at the time or in the manner stipulated by their contract, but arose out of an obligation to take reasonable care to keep safe and not to damage property with which their workmen had to deal, the owner's claim was founded on tort and not on contract. The plaintiff's costs, therefore, were not restricted by the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47 (1) (b) (i), relating to actions in contract where less than £100 was recovered, to the costs to which she would have been entitled if the action had been brought in a county court.

Turner v. Stallibrass ([1898] 1 Q.B. 56), and dictum of GREER, L.J., in Jarvis v. Moy, Davies, Smith, Vandervell & Co. ([1936] 1 K.B. 405), applied. Steljes v. Ingram (1903) (19 T.L.R. 534), and Jarvis v. Moy, Davies, Smith, Vandervell & Co. ([1936] 1 K.B. 399), distinguished.

AS TO DISTINCTION BETWEEN ACTIONS OF TORT AND ACTIONS OF CONTRACT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, p. 160, para. 227; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 968-971, Nos. 8-28.

Cases referred to:

(1) Turner v. Stallibrass, [1898] 1 Q.B. 56; 67 L.J.Q.B. 52; 77 L.T. 482; 42 Digest 968, 8.

- (2) Jarvis v. Moy, Davies, Smith, Vandervell & Co., [1936] 1 K.B. 399; 105 L.J.K.B. 309; 154 L.T. 365; Digest Supp.
 (3) Steljes v. Ingram, (1903), 19 T.L.R. 534; 42 Digest 970, 24.
 (4) Wilson v. Brett, (1843), 11 M. & W. 113; 152 E.R. 737; sub nom. Willson v. Brett, 12 L.J.Ex. 264; 12 Digest, Replacement, 251, 1949.
 (5) Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co., [1951] 1 All E.R. 426; [1951] 2 K.B. 164.

ACTION for damages for negligence against the first defendants and for damages for breach of contract against the second defendant.

The plaintiff had contracted with the second defendant to overhaul her chandelier and five months later with the first defendants to clean it. In the course of the cleaning the chandelier fell from the ceiling. The court held that the second defendant had improperly carried out the work under her contract and that servants of the first defendants had failed to exercise sufficient care in the cleaning and awarded the plaintiff £90 damages against both defendants. The defendants contended that the plaintiff's claim against the first defendant, though framed in tort, was founded on contract, and that, therefore, under the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47 (1) (b) (i), the plaintiff, having recovered more than £40 but not more than £100, should be limited to the costs to which she would have been entitled if the action had been brought in a county court. The plaintiff contended that the claim was founded on tort, and, therefore, that s. 47 (1) (b) (i) of the Act of 1934 had no application and costs on the High Court scale could be awarded.

Harold J. Brown for the plaintiff.

Jukes for the first defendants.

S. M. Stewart for the second defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21. BARRY, J., read the following judgment. In this case the plaintiff recovered damages amounting to £90 against both defendants for the damage done to her cut glass chandelier which fell from the ceiling of a room in her flat while it was being cleaned by a servant or servants of the first defendants. Five months before its fall the chandelier in question had been overhauled by the second defendant, who had been instructed to put it into good condition. On the evidence I held that the work entrusted to the second defendant had been improperly carried out and that the fall of the chandelier was partially attributable to this default. I also reached the conclusion that the servants of the first defendants had failed to exercise sufficient care in the cleaning of the chandelier.

After judgment had been given in the plaintiff's favour, a question was raised under s. 47 (1) of the County Courts Act, 1934, as to the costs which she was entitled to recover. Section 47 (1) provides:

"Where an action is commenced in the High Court which could have been commenced in a county court, then, subject to the provisions of sub-s. (3) . . . (b) if the plaintiff recovers—(i) in the case of an action founded on contract, a sum of £40 or upwards but less than £100; or (ii) in the case of an action founded on tort, a sum of £10 or upwards but less than £50; he shall not be entitled to any more costs of the action than those to which he would have been entitled if the action had been brought in a county court."

Sub-section (3) provides:

"In any such action as aforesaid, whether founded on contract or tort, the High Court or a judge thereof (or where the matter is tried before a referee or officer of the Supreme Court, that referee or officer), if satisfied—(a) that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the High Court . . . may make an order allowing the costs or any part of the costs thereof on the High Court scale or on such one of the county court scales and under such one of the columns in the scale as he may direct."

The defendants contended that the plaintiff's action against both of them was "founded on contract," and that, on consequence, having recovered less than £100 but more than £40, she was only entitled to her costs on the appropriate county court scale. Counsel for the plaintiff maintained that her claim was founded on tort and that she was entitled to receive an award of costs on the High Court scale. Alternatively, he asked me to make a special order awarding High Court costs under s. 47 (3) of the County Courts Act, 1934. So far as the first defendants are concerned, I can find no good grounds for making an order under that sub-section, and it, therefore, becomes necessary to consider the real nature of the plaintiff's claim against these defendants. I need not refer in detail to her claim against the second defendant, as his counsel, if I may say so, very rightly conceded that, if the plaintiff's claim against the first defendants were, in truth, founded on tort, there were excellent grounds for the plaintiff's decision to join as client, the second defendant, in the High Court action, and that, in such circumstances, he could not resist a special order as to costs under s. 47 (3). Both on the writ and in the statement of claim the plaintiff's claim against the first defendants is clearly pleaded in tort, that is to say, she claims for damages for negligence. This does not, however, by any means conclude the matter. It has often been pointed out, there is a considerable "no man's land" of debated ground between contract and tort and some causes of action may properly be pleaded either as torts or as breaches of contract. I have to look at the true substance of this action and to decide on which side of the line it falls. The test to be applied was clearly and shortly formulated by A. L. SMITH, L.J., in Turner v. Stallibrass (1), as follows ([1898] 1 Q.B. 58):

"The rule of law on the subject, as I understand it, is that, if in order to make out a cause of action it is not necessary for the plaintiff to rely on a contract, the action is one founded on tort; but, on the other hand, if, in order successfully to maintain his action, it is necessary for him to rely upon and prove a contract, the action is one founded upon contract."

The facts which were under consideration by the court in Turner's case (1) were, it is true, concerned with the relationship between a bailor and bailee, but the test enunciated by A. L. SMITH, L.J., is, I think, one of quite general application. It was re-stated in equally clear terms by GREER, L.J., in Jarvis v. Moy, Davies, Smith, Vandervell & Co. (2) ([1936] 1 K.B. 405):

"The distinction in the modern view, for this purpose, between contract and tort may be put thus: where the breach of duty alleged arises out of a liability independently of the personal obligation undertaken by contract, it is tort, and it may be tort even though there may happen to be a contract between the parties, if the duty in fact arises independently of that contract. Breach of contract occurs where that which is complained of is a breach of duty arising out of the obligations undertaken by the contract."

That there was a contract between the plaintiff and the first defendants is, of course, not in dispute. Moreover, the acts complained of might well have been treated as a breach of that contract. What I have to ask myself, however, is whether, in essence, the plaintiff must rely on that contract in order to establish her claim or whether she can properly treat the contract as a mere matter of history, explaining the presence of the defendants' workman in her flat, and establish a breach of duty independent of any obligations undertaken by the defendants to her under that contract. In my judgment, the present claim falls within the latter category. The plaintiff does not complain of mere nonfeasance, nor does she say that the defendants failed to clean her chandelier at the time or in the manner stipulated by their contract. Her case is based on a broader duty, independent of any contractual obligation undertaken by the defendants. She says that if the defendants, through their workmen, interfere with her property—whether with or without her permission and whether in pursuance of a contract or otherwise—they are under an obligation not to damage that property as a result of their negligence, or, in other words, they are bound to take reasonable care to keep it safe. This is, I think, the true foundation of the plaintiff's claim.

I reach that conclusion largely because I am satisfied that, on the evidence in this case, the plaintiff would have been equally entitled to recover damages had the defendants carried out this work gratuitously or had the contract for cleaning been made by some third party, not her agent, on which contract she could found no right of action. In either of those hypothetical cases the defendants would, I think, owe a duty to the plaintiff—independently of contract—to take due care not to damage her property. Any breach of this duty would render them liable to an action for negligence.

Counsel for both defendants, in very clear and forceful arguments, submitted that a duty to take care, independent of contract, arose only when certain special relationships between the parties had been established. These relationships were, they said, now exhaustively defined by the decided cases and could not be extended to include the relationship existing between the plaintiff and the defendants in the present case. The relationships to which they referred included bailee and bailor, surgeon or dentist and patient, carriers and passengers or the owners of goods consigned for carriage, and certain other relationships which are more fully referred to by PHILLIMORE, J., in Steljes v. Ingram (3). Counsel for the first defendants pointed out that the Court of Appeal in Jarvis v. Moy, Davies, Smith, Vandervell & Co. (2) had refused to include amongst these relationships that existing between a stockbroker and his client. As SLESSER, L.J., said in that case ([1936] 1 K.B. 407),

“ . . . a stockbroker does not exercise a ‘public calling’ in the sense in which that term is used as applied to carriers and certain other occupations.”

Now, I do not for one moment propose to hold that a window cleaner or chandelier cleaner exercises a “public calling” or falls into any of the categories referred to in the cases I have mentioned. Persons exercising “public callings” and others who enter into certain special relationships may, apart from contract, have certain positive duties imposed on them, which the law does not impose in the case of other professions or trades. That is not to say that all other persons or persons involved in all other professions or trades are absolved from the purely negative duty of not damaging another person's property by their negligence. The facts in Steljes' case (3) and Jarvis's case (2) were quite different from the present one. In the absence of a contract, the architect, in the one, was under no duty to supervise the erection of the house, nor was the stockbroker, in the other, to buy or sell shares on any particular date or at all. The complaint in each case arose from the breach of a positive obligation imposed by contract and by contract only. Very different considerations would have arisen in the latter case if, for example, the stockbroker had negligently burned some valuable document belonging to the plaintiff.

The second point taken by counsel for the two defendants was largely based on certain passages in my judgment in the present case, in which I stressed the fact that the first defendants had held themselves out as experts in the cleaning of chandeliers and that, in consequence, their workmen were bound to exercise a high degree of skill and care. This obligation, it was said, could only arise ex contractu, and, apart from contract, no particular skill in or knowledge of the cleaning of chandeliers could be imputed to the defendants' workmen. I cannot accept this argument. The law is, I think, correctly stated in HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND (Hailsham edn.), vol. 23, at p. 586. Paragraph 837 appears on that page and refers to gratuitous service and reads thus:

“Where a person, not professing to be skilled in the particular matter, undertakes to do an act for another, without reward, he is only bound to exercise honestly that care which he, as an ordinarily prudent man, would exercise if acting for himself. He is not to be held liable for a mistake, or for an error of judgment, which a reasonably prudent man might commit, or for mere non-success. Where a person skilled in a particular matter gratuitously undertakes to do something involving the exercise of skill, he must do it to the best of his skill, which must be such as a person skilled in such matters may reasonably be expected to possess."

Authority for the latter proposition is to be found in the old case of Wilson v. Pett (4). As indicated by DENNING, L.J., in his dissenting judgment in the recent and much discussed case of Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. (5), the doctrine has an even more venerable ancestry. DENNING, L.J., says ([1951] All E.R. 433):

"Thus FITZHERBERT in his NEW NATURA BREVIVM (1534) 94D, says that ' . . . if a smith prick my horse with a nail . . . I shall have my action upon the case against him, without any warranty by the smith to do it well . . . for it is the duty of every artificer to exercise his art rightly and truly as he ought '."

The fact that the other members of the court came to a different conclusion in the case from that arrived at by DENNING, L.J., does not, I think, imply any dissent from that short passage in DENNING, L.J.'s judgment, which consists merely of a quotation and one comment on the NEW NATURA BREVIVM.

For these reasons, I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's claim was founded on tort and that she is entitled to High Court costs as against the first defendants, that is to say, she is to be awarded costs and there is no reason suggested in this case that the costs should not follow the event. As to the costs against the second defendant, I have no hesitation in making a special order under s. 47 (3) of the County Courts Act, 1934, that costs against the second defendant should also be on the High Court scale.

Judgment for the plaintiff against both defendants with costs on the High Court scale.

Solicitors: Gordon, Dadds & Co. (for the plaintiff); Rowley, Ashworth & Co. (for the first defendants); H. L. Lumley & Co. (for the second defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

IBBS v. HOLLOWAY BROTHERS, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Devlin, J.), December 20, 1951.]

Practice—Estimated length of trial—Duty of solicitors—Substantial error in estimate—Transfer of case from short non-jury list to long non-jury list—Solicitors of both parties ordered to pay costs thrown away—R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 29 (6).

Costs—Payment by solicitor personally—Error in estimate of length of trial—Transfer of case from short non-jury list to long non-jury list—R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 29 (6).

An estimate of the length of the trial of a case, furnished by parties to the clerk of the King's Bench Division lists under R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 29 (6), must be reasonably accurate, and in case of doubt it is the duty of the solicitors to obtain the opinion of counsel on the matter. This applies particularly where a case of a type normally placed in the long non-jury list, such as a Factory Act case, is placed in the short non-jury list.

Where it ought to have been apparent that a case was not a proper one for the short non-jury list in which it had been placed, the costs of each party thrown away by the adjournment on its transfer to the long non-jury list were ordered to be paid by his solicitors personally. No order was made for costs as between party and party, although the plaintiff had given the original estimate of duration, the duty of making such estimate being imposed by the rule on all parties.

EDITORIAL NOTE. A case is entered in the short cause list where the estimated length of the trial is not more than two hours, in the short non-jury list where it is not more than four hours, and in the long non-jury list where it exceeds four hours. Where it comes to the knowledge of solicitors before trial that by reason of its probable length a case is not in the proper list, they should take immediate steps by summons or application to the court to have it transferred to the appropriate list. An application by consent may be made to the clerk of the lists who will place it before the judge in charge of the lists: see R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 1A, r. 1B and r. 29 and notes. On the duty of parties under r. 29 (6), see the observations of VISCOUNT CALDECOTE, C.J., at [1944] W.N. 36 and cf. Wood v. London County Council, [1940] 4 All E.R. 156, cited in the note to that paragraph in the ANNUAL PRACTICE.

ACTION in the short non-jury list for damages for negligence and breach of statutory duty.

The plaintiff had been injured in an accident in the course of the reconstruction of a bombed-out warehouse on which he was employed by the defendants and he alleged that there had been a breach of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, regs. 5, 6, 7 (1) (2), 9 (1), 12 (1) (4), and a failure at common law to provide or use a safe system of work. The solicitors for the plaintiff estimated the probable duration of the case as four hours and it was placed in the short non-jury list. When the case came on for trial it became apparent that the estimate was inadequate and that the case would require to be transferred to the long non-jury list, and the question arose of the costs thrown away through the adjournment thereby occasioned.

Marven Everett for the plaintiff.

Stephen Chapman for the defendants.

DEVLIN, J.: It is now clear that this case is of such a compass that it can only be properly dealt with in the long non-jury list, and, accordingly, I propose to make an order transferring it to that list. It is a claim for damages for an accident that occurred on a building and is what may be described as a Factory Act type of case. The plaintiff alleges a breach of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 1145), which

It is necessary to investigate what is the meaning of the word "scaffold" in reg. 3 (2), and there is a concomitant common law claim for an alleged failure to provide a safe system of work or to use a safe system of work, for the safety of employees. That is the type of case which is normally to be found in the long non-jury list, because experience has shown that the usual case of the kind almost invariably lasts more than one day, although there may be exceptional cases which occupy a very short time on fact and in which there is no difficulty about law, and which, therefore, can be dealt with in a day or less. The ordinary place where one finds Factory Act cases is in the long non-jury list. This case in its early stages was entered in the short non-jury list, and four hours was given by the solicitors for the plaintiff as the estimate of its duration. I should have thought that even at that stage that estimate was probably accurate, but I am more concerned with the increase in the estimated length of the case as it proceeded.

In an endeavour to deal with this type of difficulty R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 29 (6), provides:

"It shall be the duty of all parties to any cause or matter entered in any of the said lists to furnish without delay to the officer by whom the list is kept all available information relating to any settlement, or likelihood of settlement, of the cause or matter, or affecting the estimated length of the trial."

That order was not complied with in this case. It was completely ignored. It must have become apparent as the case proceeded that the estimate of four hours was quite inadequate, but no effort was made to comply with the paragraph.

It is always difficult to transfer a case to the long non-jury list. All the witnesses have attended, their day has been interfered with, costs are thrown away, and there is always a temptation to a judge to go on with the hearing to save those costs. But the time has come, at any rate in Factory Act cases, when action must be taken, because it is really not fair on those parties who have the right and normal thing in putting Factory Act cases down in the long non-jury list that those who put them down in the short non-jury list should be able to have their actions disposed of before those who have attended more fully to the rules. It is for that reason, and not because I could not have finished the case, if necessary, that I have taken the action that I have done in this case. Of course, circumstances might arise in which a judge had another case fixed on the following day and it would be quite impossible to finish the case which he had started. That is why it is so important that these estimates should be reasonably accurate.

What I have to consider is: Who is to bear the costs thrown away? Is it to be the parties themselves, or is it to be the solicitors who, in my judgment, are responsible for the error which has resulted in those costs being wasted? It is not a matter of importance for this purpose whether the plaintiff be a poor man who can ill afford to bear the costs, or whether he be a substantial corporation, and the same applies to the defendant. I think that parties, whether they be rich or poor, are entitled to expect that their solicitors will act with all proper diligence to protect their interests. I entirely accept the view that, if there be a small or accidental error, it would not be right to penalise the solicitors. It would be right to look on the extra costs as one of the misfortunes which may arise in the course of litigation and parties must be prepared to meet them themselves.

In my judgment, it ought to have been apparent to anybody that the present case was not a proper one for the short non-jury list. It strikes me as at least a four days case. Between that and four hours is not a small margin of error, and moreover, as I have said, it is not the type of case that normally goes into the short non-jury list. One can understand a running-down case finding its way into the short non-jury list and those concerned in it being taken by surprise by some feature of it which gives it an extra length, but the present is not that sort of case at all.

There is really no difficulty about solicitors making the necessary arrangements provided they are alive to their duty in the matter. Their proper course, in any case which is doubtful, is to take the opinion of counsel, and obtain from him what is his estimate of the length of the case. The time has come when one must enforce these rules strictly and see that the costs fall where the blame lies. Therefore, I think that I should make an order that the parties on both sides should not have to pay the costs thrown away as the result of the adjournment and transference of this case, but that they should be borne by the solicitors personally.

I next have to consider in what proportions those costs should be borne, or whether I should allow them to lie as they fall. It is suggested that the main blame ought to be put on the solicitors for the plaintiff because it was they who gave the original estimate of four hours and the plaintiff is sometimes said to be the person in charge of the case. I do not think that that ought to weigh with me. I think it ought to have been apparent to the defendant's solicitors at a very early stage that four hours was a quite inadequate estimate. The argument that counsel for the defendants addressed to me—that they were entitled to assume that the plaintiff's case would fall within a very short compass—was plausible rather than sound. I do not think any solicitor, if he had seen the pleadings, would have made any such assumption. He would have thought that the plaintiff's solicitors had not given any proper thought to the matter; that is the assumption which ought to have been made.

The rule puts the matter fairly and clearly on both parties. That, I think, is what is intended. It is the duty of solicitors in these matters to co-operate and work together so that the convenience of the court and public business may be attended to properly. I cannot distinguish between them. It might well have been that in the circumstances the defendants' solicitors would have discharged their duty by calling the attention of the plaintiff's solicitors to the situation which had arisen. I express no opinion on the matter. It might be said that the defendants' solicitors ought to have taken the initiative in the action. I do not know. The blunt truth is that both sides allowed matters to drift and did not give any thought to the length of the case as the rule requires. Both sides are to blame. I shall make no apportionment as to costs. There will be no order as to costs as between party and party, but I shall order in each case that the costs of each party thrown away as the result of this adjournment be discharged personally by the solicitors.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Arnold Carter & Co. (for the plaintiffs); L. Bingham & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

LANE v. LANE.

COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Jenkins and Hodson, L.J.J.), December 10, 11, 12, 20, 1951.]

Justices—Desertion—Evidence—Notes of proceedings on earlier summons.

APPEAL by the husband from a decision of the Divisional Court dated Apr. 18, 1951, affirming an order of Bradford (Yorkshire) justices dated Nov. 6, 1950, whereby they found that the husband had deserted his wife and ordered him to pay maintenance of £2 a week.

The parties were married on Dec. 21, 1946. On Apr. 28, 1950, the wife left her husband, and the justices found that, in view of his conduct, he had been guilty of constructive desertion and made a maintenance order against him. On Oct. 8, 1950, at the instance of the wife, the parties resumed cohabitation, but there were differences between them, and eight days later the wife again left the husband and took out a summons alleging desertion. On the hearing of this summons the justices made the order which was the subject of the present appeal. The justices on this occasion were not the same as those adjudicating on the first appeal, and there was no cross-examination as to what took place when the first order was made. Before the Divisional Court the notes of the first hearing were considered by the court as forming part of the history of the case. On appeal four points were taken: (i) Did the husband's conduct amount to constructive desertion? (ii) Was the Divisional Court entitled to look at the notes of the previous proceedings between the parties although they were not in evidence before the justices? (iii) Was the doctrine of condonation and revival applicable to desertion so that conduct falling short of what would be required to prove desertion originally might be sufficient to revive condoned desertion? (iv) Was the amount payable under the order too high?

The Court of Appeal (JENKINS, L.J., dissentiente) held on the facts that the justices were entitled to find that the husband's conduct amounted to constructive desertion and that they had not erred in principle in the amount of maintenance ordered.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Beard v. Beard, [1945] 2 All E.R. 306; [1946] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 33; 174 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Blandford v. Blandford, (1883), 8 P.D. 19; 52 L.J.P. 17; 48 L.T. 238; 27 Digest 338, 3175.
- (3) Paine v. Paine, [1903] P. 263; 73 L.J.P. 1; 89 L.T. 588; 27 Digest 347, 3285.
- (4) Buchler v. Buchler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 319; [1947] P. 25; [1947] L.J.R. 820; 176 L.T. 341; 111 J.P. 179; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Pew v. Pew, (unreported), Jan. 30, 1951.
- (6) Mummery v. Mummery, [1942] 1 All E.R. 553; [1942] P. 107; 111 L.J.P. 58; 166 L.T. 343; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Cobb v. Cobb, [1900] P. 145, 294; 69 L.J.P. 52; 82 L.T. 626; 64 J.P. 200; 27 Digest 563, 6201.
- (8) Stibbe v. Stibbe, [1931] P. 105; 100 L.J.P. 82; 144 L.T. 742; Digest Supp.
- (9) Sherwood v. Sherwood, [1928] P. 215; affd. C.A., [1929] P. 120; 98 L.J.P. 66; 140 L.T. 230; Digest Supp.

Simon, K.C., and B. Garland for the husband.

Wyndale, K.C., and Hazel for the wife.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. SOMERVELL, L.J., dealing with the notes of the first hearing said that in a case like the present when there had been a resumption of cohabitation and a second separation of the parties, the reasons which led to the previous desertion might be of vital importance. If, for example, a wife had been driven out on the first occasion by repetition over a period of time of a course of conduct, whether physical or verbal, a resumption of cohabitation, if the offending spouse was genuine, must clearly be on the basis that he or she would abstain from renewing that course of conduct. With that history, any real indication, though over a very short period of time, that the offending spouse was going to behave as before might result in his being guilty of constructive desertion, although his present conduct alone, without evidence of the past history of the case would be insufficient to establish such desertion. It was not that proof of a lesser matrimonial offence was sufficient in the sense in which it was said in Beard v. Beard (1) that matrimonial misconduct short of a matrimonial offence could revive a condoned offence, but that the significance of the present acts was affected by what had gone before. The matter should, therefore, be considered on the basis that the notes of the first hearing were available material. Like all such notes, they must be treated with caution. They were not transcripts, nor was it right to assume that any particular fact deposed to in favour of the successful party was necessarily accepted by the justices.

HODSON, L.J., said that, although desertion as a complete offence under the law as it existed before 1937 was capable of condonation and revival—compare Blandford v. Blandford (2), where adultery and desertion for two years were condoned and held to be revived by subsequent adultery, and Paine v. Paine (3), where the same decision was reached in a case of desertion created by failure to comply with a decree of restitution of conjugal rights—yet a current period of desertion was on a different footing since it could be determined at any time by the return of the offending spouse and the deserted spouse had, at least in the case of simple desertion, no alternative but to receive the deserter. The question in such a case was not primarily one of condonation, but whether the desertion had been terminated, either by a resumption of cohabitation involving a bilateral act, or by the deserted spouse refusing to receive his or her partner, thereby turning himself or herself into the deserter. Conduct could always be looked at in the light of past history which threw light on it, and acts of minor significance in themselves, in the light of past history, might be of serious import. In the present case, the conduct of the husband during and after a resumption of cohabitation could be looked at in the light of his previous desertion to enable the court to form a judgment whether such conduct amounted to constructive desertion. It was only in this way that he (HIS LORDSHIP) would draw any distinction between acts of greater and those of less significance in connection with the origination of a fresh period of desertion.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Ward, Bowie & Co., agents for A. V. Hammond & Co., Bradford (for the husband); Young, Jones & Co., agents for James A. Lee & Priestley, Bradford (for the wife).

J.D.P.

NOTE.UNITED MILLS AGENCIES, LTD. v. R. E. HARVEY, BRAY & CO.

Q.B. DIVISION (McNair, J.), December 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 21, 1951.]

Insurance—Broker's duty—Delay in forwarding cover note to insured—No cover obtained against loss sustained before cover note received.

ACTION for damages for negligence.

The insured, the plaintiffs in the action, on Mar. 30, 1951, instructed the defendants, who were insurance brokers, to effect an open marine insurance of the insured's goods, obtaining immediate cover. On Apr. 2 the brokers reported rates quoted to the insured and on their acceptance by the insured informed him that the cover was placed. On Apr. 4 the brokers dispatched the cover note to the insured. It did not contain any clause relating to attachment of the goods while goods were at packers, such clause not being a usual one, though also an unusual one, in an open cover. On the night of Apr. 4-5 goods of the insured of the value of £8,000 were destroyed by a fire at a warehouse at Gomersal, Leeds, of the packers, LEP Transport, who were holding them on behalf of the insured. The insured alleged that the brokers were negligent in failing to effect an insurance of the goods while at packers when so instructed, or, alternatively, in failing to advise the insured that the insurance did not cover goods in the hands of packers at insured's risk after having had clear notice that the insured had goods in that situation. They also submitted that the brokers were negligent in that they delayed in sending them a copy of the cover note for some days after the insurance had been placed, thereby depriving the insured of the opportunity of examining it and seeing whether it complied with his requirements. The insurers said that, if the cover note had been sent in due time, they would have had the opportunity of ascertaining that it did not cover the goods in the circumstances which existed. The insurance brokers denied negligence.

Mocatta, K.C., and Megaw for the plaintiffs.

Cott Cairns, K.C., and E. W. Roskill for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21. McNAIR, J., found that the insurance brokers had no knowledge that the goods in the hands of packers were uninsured and that they were negligent in not insuring them in the hands of packers or in not informing the insured that they had not so insured them. The insured contended that it was the duty of the brokers to cause the insured to be notified promptly of all the facts as soon as they had arranged the insurance and that there had been a failure on the part of the brokers to do so. Evidence had been called from an independent broker—and substantially agreed to by the defendant brokers' witness—that it was the practice of, at any rate, those two offices of insurance brokers (and he (HIS LORDSHIP) had no doubt the practice of brokers as a whole) that when cover had been placed the clients were notified as soon as possible. That seemed to be good business and prudent office management, but the evidence he (HIS LORDSHIP) was completely unable to hold that it was a failure of the duty owed by the broker to the client so to notify him, in the sense that a failure to do so would involve him in legal liability. No case was cited in which any broker had ever been held liable or had ever paid any client money in respect of such a failure. It seemed to him (HIS LORDSHIP) to put an intolerable and unreasonable burden on a broker to say that as a matter of law, apart from the usual practice, he was bound to forward the cover note as soon as possible.

It was, no doubt, prudent to do so, both to allay the client's anxiety and possibly to enable the client to check the terms of insurance, but that was very different from saying it was part of the broker's duty. He (HIS LORDSHIP) doubted whether, even if the cover had been in the insured's hands on Apr. 3, action appropriate to the circumstances would have been taken, but he did not found his judgment on that point because he was left in very considerable doubt on it. The insured failed on whichever of the three alternative ways they put their case, and there must be judgment for the brokers with costs.

Solicitors: Coward, Chance & Co. (for the insured); Ince, Roscoe, Wilson & Griggs (for the brokers).

F.A.A.

ABBOTT v. SULLIVAN AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Denning and Morris, L.JJ.), November 12, 13, 14, 15, December 20, 1951.]

Domestic Tribunal—Excess of jurisdiction—Absence of malice—Liability for damage caused by ultra vires acts.

The plaintiff, a corn porter employed in the London docks, was a member of a committee formed to protect the interests of corn porters. By custom the committee had disciplinary powers to enforce the observance of its working rules, and no man could act as a corn porter in the Port of London unless he was on a register controlled and kept by the committee. The plaintiff, who was a ganger in charge of twelve corn porters, was summoned to attend a meeting of the committee convened by one, P., a divisional officer of the trade union to which the corn porters belonged, following a complaint against the plaintiff by certain members of his gang. At the meeting, at which P. was present in an advisory capacity, the plaintiff was fined. Immediately after the meeting the plaintiff struck P. who, thereupon, convened an emergency meeting of the committee. At this meeting the committee resolved that the plaintiff's name should be removed from the register of corn porters. In an action by the plaintiff against, inter alia, two members of the committee for damages for wrongfully removing him from the register and against P. for procuring that removal, it was held that the resolution was ultra vires the committee and was invalid, but that the defendants had not been actuated by malice or wrong motive. On the question of damages,

HELD (DENNING, L.J., dissentiente): in the absence of malice, the fact that the defendants acted beyond their powers did not provide the foundation for any action in tort, nor could any contract be implied between the plaintiff and the committee that they would do no acts which were ultra vires, and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to damages either from these members or from P.

Weinberger v. Inglis (No. 2) ([1919] A.C. 606) and McMillan v. Free Church of Scotland (1861) (23 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 1314), distinguished.

AS TO CONCLUSIVENESS OF DECISIONS OF DOMESTIC TRIBUNALS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, p. 451, para. 510; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 238, 239, Nos. 676-683.

es referred to:

- 1) Maclean v. Workers' Union, [1929] 1 Ch. 602; 43 Digest 101, 1046.
- 2) Weinberger v. Inglis (No. 2), [1918] 1 Ch. 517; 87 L.J.Ch. 345; 118 L.T. 769; affd. H.L. [1919] A.C. 606; 42 Digest 790, 14.
- 3) McMillan v. Free Church of Scotland, (1861), 23 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.), 1314.
- 4) Bagg's Case, (1615), 11 Co. Rep. 93b; 77 E.R. 1271; 33 Digest 92, 624.
- 5) Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain & Ireland, [1903] 2 K.B. 600; 72 L.J.K.B. 907; 89 L.T. 386; 43 Digest 118, 1226.
- 6) Mogul S.S. Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 598; 58 L.J.Q.B. 465; 61 L.T. 820; 53 J.P. 709; 42 Digest 968, 6.
- 7) Terry v. Huntington, (1668), Hard. 480; 145 E.R. 557; 38 Digest 84, 613.
- 8) Marshalsea Case, (1612), 10 Co. Rep. 68b; 77 E.R. 1027; sub nom. Hall v. Stanley, 2 Brownl. 125; 123 E.R. 852; 38 Digest 68, 448.
- 9) Gwinne v. Poole, (1692), 2 Lut. 935, App. 1560; 125 E.R. 522, 858; 38 Digest 69, 450.
- 10) Calder v. Halket, (1839-40), 3 Moo. P.C.C. 28; 2 Moo. Ind. App. 293; 4 State Tr. N.S. 481; 13 E.R. 12; 38 Digest 84, 615.
- 11) Houlden v. Smith, (1850), 14 Q.B. 841; 19 L.J.Q.B. 170; 15 L.T.O.S. 64; 14 J.P. 687; 117 E.R. 323; 38 Digest 84, 616.
- 12) Bonham's Case, (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 114a; 77 E.R. 646; 38 Digest 80, 578.
- 13) Nichols v. Walker & Carter, (1635), Cro. Car. 394; 79 E.R. 944; 18 Digest 399, 1403.
- 14) Philips v. Bury, (1696), Carth. 180 (90 E.R. 709); Comb. 265, 314 (90 E.R. 468, 499); Holt K.B. 715 (90 E.R. 1294); 1 Ld. Raym. 5 (91 E.R. 900); Skin. 447 (90 E.R. 212); 2 Term Rep. 346 (100 E.R. 186); 4 Mod. Rep. 106 (87 E.R. 289); 1 Show. K.B. 360 (89 E.R. 624); 21 Digest 238, 676.
- 15) Baird v. Wells, (1890), 44 Ch.D. 661; 59 L.J.Ch. 673; 63 L.T. 312; 8 Digest 512, 39.
- 16) Young v. Ladies' Imperial Club, [1920] 2 K.B. 523; 89 L.J.K.B. 563; 123 L.T. 191; 8 Digest 509, 25.
- 17) Forbes v. Eden, (1867), L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 568; 8 Digest 506, 9.
- 18) Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Veitch, [1942] 1 All E.R. 142; [1942] A.C. 435; 111 L.J.P.C. 17; 166 L.T. 172; 2nd Digest Supp.
- 19) Boots v. Grundy, (1900), 82 L.T. 769; 43 Digest 117, 1217.
- 20) South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., [1905] A.C. 239; 74 L.J.K.B. 525; 92 L.T. 710; 43 Digest 114, 1186.
- 21) Brimelow v. Casson, [1924] 1 Ch. 302; 93 L.J.Ch. 256; 130 L.T. 725; 43 Digest 115, 1194.
- 22) M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.
- 23) Rigby v. Connol, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 482; 49 L.J.Ch. 328; 42 L.T. 139; 8 Digest 512, 38.
- 24) Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A.C. 87; 79 L.J.Ch. 87; 101 L.T. 787; affg. S.C. sub nom. Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163; subsequent proceedings, [1911] 1 Ch. 540; 43 Digest 93, 963.
- 25) Leeson v. General Council of Medical Education & Registration, (1889), 43 Ch.D. 366; 59 L.J.Ch. 233; 61 L.T. 849; 34 Digest 544, 30.
- 26) Dawkins v. Antrobus, (1881), 17 Ch.D. 615; 44 L.T. 557; 8 Digest 507, 18.

APPEAL by the plaintiff and CROSS-APPEAL by the defendants from an order of the COURT OF APPEAL, made on Mar. 9, 1951.

The plaintiff, a corn porter and ganger in the London docks, claimed against the first defendant, one Sullivan, and the second defendant, one Isett, two members of the Overside Corn Porters' Committee, a committee formed to safeguard the interests of porters unloading grain from ships at the docks; the third defendant, the Transport and General Workers' Union; the fourth defendant, one Platt, a divisional officer of that union; and the fifth defendant, the Port of London Authority; inter alia, (i) that a resolution passed by the committee on Sept. 24, 1947, was invalid, (ii) damages for the wrongful removal of the plaintiff's name from the register of corn porters, and (iii) an injunction restraining the first four defendants from continuing to act on the resolution of Sept. 24 and a further resolution of July 12, 1948. The committee, of which the plaintiff was a member, consisted of nine members with whom rested the decision whether or not a man should be accepted and placed on the register of corn porters. No man could act as a corn porter in the Port of London unless he was accepted by the committee, and, on acceptance, he agreed to submit to the jurisdiction of the committee and to observe the Corn Porters' Working Rules. Failure to observe the rules involved liability to a fine. The committee was connected with the Transport and General Workers' Union, to which all corn porters belonged, and a divisional officer of the union convened the meetings of the committee and advised them in their deliberations, but the committee was not a committee of that union. On Sept. 15, 1947, following a complaint against the plaintiff by six members of his gang, the fourth defendant convened a meeting of the committee to consider the complaint. Notice was given to the plaintiff charging him with failing to man up to strength and going to work short-handed. On Sept. 18, 1947, the plaintiff attended before the committee, who sat with the fourth defendant to advise them. In the result the committee fined the plaintiff. After the meeting, the plaintiff followed the fourth defendant into the street and struck him. The fourth defendant then convened an emergency meeting of the committee. The plaintiff, as a member of the committee, received a copy of the notice of the meeting, and he wrote to the fourth defendant apologising for the incident on Sept. 18 and protesting against the committee's assumption of jurisdiction in a matter unconnected with his work as a corn porter. On Sept. 24 the meeting, which the plaintiff did not attend, took place. The committee unanimously resolved that the plaintiff was guilty of an unwarranted and unprovoked assault on the fourth defendant, who was present, and that he (the plaintiff) should be removed from the register of corn porters. The fourth defendant reported the decision of the committee to the Port of London Authority who instructed the departments concerned that the plaintiff was no longer to be employed as a corn porter. The plaintiff paid the fine imposed on him and applied to the committee for reinstatement, but the application was refused. The plaintiff appealed to the area committee of the union who recommended that he should be reinstated on the register. On July 12, 1948, the committee resolved that the decision of the area committee should be accepted provided that the plaintiff undertook to abide by the rules and constitution of the committee. At an early stage the action against the Port of London Authority was abandoned.

CROOM-JOHNSON, J., made a number of declarations, including a declaration that the resolutions of Sept. 24, 1947, and July 12, 1948, were ultra vires. He found that all the defendants had acted bona fide and without improper motive, and dismissed the claim for damages. The plaintiff appealed against the order as to damages, and, by their cross-appeal, the first four defendants claimed that the declarations made by the learned judge should be set aside. After the decision of CROOM-JOHNSON, J., the committee applied to the Port of London Authority for the plaintiff's name to be restored to the register, and it was restored.

Turner-Samuels, K.C., and Rodgers for the plaintiff.

Gardiner, K.C., and M. R. Nicholas for the defendants.

cc. 20. The following judgments were read.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: I have had the advantage of reading the judgments about to be delivered in this case by my brethren. On some of the many matters that were debated before us they are agreed, but on the difficult question whether the first two defendants may be held liable in damages (in effect) as for breach of contract and the consequential question whether the fourth defendant may be held liable also for the tort of procuring a breach of contract by the first two defendants, the views of DENNING, L.J., and MORRIS, L.J., differ. I have reached the same conclusion on all these matters as MORRIS, L.J., but, having regard to the curious nature of the appeal and to the difficulties of certain of the matters involved, I have thought it right to express briefly my own opinion.

On the main question, namely, whether the learned judge was right in his conclusion as to the invalidity of the resolution of Sept. 24, 1947, we are all agreed. It has been made plain that the corn porters' committee, though of a long standing and composed entirely of persons who are members of the union which is the third defendant, is not a committee of the union in the sense of being part of its organisation recognised and constituted by the union rules. It has, however, throughout the period of its life entertained a jurisdiction particularly in regard to working rules over those members of the union who are entitled to call themselves overside corn porters and who, as such, enjoy a somewhat privileged position. In the circumstances it is, in my judgment, plain that its jurisdiction must be founded on a contract express or implied mutually entered into and binding on all those who enjoy the privileges being accepted into the ranks of the corn porters. But its rules and organisation are nowhere found in any written constitution. Its jurisdiction being, then, challenged in the present case, the onus lay on those defendants who asserted the validity of its transactions, and, particularly, on the first two defendants, who, for some reason best known to the plaintiff, were selected out of the total number of the corn porters' committee other than himself, and on the fourth defendant, Platt, to prove the contract which would support the necessary jurisdiction. I agree with the learned judge that the relevant defendants failed to do so in the present case. It may well be that the obscurity of the pleadings concealed what was the vital issue which had to be proved, and that on some other occasion, or in some other case, more extensive evidence would be forthcoming. The matter was, however, clearly fought and tried out in the court below, and in the circumstances the learned judge arrived at the conclusion, as I think, rightly, that the necessary contractual foundation for what had been done had not been established. Indeed, the only evidence directly bearing on the point, namely, that of the plaintiff, was to the effect that the committee did not have, and had never assumed to have, jurisdiction to take disciplinary action as a result of an allegation of a common assault in the street on a trade union official. The result is fatal to the substance of the cross-appeal.

I prefer myself to express no concluded opinion on the alternative ground on which the learned judge based his conclusion of the invalidity of the resolution, namely, that the committee, while purporting to exercise a judicial or quasi-judicial function, had disregarded one of the so-called principles of natural justice in that they failed to give to the plaintiff any proper notice of the case in which he was being called on to meet. It is not open to doubt that the letter by which alone the plaintiff was informed of the summoning of the meeting of Sept. 24, 1947, contained no information of the nature of the charge that was being made against him, or, indeed, that any charge was being so made. On the other hand, it is clearly shown that the plaintiff was, in fact, well aware of the nature of the charge and of the fact that the meeting was being summoned for the purpose of considering what, if any, disciplinary measures should be taken against him, for the plaintiff thereupon challenged the committee's jurisdiction and abstained from attendance. The principles of natural justice are easy to proclaim, but their precise extent is far less easy to define. They came under the consideration of MAUGHAM, J., in Maclean v. Workers' Union (1), and a useful note on them is to be found in the final report of the COMMITTEE ON MINISTERS' POWERS known as the DONOUGHMORE COMMITTEE of 1932 (Cmd. 4060) at pp. 75-80. Where some person or body of persons exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions disregards any of the principles of natural justice which our courts recognise, the court will interfere to protect the party aggrieved. It is, however, equally clear that in giving effect to these principles no particular procedure has to be followed. Though I do not, therefore, dissent in the present case from the conclusion arrived at by CROOM-JOHNSON, J., I prefer on this aspect of the matter to express no concluded view of my own.

I turn, accordingly, to the appeal, and first, as regards the injunction claimed, it is plain that the question here involved is academic. I agree with my brethren that there is no case made out for the grant of any injunction now. There remains the most difficult matter of all, the question whether the plaintiff, who has, undoubtedly, suffered considerably in consequence of the resolution of Sept. 24, 1947, can make good a claim for an order for assessing damages against the first two defendants for breach of contract and, if so, whether he can further proceed to justify an order for an inquiry as to damages against the fourth defendant, Platt, for the tort of procuring the breach of contract by the first two defendants.

The first essential for the plaintiff is plainly for him to make good if he can his claim against the first two defendants, for, unless that claim is made good, the claim against the fourth defendant necessarily falls to the ground, and, in my view, the first answer to the essential claim is, that it is nowhere pleaded. From what I have already said it is plain that the claim, if claim there be, must rest on a contract, either express or implied, made (as I assume) by every corn porter with each member, severally, of the committee, which was broken by the passing by the committee and the carrying into effect by Platt of the resolution of Sept. 24, 1947. At no point in the long and much amended statement of claim can I find the slightest hint of any such claim. The contractual term alleged to be broken would require careful formulation. Is it suggested to be to the effect that a man once received into the company of corn porters should not thereafter be excluded by the committee from the company save for breach by him of some specified rules? Is it, more generally, that the committee would not, having knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of all material facts, purport to act beyond their proper (that is, contractual) jurisdiction? Nor can I agree that there is such a pleading of the essential facts that, coupled with a general claim to damages, should enable or entitle the court to deal with the point now raised. The only suggested claim for damages for breach of contract, as I understand the pleadings, is based on a wholly different matter, namely, an alleged promise made by the union to the effect that, if the plaintiff paid the sums awarded against him on Sept. 18, 1947, they would procure his unqualified reinstatement in his former position. In my judgment, this is not a case in which it would be right for the court at this stage to entertain an entirely new point of this character. If the statement of claim had intimated an allegation of the character which I have attempted to define and, more particularly, had coupled with it an allegation against the fourth defendant, Platt, that he had wrongfully procured a breach of such a contract, it is by no means clear to me that the trial would not in material respects have taken a different course. For example, I think it might well have been that a much greater body of evidence would have been given as regards what exactly did occur at the meeting of Sept. 24, 1947. As it is, though the learned judge has intimated a view that the members of the committee on that occasion were acting in some degree under the influence of the fourth defendant, he has wholly absolved the fourth defendant from any suggestion that he acted at any stage under the influence of malice or other improper

It is, unfortunately, the not uncommon experience of human affairs that the greatest disasters and troubles flow from the actions of men acting on the best possible motives. But I am far from satisfied that in any circumstances there is any evidence which would justify this court in holding that the defendant, in any ordinary acceptance of that phrase, "procured" the resolution by the members of the corn porters' committee on the occasion in question by such express or implied contract as I have attempted to define. It is, of course, a sufficient answer to the case. But the court is naturally and properly somewhat reluctant to decline on the grounds of a defective pleading to ascertain what might appear to be a legitimate claim on the part of someone who has suffered real injury. No authority was cited to us in the course of the argument that in the case of a body such as the corn porters' committee there should be imported a contractual term of the character and to the effect that I have stated. I am not, for my part, satisfied that any such contractual term, as I have indicated, binding on each member of the committee of corn porters, could be inferred from the facts proved in the present case. On the more legal aspect of the matter I should wish to hear full argument. I am not satisfied that in the case of a body such as that under discussion any relevant or legal analogy can be found by reference to tribunals established by statute and having a limited jurisdiction conferred on them by statute, or by reference to voluntary or dietary clubs. In the former class of case it appears logically to follow that the limits of jurisdiction set by Parliament negative any wider powers, so that, when a tribunal (subject to certain qualifications) acts beyond the powers conferred, its members will be liable for the consequences under the ordinary law, normally in an action for the independent tort committed. In the case of voluntary or dietary clubs, it may well be easy and proper to infer that a man, once admitted to membership, shall not be excluded by the owner save under or in accordance with the rules of the club. To my mind, Weinberger v. Inglis (No. 2) cited by DENNING, L.J.) is so far removed, on its essential facts and as regards the question to be decided, from the present case that the observations made by DENNING, L.J., from the judgment do not form a sufficiently reliable or authoritative guide on the present matter, and I think the same observations apply to the Scottish case of McMillan v. Free Church of Scotland (3). In my judgment, therefore, the plaintiff has failed to allege or establish by the evidence in the case that he has any cause of action for damages against the first two defendants for participating in the resolution which was, in truth, beyond their powers to pass. It follows that his claim for damages against the fourth defendant for procuring an alleged breach of contract necessarily fails also. The result of the whole matter, in my judgment, is that both the appeal and the cross-appeal fail save to the limited extent that on the cross-appeal the first two defendants are, in my judgment, entitled to have incorporated in the order of dismissal of the action against them in so far as it extended to claims for libel, libel, conspiracy, and procuring the wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff.

DENNING, L.J., stated the facts, held that the resolution of Sept. 24 ultra vires the committee (citing Bagg's Case (4) in support of his decision), continued: I now come to the question: Is the plaintiff entitled to damages for the ultra vires action of the committee? The judge thought not. He said he could not see any legal peg on which to hang an award of damages. I should like to try to think that, if a wrong has been done, the plaintiff is to go without a remedy simply because no one can find a peg to hang it on. That would be a regression to the days when a man's rights depended on whether he could fit his case into a prescribed form of action, whereas in these days the principle is applied that where there is a right there should be a remedy. It has been said by high authority that it is an actionable wrong for any man intentionally to injure another without just cause or excuse: Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain & Ireland (5) ([1903] 2 K.B. 620), per ROMER, L.J.; Mogul S.S. Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (6) (23 Q.B.D. 613), per BOWEN, L.J. If this is correct, there can be no doubt that the conduct of the corn porters' committee and Mr. Platt was an actionable wrong, for they intended to deprive the plaintiff of his livelihood, they succeeded in doing so, and they had no just cause or excuse for their action, because they should have known it was ultra vires. But I do not think that this wide proposition has yet been accepted into our law. There is, however, a narrower proposition which does seem to me to fit the case. It is this, that if the members of a tribunal take it on themselves to punish a man for real or supposed wrongdoing when they know or have the means of knowing that they have no jurisdiction in that behalf, then they are liable to him for any damage so caused even though they were not actuated by malice. But if it is a case where, on the facts as known to them, they did have jurisdiction, then they are not liable for the erroneous exercise of that jurisdiction, at any rate not unless they were actuated by malice. The form of remedy varies. In the case of statutory tribunals which depend for their jurisdiction on a statute, it is an actionable wrong for them to usurp more than the statute gives them. In the case of domestic tribunals which depend for their jurisdiction on a contract, express or implied, it is an actionable breach of contract for them to usurp more than the contract gives them. The reason in each case is the same, namely, an express grant of jurisdiction carries with it an implied prohibition of other jurisdiction. SIR MATTHEW HALE, C.B., put it very succinctly in Terry v. Huntington (7), a case of a statutory tribunal. The commissioners of excise had adjudged some low wines to be strong wines. In so doing they went outside their jurisdiction and were held liable in damages. SIR MATTHEW HALE said (Hard. 483):

" . . . the matter here is not within their jurisdiction, which is a stinted, limited jurisdiction; and that implies a negative, viz., that they shall not proceed at all in other cases. But if they should commit a mistake in a thing that were within their power, that would not be examinable here."

Let me first make good the principle in the case of statutory tribunals. If they fine or imprison a man without any jurisdiction to do so, their conduct is an actionable wrong. No matter that they act in good faith, nevertheless if, on the facts as known to them, they have no jurisdiction in law to deal with the case at all—as distinct from acting erroneously within their jurisdiction—they are liable in damages: see Marshalsea Case (8); Gwinne v. Poole (9); Calder v. Halket (10); BULLEN & LEAKE'S PLEADING AND PRACTICE, 3rd edn., p. 345. A mistake of law does not excuse them: Houlden v. Smith (11). The remedy in such cases is, as a rule, one of the recognised actions of tort. If an inferior tribunal imprisons a man without any jurisdiction in that behalf, the members of the tribunal are liable in trespass for false imprisonment: Bonham's Case (12), where the College of Physicians had imprisoned Dr. Bonham. If they levy a fine on his goods without any jurisdiction they are liable in trespass to goods or trover: Terry v. Huntington (7) (commissioners of excise levying a fine); Nichols v. Walker & Carter (13) (justices distraining for rates). But it sometimes is not an action of tort, but an action for restitution. If a man who is unlawfully fined should pay the fine under threat of distress without waiting for his goods to be taken, he could recover the amount in an action for money had and received. These cases all show that an invalid usurpation of jurisdiction which causes damage is itself a wrong. The form of action depends on the nature of the damage. But suppose the damage takes a different form from the old forms of fine or imprisonment. Suppose it takes the form of depriving a man of his livelihood, as by disqualifying him from driving a motor car, does that mean he has no remedy? It would be strange if the law could not adapt its remedies to such situation where the wrong is the same but only the damage is different. SIR RAYMOND SALMOND thought it could, and he is no mean authority. He said in SALMOND ON THE LAW OF TORTS, 10th ed., p. 616 :

"A judge of an inferior court is civilly liable for an act done by him in excess of his jurisdiction and in the nature of a trespass against the person or property of the plaintiff or otherwise a cause of damage to him."

Let me next make good the principle in the case of domestic tribunals. The case is the celebrated case where the Visitor of Exeter College, Oxford, dismissed the rector of the college from his post as rector for being contumacious: Wips v. Bury (14). The Court of King's Bench presided over by HOLT, C.J., applied the self-same principles as in the case of statutory tribunals. There was a difference of opinion as to the application of the principles to that case, but there is no difference as to the principles themselves. They were well stated by WELLS, B., in his elaborate judgment in Gwinne v. Poole (9) (2 Lut. 1566):

"Where the founder of an eleemosynary foundation appoints a visitor and limits his jurisdiction by rules and regulations, then if the visitor in any sentence exceeds those rules, an action lies against him, as was agreed not only by all the justices but also by the Chief Justice himself [HOLT, C.J.] in the case of Exeter College; but it would be otherwise if he made a mistake in a thing within his power . . ."

The cases on proprietary clubs have proceeded on the same principle. The rules of those clubs often contain express provisions giving the committee jurisdiction to expel a member in certain circumstances. The courts have held that there is an implied contract between the proprietor and each member that the committee will not act outside its jurisdiction. Accordingly, if the committee act without jurisdiction or without giving proper notice (which means no jurisdiction), the proprietor is liable in damages. Even if the member has suffered no damage in fact, he is at least entitled to nominal damages for the breach: see Ord v. Wells (15); Young v. Ladies' Imperial Club (16).

There is no reason why the same principle should not apply to voluntary associations. If the committee of a voluntary association only gain jurisdiction by reason of a contract, express or implied, to give it to them, there surely must be an implied a contract that they will not take away a member's property or deprive him of his livelihood when they know, or have the means of knowing, that they have no jurisdiction in that behalf. The only English case in which we have found the matter discussed is Weinberger v. Inglis (No. 2) (2), where the committee of the Stock Exchange—a voluntary association—refused to re-elect a member because he was of German birth. The rules and regulations of the Stock Exchange contained a provision for members to be re-elected each year. Both LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., and BANKES, L.J., were prepared to hold that it carried with it, not only a positive implication that his re-election was to be properly considered, but also the negative implication that he was not to be elected without proper notice of the charge. LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., said [1919] A.C. 616):

" . . . if I took the view that the appellant was condemned upon grounds never brought to his notice, I should not assent to the legality of this course, unless compelled by authority."

I agree with SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., that that case does not take us very far, but there are two Scottish cases which, so I think, support the view we have presented. The first is McMillan v. Free Church of Scotland (3). There a minister of the Free Church—which is a voluntary association exercising a consensual jurisdiction over its members—was suspended because he was said on one occasion to have drunk a little too much and, in his consequent excitement, seduced a married woman. He challenged the decision in the courts. Thereupon, without any notice to him, the assembly deprived him of his office as a minister.

He alleged that this action of the members of the assembly was ultra vires and brought a claim for damages. The members demurred to the claim on the ground that it disclosed no cause of action, but the Court of Session held that the claim was competent on the ground that an ultra vires usurpation of jurisdiction was a breach of contract. They did not decide whether there was a breach, because that depended on the scope of the agreement and would have to be decided at the trial, but they were clearly of opinion that, unless the contract conferred on the assembly jurisdiction to do what they did, they were liable in damages. The Lord President (LORD M'NEILL) said (23 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 1330):

" . . . he [the Minister] says that, by a violation of the contract, and not by the exercise of the powers which he committed to these parties, they have disqualified and disabled him from fulfilling certain duties, and that they have inflicted serious wrong upon him by injuring his character, and destroying his usefulness and his ability in future to do good for himself. Well, I cannot doubt that damages may be claimed, if that is the result of a departure from the agreement between the parties, and a violation of the conditions of the contract which existed between them."

LORD DEAS said (ibid., 1348):

" The parties who did the wrong—if a wrong was done—were all the individual members of the assembly, present at the meetings, who voted for, or tacitly adopted the resolutions or sentences complained of. Every one of these members became individually liable to make good the consequences incurred, if consequences were incurred at all, to the extent of his means and fortune."

That important decision was approved by LORD CHELMSFORD, L.C., in the House of Lords in Forbes v. Eden (17), and he accepted as correct (L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 576) a principle stated by the Lord Justice-Clerk (LORD INGLIS) in that case wide enough to embrace all cases where a person is deprived of his livelihood by an ultra vires usurpation of jurisdiction. It is this:

" The possession of a particular status, meaning by that term the capacity to perform certain functions, or to hold certain offices, is a thing which the law will recognise as a patrimonial interest; and no one can be deprived of its possession by the unauthorised or illegal act of another without having a legal remedy."

In my opinion, that principle is as much the law of England as of Scotland. The right of a man to work is just as important to him as, if not more important than, his rights of property. We see in our day many powerful associations which exercise great powers over the rights of their members to work. They have a monopoly in important fields of human activity. A wrongful dismissal by them of a member from his livelihood is just as damaging, indeed more damaging, than a wrongful dismissal by an employer of his servant, and I see no reason why it should not give rise to a cause of action. If there is no contract between the parties, the action must be laid in conspiracy, in which case a wrongful intention must be proved, though it need not be a malevolent intent. A spirit of revenge for previous real or fancied injury will do: see Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Veitch (18) ([1942] 1 All E.R. 173) in which LORD PORTER cited a dictum of PHILLIMORE, J., in Boots v. Grundy (19) (82 L.T. 773). But if, as here, there is a contract between the parties, there is no need to embark on the difficult question of wrongful intent. The only question is what is the contract, and whether there has been a breach of it. It would, I think, be going too far to say that the members of a domestic tribunal promise absolutely that they will not exceed their jurisdiction, but I do think that they promise impliedly that they will not exceed it when they know, or have the means of knowing, that they have no jurisdiction in that behalf. I see no reason why the members of a domestic tribunal should have any greater protection than the members of statutory tribunal, and if the implication which I have suggested is adopted, it will have the same protection, no more and no less.

Applying these principles, it seems quite clear that the committee in the present case had the means of knowing that they had no jurisdiction. They had the same means of knowing that the plaintiff had. They knew the facts on which their jurisdiction was based as well as he did. Their mistake was a mistake of fact in thinking that they could remove a man from the register without any practical or customary jurisdiction in that behalf. In making this mistake, they relied on Mr. Platt's advice, but that does not excuse them from their responsibility to the plaintiff. A mistake of law does not excuse a statutory tribunal: Houlden v. Smith (11), and it should not excuse a domestic tribunal. There remains, however, the question whether this way of putting the claim is sufficiently pleaded. No contract is alleged between the committee and the plaintiff. I confess that I feel much difficulty on this score, which is increased by the fact that SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., and MORRIS, L.J., think the claim is not sufficiently pleaded. If this had been an ordinary case of contract, I could be prepared to regard the omission as fatal. But this is not an ordinary contract case. It is a claim in an uncharted area on the borderland of contract and tort. I can quite understand a pleader being perplexed as to the right way of putting the claim, and, in the special circumstances, I think it is one of the cases where he would be fully justified in stating the material facts without attempting to commit himself to the precise legal category in which they fall. It is all that the modern rules of pleading require: see R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 4. I think that here the material facts are sufficiently stated. The details are given in the statement of claim states that "The corn porters' committee was authorised to pass any of the said resolutions," and in the prayer damages claimed "for the wrongful removal of the plaintiff's name from the register of corn porters." Those two sentences give the gist of the case. I think they are sufficient. We all agree that the facts are sufficiently stated to enable us to make a declaration which is founded on contract, and I think we should entertain the claim for damages on that footing also, despite the lack of formulation in the statement of claim. I think, therefore, that damages should be assessed against the members of the committee for their ultra vires action in removing the plaintiff's name from the register. Only two of them were named as defendants, but the claim was said to be made against them on their own behalf and on behalf of the other members of the committee. Without a representation order, however, the action would not be good against the others.

What is the position of Mr. Platt? He was not a member of the committee and is not liable for the breach of contract as such. But he, undoubtedly, induced the committee to commit the breach. He knew that the plaintiff was challenging the jurisdiction of the committee, but, nevertheless, he advised them to proceed with the matter whereas, as the judge found, he ought to have advised them that the committee had no jurisdiction and, if it had not been his own case, he would have done so. The judge clearly thought that, if Mr. Platt had done so, the committee would not have proceeded with the case. The judge said of them:

"All I can say, having seen them, is that I would be surprised to learn that this was their own unaided independent decision and course of conduct."

The judge acquitted Mr. Platt of doing anything from a wrong motive, but he found it quite clear that he did it from a mistaken motive. On those facts I think that Mr. Platt is liable in damages, equally with the members of the committee. The law is that a person who knowingly induces another to commit a breach of contract is liable in damages, even though he is not actuated by any wrongful motive: South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co. (20); unless he can show a just cause: Brimelow v. Casson (21). On the judge's findings Mr. Platt had no just cause and is, therefore, liable. Here, again, the statement of claim does not frame the claim in its correct legal form, but the material facts are stated and that is sufficient.

Apart from the remedy in damages, has the plaintiff any other remedy? He is, no doubt, entitled to a declaration that the resolution of Sept. 24, 1947, was invalid, but is he entitled to an injunction? In cases of this kind the remedy of an injunction is used very sparingly, the reason being that the court does not use it to enforce personal relations. It will not force men to work with another man if they do not wish to do so. It will not force club members to associate with one whom they have tried to expel. It will, as a rule, only interfere by injunction in these cases to protect a right of property, as, for instance, the interest of a club member in club property. But the corn porters' committee have no property and no injunction will lie against them on that ground. An injunction might, perhaps, have gone if they had insisted that the plaintiff was not on the corn porters' register, but it appears that, since the judgment of the court below, he has, in fact, been restored to the register without conditions, so there is no need for an injunction on that score.

The plaintiff complains that he has not been restored to his position as a ganger, but this court cannot help him there. No ganger is appointed except with the approval of the branch of the trade union. The branch have refused to approve the reinstatement of the plaintiff as a ganger and this court cannot compel them to do so. I agree with the judge that no cause of action was shown against the trade union. Indeed, in the result, I agree with the judge in nearly everything. The only substantial variation I would make in his order would be to hold that the members of the committee and Mr. Platt are liable in damages. It was Mr. Platt's mistaken action which caused the plaintiff to be removed from the corn porters' register. Mr. Platt is the person chiefly responsible, and he should take the consequences. The union is not responsible for his action because it cannot be made liable in tort. It should also be made clear that the corn porters' committee is not a committee of the union nor subject to the area committee. I would, therefore, be in favour of allowing the appeal and dismissing the cross-appeal.

MORRIS, L.J.: The plaintiff by his notice of appeal claims that the judgment of the learned judge should be varied in two respects: (i) so that the plaintiff should recover damages against the first four defendants in the action and against the Committee of Registered Overside Corn Porters, and (ii) so that an injunction should be granted against the first four defendants and against the above-named committee restraining them from continuing to act on certain resolutions declared to be in whole or in part ultra vires. By their cross-appeal the first four defendants claim that the declarations made by the learned judge should be set aside. They further ask that in the respects in which various causes of action against them were dismissed at the trial there should be a formal recording of this in the judgment.

[HIS LORDSHIP held, on the evidence, that the resolution of Sept. 24, 1947, was ultra vires, and continued:] The notice of appeal invites the granting of an injunction against the first four defendants and against the corn porters' committee. The injunction sought is one to restrain the four defendants and the committee from continuing to act on the resolution of Sept. 24, 1947, declared void by the learned judge and the part declared void of the resolution of July 12, 1948. It is not said that the learned judge has refused to make any injunction which he should have made. But apart from this consideration it is not shown that the defendants are continuing to act on any void resolution. There is no substance in the appeal in regard to this matter.

I now pass to consider what is, perhaps, the most difficult part of the appeal, that is, the claim to damages. Damages cannot be awarded against the committee. It is necessary to consider whether damages should have been awarded against (a) the union, (b) Mr. Platt, and (c) Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Isett. As gards the union, it is manifest that the claims for damages for conspiracy, for libel and for procuring the wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff were destined to fail. A claim was formulated in the statement of claim for damages for breach of contract. It was said that there was an undertaking and promise made on behalf of the union that, if the plaintiff paid the sums which, on Sept. 18, 1947, had been ordered to pay he would then be reinstated in his former work. The evidence in support of any such claim was, however, wholly lacking. There was also a claim for damages for the wrongful removal of the plaintiff's name from the register. But it was not in any way shown that the union removed the name from the register. I am in agreement with the conclusions on this matter of the learned judge who said:

"the union has done nothing wrong. On the contrary, they seem to have gone out of their way to try and do the right thing. Moreover, the union is not directly responsible for the corn porters' list or anything to do with it."

Many claims were asserted against Mr. Platt. There were claims for damages for slander and libel. They soon disappeared from the case. Mr. Platt was one against whom damages for conspiracy to injure the plaintiff were claimed. The learned judge found that there was no such conspiracy. He regarded the claim as "quite hopeless." He negatived any assertion that there was malice in Mr. Platt. I see no reason to differ from any of these conclusions. Nor do I differ from the view that the claim for procuring the wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff was "quite hopeless." There remains the claim for damages for the wrongful removal of the plaintiff's name from the register. The learned judge said: "I cannot see how that is Mr. Platt's pigeon." I entirely agree. Mr. Platt was the convening officer of the corn porters' committee. He sat with them and advised them. He did not vote. Even if it were thought that he had influence with the committee it cannot be said that he had responsibility for their decision. Nor can it be said that the members were mere automata acting under his direction. Nor has this been found. Nor, in my judgment, could it have been found. The learned judge found that Mr. Platt gave wrong advice to the corn porters' committee on the subject of their jurisdiction and attributed this to the fact that, being personally concerned and being angry, he was not able to take a detached view. But beyond this the learned judge expressly exonerated Mr. Platt.

There remains for consideration the claim for damages against the first two defendants, who were two of the members of the corn porters' committee. If damages could be awarded, the matter would have to go back for assessment. Any questions would arise for consideration. It would have to be decided whether it was reasonable or unreasonable, in all the circumstances, for the plaintiff to have abstained from earning his living as a dockworker and so to have minimised his loss pending a determination of the merits of his complaints. It would also have to be decided whether some proceedings in the courts might have been earlier started or more expeditiously pursued. As to the first two defendants, there were claims for damages for conspiracy, for libel, and for procuring the wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff. All those claims either failed or were abandoned. In my judgment, they rightly failed. It was further concluded that there could and should be an award of damages "for the wrongful removal of the plaintiff's name from the register." It was pleaded that the members of the corn porters' committee acted maliciously and in bad faith. The attack on those lines failed completely. The learned judge expressed his views as follows:

"I am quite satisfied from all the evidence that in the circumstances those who were present at that meeting of the corn porters' committee embarked on this inquiry and carried it out honestly, desiring to protect the union official and desirous, I am sure, of doing justice."

Later, when considering costs, he said:

"I find great difficulty in ordering costs against two members of the corn porters' committee, who for some reason have been singled out, and whose bona fides I think are not in question."

The pleadings do not formulate the legal basis for asserting a claim for damages against the first two defendants apart from the allegation of conspiracy. In argument it was urged in general terms that these defendants had acted wrongly and should pay damages. Unless accepted principle or clear authority required the award of damages against these defendants, then the claim should fail. If in circumstances such as those now being considered members of a committee who act conscientiously and honestly, but who make mistakes, are to be liable in damages, new perils will be added to certain forms of public service. If this matter is approached on the basis that the categories of tort are not closed: see per LORD MACMILLAN in M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson (22) ([1932] A.C. 619), and that established principles are of more consequence than names or labels, yet I cannot see, on the facts as found in the present case, any warrant for awarding damages against these two defendants on the basis that they committed some actionable civil wrong. Very different considerations would have arisen if they had acted maliciously or if the ingredients of an actionable conspiracy had been present.

Counsel for the defendants submitted to us that, just as in the first instance the corn porters' committee might for no reason or for a bad reason refuse to admit a person to the circle of corn porters, so they might for no reason or for a bad reason exclude someone from the circle. Neat and attractive as this argument is, I cannot believe it to be right. It might, of course, be shown in some particular case that arbitrary and dictatorial powers were expressly vested in a committee. That was not shown here. When a man is selected to become a corn porter he becomes a member of a privileged group whose numbers are limited. The group does not own property, but to be a member of the group involves being able to earn a living in a special way. Membership is much desired and is of definite benefit because it enables a man to qualify for particular rewards for labour. Admission to the group involves either by express statement or by implication that the rules and the practices of the corn porters will be observed. Because of all these circumstances the court will, in my judgment, intervene, either by granting an injunction or by making a declaration, if someone is being excluded from the group in defiance of the rules or of the principles often referred to as those of "natural justice" and discussed in Maclean v. Workers' Union (1). I do not find it necessary in the present case to consider fully the basis of the intervention by the court. In Rigby v. Connol (23) SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., expressed the view that the jurisdiction of the court to interfere at the instance of a member of a society to prevent his being improperly expelled therefrom rested on the right of property vested in the member. FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants (24), expressed the view ([1911] 1 Ch. 562) that where a member of a voluntary association was being improperly expelled the court would not limit its intervention to cases where the property of which the member was, as a result, being unjustly deprived consisted of a beneficial interest in land or chattels. He said that there were many rights which in such a sense could not be called rights of property which, nevertheless, the law would protect. As an instance he said that there would be protection of membership of an association of men subscribing for a benevolent purpose where the administration would be under the control of the association even though the members had no beneficial interest in the funds. On the basis discussed by FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., the court is, in my judgment, on the facts of the present case entitled to intervene. No need arises to explore whether the jurisdiction of the court could alternatively be founded on some contractual is. For a valuable examination of this topic, see article by Mr. DENNIS LLOYD THE MODERN LAW REVIEW, vol. 13, p. 281.

Before I pass to consider whether any claim for damages for breach of contract be established against any of the defendants, it may be helpful to consider whether any assistance is derived by examining the position of persons exercising judicial functions in a court who exceed their jurisdiction. In general it may be said that the law gives protection from civil liability to persons exercising judicial functions in a court in respect of anything done or said by them in their judicial capacity provided that the court is acting within its jurisdiction. In some cases an issue arises as to jurisdiction and the court may have to arrive at a conclusion in regard to certain facts in order to decide whether it has jurisdiction. In such cases, even if jurisdiction is wrongly exercised, there may still be protection from civil liability unless the court knew or had the means of knowing of certain facts which put the matter outside the court's jurisdiction. Calder v. Halket (10) PARKE, B., said (3 Moo. P.C.C. 77):

" . . . and it is well settled that a judge of a court of record in England, with limited jurisdiction, or a justice of the peace, acting judicially, with a special and limited authority, is not liable to an action of trespass for acting without jurisdiction, unless he had the knowledge or means of knowledge of which he ought to have availed himself, of that which constitutes the defect of jurisdiction."

It is to be noted, therefore, that, in given conditions, the law affords protection to persons exercising judicial functions. As this topic is only introduced in order to see whether assistance by analogy can be derived it is not necessary to do more than to state the matter in general terms. But the giving of protection is only necessary where there is something from which to protect. If a man's goods are seized or if a man is imprisoned or if defamatory words are spoken or written to him there may be protection from civil liability for the persons responsible for the seizure of goods or the imprisonment or the defamation provided that the conditions for the protection exist. In Calder v. Halket (10) the claim presented was in trespass claiming damages for arrest and false imprisonment. If an act is done which in ordinary circumstances would amount to a civil wrong it may be justified as having been done pursuant to some statutory authority. In Terry v. Huntington (7) the question was whether the Commissioners of Excise had acted within their jurisdiction as laid down by statute when they levied a warrant on goods. The claim brought was in an action for trover and conversion of goods. It was clear that, if the commissioners had no authority to do so, then they would be liable for what they did to the plaintiff's goods. Similarly, in Nichols v. Walker & Carter (13), the question was whether justices of the peace had acted within their jurisdiction in assessing a poor rate. As it was held that they had not, there was no protection for officers who executed a warrant to distrain, and the plaintiff succeeded in an action for trespass based on the entry to his house and the taking of his goods.

I do not consider that the actions of the members of the corn porters' committee can be judged on the footing that they were persons exercising judicial functions in a court. Had this been possible, then the question would arise whether they had knowledge or the means of knowledge of their absence of jurisdiction. In a difficult and, perhaps, border-line case they followed the advice of the man whose function it was to give advice. As, however, the members of the corn porters' committee cannot claim any protection on the basis of being persons exercising judicial functions in a court it is, in my judgment, plain that they have no protection if, because they acted beyond their powers, they did some actionable civil wrong. I cannot see that they did. They caused the plaintiff to be excluded from their group and his name to be removed from a list which was either real or notional. Conspiracy and defamation are negatived. I can find no conduct amounting in law to an actionable civil wrong.

I pass, therefore, to consider whether the members of the corn porters' committee are liable for any breach of contract. I will approach the matter as though it were a claim against all the members of the committee. One of the great difficulties in considering this aspect of the case is that there has been no formulation of the terms of any alleged contract. There is no suggestion that there was an express contract. It is hardly appropriate that an appellate court should be left to grope for implied terms when none have been specified, but it is only right to record that counsel for the plaintiff based his claim for damages mainly, if not entirely, in tort. When someone is admitted as a corn porter he becomes as regards other corn porters in a position comparable (though with certain important differences) to that of a member of an unincorporated members' club. No case was cited to us where it was sought to hold members of the committee of a members' club liable in damages because they had acted beyond their jurisdiction in deciding to expel a member. The position may be different if a member is wrongly expelled from a proprietary club. In such a case it may be that the proprietor may be made liable for damages for breach of contract: see Baird v. Wells (15) and Young v. Ladies' Imperial Club (16). In the Scottish case of McMillan v. Free Church of Scotland (3) the decision was that the lord ordinary had been right in refusing to dismiss the action and that investigation should proceed into whether there was a contract, and, if so, what were its terms. In the present case it is not suggested that there was any express contract between the members of the committee and the various corn porters. If, therefore, some implied contract is to be extracted, it is clear that its terms must not go beyond those which must have been of common acceptance. It is not a question of deciding what terms the court would deem desirable or appropriate. I cannot think that the corn porters who became members of the committee warranted that they would not do anything which was beyond their jurisdiction, nor that they undertook not to make mistakes. If members of the committee were asked about this matter I cannot conceive that any would assent to any view which involved that they had undertaken to do more than to apply their minds honestly and conscientiously to any problem that arose. On the facts of the present case, in my judgment, it was not shown that the first two defendants broke any contract with the plaintiff when they concurred in the decision reached on Sept. 24, 1947. As it was not shown that they committed any actionable wrong, the claim for damages against them, in my judgment, rightly failed.

Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Robinson & Bradley (for the plaintiff); Pattinson & Brewer (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

REED v. GRAY.

CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), December 18, 19, 20, 21, 1951.]

Issues—Taxation—Solicitor and client—Standard to be adopted—Solicitor-plaintiff consulting London agents—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29).

A solicitor brought an action for specific performance of a contract to sell to him certain land. By his defence the defendant alleged that the sale was not genuine, but was the outcome of an unlawful conspiracy to defraud and deprive him of the real value of the premises. The case came to trial, but the defence collapsed, and the court ordered that the costs of the plaintiff be referred to the taxing master to tax as between solicitor and client.

HELD: under the order for taxation it was the duty of the taxing master (as on a taxation as between party and party) to adopt as his norm or standard the directions in R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29), but at the same time to make more generous allowances than he would in a taxation as between party and party; there was no basis for the view that, under the order made, the taxing master should tax the costs as between party and party, allowing on a more generous scale only the costs of certain letters and attendances; but the order could not be construed as an order for taxation as between solicitor and own client.

Dictum of LORD HANWORTH, M.R., in Frankenburg v. Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd. ([1931] 1 Ch. 436), applied.

Giles v. Randall ([1915] 1 K.B. 290), applied and explained.

Goodwin v. Storrar ([1947] 1 All E.R. 203), distinguished.

The plaintiff, being a solicitor practising in the country, acted for himself in the proceedings, but employed London agents. In the course of the taxation the master excluded the amounts claimed for consulting and instructing the agents and for their attendance on the plaintiff.

HELD: although a solicitor could not claim for consulting, instructing and attendance on himself, he could incur costs for such work performed by his London agents, and, therefore, such costs were allowable.

Issues—Witness fee—Married woman not gainfully employed.

The plaintiff's wife, who did not follow a gainful occupation but performed domestic duties, was a witness for the plaintiff and claimed a witness fee. The master allowed a nominal sum only.

HELD: having regard to her absence from her domestic duties, the witness was entitled to more than the amount of her disbursements and should receive a fee of more than a nominal sum.

AS TO AMOUNT AND ALLOWANCE OF COSTS AS BETWEEN SOLICITOR AND CLIENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 100-103, paras. 189-193; FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Practice, pp. 899, 900, Nos. 4397-4402.

AS REFERRED TO:

- (1) Andrews v. Barnes, (1888), 39 Ch.D. 133; 57 L.J.Ch. 694; 58 L.T. 748; 53 J.P. 4; Digest, Practice, 899, 4398.
- (2) Giles v. Randall, [1915] 1 K.B. 290; 84 L.J.K.B. 786; 112 L.T. 271; Digest, Practice, 936, 4756.
- (3) Frankenburg v. Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd., [1931] 1 Ch. 428; 100 L.J.K.B. 187; 144 L.T. 534; Digest, Practice, 948, 4878.
- (4) Palmer v. Walesby, (1868), 3 Ch. App. 732; 37 L.J.Ch. 612; 19 L.T. 1; 33 Digest 232, 1450.
- (5) Goodwin v. Storrar, [1947] 1 All E.R. 203; [1947] K.B. 457; [1947] L.J.R. 1013; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) London Scottish Benefit Society v. Chorley, (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 872; 53 L.J.Q.B. 551; 51 L.T. 100; 42 Digest 253, 2844.

COMMISSIONS to review the taxation of the costs of an action.

The relevant facts appear in the judgment and are summarised in the headnote. Russell, K.C., and A. F. M. Berkeley for the plaintiff.
F. B. Alcock for the defendant.

ROXBURGH, J.: The plaintiff, a solicitor practising in the north of England, brought this action for specific performance of a contract dated Nov. 8, 1949, made between the defendant, of the one part, and himself, of the other part, for the sale by the defendant to the plaintiff of No. 18 Norfolk Street, Sunderland, at the price of £1,600. The defence as pleaded was "that the purported contract of sale of the said premises was not a genuine or real sale by auction resulting in a contract binding upon the defendant, but the outcome of an unlawful conspiracy or arrangement between the plaintiff, one L. W. Evans, L. W. Evans (Contractors), Ltd., and one Young, the auctioneer, or some of them, and improper and fraudulent acts on the part of them or some of them to bring about the sale by the defendant of his said premises at a grossly insufficient price and much below their true value and thus to defraud and deprive the defendant of the real value of the premises and to gain some undue advantage for themselves or some or one of them. In the circumstances the said purported contract was and is not enforceable and was and is void and/or in the alternative is not one in respect of which this Honourable Court of Equity should in the exercise of its discretion grant an order for specific performance."

The case came to trial, was part heard, and then the defence collapsed. Having regard to all the circumstances, I thought that, in the exercise of the discretion which I considered myself to have on the authority of Andrews v. Barnes (1), I ought to award the plaintiff costs as between solicitor and client, and, accordingly, I made, on Nov. 16, 1950, an order that it be referred to the taxing master to tax as between solicitor and client the costs of the plaintiff of this action other than certain costs.

What is the true construction of that order? On this point Giles v. Randall (2) is the leading case and R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29), is the relevant sub-rule. Order 65, r. 27 (29) provides:

"On every taxation the taxing master shall allow all such costs, charges and expenses, as shall appear to him to have been necessary or proper for the attainment of justice or for the defending the rights of any party, but save as against the party who incurred the same no costs shall be allowed which appear to the taxing master to have been incurred or increased through over-caution, negligence or mistake or by payment of special fees to counsel or special charges or expenses to witnesses or other persons, or by other unusual expenses."

In Giles v. Randall (2) the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant to recover damages for breach of promise of marriage. When the case was in the day's list for hearing terms were agreed and indorsed on counsel's briefs "that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff for £500 with costs as between solicitor and client to be taxed (if necessary)," and, accordingly, the judgment as drawn up stated that "it is adjudged that the plaintiff recover against the defendant £500 and her costs as between solicitor and client to be taxed (if necessary)." The plaintiff's bill of costs was taxed, and the taxing master disallowed or reduced in amount a large number of items therein, such as charges for instructions for briefs and counsel's fees. The plaintiff carried in objections to the disallowances before the taxing master, which, so far as material, were as follows:

"The plaintiff objects generally to the taxation and to the disallowance of the items hereinafter mentioned on the grounds: (1) Such taxation was conducted upon the basis of a party and party taxation. (2) It ought to have been conducted upon the basis of a taxation as between solicitor and client where the costs are to be paid by the client, because the terms of settlement of the action were that the plaintiff was to receive £500 damages clear, and all the costs for which she was liable to her solicitor were to be paid by the defendant."

The taxing master in his answer thereto (so far as material) said:

"It is well settled that there are various forms of taxation as between solicitor and client. No. 1. Where the costs are payable by the client to his solicitor or where the costs are payable out of a fund belonging entirely to the party. No. 2. Where the costs are payable out of a general or common fund. No. 3. Where the costs are payable out of a fund which belongs to other parties and in which the party has no interest or where the costs are payable by one party to another. The taxation in the case of No. 3, which is the one that applies to this action, is the strictest and in effect gives little more than a taxation as between party and party, except that any necessary letters to and attendances on the client are allowed."

Those last words, which, it is to be observed, are derived from the taxing master's answers to objections and not from any judgment of any member of the court, are the linchpin of the case which I am now trying, and it is also to be observed that they purport, not to set out a norm or standard of taxation, but to state in summary form the result of a taxation on what the taxing master calls No. 3 basis. I desire to emphasise that. I cannot believe that the taxing master in that case was ignorant of r. 27 (29), or failed to realise that that was the sub-rule which supplied the norm or standard for taxations as between solicitor and client. I think he was merely stating what in his experience was the general effect of a taxation so conducted. It is noted that he used the words "in effect," and he does not say "gives no more than." He says "gives little more than." BUCKLEY, L.J., adopts the classification into three classes indicated by the taxing master. He then says ([1915] 1 K.B. 295):

"A practice has grown up, which I must say I regret, of differentiating between taxation of costs as between solicitor and client and as between solicitor and own client. In the former case the taxation is substantially a party and party taxation on a more generous scale. In the latter case there is an ascertainment and allowance of the charges properly payable by the client to his solicitor. That distinction is too firmly established for this court to interfere with it, though it may be a matter proper to be considered by the Rule Committee. I have no doubt that litigants who stipulate for and by agreement are to receive costs as between solicitor and client often intend to get an indemnity in respect of costs. The taxing master has taxed the costs upon the footing that the latter part of r. 27 (29) of Ord. 65 applies."

I desire to emphasise that. That reinforces my conclusion that the taxing master knew perfectly well that it was that sub-rule which supplied the norm or standard for taxation, and that the paragraph to which I have referred was not intended by him to be substituted for the norm or standard, but was intended to be a broad summary of the results as he had experienced them. BUCKLEY, J., proceeds to discuss the sub-rule and then he says (ibid., 296):

"The latter part [of the sub-rule] says that, except in one particular case, certain costs which were formerly to be disallowed are still to be disallowed. The excepted case is that of taxation of costs as between a solicitor and his own client. This part of the sub-rule in effect provides that as between solicitor and own client those costs may be allowed, but that in all other cases they shall not. The other cases include taxation as between solicitor and client as distinguished from taxation as between solicitor and own client. Accordingly upon such a taxation as this the costs described in the latter part of sub-r. 29 are not to be allowed. The taxing master in this case has proceeded upon that footing. He says that 'the taxation in the case of No. 3, which is the one that applies to this action, is the strictest and in effect gives little more than a taxation as between party and party, except that any necessary letters to and attendances on the client are allowed.' That is not very well expressed. 'Necessary letters to and attendances on the client' are allowed as between party and party; the letters and attendances there referred to must be letters and attendances beyond those that would be allowed as between party and party. The taxing master has taxed this bill of costs on the footing that the latter part of sub-r. 29 applies. For the reasons I have given I think that he was right. Except upon a taxation as between solicitor and own client such costs as there mentioned are not to be allowed. That is the only question of principle argued before us."

PICKFORD, L.J., agreed. He regretted that he felt bound to affirm the decision, and said that logically costs as between solicitor and client could mean only one thing, viz., such costs as were properly chargeable between a solicitor and his client and were properly payable by the client to his solicitor, but he agreed that the sub-rule did apply to a solicitor and client taxation. He made no reference to the paragraph in the taxing master's answers to which I have referred.

That case, in my judgment, decided one thing quite clearly, i.e., that the latter part of the sub-rule applies to a solicitor and client taxation with the inevitable corollary that a solicitor and client taxation cannot be assimilated to, or cannot be made identical with, a solicitor and own client taxation. In my judgment, it decided nothing else. Counsel for the defendant suggested that, as BUCKLEY, L.J., referred to the particular paragraph in the taxing master's answer and criticised it in one respect only, I ought to infer that he impliedly approved it in all other respects. First, I do not think that it was ever intended to be a pronouncement of a norm or standard. Secondly, I do not think that BUCKLEY, L.J., did approve it in all other respects, because it is not really consistent with what he himself has said. He said that in the former case, i.e., the solicitor and client taxation, the taxation is substantially a party and party taxation on a more generous scale. That must be so, because the whole of sub-r. (29) applies equally to both a party and party taxation and to a solicitor and client taxation. Therefore, the characteristics of the items which can properly be allowed must be the same in both classes of taxation. The only scope for difference is that the allowances should be on a more generous scale in one class of taxation than in the other. There is, in my judgment, no possible ground for thinking that BUCKLEY, L.J., thought that the only things that could be treated more generously were certain letters and attendances to the exclusion, for example, of counsel's fees.

Take, for example, item No. 4 in the case now before me:

"Mar. 2, 1950. Part of counsel's fee to settle affidavit in support of application under Ord. 14A. Fee claimed £3 5s. 6d. Fee allowed £2 4s. 6d."

There is no doubt whatever that the fee claimed was within the permissible category whether the taxation was on a party and party basis or on a solicitor and client basis. If the principle of a solicitor and client taxation is that more generous allowances should be given than in the case of a party and party taxation, why should that principle not extend to this particular item? According to BUCKLEY, L.J., it does. Accordingly, if £2 4s. 6d. was what would have been allowed on a party and party basis—that is merely a hypothesis—it may well be that £3 5s. 6d. is what would be allowed on a solicitor and client basis. I wish to point out the difference. If BUCKLEY, L.J.'s, definition is accepted, that is the position, but, if the final words of the taxing master in the passage I have read in Giles v. Randall (2) is accepted, that is not the position, because is not an attendance or a letter, and, therefore, according to that view, there would be substantially no difference, on this item between a party and party taxation and solicitor and client taxation. For my part, I do not think that BUCKLEY, L.J., by his reference to this particular passage and his criticism of it in one respect only, intended to imply that it was to be read as a limitation on the generality of his own phrase, which is “that a solicitor and client taxation is substantially a party and party taxation on a more generous basis.”

Contrary to my view, BUCKLEY, L.J., did intend to make that implication, as was plainly obiter dictum. He himself says that the only point of principle decided in the case was whether or not the sub-rule applied to a solicitor and client taxation. This point had no relevance to the decision of that point of principle and PICKFORD, L.J., does not refer to the taxing master's words at all. Therefore, I am not prepared to accept the view that those words have been put forward by anybody, by the taxing master in that case or by the court, as a norm or standard for a solicitor and client taxation.

In my judgment, the duty of a taxing master is to approach both classes of taxation, both party and party and solicitor and client taxation, with his mind to the sub-rule, which is his proper norm or standard, but, at the same time, he is to make more generous allowances in taxing as between solicitor and client taxation, though the sub-rule prevents him from fully achieving the intention clearly expressed by the direction in the order i.e., to allow all that a solicitor can properly claim against a client, it is his duty to carry out that intention so far as permissible.

In his reply, counsel for the plaintiff referred me to a passage in Frankenburg Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd. (3), in the Court of Appeal, which appears to me to embody the same principle. LORD HANWORTH, M.R., said ([1931] Ch. 436):

“... the difference between party and party and solicitor and client costs is undoubtedly this, that the solicitor and client costs are intended to embrace a more generous allowance for the actual costs which have been incurred by the plaintiff.”

Counsel asks me to go further and to hold that in the present case the order should be construed as though it had directed a solicitor and own client taxation, or, in other words, an indemnity. He says that because Andrews v. Barnes (1) was the case on which I relied as giving me jurisdiction to make the order which I made. It is undeniably true that FRY, L.J., delivering the judgment of the court in Andrews v. Barnes (1), refers to indemnity. He says (39 Ch.D. 140):

“... various circumstances have been stated as influencing the discretion of the court—in some cases to vindicate the honour and justice of the court, and in Palmer v. Walesby (4) on the ground of the right of the applicant to indemnity, the reason assigned by KAY, J., for awarding them in the present case.”

I cannot accept that submission. In my judgment, this order is not to be construed differently from any other order for solicitor and client costs merely because I thought I found my jurisdiction to make it in Andrews v. Barnes (1).

Counsel for the plaintiff further says that Goodwin v. Storrar (5) is an authority for the proposition that an order for solicitor and client costs ought now to be construed as though it were an order for solicitor and own client costs. There is no doubt that Goodwin v. Storrar (5) has not previously been taken into account in carrying out taxations as between solicitor and client in the Chancery Division. It is a decision of DENNING, J. The plaintiffs were personal representatives of a man and his wife who were killed as a result of an explosion at a munition works, and they brought an action against the defendant claiming damages under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, and a sum under the Fatal Accidents Act for the benefit of the two children of the deceased. The action was settled on the terms that £250 was to be paid in respect of each of the deceased under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, and £1,750 under the Fatal Accidents Act. The settlement was embodied in a consent order approved by the court, which contained the following provision as to costs:

"The defendant pays to the plaintiffs' solicitors the costs of this action as between solicitor and client to be taxed such costs to include the costs properly incurred before the issue of the writ and in relation to the subject-matter of the action."

On taxation, the taxing master taxed the costs on the basis that under Ord. 22, r. 14 (11), the plaintiffs' solicitors were entitled to be paid such costs as they would be properly entitled to receive from their own clients. The defendant applied for a review. DENNING, J., said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 204):

"The words 'taxation as between solicitor and client' have two meanings. One meaning, which I will refer to as meaning (A), is an inquiry as to the costs which a client ought properly to pay to his own solicitor, as distinct from 'taxation as between party and party,' which is an inquiry as to the costs which he should recover from the opposite side. The distinction is based on common sense . . . The other meaning of 'taxation as between solicitor and client,' which I will refer to as meaning (B), is an inquiry as to the costs to be paid to the solicitor out of a common fund in which the client and others are interested, and is substantially a taxation as between party and party, but on a more generous scale. When meaning (B) is used a different form of words is needed to describe an inquiry as to the costs which a client ought properly to pay his own solicitor, and that is then described as a 'taxation as between solicitor and own client.' . . . In my opinion, in R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (11), the words are used in meaning (A). . . . If I am right in thinking that in the sub-rule the words are used in meaning (A), it shows that it is a valid meaning to be attached to them in any legal document, and this enables me to distinguish Giles v. Randall (2). The court in that case recognised that meaning (A) was the ordinary meaning, but felt compelled to give the words the meaning (B) because that was the technical meaning, and where words in a legal document have a technical meaning, it is the technical meaning that should be received. Now that a rule of the Supreme Court has been made, in which are used the words in meaning (A), it follows that meaning (A) at the present day is, not only the ordinary meaning, but also a valid technical meaning, and that there is no reason why, in construing a legal document, that meaning should not ordinarily be given. In the order as to costs in this case, therefore, there is no reason why I should not adopt meaning (A) when that appears to be the meaning intended by the parties, as I think it is. In view of this development, it may be that Giles v. Randall (2) would be differently decided at the present day."

Order 22, r. 14, has no application to the action with which I am concerned, but Ord. 65, r. 27 (29), has and still stands. Giles v. Randall (2) decided that that sub-rule applies to my order, for, indeed, there is no ground of distinction known to me, other than that with which I have already dealt, between the order in Giles v. Randall (2) and the present order. Accordingly, my order cannot be construed as directing a solicitor and own client taxation because so to construe it would be to hold that the sub-rule did not apply to it. But I find in DENNING, J.'s, decision support for what I have myself already said about the duty of a taxing master in a solicitor and client taxation.

One other point of general principle emerges in the present case. The plaintiff, being a solicitor, acted for himself in these proceedings, but, as he practises in Sunderland, and the action was tried in London, he employed London agents to conduct the action.

In London Scottish Benefit Society v. Chorley (6) the court had to consider the right of a solicitor who acts for himself in litigation to recover costs against an adverse party. There was no question of agency in that case. SIR WILLIAM BRETT, M.R., said (13 Q.B.D. 876):

"The unsuccessful adversary of a solicitor appearing in person cannot be charged for what does not exist, he cannot be charged for the solicitor consulting himself, or instructing himself, or attending upon himself. The true rule seems to be that when a solicitor brings or defends an action in person, he is entitled to the same costs as an ordinary litigant appearing in person, subject to this restriction, that no costs which are really unnecessary can be recovered. Of this kind are the costs of instructions and attendances."

He read those words "costs of instructions and attendances" as referring to the previous sentence, "costs of instructing himself or attending upon himself". I am sure that in making those observations the court was not considering what might be the position between a solicitor and a London agent. In the present case the taxing master, in construing that passage, says:

"It is the settled law and practice that a solicitor litigant acting for himself is entitled to all costs of conducting the litigation to which he is a party, as if he had employed another solicitor to act for him except that he is not entitled to such items as 'instructions from' and 'attendances upon' himself, or perusal of his own documents. In this case I find as a fact that the plaintiff instructed Ward, Bowie & Co. as his London agents and they as London agents are in the same position for the purpose of this objection as the plaintiff himself, neither more nor less."

Counsel for the defendant conceded that that deduction was not permissible, and rightly so. The reason why SIR WILLIAM BRETT, M.R., said that a solicitor could not charge for consulting himself, or instructing himself, or attending on himself, was because such things did not exist, but that reason has no application in a case where a solicitor consults or instructs a London agent or there is an attendance on him by a London agent. I agree with counsel's admission that there is no impossibility in law in a solicitor being allowed costs in respect of those matters.

I now come to the facts of the present case. The plaintiff's London agents lodged a bill of costs claiming £471 8s. 6d. and from that bill the taxing master allowed £293 4s. 8d., leaving the sum allowed as £178 3s. 10d. To that fifty per cent. was added making £267 5s. 9d., and to that the disbursements, amounting to £542 7s., were added, making £809 12s. 9d., and with the taxing fee of £20 5s. the total was £829 17s. 9d. The plaintiff carried in sixteen specific objections against particular disallowances and gave reasons for his objection. He concluded with a general objection divided into four heads, which I must read:

"General objection. Because the disallowances fail to reflect (a) the principle that party and party costs are intended as a full indemnity for all costs reasonably incurred in an action; (b) the principle that solicitor and client costs are intended to embrace a more generous allowance for the actual costs which have been incurred by the party; (c) the fact that ROXBURGH, J., made the special order for solicitor and client taxation expressly on the ground that the case was 'a very exceptional and rare case' that contained a wholly 'unjustified allegation of fraudulent conduct against two professional men and one business man,' and that he considered that it [the defence] should never have been put forward, let alone persisted in; (d) the fact that it was vital to the plaintiff not merely to obtain an order for specific performance but in the course of it to ensure that grave charges should be shown to be wholly unjustified."

Ars est celare artem. The real gravamen of the objections is in head (b), and I have no doubt that the taxing master realised that because, though his answer is not specifically directed to any one of the four sub-headings, it does fit in very neatly as an answer to head (b). He says:

"This is a solicitor and client taxation where costs are payable by one party to another and is substantially little more than a party and party taxation except that any necessary letters to and attendances upon the client are allowed: Giles v. Randall (2)."

I have already given my reasons for thinking that Giles v. Randall (2) does not support that proposition, derived as it was from the taxing master's answers in that case, as a norm or standard for the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client. On the contrary, head (b), to which it appears to be an answer, does, as it seems to me, embody the true principle which I have endeavoured earlier to state. The plaintiff said that the allowances were not sufficiently generous, and, in support of that contention, inserted head (b). The taxing master's answer must, therefore, be regarded by him as pointing to a less generous scale. That conclusion seems to me irresistible. It seems to me plain from what the taxing master has himself said that he did adopt a norm or standard of taxation less generous than that indicated under head (b), and, if so, then, in my judgment, that must vitiate all his decisions on all items affected by the general principle. Counsel for the defendant said that the master's detailed decisions are all questions of quantum. I do not agree. The question is not the quantum, but from what point of view does one approach the ascertainment of the quantum? If one approaches it from a wrong point of view, the quantum must necessarily be vitiated. Not only is it, in my judgment, inherent in the taxing master's own answer to that general objection that he has approached the taxation with a wrong standard in mind, but when I come to some of the material items I see it reflected at once. No. 3 of Feb. 14, 1950, is "part of counsel's fees to settle writ." The sum claimed was £2 4s. 6d. and the amount allowed £1 3s. 6d. This is an item which would be allowed whether the taxation is party and party or solicitor and client. I imagine that it is impossible for a taxing master to allow less than £1 3s. 6d. because that is at present counsel's minimum fee. Accordingly, if he is to allow anything, he cannot allow less than £1 3s. 6d. and, therefore, I must assume that that is the application of the party and party system of taxation to that item. If the taxing master's proposition is accepted, the item would be the same on a solicitor and client taxation because it is neither a letter nor an attendance, and, therefore, presumably, he would say as regards that item: "It must be the same whether the taxation is party and party or solicitor and client." That is not so if the proposition which was advanced under head (b) by the objectors, and which has found favour with me, is correct. The taxing master would not be bound to allow £2 4s. 6d. on a solicitor and client taxation, but he plainly could do so. Hence at once appears the difference in result between the two principles.

[HIS LORDSHIP then gave detailed consideration to other items, applied the principles which he had enunciated, and continued:] I now come to items 15 and 16 which are in a different category again. The plaintiff's wife attended to give evidence and, I believe, gave evidence. Both items 15 and 16 relate to Mrs. Reed's witness fee. Item 15 relates to one day only, Oct. 2, 1950. That was an occasion when I was unable to try the case on the day on which it should have been tried. Accordingly, she had to return. In respect of that, £3 3s. was claimed and eventually 5s. was allowed. Item 16 relates to Nov. 15, 16, 17, when the case was heard, and the sum claimed then was £9 9s. which was eventually reduced to 15s. The objector said about these two items:

"Because Mrs. Reed is entitled to a witness fee having regard to the absence from her domestic duties which giving evidence at the trial involved and there is no justification for disallowing this fee merely because she did not carry on a gainful occupation separate from her husband. Because even the old table of allowances to witnesses provide for fees for 'Gentlemen' and 'Females according to their station in life'."

taxing master answered:

"The witness in question follows no gainful occupation and there has been no evidence before me that she has lost anything financially except her expenses which I have already allowed under another item. I am of opinion, therefore, that she is not entitled to anything more than a nominal sum as witness fee which I assess at £1 altogether. To this extent I allow this objection. The old scale of witness fees referred to is completely outdated and not in practice acted upon at the present time."

It seems to me that the taxing master's answer is inconsistent with itself. A witness who is not following a gainful occupation is entitled to anything without proof of actual loss, he ought to have disallowed this item altogether. On the other hand, such a witness is entitled to something, he ought not to have made a nominal award, but ought to have made what he considered was a proper award. Accordingly, it seems to me that his answer must be wrong in every way. The point is rather difficult, but it seems to me that a witness who is taken away from her domestic duties is entitled to something more than actual disbursements, though it may not be much more, and that there is no reason for thinking that, though the old scale is certainly obsolete in these days, females are not allowed witness fees according to their station in life. I see no reason for thinking that a wife who is engaged in domestic duties and the bringing up of her children is entitled to absolutely nothing because she cannot prove that she did in fact get in a charwoman or hire the services of a nursemaid on the relevant day. I think that the objector's objection is well founded. I think that Reed was entitled to a proper witness fee, i.e., something more than a nominal fee, though not necessarily a substantial fee, for her absence from her domestic duties, and there is no justification for disallowing any fee, or anything more than a nominal fee, merely because she did not carry on a gainful occupation separate from her husband.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Ward, Bowie & Co., agents for Richard Reed, Sunderland (for the plaintiff); Maples, Teesdale & Co., agents for W. A. Ellis, Sunderland (for the defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

JOHNSON v. JOHNSON.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Jenkins and Hodson, L.JJ.), December 4, 20, 1951.]

Divorce—Petition—Petition within three years of marriage—Leave to present—Jurisdiction of commissioner to grant—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 70 (5)—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 2 (1).

An application under the proviso to s. 2 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, that the applicant be allowed to present a petition for divorce before three years have passed since the date of the marriage is a matter "connected with" a matrimonial cause within s. 70 (5) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, and, therefore, a special divorce commissioner has power to hear and determine it.

Ambler v. Ambler ([1951] 1 All E.R. 980), overruled.

Quaere, whether the application was itself a "matrimonial cause" within s. 225 of the Act of 1925.

FOR THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1925, s. 70 (5), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 5, p. 363.

Cases referred to:

(1) Ambler v. Ambler, [1951] 1 All E.R. 980.

(2) Re Nanaimo Community Hotel, Ltd., [1944] 4 D.L.R. 638; affd., C.A., [1945] 3 D.L.R. 225; 2 W.W.R. 145; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the husband from an order of His Honour JUDGE WETHERED made on June 20, 1951, whereby he held that he had no jurisdiction to hear a petition for divorce presented within three years of the marriage.

The parties were married on June 24, 1950. On Apr. 7, 1951, His Honour JUDGE PATON, sitting as a special commissioner, made an order granting the husband leave to present a petition within three years on the ground of exceptional hardship. On the presentation of the petition JUDGE WETHERED felt himself bound by Ambler v. Ambler (1) and refused to proceed.

H. S. Russell for the husband.

Colin Duncan for the King's Proctor.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of His Honour JUDGE WETHERED, who decided that he had no jurisdiction to entertain certain divorce proceedings. By s. 2 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, which reproduces s. 1 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, it is provided:

"No petition for divorce shall be presented to the [High] Court unless at the date of the presentation of the petition three years have passed since the date of the marriage: Provided that a judge of the [High] Court may, upon application being made to him in accordance with rules of court, allow a petition to be presented before three years have passed on the ground that the case is one of exceptional hardship . . ."

The parties were married on June 24, 1950. On Apr. 7, 1951, the husband, wishing to seek a divorce within the three years, made an application under s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1950, to His Honour JUDGE PATON, sitting as a commissioner, who granted leave to present the petition.

Under s. 70 (5) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, it is provided:

"A commissioner acting under a commission of assize or any other commission issued under this section, shall, subject to rules of court, have power to try and determine matrimonial causes of any prescribed class and any matters arising out of or connected with any such causes, and shall for that purpose have all such powers and duties as are vested in the Probate Division under the enactments (including this Act) relating to matrimonial causes and matters."

Under art. 1 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes (Special Commission) (No. 2) Order, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 2112), made by virtue of s. 70 (5), it is provided:

"All classes of matrimonial causes may, subject to rules of court, be tried and determined by a special commissioner, acting under a special commission."

The question that arises in the present case is whether, having regard to the words of s. 70 (5) and the order of 1946, a commissioner can exercise the power given to a judge of the High Court under the proviso to s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1950. This question came before WALLINGTON, J., in Ambler v. Ambler (1). The judgment states:

"A special divorce commissioner has no jurisdiction to make an order under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 1 (1), giving leave to present a petition for divorce before the expiration of three years from the date of the marriage, since at the time when the application for the order is made no matrimonial cause is in existence, and, consequently, the application cannot be a matter 'arising out of or connected with' any such cause within s. 70 (5) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925."

In his judgment WALLINGTON, J., after setting out various statutory provisions, said: ([1951] 1 All E.R. 981):

"It is plain that this matter does not 'arise out' of a matrimonial cause, because there was no such cause in existence when the order was made. Furthermore, it seems to me that the words 'connected with any such cause' in s. 70 (5) are inserted to indicate that once there is a matrimonial cause in the hands of a special commissioner he has authority to determine any matter arising out of it or connected with it. I do not understand how anything can arise out of or be connected with a non-existent thing."

It is easy to appreciate the force of the learned judge's view that for a matter to be "connected with" a cause it would seem, at first sight, that there must be a cause for it to be connected with, but, regarded as an ordinary English expression, I think, though it would not necessarily decide the construction of the words in this sub-section, that the words "connected with" can naturally be used to describe a relation with a contemplated event which is still in futuro. I need not elaborate that in my own words because we have been referred to what was said by certain Canadian judges in a case where a very similar statutory phrase fell to be construed. In Re Nanaimo Community Hotel, Ltd. (2), which came before the British Columbia Supreme Court in chambers, s. 66 of the local Income War Tax Act, 1927, which fell to be construed, provided:

"... the Exchequer Court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions that may arise in connection with any assessment made under this Act."

It was argued that that could not confer any jurisdiction on the court until there had been an assessment, but McFARLANE, J., held that it covered matters relating up to an assessment or intended to do so. He puts it in this way ([1944] 1 L.R. 639):

"Mr. Cunliffe argues that that section pre-supposes that an assessment has been made and that, as I understand him, the words 'in connection with' mean 'consequent upon'. I do not think that that is the correct construction to be put upon these words. One of the very generally accepted meanings of 'connection' is 'relation between things one of which is bound up with or involved with another'; or again 'having to do with.' The words include matters occurring prior to as well as subsequent to or consequent upon so long as they are related to the principal thing. The phrase 'having to do with ' perhaps gives as good a suggestion of the meaning as could be had. I think s. 66 is sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of this court [i.e., the Supreme Court] to deal with a decision on which an assessment is subsequently made. It is not necessary, therefore, for me to deal with the other phrases of the very interesting and instructive argument presented on behalf of the motion."

That case went to the Court of Appeal, and ROBERTSON, J.A., said ([1945] 3 D.L.R. 250):

"To my mind the language 'in connection with any assessment' clearly covers all the preceding steps leading up to the assessment being made."

SIDNEY SMITH, J.A., said (ibid., 261):

"I agree with MCFARLANE, J., that the words of s. 66 'include matters occurring prior to as well as subsequent to or consequent upon so long as they are related to' the assessment."

It may be in that case that it was plain that there was going to be an assessment, whereas when an application is made under s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1950 it is not plain that there is going to be a cause because the court may refuse to grant leave under the proviso, but I have found what was stated by MCFARLANE, J., and approved by the Court of Appeal, very helpful in deciding the present case, and I have come to the conclusion that the words "matters . . . connected with" a matrimonial cause include the application which has to be made under s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1950 in respect of a petition which is sought to be filed within the three years. That seems to me to be a natural meaning. I think one would say that such an application was connected with a matrimonial cause, and, therefore, I think this appeal must be allowed.

Counsel for the King's Proctor also argued that, having regard to the definitions to be found in s. 225 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, an application under s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1950 could be entertained by anyone who had power to try and determine matrimonial causes, even if the words about "arising out of or connected with" were not there. He sought to rely on certain words that can be found in the definition of "matrimonial cause" which is defined as "any action for divorce, nullity of marriage, judicial separation, jactitation of marriage or restitution of conjugal rights."

He submitted that there should be read into that definition the definitions of "cause" and of "action" in the section, and that those words themselves must be read having regard to the definition of the word "plaintiff". There is some difficulty, in view of the form of the definition of "matrimonial cause", in bringing in some of the matters which counsel sought to bring in, but, without relying on any of the special words in the definition on which he sought to rely, I would have thought there was a good deal to be said for the contention that a power to try and determine matrimonial causes by itself conferred a power to deal with applications under s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1950. It is unnecessary for us to decide it because the question can be decided on the wider words "in connection with." For those reasons, I think this appeal must be allowed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. This case is in effect an appeal from the decision of WALLINGTON, J., in Ambler v. Ambler (1). That was a case under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 1 (1), whereas the relevant section in the present case is s. 2 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, but there is no material distinction between the two sections for the purposes of the point at issue.

It is not in dispute that the Matrimonial Causes (Special Commission) (No. 2) Order, 1946, delegated to the commissioners all powers capable of being delegated to them under the provisions of s. 70 (5) of the Supreme Court of Judicature olidation) Act, 1925. The question is whether, on its true construction, (5) authorises the delegation to commissioners of power to deal with an application for leave to present a petition before the expiration of the minimum of three years from the marriage. WALLINGTON, J., decided against the view that commissioners had jurisdiction in relation to these applications for leave on the short ground that the application for leave is made at a stage when the proposed petition has not been presented, and, therefore, at a stage when it may be said that the actual cause which is intended to be brought is not yet arising. He took the view that such an application for leave could not be said to arise out of or be connected with any cause because no cause was in existence. In respect to him, I regard that as too narrow a view of s. 70 (5), both regarding the matter from the point of view of strict construction and giving each word its proper and no less than which seems to be its normal meaning and also regarding the matter from the rather wider standpoint of the apparent intention of the sub-section as a whole. There may be difficulty in speaking of a matter as "arising out of" a cause not yet on foot, but I see no reason why an application such as this should not be "connected with" the proposed matrimonial cause. I think it is a perfectly proper and natural use of the expression, and I agree with WALLINGTON, J., that this view is strongly supported by Re Nanaimo Community Hotel, [1925] 1 D.L.R. 122 (2).

Regarding s. 70 (5) as a whole, one finds it is in two branches. First, it provides "a commissioner acting under a commission . . . shall . . . have power to try and determine matrimonial causes of any prescribed class and any matters arising out of or connected with any such causes"

Secondly, it provides that a commissioner

"shall for that purpose [i.e., for the purpose of trying and determining matrimonial causes of any prescribed class and any matters arising thereout connected therewith] have all such powers and duties as are vested in the Probate Division under the enactments (including this Act) relating to matrimonial causes and matters."

The sub-section, being framed in that way, does, to my mind, strongly suggest, if it is looked at as a whole, that the intention of the legislature was to enable the commissioners to be invested with all the powers of the Probate Division for the purpose of trying matrimonial causes of any prescribed class so as to enable them to deal with business of that kind and with all matters incidental to the dispatch of such business as if they were sitting as judges of the appropriate division of the High Court. Viewed from that point of view, it seems to me that the sub-section does on its natural construction authorise the delegation to commissioners of the fullest powers in relation to the trial and determination of matrimonial causes, including the disposal of all such incidental matters as an application for leave in circumstances such as those of the present case, these being all comprehensively described as "matters arising out of or connected with any such causes" and covered by the second branch of the sub-section which invests commissioners with all the powers and duties of the Probate Division for that purpose, i.e., for the purpose of trying and determining matrimonial causes of any prescribed class and any matters arising thereout or connected therewith.

I prefer to base my decision on the meaning of the words "connected with" in this context rather than on the view that an application for leave should be regarded as in itself a matrimonial cause within the meaning of the definition in s. 225 of the Act of 1925. I agree, however, that the definition of "matrimonial cause", read in conjunction with that of "cause", is a very comprehensive one, and I think it might conceivably be possible, if the true view is that such an application was not a matter "connected with" a matrimonial cause, to reach the conclusion that in such case it should be classified as constituting in itself a particular species of matrimonial cause. Accordingly, I agree with my Lord that this appeal should be allowed. I may, perhaps, add that it seems to me that our decision, at all events, has the merit of convenience. Administrative difficulties should not, as a general rule, be taken into consideration in construing a statute, but it does appear that the result we have reached is, from a practical point of view, the more reasonable and convenient one.

HODSON, L.J.: I agree. The learned commissioner was bound by the decision of WALLINGTON, J., in Ambler v. Ambler (1) where WALLINGTON, J., felt himself constrained to hold, on the construction of s. 70 (5) of the Act of 1925, that the words "arising out of or connected with any" matrimonial cause were not wide enough to cover an originating summons taken out before the cause had come into existence. After hearing the argument of counsel for the husband and for the King's Proctor, I have come to the conclusion that that view was too narrow a one. It is conceded by the husband that this originating summons could not be said to arise out of the cause, but he argued (I think convincingly) that it was "connected with" the cause. The matters which are ancillary to the petition and come into existence after the petition may all, I think, be said to arise out of the petition, and, if that is so, it is difficult to give any force to the words "connected with" unless those words cover such an application as the present. I agree with the reasons given by my Lords for allowing this appeal on the ground that the words "connected with" are wide enough to cover the application in question, but I would also like to leave open for favourable consideration the argument, which may affect the construction of some of the rules to which we have been referred, that this appeal could be allowed on the ground that the originating summons in question is itself a cause.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Gustavus Thompson & Sons, agents for Hillier, Naish & Co., Bath (for the husband); Treasury Solicitor (for the King's Proctor).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re RUDD'S WILL TRUSTS. WORT AND ANOTHER v. RUDD AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Upjohn, J.), November 21, 22, December 17, 1951.]

Settlement—Capital or income—Tenant for life and remainderman—Apportionment—Capital profits dividend—Profit on sale of company's assets—Notice by company of intention to declare dividend—Duty of trustees to sell cum dividend.

By his will, dated Jan. 3, 1939, the testator gave his residuary estate to trustees on trust for sale and conversion "(with full power to postpone such sale . . . and conversion . . . and to retain any of the investments in the same state of investment as at my decease for so long as my trustees shall in their absolute discretion think fit without being personally liable . . . for any loss occasioned by such postponement or retention) . . ." He directed that the proceeds of sale should be invested in authorised investments and he then settled the residue. He died on Aug. 21, 1939, and at the time of his death his investments included a sum of stock of Thomas Tilling, Ltd., which was then valued at 46s. per £1 stock. The trustees retained £9,950 of this stock as part of the residuary trust fund. On Nov. 8, 1948, the company issued a circular to shareholders in which it stated that, having sold its interests in road transport to the British Transport Commission in consideration of the allotment of a large holding of British Transport three per cent. stock, it proposed to recommend, at a meeting to be convened later, that on Apr. 1, 1949, "a capital distribution be made out of the amount received to holders of [the company's] ordinary stock at the rate of £5 of British Transport . . . stock . . . in respect of each £1 stock held." On receiving the circular the trustees did not re-consider the question whether their holding of the company's stock, or any part of it, should be sold, and it did not occur to them that the sum received in payment of what was described as a "capital" bonus might be distributable as income. The company's stock was quoted on the London Stock Exchange, and on Feb. 15, 1949, its mean price was £6 4s. per £1 stock, while on Feb. 16, 1949, it was quoted ex the capital profits dividend, the mean price being then approximately £1 8s. per £1 stock. On Mar. 17, 1949, the company passed a resolution to pay a capital profits dividend on its ordinary stock by distributing the British Transport stock as proposed in the circular of Nov. 8, 1948, to shareholders on the register on Feb. 21, 1949 (the date of the notice of the meeting), and, as a result of the resolution, the trustees received the sum of £49,750 British Transport stock. The beneficiaries interested in capital contended that, although, under the decision in Re Sechiari ([1950] 1 All E.R. 417), this sum was to be treated as income of the testator's residuary trust fund, it should, nevertheless, be apportioned as between the capital and income of the fund, as the trustees had committed a breach of trust by failing, after receiving notice of the company's intention to declare the dividend to sell the whole or part of their holding of the company's stock before Feb. 16, 1949, when it went ex dividend.

Held: on the true construction of the will, both the power to postpone sale and the power to retain investments were ancillary to the trust for conversion; the trustees were not entitled to treat the company's stock as permanent authorised investments, but it was not their duty to realise it in order to make a large profit for capital at the expense of income; on the facts of the case, no breach of trust had been committed; and, therefore, no part of the British Transport stock received by the trustees was to be apportioned to the capital of the testator's residuary trust fund.

Re Kleinwort's Settlement Trusts ([1951] 2 All E.R. 328), applied.

AS TO APPORTIONMENT BETWEEN TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN, HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 653-655, paras. 935-939; and CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 40, pp. 677-680, Nos. 2132-2157.

es referred to:

- 1) Re Sechiari, [1950] 1 All E.R. 417; 2nd Digest Supp.
- 2) Re Kleinwort's Settlement Trusts, [1951] 2 All E.R. 328; [1951] Ch. 860.
- 3) Re Maclaren's Settlement Trusts, [1951] 2 All E.R. 414.
- 4) Re Roth, (1896), 74 L.T. 50; 43 Digest 871, 3156.
- 5) Re Inman, [1915] 1 Ch. 187; 84 L.J.Ch. 309; 112 L.T. 240; 44 Digest 209, 373.
- 6) Re Chaytor, [1905] 1 Ch. 233; 74 L.J.Ch. 106; 92 L.T. 290; 43 Digest 618, 586.
- 7) Re Doughty, [1947] 1 All E.R. 207; [1947] Ch. 263; 176 L.T. 173; 2nd Digest Supp.
- 8) Re Harrison's Will Trusts, [1949] Ch. 678; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine inter alia whether a sum of £49,750 British Transport stock, received by the trustees of the testator's will as a capital profits dividend on £9,950 ordinary stock of Thomas Tilling, Ltd., which formed part of the testator's residuary trust fund, should, in the events which had happened, be apportioned between the income and the capital of the fund. It was contended by the beneficiaries interested in capital that, by reason of the decision in Re Sechiari ([1950] 1 All E.R. 417), the sum of British Transport stock must be treated as income of the trust fund, but they contended that the court had no jurisdiction to apportion it as the trustees had committed a breach of trust in that they had failed to sell the whole or some part of their holding of the company's stock after receiving notice of the company's intention to declare the dividend and before the stock went ex dividend.

Harold Lightman for the trustees.

Wilfrid Hunt for defendants interested in income.

S. Pascoe Hayward, K.C., and Parbury for defendants interested in capital.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 17. UPJOHN, J., read the following judgment. This summons raises the question, now becoming familiar in this court, whether a substantial sum of British Transport three per cent. guaranteed stock received by the trustees of the will of the late Edward Whitten Rudd (hereinafter called "the testator") as a capital bonus in respect of their holding of ordinary stock of Thomas Tilling, Ltd. (hereinafter called "the company"), ought to be treated as capital or income, or apportioned between the two.

By his will dated Jan. 3, 1939, the testator, after revoking all former wills, by cl. 2 appointed the plaintiffs to be executors and trustees. He then left a number of pecuniary and specific legacies and by cl. 9 dealt with the residue of his estate in these terms:

"As to all the rest residue and remainder of my real and personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever I give devise and bequeath the same unto my trustees upon trust to sell call in and convert into money the same or such part thereof as shall not already consist of money (with full power to postpone such sale calling in and conversion of any part of my residuary estate and to retain any of the investments in the same state of investment as at my decease for so long as my trustees shall in their absolute discretion think fit without being personally liable or responsible for any loss occasioned by such postponement or retention) and I direct that the income thereof shall as well during the first year as afterwards be applied as if the same were income arising from investments hereinafter directed to be made of the proceeds of sale thereof and out of my ready money and the proceeds of such sale calling in or conversion to pay my debts funeral and testamentary expenses and death duties and to invest the remainder of my ready money and of the said proceeds (hereinafter called 'my trust estate') in such investments as may be authorised by law for the investment of trust funds including freehold mortgages only Upon trust out of the annual income thereout to pay to my wife . . . during her lifetime the annual sum of £2,000 payable quarterly upon protective trusts for her benefit during her lifetime as provided by s. 33 of the Trustee Act 1925."

By cl. 10 the testator disposed of the remaining income of his estate during the lifetime of his widow, who died on May 16, 1947. By cl. 11 on the death of his wife he gave certain pecuniary legacies, mainly to charities, and then proceeded as follows:

"12. Subject to the payment of the said legacies I direct that my trustees shall hold the residue of my estate upon the trusts following: 13. I direct that my trustees shall hold the remainder thereof upon trust and shall pay and divide the income thereof (a) as to seventeen and one half shares thereof to my stepson Leslie Rudd and his wife Hilda Rudd [the first and second defendants] in equal shares and on the death of either of them then such seventeen and one half shares to the survivor during his or her lifetime; (b) as to seventeen and one half shares thereof to my nephew Leslie Frank Rudd [the eighth defendant]; (c) as to seventeen and one half shares thereof to my niece Kitty Luttrell [the third defendant]; (d) as to fifteen shares thereof to my niece Aline Luttrell [the fourth defendant]; (e) as to fifteen shares thereof to my nephew Eric Luttrell [the fifth defendant]; (f) as to ten shares thereof to my nephew Tally Luttrell [the sixth defendant]; (g) as to five shares thereof to my niece Anna Maguire [the seventh defendant]; as to two and one half shares thereof to my nephew Robert Luttrell [the fourth defendant] during their respective lives and I direct that at the decease of each and every one of the before-mentioned beneficiaries the capital of such shares so bequeathed to him or her shall be divided between his or her children in such shares as he or she may by will appoint and in default of such appointment if more than one in equal shares but if they should respectively leave no such child or children then the capital of such share and the income shall be held so that it shall go and accrue by way of addition to the share of the other beneficiaries mentioned in this clause in the same proportions and on the same trusts as their original shares as provided by the said clause."

14. The testator declared that the life interests were to be held on protective trusts. The first nine defendants are, therefore, interested in income of the residuary estate. The first four and the sixth defendants have never had issue and have argued in favour of income. The fifth, seventh eighth and ninth defendants, although interested in income, have children, who are the tenth to thirteenth defendants, and are interested, accordingly, in capital, and they have agreed to join with such children and have argued in favour of capital. The testator died on Aug. 21, 1939, and his will was proved by the plaintiffs, executors and trustees, in the Principal Probate Registry on Oct. 20, 1939. During his lifetime the testator had considerable interests in the transport industry and at his death he was the owner of, among other investments, £18,225 ordinary stock of the company. Of this stock £7,405 was sold for estate purposes and further £870 was appropriated by the trustees to satisfy legacies, leaving £10,020 stock which has been retained by the trustees as part of the residuary estate. The stock was valued at the date of the testator's death at 46s. per £1. The company was a large shareholder in a number of road transport undertaking undertakings and in addition owned and operated a commercial haulage and road haulage undertaking. After the coming into force of the Transport Act, 1947, the company reached an agreement with the British Transport Commission, set up by that Act, for the transfer to the commission of the road transport undertakings I have mentioned above, and the consideration for the transfer was the sum of £24,800,000 which was satisfied by an allotment to the company of British Transport three per cent. guaranteed stock 1968-73 at 101 per cent.

These matters were explained at length in a circular to shareholders by the chairman dated Nov. 8, 1948, and the circular then continued as follows:

"It is proposed to recommend at a meeting to be convened later that on Apr. 1, 1949, a capital distribution be made out of the amount received to holders of ordinary stock at the rate of £5 of British Transport three per cent. guaranteed stock 1968-73 in respect of each £1 stock held. Interest on such stock up to that date will be received by the company."

On Feb. 21, 1949, notice of an extraordinary general meeting of the company was given, dated Mar. 17, 1949, was given, stating that the following resolution would be passed as an ordinary resolution:

"That a special capital profits dividend on the ordinary stock of the company of £20,806,000 payable out of the profit realised by the company on the recent sale of part of its undertaking to the British Transport Commission be and the same is hereby declared and that such dividend be payable to the ordinary stockholders on the register on Feb. 21, 1949, in proportion to their holdings of ordinary stock and be paid and satisfied by distribution amongst them as at Apr. 1, 1949, of £20,600,000 British Transport three per cent. guaranteed stock 1968-73 (part of the consideration received by the company from the British Transport Commission for the undertaking above referred to) taken at its issued price of 101 per cent., being in the proportion of £5 British Transport stock for every £1 ordinary stock of the company held by them."

The resolution was duly passed on Mar. 17, 1949, and in due course the trustees received the sum of £49,750 British Transport stock, being £5 of such stock for each £1 of ordinary stock in the company held by them.

The company is a very large one. Its issued ordinary stock amounts to £4,120,000. This stock is quoted on the London Stock Exchange and naturally the Stock Exchange was not unresponsive to the circular of Nov. 8, 1948. I do not know what was the price of the stock before the issue of that circular, but the evidence before me was to the effect that on Feb. 15, 1949, the mean price of the stock was £6 4s. per £1 stock. On Feb. 16, 1949, the stock went ex the capital profits dividend and the mean price was then approximately £1 8s. per £1 stock. It may be noted that the stock was quoted ex capital profits dividend before notice of the general meeting was given.

The sole question is whether the sum of British Transport stock received by the trustees as aforesaid ought to be treated as capital or income or apportioned between the two. The first question raised by the summons is:

"Whether on the true construction of the said will and in the events which have happened namely the receipt by the plaintiffs as the trustees of the trusts of the said will of £49,750 British Transport three per cent. guaranteed stock 1968-73 as a capital bonus in respect of their holding as such trustees of £9,950 of the ordinary stock of Thomas Tilling, Ltd., all or any and if so what part of the said capital bonus ought to be treated as income of the residuary trust fund of the testator or as an accretion to the capital of the said fund."

It is conceded by those interested in capital that, so far as this court is concerned, the answer to this question must necessarily be that the stock must be treated as income: see Re Sechiari (1). Therefore, I need not consider that question further.

The second question is:

"If the answer to question 1 be that the said capital bonus or any part thereof ought to be treated as income of the residuary trust fund whether the trustees are entitled to distribute such capital bonus or such part as aforesaid between the persons entitled to the income of the said trust fund without taking any steps in the execution of the trusts of the will of the deceased to apportion or secure the apportionment of the said bonus on equitable principles between income and capital in accordance with the declaration in Re Sechiari (1)."

On this question those interested in capital make two submissions. First, they say that, in the exceptional circumstances of this case, there is a general equity quite apart from any question of breach of trust by the trustees, with which I shall deal in a moment, which enables a court to direct an apportionment. The exceptional circumstances relied on were that on Feb. 15, 1949, the value of the stock held by the plaintiffs in the company was of a value of £61,690, whereas on the next day, Feb. 16, when it went ex dividend, the value of the stock amounted to a total of £13,930, so that a capital loss was suffered on the night of Feb. 15-16 of £47,760. However, that argument is reserved for another court, as counsel for the defendants interested in capital conceded that in this court, having regard to the decision of VAISEY, J., in Re Kleinwort's Settlement Trusts (2), and of HARMAN, J., in Re Maclaren's Settlement Trusts (3), any right to apportionment must be based on a breach of trust and not on any general principle of equity. Therefore, I do not consider this question further.

The second submission was based on the allegation that the trustees committed a breach of trust by not selling the whole or some part of their holding of the company's stock before it went ex dividend, and it was said that, if such a breach ved, the court has a jurisdiction to make an apportionment of the capital and as between capital and income. In Re Maclaren's Settlement Trusts (3) AN, J., said ([1951] 2 All E.R. 420):

I understand that VAISEY, J., recently decided another case arising out of his Thomas Tilling transaction (Re Kleinwort's Settlement Trusts (2)) held that the circumstances there before him did not warrant an apportionment. It was admitted before him that there was a jurisdiction to apportion in a proper case, but he expressed the view in a tentative way that its exercise was really confined to cases of breach of trust. This, I think, may well be the answer. It seems to me clear that the court would never allow the beneficial rights to be altered by a breach of trust, and if the circumstances were such that a purchase by trustees (of the Thomas Tilling shares, for instance, with a knowledge of the possible or probable faults) would have been a breach, the court might well apportion the undivided dividend or allocate it to capital even though in fact the trustees did not realise what they were doing when they did it."

I am content to accept that as a statement of the law.

I have, therefore, to consider whether the plaintiffs have committed a breach of trust by failing to sell the whole or some part of their holding of the company's shares before it went ex dividend on Feb. 16, 1949. It was conceded that for the purpose I must approach the matter on the footing that, if (contrary to the facts of this case) the trustees had paid away the transport stock to those entitled in income and it had been spent, they would, in principle, be personally liable to replace it, subject possibly to some claim for relief from the consequences of their breach of trust under s. 61 of the Trustee Act, 1925. These considerations do not, however, affect the matter of principle. To consider this question I must advert to some further matters of fact. On Mar. 20, 1951, the defendants entitled in capital filed an affidavit, sworn by Mr. Christlieb, guardian ad litem of some of the infant defendants, in which he said, in para. 3:

It would appear from the plaintiff's affidavit that the first intimation given to the plaintiffs, as the trustees of the will of the testator, had of the proposal to recommend a capital profits dividend was contained in the circular letter dated Nov. 8, 1948 . . . It is respectfully submitted that the plaintiffs, as the trustees of the said will of the testator, on receiving information of the proposal to declare a capital profits dividend should have considered the effect thereof on the position between the tenants for life of the company's shares of residue and the remaindermen and should have sold some part, at any rate, of the said stock in order to preserve an even balance between capital and income. The plaintiffs had ample time between the receipt of the circular letter of Nov. 8, 1948, and Feb. 16, 1949, in which they considered the position and to decide upon their course of action and time at which to sell the said stock or an appropriate part thereof before dealings in the capital profits dividends commenced. Had a sale been made it is respectfully submitted that the proceeds thereof would have been treated as capital. In these circumstances it is respectfully submitted that, since the plaintiffs failed to take any action to preserve capital for the remaindermen, an apportionment of the capital profits dividend should be made on equitable principles between capital and income."

At the last moment the defendants interested in capital asked the trustees to agree with this in an affidavit, and the trustees did so in an affidavit filed by Mr. Christlieb, one of the trustees, on Nov. 14, 1951. Paragraph 2 was in these terms:

With regard to para. 3 of the . . . affidavit [sworn by Mr. Christlieb] I say that at no time after receipt of the circular letter dated Nov. 8, 1948 did I or my co-plaintiff re-consider the question whether the stock in the company or any part thereof should be sold. I am informed by my co-plaintiff and verily believe that it did not occur to him, as it did not occur to me, that the payment of what was described as a capital bonus might be distributable as income and thereby affect the position as between the tenants for life of the various shares of residue and the remaindermen."

The defendants interested in capital now contend on those facts that the trustees have been guilty of a breach of trust and that they ought to have sold, it was suggested, half of their holding of the company's stock cum dividend. A Counsel for those defendants asked me to draw the following inferences of fact from Mr. Wort's affidavit: (i) the trustees did not consider a sale after receiving the circular because they thought that the distribution would be corpus; (ii) if they had thought at that time that the capital dividend distribution would go wholly to income, they would have considered a sale; and (iii) if they had considered a sale, they would have sold some or all of the company's stock cum dividend. B In my judgment, the first inference is justified. With regard to the second, I should, if asked, guess that the plaintiffs would have considered a sale. But a guess does not enable me to draw an inference, and, if it was an essential part of their case to establish this inference, I am at a loss to understand why no application to cross-examine Mr. Wort on his affidavit was made. C The third inference of fact which I am asked to draw seems to me wholly speculative, and I decline to draw it.

Counsel for the defendants interested in capital submits that it was the duty of the plaintiffs to consider from time to time whether trust assets, the sale of which had been postponed under the discretion contained in cl. 9 of the will, ought to be sold, and he referred to Re Roth (4). He further submits that, when an event happened, such as the issue of the circular of Nov. 8, 1948, which might affect the trust estate, it was the duty of the trustees to meet and decide whether to continue to exercise the power to postpone sale, which they failed to do, and they thereby committed a breach of trust. Counsel for the defendants interested in income, on the other hand, says that the trustees had power under cl. 9, not merely to postpone sale of the investments, but to retain them, and he asks me to infer that the trustees must long ago have decided to retain the company's stock permanently as authorised investments and were under no duty to consider a sale on receipt of the circular. Now, it is a question of construction whether the power to retain is to be construed as a power to retain permanently or for the better realisation of the estate: see Re Inman (5). E

In my judgment, on the true construction of cl. 9, having regard to its general framework, both the power to postpone and the power to retain were ancillary F to the trust for conversion: see Re Chaytor (6); although the actual decision in that case has no application to the present. In my judgment, the trustees were not entitled to treat the company's stock as permanent authorised investments. That, however, in my judgment, does not mean that the trustees ought necessarily to have taken the opportunity of realising the stock in order to make a large profit for capital at the expense of income, as they must always act G impartially between the two. In my judgment, it is not sufficient to show that the trustees ought to have met and considered a sale or that they misunderstood the legal effect of the circular. It is further necessary to show that, being properly advised on the law, they ought to have sold the whole or some part of the company's stock cum dividend. Except for the large sums involved, no reason was advanced to me why the trustees should have sold the stock cum H dividend, nor why, accepting the expression that the distribution was a windfall, it was wrong to allow the law to take its course with the result that the windfall belongs to income.

A further point should be mentioned. Except that the net personal estate of the testator was sworn for probate purposes at £84,000 odd and that he was at the date of his death possessed of considerable interests in the transport industry, represented by investments in various other transport companies were retained until British Transport stock was received for the same, and no idea of the value of the residuary estate now or at the date of death. But going into these matters in some detail so as to be informed of the actual value at the date of death and the value now, and of the income that those entitled to income have been receiving in the past, and, indeed, what they are to receive in the future, it is, in my judgment, impossible to hold the trustees guilty of breach of trust or to form any view as to what part of their holding of the company's stock ought to be sold cum dividend. No explanation is offered why it was suggested that one half of the stock ought to have been sold except that that was the proportion suggested in Re Kleinwort's Settlement Trusts (2). On the materials before me, I am quite unable to hold that any breach of trust has been committed, and, therefore, the claim by the defendants interested in the capital fails.

I have dealt with the matter as one of general principle apart from authority, and I accept the submission of counsel for the defendants interested in income that this case is, on the materials before me, covered by the decision of VAISEY, J., in Kleinwort's Settlement Trusts (2). It is true that in that case the company's stock held by the trustees was an authorised investment, but, if it was the duty of the trustees in this case to cease to exercise their power to continue the investment, so in that case it appears to me that they ought to have exercised their power to change investments. Counsel for the defendants interested in income made the point that the circular was not, apparently, drawn to the attention of VAISEY, J., and he sought to distinguish Re Kleinwort's Settlement Trusts (2) on that ground, but it is plain that that case proceeded on the footing that the trustees were informed of the proposal to make the distribution before the vital date of Feb. 16, 1949, when the stock went ex dividend, and it was argued that it was their duty to apply to the court for directions whether the company's stock or one part thereof ought to be sold cum dividend for the benefit of capital. On their failure to do so, the court ought to make the apportionment which, as I have said, would have been directed had the trustees applied to the court. In dealing with those arguments, VAISEY, J., said ([1951] 2 All E.R. 330):

"I am unable to accede to those suggestions in the present case. While it may well be that the suggested jurisdiction exists and while I do not doubt the power of the court to exercise it in suitable special circumstances. Although, as I have said, it may be that interference by the court could only be justified where the trustees could be said to have committed some breach of trust consisting either of some action or inaction on their part—none, in my judgment, there are no special circumstances, and I cannot think that there is anything in the nature of a general rule that profits distributed, in whatever shape, as dividends, and belonging under well-established principles to the tenant for life, must be subject to an apportionment for the benefit of capital. The cases which seem to me to govern the general principle applicable to this kind of income rights are Re Doughty (7) and Harrison's Will Trusts (8). These accretions to the normal income of the trust fund are sometimes metaphorically described as 'windfalls,' and when they have left the parent tree I can see no principle for notionally attaching them on the boughs from which they have fallen."

For these reasons, I propose to answer the second question in the summons by declaring that no part of the capital distribution ought to be apportioned for the benefit of capital. The costs of all parties must be taxed as between solicitor and client and be paid out of the residuary estate.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Sturton & Sturton (for the trustees and the defendants interested in income); Tippets (for the defendants interested in income).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BIRKENHEAD CORPORATION'S RESOLUTIONS.
QUIGLEY v. BIRKENHEAD CORPORATION.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Romer, L.J.), November 14, 15, 16, December 21, 1951.]

Master and Servant—Trade dispute—Jurisdiction of National Arbitration Tribunal—Dispute between workman and employers arising out of interpretation of workman's contract of service—Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940 (S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1305), art. 7. A

By a resolution, dated Sept. 26, 1939, the defendant corporation decided to augment the war service pay of their employees who were called up for service with the forces during the recent war to their full pay, "full pay" being defined, by a resolution of Jan. 23, 1940, as meaning the ordinary salary to which the employee would have become entitled had he continued in his civil duties, including any annual increment under the corporation's scale of salaries applicable to the grade in which that employee was serving when called up for war service, but excluding inter alia any increase of rates of pay granted by the corporation. The plaintiff, a school teacher employed by the corporation, served with the forces from Sept. 8, 1941, until November, 1945, and on Dec. 12, 1945, he resumed his employment as a school teacher with the corporation. By the Remuneration of Teachers Order, 1945, the Minister of Education directed local authorities to pay to teachers, as from Apr. 1, 1945, the scales of pay contained in the report of the Burnham Committee whereby the scale of salary for teachers in the category within which the plaintiff came was increased. The corporation did not make up the plaintiff's war service pay to the new scale as from Apr. 1, 1945. On Jan. 27, 1949, the corporation, purporting to act under the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, reported to the Minister of Labour and National Service a trade dispute existing between them and the plaintiff arising out of his claim that from Apr. 1, 1945, to November, 1945, the rate of pay applicable to him for the purposes of the augmentation of his war service pay was that laid down by the order of 1945. The report was referred by the Minister to the National Arbitration Tribunal, and, by an award dated Aug. 23, 1949, the tribunal found against the plaintiff's claim. On the hearing of an originating summons taken out by the plaintiff to determine whether, under his contract of service with the corporation, he was entitled, as from Apr. 1, 1945, to November, 1945, to have his pay made up to the scale laid down in the order of 1945, it was contended on his behalf that the tribunal had no jurisdiction in the matter as a question of contractual rights was not a "trade dispute" within the meaning of the order of 1940. B C D E F

HELD: the tribunal were competent to deal with the rights of employers and employed under private, as distinct from national, agreements of service; the dispute between the plaintiff and the corporation was a "trade dispute" within the order of 1940; and the tribunal had jurisdiction to hear it. G

FOR THE CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT AND NATIONAL ARBITRATION ORDER, 1940, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 33, p. 734.

EDITORIAL NOTE. The Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Orders, 1940 to 1950, were revoked by the Industrial Disputes Order, 1951 (S.I., 1951, No. 1376), art. 13 (1). By art. 7 of the order of 1951 the Industrial Disputes Tribunal is constituted to settle disputes between employers and workers which are reported to the Minister of Labour and National Service in accordance with the order and referred by him to the tribunal. Article 10 contains a provision similar to the second provision in art. 2 (5) of the order of 1940, whereby the award of the tribunal is to become an implied term of the H contract between the parties. By art. 12 (1) of the order of 1951, which corresponds with art. 7 of the order of 1940, "dispute" is defined as meaning "any dispute between an employer and workmen in the employment of that employer connected with the terms of the employment . . .", except a dispute as to the employment or non-employment of any person or as to whether any person should or should not be a member of any trade union. In R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. South Shields Corporation ([1951] 2 All E.R. 828) it was held that art. 12 (1) of the order of 1950 contemplated only the reference of a dispute between a number of workmen and their employer and not that of a dispute between an employer and a single workman.

Cases referred to:

- (1) National Association of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corpn., [1942] 2 All E.R. 425; [1943] A.C. 166; 111 L.J.K.B. 674; 167 L.T. 312; 106 J.P. 255; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. South Shields Corpn., [1951] 2 All E.R. 828; 115 J.P. 594.
- (3) R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. Horatio Crowther & Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 693; [1948] 1 K.B. 424; [1948] L.J.R. 682; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. Imperial Tobacco Co., Ltd., R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. British American Tobacco Co., Ltd., R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. Godfrey Phillips, Ltd., R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. Ardath Tobacco Co., Ltd., [1943] 2 All E.R. 162; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. Midgley Harmer, Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 196; [1947] L.J.R. 645; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The plaintiff, a school teacher employed by the defendant corporation, served in His Majesty's Forces from Sept. 8, 1941, until November, 1945, when he was demobilised, and on Dec. 12, 1945, he resumed his employment as a school teacher with the corporation. By a resolution, dated Sept. 26, 1939, the corporation resolved that "pursuant to the provisions of the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, all permanent officers and servants who are contributors to the appropriate superannuation fund, and who . . . may be called up for war service . . . in connection with the present emergency, shall be paid, during the pleasure of the council, full pay, less government pay and allowances . . ." By a resolution of the corporation, dated Jan. 23, 1940, for the purpose of the war service allowances "full pay" was defined as meaning "the ordinary weekly or monthly wage or salary to which the officer or servant is or would normally have become entitled had he continued in his civil duties, and shall include any annual increment under the [corporation's] scale of salaries applicable to the grade in which he was serving when called up for war service, but shall exclude . . . any increase of rates of pay or bonus granted by the [corporation] during the . . . war." By the Remuneration of Teachers Order, 1945 (S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1317), the Minister of Education directed local education authorities to pay to teachers, as from Apr. 1, 1945, the scales of pay contained in the report of the Burnham Committee for 1945, whereby the scales of salary for certain categories of teachers was increased. The plaintiff, as well as a number of other teachers employed by the corporation, came within the categories affected by the order. As from Apr. 1, 1945, the corporation did not make up the war service pay of teachers to the new scales, and on Feb. 5, 1947, the Birkenhead Branch of the National Association of Schoolmasters, purporting to act under the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, submitted a report to the Minister of Labour and National Service in respect of a trade dispute existing or apprehended between twelve members of the association and the defendant corporation arising out of claims by the members for adequate augmentation of their war service pay, and applied to the Minister to declare a trade dispute between the association and the corporation in respect of those claims and to refer the matter to the National Arbitration Tribunal for adjudication.

On the matter being referred to the tribunal by the Minister, the employees claimed that, as from Apr. 1, 1945, the new Burnham scale should be recognised as "full pay" for the purpose of the supplemental allowances made by the corporation to teachers on war service. By an award, dated Apr. 22, 1947 (Award No. 949), the tribunal found that the employees' claim had not been established.

The plaintiff, although a member of the National Association of Schoolmasters and employed by the corporation on similar terms and conditions as were applicable to the employees named in the report of Feb. 5, 1947, was not a party to the proceedings which ensued as a result of the report, and on Oct. 14, 1947, he took out an originating summons under R.S.C., Ord. 54A, for the determination of the question whether, on the true construction of the resolutions of Sept. 26, 1939, and Jan. 23, 1940, he was entitled to be paid the supplementation grant in respect of his period of war service from Apr. 1, 1945, to the date of his demobilisation at the rate of pay applicable to him under the Remuneration of Teachers Order, 1945. On May 7, 1948, the summons came before ROMER, J., and was adjourned so that the National Arbitration Tribunal, on a reference to them by the Minister of Labour on the application of the corporation, might determine (i) whether, as a matter of interpretation of Award No. 949, the plaintiff was a "party" to the award and, accordingly, bound thereby, and (ii), if not, whether he was a worker "to whom the . . . award relates" so as to be bound thereby under the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, art. 2 (5). On Jan. 14, 1949, the tribunal issued a determination that the plaintiff was a party to the trade dispute, but was not a worker to whom the award related so as to be bound thereby.

As a result of that determination, on Jan. 27, 1949, the corporation reported to the Minister a trade dispute existing between them and the plaintiff, describing the dispute in terms similar to the description of the earlier dispute contained in the report of Feb. 5, 1947, and stating that a like dispute was apprehended between them and the other school teachers employed by them who were not parties to or bound by Award No. 949. By an award, dated Aug. 23, 1949 (Award No. 1313), the tribunal found against the plaintiff's claim.

On July 25, 1951, the originating summons was restored for further hearing, and counsel for the plaintiff submitted (i) that the questions raised by the summons were not the same as the "dispute" which the tribunal had decided by Award No. 1313, and (ii) that, if it were decided that they were, the tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the matter and had acted ultra vires in purporting to do so. As the learned judge considered that the second point raised a question of principle of such importance that it should not be decided without giving the tribunal and the Minister of Labour the opportunity of being represented, the summons was stood over again. On Oct. 24, 1951, by leave of the learned judge, the plaintiff amended his originating summons by adding in his claim to relief the words "notwithstanding Award No. 1313 dated Aug. 23, 1949, of the National Arbitration Tribunal which was ultra vires." On Nov. 14, when the amended summons came up for argument, the Minister of Labour was represented by counsel appearing as amicus curiae, but the National Arbitration Tribunal did not appear.

Salmon, K.C., and N. N. McKinnon for the plaintiff.

Salt, K.C., and Miss B. A. Bicknell for the defendant corporation.

S. B. R. Cooke as amicus curiae.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21. ROMER, L.J., read a judgment in which he set out the facts, and continued: Counsel for the plaintiff enunciated the following questions for consideration: (i) whether under his contract of service with the defendant corporation the plaintiff was entitled to have his pay made up to the new Burnham scale between Apr. 1 and November, 1945; (ii) as to the true construction of the resolutions of the corporation passed respectively on Sept. 26, 1938 and Jan. 23, 1940, and, in particular, as to the proper interpretation of the words "full pay" as used therein; (iii) whether question (i) in conjunction with question (ii) was the "dispute" which was the subject of Award No. 1313; (iv) if so, whether the National Arbitration Tribunal had jurisdiction to entertain it. Of these questions I propose to consider numbers (iii) and (iv) first, for, if they are both decided adversely to the plaintiff, then, as counsel on his behalf rightly conceded, the matter is res judicata and the plaintiff cannot proceed on his summons. Were, then, the rights which the plaintiff seeks to have established by declaration on this originating summons the same as his claims which were negated by Award No. 1313? [His LORDSHIP referred to National Association of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corporation (1); stated that the plaintiff and his fellow employees had acquired contractual rights by virtue of the resolutions of Sept. 26, 1938, and Jan. 23, 1940; examined the statements of the employers' and employees' cases in the arbitration proceedings and the terms of the awards; and continued:] I have no doubt that in the first and in the second arbitration proceedings the employees' contractual rights under the two resolutions were in issue, and I must, accordingly, decide this question adversely to the plaintiff.

The next question for consideration is whether the National Arbitration Tribunal had jurisdiction to decide the rights of the plaintiff under his contract of service with the corporation. The answer to this question depends on the construction and effect of the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, hereinafter referred to as "the order of 1940"—but it would first be convenient to consider the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended by S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1217, reg. 58AA, by virtue of which the order of 1940 was made. Paragraph (1) of reg. 58AA provides:

"With a view to preventing work being interrupted by trade disputes, the Minister of Labour and National Service may by order make provision—(a) for establishing a tribunal for the settlement of trade disputes, and for regulating the procedure of the tribunal; (b) for prohibiting, subject to the provisions of the order, a strike or lock-out in connection with any trade dispute; (c) for requiring employers to observe such terms and conditions of employment as may be determined in accordance with the order to be, or to be not less favourable than, the recognised terms and conditions; (d) for recording departures from any rule, practice or custom in respect of the employment, non-employment, conditions of employment, hours of work or working conditions of any persons; (e) for any incidental and supplementary matters for which the Minister thinks it expedient for the purpose of the order to provide."

para. (4):

"In this regulation the expression 'trade dispute' has the same meaning as in the Industrial Courts Act, 1919."

The order of 1940 (as amended) is as follows. The recital is:

"The Minister of Labour and National Service (hereinafter referred to as 'the Minister') with a view to preventing work being interrupted by trade disputes and by virtue of the powers conferred on him by reg. 58AA of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, hereby makes the following order."

art. 1:

"For the purpose of settling trade disputes which cannot otherwise be determined there shall be constituted by the Minister a tribunal to be called 'the National Arbitration Tribunal' and the provisions of the schedule to this order shall have effect with respect to the constitution and proceedings of the tribunal."

By art. 2:

"(1) If any trade dispute exists or is apprehended that dispute, if not otherwise determined, may be reported to the Minister by or on behalf of either party to the dispute and the decision of the Minister as to whether a dispute has been so reported to him or not and as to the time at which a dispute has been so reported shall be conclusive for all purposes. (2) The Minister shall consider any dispute so reported to him as aforesaid and if in his opinion suitable means for settling the dispute already exist by virtue of the provisions of any agreement to which the parties are organisations representative of employers and workers respectively, he shall refer the matter for settlement in accordance with those provisions: so, however, that where a matter has been referred for settlement in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph and there is a failure to reach a settlement or, in the opinion of the Minister, a settlement is unduly delayed, the Minister may cancel the reference and substitute therefor a reference to the National Arbitration Tribunal. (3) Where, in his opinion, no such suitable means of settlement exist as are mentioned in the last preceding paragraph of this article, the Minister shall take any steps which seem to him expedient to promote a settlement of the dispute and may, if he thinks fit, refer the matter for settlement to the National Arbitration Tribunal. (4) Where steps to promote a settlement of the dispute have been taken by the Minister under the provisions of para. (2) or para. (3) of this article (otherwise than by means of a reference to the National Arbitration Tribunal) and those steps have not resulted in a prompt settlement of the dispute, the Minister shall refer the dispute for settlement to the National Arbitration Tribunal and shall do so within twenty-one days from the date on which the dispute was so reported to him as aforesaid, unless, in his opinion, the special circumstances of the case make it necessary or desirable to postpone such a reference. (5) Any agreement, decision or award made by virtue of the foregoing provisions of this article shall be binding on the employers and workers to whom the agreement, decision or award relates and, as from the date of such agreement, decision or award or as from such date as may be specified therein, not being earlier than the date on which the dispute to which the agreement, decision or award relates first arose, it shall be an implied term of the contract between the employers and workers to whom the agreement, decision or award relates that the rate of wages to be paid and the conditions of employment to be observed under the contract shall be in accordance with such agreement, decision or award until varied by a subsequent agreement, decision or award."

By art. 3 and art. 4:

"3. The Minister may refer to the National Arbitration Tribunal for advice any matter relating to or arising out of a trade dispute or trade disputes in general or trade disputes of any class or any other matter which, in his opinion, ought to be so referred. 4. An employer shall not declare or take part in a lock-out and a worker shall not take part in a strike in connection with any trade dispute unless the dispute has been reported to the Minister in accordance with the provisions of art. 2 of this order and twenty-one days have elapsed since the date of the report and the dispute has not during that time been referred by the Minister for settlement in accordance with the provisions of that article."

By art. 5 (as amended by S.R. & O., 1942, No. 1973, and S.R. & O., 1944, No. 1437):

"(1) Where in any trade or industry in any district terms and conditions of employment are established which have been settled by machinery of ation or arbitration to which the parties are organisations of employers and trade unions representative respectively of substantial proportions of employers and workers engaged in that trade or industry in that district (hereinafter referred to as 'recognised terms and conditions') all employers in that trade or industry in that district shall observe the recognised terms and conditions or such terms and conditions of employment as are not less favourable than the recognised terms and conditions. If any question arises as to the nature, scope or effect of the recognised terms and conditions in any trade or industry in any district or as to whether an employer is or was observing the recognised terms and conditions or was observing terms and conditions which are or were not less favourable than the recognised terms and conditions, that question may be referred to the Minister . . . by any organisation of employers or any trade union which in the opinion of the Minister is an organisation or trade union that habitually takes part in the settlement of wages and working conditions in the trade or industry concerned and if so reported the question thereupon be dealt with in the same manner as if it were a trade dispute reported to the Minister under the provisions of art. 2 of this order and the provisions of that article shall apply accordingly: so, however, that in making an award on any question referred by the Minister by virtue of the powers conferred by this paragraph the National Arbitration Tribunal shall have regard not only to the provisions of para. (2) of this article, but also to any collective agreements concerning the terms and conditions of employment of workers in comparable trades or industries . . . (4A) Where an award has been made by the National Arbitration Tribunal in consequence of a dispute made under the foregoing provisions of this article, then as from the date of the award, it shall be and, in the case of a retrospective award, shall be deemed to have been an implied term of the contract between the employer and workers to whom the award applies that the wages to be paid and the conditions of employment to be observed under the contract shall, until varied by a subsequent agreement, decision or award such as is mentioned in the foregoing provisions of this article, be in accordance with the award. (5) Any reference in the foregoing provisions of this article to an agreement, decision or award shall be construed as a reference to that agreement, decision or award as modified by any subsequent agreement, decision or award."

The Minister defines a trade dispute as follows:

"The expression 'trade dispute' means any dispute or difference between employers and workmen, or between workmen and workmen connected with the employment or non-employment, or the terms of the employment or with the conditions of labour of any person."

Counsel for the plaintiff did not contend that on this definition a dispute between one employee and his employers is not included within it—and, indeed, he contended that this point has been affirmatively decided by a Divisional Court (see R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. South Shields Corpn. (2)).* More than this, counsel for the plaintiff conceded that, if the terms of the definition be given their literal meaning, they are wide enough to include the dispute which has arisen between the plaintiff and the corporation. He argued, however, that some of the other provisions of the order of 1940 compel a narrower interpretation of the definition than that which its language prima facie demands, and in particular, that the literal interpretation of the definition should be cut down so as to exclude a dispute between a workman and his employers arising out of the interpretation of the workman's contract of service. The way he advanced was this. He argued first that the settlement of contractual disputes was outside the purview of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 58AA, which envisaged claims of employees, not in enforcement of their contractual rights, but for extra wages or improved conditions which were outside and beyond those to which their agreements already entitled them—claims for the settlement of which no tribunal already existed and which, unless speedily dealt with, might lead to disastrous strikes in a time of national emergency. The order of 1940 was brought into being to avert such dangers as these and not to facilitate the settlement of private contractual disputes for the determination of which tribunals, namely, His Majesty's courts, already existed. Counsel for the plaintiff then pointed to art. 2 (5) as supporting this general approach to the order. This paragraph has a dual effect. It provides (i) that any award made under art. 2 shall be binding on the employers and employees concerned; and (ii) that, as from the date of the award (or other date as therein specified) its terms shall (in effect) be incorporated by implication in the contracts already existing between such employers and employees respectively. How, asked counsel for the plaintiff, could an award interpreting a provision of a subsisting contract be implied as a term of that contract? What the second part of art. 2 (5) is aiming at, he says, is the incorporation in the contract of something that is not already in it, for example, some change in wages or working conditions. Counsel for the plaintiff then contrasted art. 2 of the order with art. 5. That article, while empowering the reference of certain agreements to the tribunal, is confined to national agreements, and, although the tribunal can consider and decide the effect of such agreements, there is no provision (as there is in art. 2) that its award shall be binding on the parties concerned. It is merely provided that it shall thenceforth be an implied term of the national agreement to which it relates. From the above considerations counsel for the plaintiff proceeds to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the width of the definition of "trade dispute," differences arising out of the interpretation of private, as distinct from national, agreements of service are outside it. And, by way of illustration, he said that it would be monstrous if an employee, having a long-term service agreement, who was summarily dismissed for fraud, could be taken, at the instance of his employers, to the tribunal and be thus deprived of his rights as a citizen to have his case heard and determined by a judge and jury.

* As to position under the Industrial Disputes Order, 1951, see ibid.

The contrary arguments (apart from the citation of authority, which I will consider later) of counsel for the defendant corporation may be summarised as follows. The language of the definition of "trade dispute" in art. 7 of the order so plainly covers differences such as that which has arisen between the plaintiff and the corporation that the court cannot be justified in excluding them in the absence of compelling indications in other parts of the order, and no indications sufficiently compelling are to be found. My attention was drawn to the fact that the definition is not the hurried work of some hard-pressed draftsman in time of war, but was fashioned in its present shape so long ago as 1906. The definition is to be found in substantially the same terms in s. 5 (3) of the Trades Disputes Act, 1906. This statute was not concerned with industrial conciliation, but the definition, in precisely its present form, appears again in s. 8 of the Industrial Courts Act, 1919. And, as appears from the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 58AA, that regulation specifically provides that the term is to have the same meaning as that in the Act of 1919. It is, accordingly, argued, with some force, that a strong case must be made out for whittling down the plain meaning and effect of words which, presumably, have received legislative consideration over so long a period of years and which no legislative authority has ever thought proper to alter. It was then submitted that in practically every case where a dispute arises by reason of employees demanding, and employers refusing, an increase in wages or improved conditions the first thing the tribunal has to do is to inquire what are the subsisting wages and conditions to which the men, by virtue of their contracts, are already entitled, and that in many cases such an inquiry necessarily involves the interpretation contracts by the tribunal. From this it is argued that the consideration of private agreements as well, must have been within the contemplation of the authors of the order of 1940. The plaintiff's argument founded on the second provision of art. 2 (5), it is submitted to me that the fact that it could have no application to a case of the present is irrelevant and is quite insufficient to warrant the cutting of the definition of trade dispute in the way that the plaintiff invites me to do. The first provision of art. 2 (5) is applicable to all decisions or awards of the tribunal, including the one now under consideration, made on references to art. 2. The second provision is applicable to the general run of such cases made on claims for wages or conditions beyond those already conferred by contract. The fact that this particular provision is inapplicable to certain cases cannot justify the view that, notwithstanding the plain meaning of "dispute" in art. 7, the definition article, the scope of the order is confined to cases which admit of the application of that provision.

In my judgment, and apart altogether from such authority as exists on the point, the arguments of counsel for the corporation are sound. The obvious purpose of the order of 1940 was to establish a tribunal which could deal, and deal speedily (for speed was clearly one of the main objects of the order), with disputes between employers and workmen which, unless so dealt with, might lead to strikes and lock-outs at a time when this country could least afford industrial unrest. Such unrest can well arise from a grievance, real or imaginary, under a private contract of service, and it appears to me to be inherently probable that the intention of the order was to exclude disputes resulting from breaches of such contracts from its scope. Approaching the order, then, from this point of view, I am not surprised to find that disputes of this character are unquestionably within its scope if one looks to the definition article alone, and, in my opinion, it would require a great deal more than the matters relied on by counsel for the plaintiff to justify the alteration of the definition and, by so doing, to arrive, not at an expected, but at an unexpected, result. I am not impressed by the force of the hypothetical case, suggested by counsel for the plaintiff, of the long-term employee summarily dismissed for dishonesty. It is true that the difference arising therefrom could, in fact, be regarded as a "dispute," the jurisdiction of the tribunal would only be concurrent with, and not exclusive of, that of the courts. And if the employee immediately issued proceedings for damages, as he most probably would, I have no doubt but that the tribunal could and would (unless anticipating immediate industrial unrest) take prompt action on any report submitted to him by the employers or the Minister in the trial in the courts. If, on the other hand, he had reason to suppose that his dismissal would occasion immediate and widespread sympathetic action by fellow employees or others, I see no reason why he should not avail himself of the speedy machinery of the tribunal rather than wait until the question of his action had been decided by the courts and, possibly, by the ultimate appeal to the tribunal.

I now turn to the authorities to which I was referred. In R. v. National Industrial Tribunal. Ex p. Horatio Crowther & Co., Ltd. (3) the headnote is:

"On November, 1946, workmen employed by the applicants, a company, through their union had pressed for changes in wages and conditions of service. On Mar. 28, 1947, the company gave the workmen on the retarding side of their business, including those in the union, notice terminating their employment as from Apr. 4. On Apr. 14, the matter was referred to the Minister of Labour and National Service, who referred it to the National Arbitration Tribunal. The claim of the workmen included that: ' (1) The reinstatement from the date of dismissal of the workers dismissed.' The award of the tribunal stated: ' They find in favour of the claim set out in item (1) . . . and award accordingly.' On an application for an order of certiorari to quash the award: HELD: (i) although at the date of the report to the Minister of Labour the contract of service between the company and the workmen had been terminated, there was nevertheless a 'trade dispute,' within the meaning of art. 7 of the order of 1940, which had been properly referred under art. 2 (1). (ii) a direction to reinstate the workmen would be ultra vires the tribunal, and, as (CROOM-JOHNSON, J., dissentiente) the finding on item (1) of the claim was equivalent to such a direction, the award in so far as it related to that finding must be quashed."

LORD GODDARD, C.J., after referring to the notice determining the men's employment, said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 694) that no question arose as to that being in any way a notice otherwise than in accordance with the contracts of service. Then, in the course of considering and rejecting the argument submitted on behalf of the employers that there could not be a trade dispute between them and employees whose employment had already been determined, he said (ibid., 695):

"Supposing a dispute arose whether the workers in a particular industry or branch of an industry could be, as the employers contended, dismissed at an hour's notice or whether they were entitled, as the workers contended, to a week's notice. There you would have a dispute connected with the terms of employment. It appears to me clear that an employer could not avoid a reference by the Minister if the matter was reported to him by discharging his workmen and saying: 'They are no longer in my service, whether I rightly or wrongly dismissed them.' If an employer discharges his workmen without proper notice, although the workmen would have an action for wrongful dismissal, they are not from the moment of discharge in the employer's service, but if the contention advanced by the employers in this case be right the question of what notice workers in this industry or this factory should be given could not be settled by the tribunal."

In R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. Imperial Tobacco Co., Ltd. (4) the headnote is:

"A war emergency committee was set up in the tobacco industry in 1941, and the workers' side of the committee asked for increases of rates of wages, which the employers' side refused. As they were unable to come to an agreement the Ministry of Labour and National Service, in answer to an application by the workers' side, made an order under the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, referring the dispute to the National Arbitration Tribunal, a body set up by the same order. The employers applied for orders of prohibition on the ground that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to hear the dispute. They maintained that the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, art. 1, which provided that the tribunal should be constituted for 'the purpose of settling trade disputes which cannot otherwise be determined' must be construed as 'for the purpose of settling trade disputes for the determination of which no machinery exists,' and that, as the workers' claims were in effect claims for minimum rates, the machinery of the trade board existed for the settlement of the disputes: HELD: the workers' claims were not for minimum rates of wages. The disputes arose out of claims for rises on actual rates of wages paid, and, consequently, the trade board had no jurisdiction to hear the present disputes. The Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, has to be read as a whole and art. 1 does not limit the jurisdiction of the tribunal."

For present purposes that case is mainly useful for the observations of the members of the court on the scope of the order of 1940 notwithstanding the apparently limiting or qualifying words which are to be found in art. 1. On this subject VISCOUNT CALDECOTE, C.J., said ([1943] 2 All E.R. 166):

"When the words of . . . art. 2 [of the order of 1940] are looked at, it will be seen that the article deals with trade disputes, that is, trade disputes within the meaning of the definition . . . I . . . think that these are trade disputes which cannot otherwise be determined either by the trade boards or by agreement. I further think that upon a proper review of this order, the jurisdiction of the National Arbitration Tribunal is not to be found in the introductory words of art. 1, but is to be ascertained from the order as a whole. If a trade dispute gets before the National Arbitration Tribunal regularly, it seems to me that jurisdiction to entertain the dispute in question follows as a matter of course. Let me look at art. 2 to see how the matter stands. Article 2 (1) of the order provides in the widest terms, quite unqualified terms, that: 'If any trade dispute exists or is apprehended, that dispute, if not otherwise determined, may be reported to the Minister . . .'. Article 2 (2) provides that the Minister shall—he must—refer the matter for settlement in accordance with any suitable means, suitable that is, in his opinion, for settling the dispute, which are the result of agreement, but it is still true to say that that applies to any trade dispute. Article 2 (3) says that failing suitable means, the Minister may refer the matter for settlement to the National Arbitration Tribunal, and art. 2 (4), under which I think the Minister was acting in this case, provides that when ' . . . steps have not resulted in a prompt settlement of the dispute, the Minister shall refer the dispute for settlement to the National Arbitration Tribunal . . .'. Those provisions seem to me quite plainly to give jurisdiction to the National Arbitration Tribunal to entertain a trade dispute which has been properly referred to it; otherwise it seems to me nonsense would be made of the articles to which I have referred, and I see no reason why any limitation of the right of the National Arbitration Tribunal should be supposed to exist, subject to this, that it must be a trade dispute, and it must be a trade dispute which has come before the Arbitration Tribunal in accordance with the provisions to which I have referred. I think it is a much safer way of construing these provisions which create the tribunal and create the jurisdiction of the tribunal to refer to the operative words of the article as a whole, than to pay attention solely to the introductory words of art. 1, where the purpose of the establishment of the National Arbitration Tribunal is stated."

OMPHEYS, J., after referring to the words, "For the purposes of settling trade disputes which cannot otherwise be determined", in art. 1 of the order, said (ibid., 169):

"All I desire to say about that is that I am quite clearly of opinion, with my Lord, that whatever may be the effect of the introduction of these words, they cannot and do not limit the jurisdiction of the Minister or of the National Arbitration Tribunal . . . It is not the law of England that any tribunal set up by Parliament or by a statutory order can be prohibited from functioning, so long as it keeps within the terms of the statute or the order merely because there may be a different way, which that body cannot take, of arriving at the same result."

QUITH, J., dealt with the matter as follows (ibid., 171):

"I agree with the judgments delivered by my Lords, and I would add only a few sentences on a single point, that is on the construction of the words 'which cannot otherwise be determined' in art. 1. It has been contended that those words mean 'for the determination of which no other machinery, whether statutory or otherwise, exists.' If they did mean that, in my view, that would not curtail the jurisdiction of the tribunal. But can they mean that? The order must be read as a whole. Article 2 (2) provides that where suitable means of settling the dispute exist by virtue of an agreement, the Minister has to resort to those means, and do so unsuccessfully, before he can refer the dispute to the tribunal. The words in art. 1 are, in my view, no more than an anticipation, in language perhaps unnecessarily wide, of this later provision. Indeed, I am not sure that the language is even unnecessarily wide, for while the words 'which cannot otherwise be determined' are capable of meaning 'which cannot be determined by any other means,' they are equally capable of meaning 'which cannot be determined by certain specific other means,' namely, the means specified below in art. 2 (2), and this is, in my view, their true meaning."

In R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal. Ex p. Midgley Harmer, Ltd. (5), the facts were as follows. On May 23, 1945, the Minister referred to the tribunal a dispute arising out of a claim by some of the employees of Midgley Harmer, Ltd., for an increase of pay under the terms of an agreement, dated Aug. 9, 1944, between the Engineering and Allied Employers' National Federation and certain trade unions. Midgley Harmer, Ltd., who were not a party to that agreement, were paying their employees at a higher rate than that mentioned in the agreement, and they contended that the agreement did not, therefore, apply to them, that art. 5 of the order of 1940 did not make it apply, and that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the dispute. In his judgment, LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 197):

"The particulars of the dispute [referred to the tribunal by the Minister] were as follows: 'The dispute arises out of a claim made by the workmen mentioned in sched. 1 for increases in rates of pay under the terms of the agreement dated Aug. 9, 1944, between the Engineering and Allied Employers' National Federation and certain trade unions'."

After referring to the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 58AA (1), and art. 1 and other provisions of the order of 1940, LORD GREENE, M.R., said (ibid., 198):

"The only limit on the jurisdiction of the tribunal which appears there is that the matters that can be referred to it are confined to trade disputes. The definition of 'trade dispute' is to be found in art. 7 of the order."

He then read the definition and proceeded (ibid.):

"It appears to me to be really incapable of argument that, on the true construction of that definition, the present dispute is not a trade dispute within the meaning of the order. The employers, on the one hand, and the work-people, on the other, are in dispute or difference connected with the terms of employment, namely, the wages which the employees are to be paid. Prima facie, therefore, the matter is clearly a trade dispute in respect of which the National Arbitration Tribunal is the competent body to decide."

After a reference to art. 5 (1) of the order of 1940 and to the terms of the agreement of Aug. 9, 1944, LORD GREENE, M.R., said (ibid., 199):

"The employers' case, as far as I understand it, is of this nature. They say that this agreement, which, for convenience, I shall call the national agreement, does not provide for increases to be given to female workers save in the case of those who are earning wages at rates mentioned in the agreement itself. It does not apply, they argue, and art. 5 does not make it applicable, to a case where the wages of the female workers are already above the scales mentioned in the agreement. Therefore, it is said, the National Arbitration Tribunal has no jurisdiction to take this controversy into consideration, in other words, it is not competent to the employees to say that this agreement applies to them and gives them the right, pursuant to art.

of the order of 1940, to the increase which they are demanding. The employees say that the effect of the agreement, on its true construction, as set into force against the employers under art. 5 of the order, gives to the male employees of Midgley Harmer, Ltd., the right to the increases mentioned, irrespective of what they were earning before. Why that does not constitute a trade dispute, I am afraid I am incapable of understanding." ROMER, L.J., said (ibid., 200):

"I agree. In the present case there is a dispute as to the meaning and effect of the agreement of Aug. 9, 1944. In my judgment, that is plainly a trade dispute within the definition contained in the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940. The argument of counsel for the employers really amounts to this: 'The construction which my clients seek to place on the agreement of Aug. 9, 1944, is clearly right. If the National Arbitration Tribunal decides against my clients, it will be deciding wrongly. On Feb. 28, 1945, in a similar case, the National Arbitration Tribunal did decide wrongly, and I am apprehensive that they will do the same again.' That is not an objection to jurisdiction. It is merely a suggestion that the tribunal has misconstrued the agreement once and will misconstrue it again. It is not for this court to form any view about the meaning of the agreement. That is entirely a matter for the tribunal, and I, of course, have formed no view one way or the other."

Counsel for the plaintiff says that the statement which I have cited from the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J., in Ex p. Crowther (3) was obiter. So it was, but it is a clear guide to what the views of LORD GODDARD, C.J., were on the point I am considering, and I accord to it the weight to which all his opinions, specially expressed, are entitled. Then, as to the Imperial Tobacco Co. case, counsel for the plaintiff, while admitting that the observations of LORD MACCOTE, C.J., and HUMPHREYS, J., are against him so far as they went, admits that they did not go far enough. Moreover, he placed some reliance (which I am afraid I do not myself appreciate) on the judgment of ASQUITH, J., in regard to Ex p. Midgley Harmer, Ltd. (5), counsel for the plaintiff said that the agreement which was there under discussion was a national agreement, and so, apparently, it was. It was pointed out, however, by counsel for the defendant corporation that LORD GREENE, M.R., said that the reference by the Master was, not under art. 5 of the order of 1940, but under art. 2, and there was to be no sufficient ground for supposing that this was not the case.

On the whole it seems to me that, although none of the cases to which I have referred is direct authority in support of the proposition that the National Arbitration Tribunal had jurisdiction to deal with the rights of employers and employees under private—as distinct from national—agreements of service, judicial utterances which I have cited tend to suggest that my own view that the tribunal had such jurisdiction is correct, and no authority was cited to the contrary. I, accordingly, hold that, not only did the tribunal in fact hear the question which the plaintiff has sought to put in issue on the present originating summons, but it had full jurisdiction to do so. From this it follows, counsel for the plaintiff conceded, that the matter is, as between the plaintiff and the defendant corporation, res judicata. In these circumstances the question of construction of the resolutions of Oct. 4, 1939, and Jan. 23, 1940, does not arise. It only remains for me to dismiss, for the above reasons, the originating summons, and I, accordingly, do so, with costs.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Craigen, Hicks & Co. (for the plaintiff); Robins, Hay & Waters, Agents for D. P. Heath, town clerk, Birkenhead (for the corporation); Solicitor, Ministry of Labour and National Service.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MELDRUM'S WILL TRUSTS. SWINSON AND ANOTHER v. MELDRUM AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Upjohn, J.), December 18, 19, 1951.]

Administration of Estates—Order of application of assets—Variation of statutory order—Indication in will of intention to vary—Bequest of “residue of my deposit account . . . after all . . . debts . . . have been liquidated”—Separate gift of residuary estate—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), sched. I, Part II, para. 8 (a).

By his will, dated May 21, 1948, the testator, who died on June 2, 1948, gave certain property to A., including the sum of £500 for her immediate expenses, all moneys standing to the credit of his current account, and “the residue of my deposit account at Lloyds Bank . . . after all legacies debts funeral and other expenses have been liquidated but excluding death duties and testamentary expenses.” The testator gave his residuary estate to trustees on trust to pay a part of the income thereof to his son, H., and a part to A. during the life of A., and after A.’s death to hold on trust for H. absolutely. The testator and a partner were interested in two companies which were family concerns, and it was their practice to borrow from the companies money which they repaid at their convenience. At the time of his death the testator owed £10,000 to one company and £9,000 to the other, his other liabilities being small. At the date of his will and at the date of his death there was about £12,000 in the deposit account.

HELD: there was clear indication in the will that the testator intended to vary the order of application of assets specified in sched. I, Part II, to the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, and, therefore, under s. 34 (3) of the Act and para. 8 (a) of sched. I, Part II, the provisions contained in the will applied in regard to the fund out of which the debts were to be paid and the sums of £10,000 and £9,000 were to be paid primarily out of the deposit account.

Re Littlewood ([1931] 1 Ch. 443), and Re James ([1947] 1 All E.R. 402), applied.

AS TO ORDER OF APPLICATION OF ASSETS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, p. 375, para. 704; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supplement, Vol. 24, Executors and Administrators, Nos. 5908a-5919a.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re James, [1947] 1 All E.R. 402; [1947] Ch. 256; [1947] L.J.R. 735; 176 L.T. 370; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Kempthorne, [1930] 1 Ch. 268; 99 L.J.Ch. 107; 142 L.T. 111; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Gordon, [1940] 3 All E.R. 205; [1940] Ch. 769; 109 L.J.Ch. 289; 163 L.T. 308; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Smith, [1913] 2 Ch. 216; 83 L.J.Ch. 13; 108 L.T. 952; 23 Digest 497, 5640.
- (5) Re Littlewood, [1931] 1 Ch. 443; 100 L.J.Ch. 243; 144 L.T. 718; Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Atkinson, [1930] 1 Ch. 47; 99 L.J.Ch. 35; 142 L.T. 129; Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine, on the true construction of the will of Harrison Meldrum, (a) whether the word “debts,” in a direction to pay debts out of a deposit account which was specifically bequeathed to the second defendant, included sums owing by the testator to companies which were family concerns, and (b) whether the will showed an intention to vary the order of application of assets mentioned in the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, sched. I, Part II.

R. J. T. Gibson for the plaintiffs (the trustees).

Harold Christie, K.C., and H. H. Monroe for the first defendant, the residuary legatee.

Montgomery White, K.C., and J. A. Brightman for the second defendant, specific legatee.

UPJOHN, J.: This summons raises some interesting and difficult points in relation to the incidence of debts and legacies as between two different funds arising under the will of the testator, Harrison Meldrum. The testator made his will on 21, 1948, and on May 25, 1948, he made a codicil disposing of certain shares of a company known as J. James & Co., Ltd. He died on June 2, 1948, and the will was duly proved in the Principal Probate Registry on Aug. 21, 1948, by the executors named in the will, viz., the plaintiffs, Reginald Barnes Swinson and Ronald Sydney Dawe, and the first defendant, Harold Meldrum, the testator's son.

By cl. 1 of his will the testator appointed the first defendant and the plaintiffs as executors and trustees. Clause 4 begins with the words: "I bequeath the residue of my real and personal estate . . . legacies free of duty," and the testator then sets out a number of specific legacies in sub-clauses (a) to (p) inclusive. In cl. 4 (q) he says:

"To Annie Leeman Meldrum [the second defendant] the sum of £500 for her immediate expenses and all articles of domestic or personal use and ornament including furniture pictures wines spirits linen that may belong to me as well as any share of mine in the motor car and all moneys standing to the credit of my current account with Lloyds Bank at Dartmouth and of my deposit account with the Post Office Savings Bank and also all my shares and national savings certificates and the residue of my deposit account with Lloyds Bank Dartmouth after all legacies debts funeral and other expenses have been liquidated but excluding death duties and testamentary expenses."

By cl. 5 the testator gave an annuity of £500 to the second defendant for her life and made provision for a fund to be set aside to secure the payment of that annuity. By cl. 9 he devised and bequeathed

"all the residue of my property including property over which I may have power of appointment and the corpus of the fund set aside to answer the annuity of [the second defendant] unto my trustees upon trust to pay the same as to three fourths to [the first defendant] and as to one fourth to the second defendant] during the life of [the second defendant] and after the death of [the second defendant] to hold my residuary estate upon trust for [the first defendant] absolutely."

The contest here is of a twofold nature, the questions being (i) what liabilities of the testator were included in the expression "debts" in cl. 4 (q) of his will?, and (ii) whether, on the true construction of the will and having regard to the provisions of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, the primary fund for payment of legacies, debts, and funeral and other expenses is the residue of the deposit account at Lloyds Bank or whether it is the residuary estate of the testator which he dealt with by cl. 9 of his will. Before I can answer those questions, I must briefly advert to one or two other relevant facts. The Meldrum and the Swinson families were jointly interested in a number of shipping concerns in which they owned approximately in equal shares. They had a number of companies which were managed by the firm of Meldrum & Swinson or by the company of Meldrum & Swinson, Ltd., and there were two companies in particular to which I am concerned—one the Essex Transport & Trading Co., Ltd. (which I will call the transport company) and the other the Essex Steamship Co., Ltd. (which I will call the steamship company). At the date of his death, the testator was indebted to the steamship company in the sum of £10,000, and to the transport company in the sum of £9,000.

The first question which I have to determine is whether the testator included the two sums in the expression "debts" when he used the words in cl. 4 (q), "after all legacies debts funeral and other expenses have been liquidated." The LORDSHIP considered the evidence and cl. 4 (q) of the will, said that the question depended solely on the special facts of the case and the wording of the will and that he could find nothing which enabled him to read the word "debts" as meaning "debts other than loans from family companies", and continued:] I now turn to the difficult and important question whether the matter is affected by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. Section 34 (3) of that Act provides:

"Where the estate of a deceased person is solvent his real and personal estate shall, subject to rules of court and the provisions hereinafter contained as to charges on property of the deceased, and to the provisions, if any, contained in his will, be applicable towards the discharge of the funeral, testamentary and administration expenses, debts and liabilities payable thereout in the order mentioned in Part II of sched. I to this Act."

The heading to sched. I, Part II, is: "Order of application of assets where the estate is solvent." Paragraph 1 of the schedule is: "Property of the deceased undisposed of by will . . ." Paragraph 2 is:

"Property of the deceased not specifically devised or bequeathed but included (either by a specific or general description) in a residuary gift, subject to the retention out of such property of a fund sufficient to meet any pecuniary legacies, so far as not provided for as aforesaid."

Counsel for the second defendant contended that, as there is a residuary gift here, under para. 2 residue is the primary fund for payment of the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. Paragraph 4 is:

"Property of the deceased charged with, or devised or bequeathed (either by a specific or general description) subject to a charge for the payment of debts."

It is admitted by counsel for the second defendant that cl. 4 (g) of the will does constitute a charge for the payment of debts, but he contends that, under the provisions of sched. I, Part II, the property referred to in para. 4 ranks behind that referred to in para. 2, so that residue remains the primary fund. Paragraph 8 is:

"The following provisions shall also apply—(a) The order of application may be varied by the will of the deceased . . ."

It is, therefore, clear from s. 34 (3) of the Act and sched. I, Part II, para. 8 (a), that the provisions in sched. I, Part II, are subject to the provisions contained in the will and the order of application may be varied by the will. In other words, it is a matter of construction of the will in each case whether the provisions of sched. I, Part II, apply or whether they have been varied by the terms of the will. I propose, therefore, to consider the construction of this will before turning to the authorities which have been cited to me. Reading cl. 4 (g) of the will, I can feel no doubt in my own mind what the testator was meaning to do, and I should have thought it was clear almost beyond argument that he was intending to direct that the legacies which he had given and his debts and funeral and other expenses, whatever they might be, were to be paid or liquidated out of the deposit account and that his death duties and testamentary expenses were to be discharged out of residue, which was the other fund for the discharge of those obligations. With respect, I agree with the words used by ROXBURGH, J., in Re James (1), when he said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 404):

" . . . I should hold that the direction to pay debts out of a particular fund necessarily involved an intention to exonerate some other fund which the testator disposed of in some other part of his will—in other words, necessarily involved an intention to exonerate the residue of his estate which he devised and bequeathed to his wife absolutely."

It is true that in that case the direction was to trustees to realise certain property and to meet certain obligations, but in the present case, speaking without reference to authority and merely construing the words of the will, I should have thought that the testator was plainly saying that the legacies, debts, and funeral other expenses were to be paid out of the deposit account, and the estate and testamentary expenses were to be paid out of residue. In other words, paraphrase the words which the testator used, in my judgment, it is as though said in cl. 9 of his will: "I devise and bequeath all the residue of my property to my trustees upon trust, after discharging death duties and testamentary expenses thereout, to pay the income" in the way indicated. Had he said that, I hardly think there could have been any argument about it. That being my view of the true construction of the will, I turn to the authorities to see whether there is anything in them which prevents me from giving effect to it. I think, are the intentions of the testator, which, in my judgment, clearly require the order of application of assets laid down in the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, sched. I, Part II. Counsel for the second defendant relied on the decision of MAUGHAM, J., in Re Kempthorne (2), which was overruled by the House of Lords on appeal, but only on a point of construction of that particular will. According to para. 3 and para. 4 of sched. I, Part II, to the Act of 1925, MAUGHAM, J., said ([1930] 1 Ch. 278):

"Then come two further paragraphs, which I think are somewhat difficult to understand, in relation to the subject-matter."

On reading para. 3 and para. 4, MAUGHAM, J., continued (ibid.):

"Now in both of those cases it is to be noticed that the legislature is assuming that the testator by his will has specifically appropriated in one case, or devised or bequeathed in the other, property for the payment of debts; or that he has charged with payment of debts specific property, or some property, under a general description, or devised or bequeathed property subject to a charge for payment of debts, and I cannot help concluding that those two paragraphs mean that the fact that the testator has done one of those things is not per se to constitute, to use the words of s. 34 (1), a provision in the will which operates to alter the order of application which is specified in Part II of the schedule."

The statement of the law was acted on by BENNETT, J., in Re Gordon (3) and was treated by him as being binding notwithstanding that the decision of MAUGHAM, J., was reversed on the particular facts of that case. As I understand MAUGHAM, J., he is saying that, having regard to the presence of para. 1 and para. 2 in sched. I, Part II, an indication in the will that a particular piece of property is to be charged with payment of debts is not sufficient to enable one to assume that the testator is intending to alter the order of application of assets, because, if that were so, one could never give effect to these paragraphs where there was a partial intestacy, bringing in para. 1, or a gift of residue (as in this case), bringing in para. 2. I think that ROXBURGH, J., recognises that in Re James (1). Nevertheless, it seems to me to remain a question purely of construction of each will whether or not the testator has varied the order of application of assets or not.

Counsel for the second defendant contended that the intention behind sched. I, Part II, was that the rules in regard to personal property were to be assimilated to the rule before 1926 in regard to real property. That rule, which was stated by EVE, J. ([1913] 2 Ch. 221) in Re Smith (4), was that, where there was a charge of debts on real estate, one had to find a clear indication in the will that the testator intended, not only to charge the realty, but also to discharge personalty, whereas it was sufficient to find a charge to pay debts on personalty to exonerate residue. Counsel for the first defendant contended, on the other hand, that the intention of sched. I, Part II, to the Act of 1925 was to bring the law into line with the previously existing rule relating to personalty, and in support of his contention he cited an observation of LAWRENCE, L.J. ([1930] 1 Ch. 298) in Re Kempthorne (2). My own view of the matter remains that it is a question of construction of each will whether or not the testator has intended to vary the order of application of assets, and I think I am justified in coming to that conclusion, not only on the words of the Act, but in view of the decision of MAUGHAM, J., in Re Littlewood (5), which was not entirely dissimilar to the present case as there was an express charge of debts and funeral and testamentary expenses on a specific bequest followed by an absolute gift of residue. The will being executed before the coming into force of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, the learned judge construed it in the light of the existing law, and he came to the conclusion that the charge of debts on certain specific bequests did exonerate the residuary estate, and, therefore, that the testator had intended to alter the order of application of assets specified in sched. I, Part II, to the Act of 1926. MAUGHAM, J., said ([1931] 1 Ch. 446):

“ In Re Kempthorne (2) I endeavoured to explain the difficulty which I felt in giving effect to some of the provisions of that Part of that schedule, and I understand that the Court of Appeal, who differed from me on one point in that case, also felt some difficulty in explaining the precise effect of those provisions. I think, however, that I am justified in taking the view that, prima facie, the paragraphs of the schedule are to have effect subject to the provisions of the will of the deceased, in cases where there is a reasonably clear indication of the intention of the deceased: and a fortiori, I think, is that the case where the will was executed before the coming into force of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. In the present case I have come to the conclusion that the testatrix has definitely expressed a desire that the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies shall be paid out of or charged upon the farm stock, implements, and tenant right of which she has disposed: and, following the principle adopted by the Court of Appeal in Re Kempthorne (2) and by CLAUSON, J., in Re Atkinson (6), I hold that the order of application of assets specified in Part II of sched. I to the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, has been varied by the provisions in the will of the testatrix . . . ”

I think I am also justified in coming to that conclusion having regard to the decision of ROXBURGH, J., in Re James (1). In that case the learned judge construed the will and found that the testator had indicated an intention to vary the order of application of assets. I am not unimpressed by the argument of counsel for the second defendant that it is difficult to reconcile the cases which I have just mentioned with the statement of the law by MAUGHAM, J., in Re Kempthorne (2), but, having come to the conclusion that it is, in each case, a matter of construction of the will, I can find nothing in the authorities which precludes me from giving effect to what I feel are the clear indications in cl. 4 (g) and cl. 9 of the will which is now before me as to what the testator intended.

In support of his contentions counsel for the second defendant referred to the general legacy of £500 given to the second defendant by cl. 4 (g) for her immediate expenses, and he pointed out that the testator must have intended that that sum should in any event be paid out of residue, because it would be absurd to suppose that he intended it to come out of the specific gift of the residue of the deposit account which she was given in that very same clause. It seems to me that the testator wanted that to be paid out immediately after his death, and I do not think he was considering whence it was ultimately to come. At all events, although this point gives rise to a difficulty, I cannot accept it as overriding what seems to me to be the clear words at the conclusion of that clause. Accordingly, for the reasons which I have stated, I propose to declare that the two sums of £10,000 and £9,000 are debts within the meaning of cl. 4 (g) of the will and on the true construction of the will they ought to be paid primarily out of the testator's deposit account at Lloyds Bank, Ltd.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Lattey & Dawe (for the plaintiffs and the first defendant); Kinch & Richardson (for the second defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NEWTON ABBOT CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v.
WILLIAMSON AND TREADGOLD, LTD.

NCERY DIVISION (Upjohn, J.), November 26, 27, December 17, 1951.]

of Land—Restrictive covenant—Covenant running with the land—Identification of dominant tenement — Enforcement by assignee — Covenant to protect covenantee's business—Benefit of land—Death of covenantee—No assent to vesting of benefit in beneficiary entitled—Power of beneficiary to assign benefit. inistration of Estates—Assent—Benefit of restrictive covenant—No express assent to vesting—Assignment by beneficiary.

In 1923 B.M. carried on business as an ironmonger on premises (hereinafter called "the plaintiffs' premises") which she owned in fee simple. Almost opposite to the plaintiffs' premises were other premises owned by B.M. (hereinafter called "the defendants' premises"). In 1923 B.M. sold the defendants' premises for an estate in fee simple to G. M. & Sons, who were then carrying on business as grocers on part of those premises, the purchasers covenanting with B.M. "that they the purchasers and the persons deriving title under them will not at any time hereafter carry on or cause to be carried on on any part of the hereditaments and premises hereinbefore expressed to be hereby conveyed any business of such a nature which will in any way affect or be in competition with the business of a furnishing ironmonger china dealer plumber sanitary or electrical engineer and that furnishing ironmongery shall mean that the purchasers and those deriving title under them shall not at any time hereafter sell or expose for sale any ironmongery or hardware brooms brushes baskets paints lamps and glasses of any description on any part of the hereditaments hereby conveyed." In 1947 the defendants acquired the defendants' premises in fee simple, the conveyance to them being made expressly subject to the said covenant. On Apr. 4, 1944, B.M. died, and by her will she appointed W., L., and V., to be her executors. She devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate not otherwise disposed of to L. absolutely, and on Jan. 8, 1945, the executors assented in writing to the vesting of the plaintiffs' premises in L. There was no assent in writing regarding the benefit of the restrictive covenant contained in the conveyance of 1923. The business of ironmonger was carried on after the death of B.M. by L. until 1948. In June, 1948, L. sold the business of ironmonger to the B.T.C. Society and by deed assigned to them the goodwill of the business and the benefit of the restrictive covenant. By a separate deed of even date, L. granted the said society a lease of the plaintiffs' premises for twenty-one years. In 1949 the said society amalgamated with the plaintiffs. The defendants having exposed for sale articles of ironmongery, the plaintiffs claimed an injunction restraining such sale.

HELD: (i) the conveyance of 1923 failed to identify the land for the benefit of which the covenant was taken, and, therefore, the benefit of the covenant could not be said to have passed with the assignment of the plaintiffs' premises without express mention.

Renals v. Cowlishaw (1879) (11 Ch.D. 866), applied.

(ii) although the benefit of the covenant had not been assigned to L. by the executors of B.M., that benefit was held by the executors as bare trustees for L., who was, therefore, entitled in equity thereto and was entitled to assign it in equity on an assignment of the plaintiffs' premises.

Dictum of SARGANT, J., in Lord Northbourne v. Johnston & Son ([1922] 2 Ch. 317), applied.

(iii) it could not be said that in 1923 B.M. took the covenant for the benefit of her business only and not for the benefit of the land, for the covenant enhanced the value of the latter and there was nothing in the conveyance of 1923 to lead to the conclusion that the object of the covenant was so limited.

(iv) it was not necessary that, for an assignee of the benefit of a covenant to maintain a suit based on the covenant, there should be something in the deed containing the covenant to define the land for the benefit of which the covenant was entered into, but the existence and situation of the land must be indicated in the deed or otherwise shown with reasonable certainty; bearing in mind the close juxtaposition of the plaintiffs' premises and the defendants' premises, the only reasonable inference to draw from the circumstances in 1923 was that B.M. took the covenant for the benefit of the plaintiffs' premises, which were, therefore, sufficiently identified.

Dictum of BENNETT, J., in Re Union of London & Smith's Bank, Ltd.,'s Conveyance ([1933] Ch. 625), dissented from.

AS TO RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 125-129, paras. 110, 111; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 40, pp. 310-328, Nos. 2648-2768.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Renals v. Cowlishaw, (1876), 9 Ch.D. 125; affd. C.A., (1879), 11 Ch.D. 866; 48 L.J.Ch. 830; 41 L.T. 116; 40 Digest 316, 2686.
- (2) Re Union of London & Smith's Bank, Ltd.,'s Conveyance, [1933] Ch. 611; 102 L.J.Ch. 241; 149 L.T. 82; Digest Supp.
- (3) Ives v. Brown, [1919] 2 Ch. 314; 88 L.J.Ch. 373; 122 L.T. 267; 40 Digest 322, 2728.
- (4) Northbourne (Lord) v. Johnston & Son, [1922] 2 Ch. 309; 92 L.J.Ch. 12; 128 L.T. 496; 40 Digest 321, 2722.
- (5) Formby v. Barker, [1903] 2 Ch. 539; 72 L.J.Ch. 716; 89 L.T. 249; 40 Digest 306, 2626.
- (6) London County Council v. Allen, [1914] 3 K.B. 642; 83 L.J.K.B. 1695; 111 L.T. 610; 78 J.P. 449; 40 Digest 302, 2602.
- (7) Reid v. Bickerstaff, [1909] 2 Ch. 305; 78 L.J.Ch. 753; 100 L.T. 952; 40 Digest 312, 2665.
- (8) Rogers v. Hosegood, [1900] 2 Ch. 388; 69 L.J.Ch. 652; 83 L.T. 186; 40 Digest 312, 2664.
- (9) Nicoll v. Fenning, (1881), 19 Ch.D. 258; 51 L.J.Ch. 166; 45 L.T. 738; 40 Digest 324, 2737.

ACTION for an injunction restraining the defendants, Williamson & Treadgold, Ltd., from carrying on, on certain premises, the business of a furnishing ironmonger, china dealer, plumber, or sanitary or electrical engineer, in breach of a covenant contained in a conveyance dated May 9, 1923.

R. C. C. J. Binney for the plaintiffs.

Michael Bowles for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 17. UPJOHN, J., read the following judgment. This is an action by the plaintiffs, Newton Abbot Co-operative Society, seeking to restrain the carrying on by the defendants, Williamson & Treadgold, Ltd., on premises known as 25 and 27, Fore Street and Swiss Cottage, Bovey Tracey, in the county of Devon, the business of a furnishing ironmonger, china dealer, plumber, or sanitary or electrical engineer, in breach of a covenant contained in a conveyance dated May 9, 1923. Neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants were parties to that conveyance, but the former claim to be entitled to the benefit of such covenant and allege that the latter are subject to a liability to observe the same. There is no dispute as to the facts, the defendants having sensibly made bold admissions in their defence and further admissions at the trial to enable the real point to be determined, and, in view of those admissions, it has not been necessary to adduce any oral evidence before me.

23 a Mrs. Bessie Mardon (whom I shall refer to as "Mrs. Mardon") had been for some years carrying on business as an ironmonger under the name of W. J. T. Mardon in premises known as Devonian, Fore Street, Bovey Tracey. She was the owner and occupier of those premises in fee simple. Almost entirely opposite to Devonian were premises known as 25 and 27, Fore Street; and those premises, but, as I understand it, forming part thereof, was a premises known as Swiss Cottage. I shall call these premises, 25 and 27, Fore Street and Swiss Cottage, "the defendants' premises." At this time Mrs. Mardon was the owner in fee simple of the defendants' premises, but parts thereof were in the occupation of tenants, as hereinafter appears. It appears that Mrs. Mardon was minded to sell the defendants' premises and by an agreement in writing dated Mar. 6, 1923, she contracted to sell the same to the firm of George Williamson & Sons, who were then carrying on business as grocers on part thereof, at 25, Fore Street. I need not refer to the contract, for the purchase was effected by a conveyance on sale dated May 9, 1923, which contained the recitals on which the plaintiffs rely in this action.

The conveyance (which I shall refer to as "the 1923 conveyance") was made by John French, of the first part (he was a mortgagee of the premises and did not enter the picture), Mrs. Mardon, described as of Devonian, Fore Street, Bovey Tracey, hereinafter called the vendor, of the second part, and George Mardon, John Charles Wynne Mardon, and Ralph Abbot Victor Mardon, described as of Bovey Tracey, being co-partners in the trade or business of grocers at Bovey Tracey carrying on business under the firm or style of George Mardon & Sons, hereinafter called the purchasers, of the third part. The conveyance contains a number of recitals which I need not read, and then proceeds as follows:

Now this indenture witnesseth that in pursuance of the said agreement in consideration of the sum of £600 now paid by the purchasers to the mortgagee at the request of the vendor out of the said purchase money of £1,100 the receipt whereof the mortgagee hereby acknowledges and also in consideration of the sum of £500 paid by the purchasers to the vendor in full payment and receipt of which said sums of £600 and £500 making together the said purchase money of £1,100 the vendor hereby acknowledges) the mortgagee as mortgagee hereby grants and conveys and the vendor as personal representative and as beneficial owner hereby grants conveys and confirms unto the purchasers all those dwelling-houses shop buildings and premises now known as numbers 25 and 27 Fore Street Bovey Tracey aforesaid now in the respective occupations of Messieurs Daniel George Upham and the said George Mardon and also the dwelling-house gardens and premises with the appurtenances at the rear of numbers 25 and 27 Fore Street Bovey Tracey aforesaid and known as Swiss Cottage and now in the occupation of Mr. I. Rumbleow and all other the hereditaments and premises conveyed to the said William James Thomas Mardon in the hereinbefore recited indenture of conveyance of June 26, 1900, including the dwelling-house and premises since erected by the said William James Thomas Mardon on part thereof to hold the same unto and to the use of the purchasers in fee simple as part of their partnership property freed and discharged from the hereinbefore recited indentures of mortgage second mortgage and transfers of mortgage and from all principal sums and interest and all other moneys thereby secured."

It now follows the restrictive covenant on which the plaintiffs rely:

"And the purchasers hereby covenant with the vendor that they the purchasers and the persons deriving title under them will not at any time hereafter carry on or cause to be carried on on any part of the hereditaments and premises hereinbefore expressed to be hereby conveyed any business of such a nature which will in any way affect or be in competition with the business of a furnishing ironmonger china dealer plumber sanitary or electrical engineer and that furnishing ironmongery shall mean that the purchasers and those deriving title under them shall not at any time hereafter sell or expose for sale any ironmongery or hardware brooms brushes baskets paints lamps and glasses of any description on any part of the hereditaments hereby conveyed."

I shall call this covenant "the restrictive covenant."

The defendants acquired the defendants' premises in 1947 and are now the occupiers and owners in fee simple thereof, but I need not trace in detail the devolution of the title of the purchasers in the 1923 conveyance to the defendants, for it is admitted on the pleadings that the defendants took with notice of the restrictive covenant, and, indeed, the conveyance to them, which was dated Apr. 30, 1947, was made expressly subject to that covenant.

The plaintiffs are now in occupation and are the owners in fee simple of the premises, Devonian. The devolution of their title is as follows. Mrs. Mardon remained in occupation of the premises Devonian until her death on Apr. 4, 1944. By her will, dated Apr. 24, 1941, she appointed W. J. T. Mardon, a son of the original W. J. T. Mardon, Leonard Soper Mardon, and V. G. Mardon, her sons, to be executors. She then gave free of duty her furniture, chattels, and personal effects to a daughter, and proceeded as follows:

"Subject to the payment of my debts funeral and testamentary expenses I give devise and bequeath all my real and personal estate not hereby or by any codicil hereto otherwise specifically disposed of unto my said son Leonard Soper Mardon absolutely."

This will was duly proved by the executors in the Exeter District Probate Registry on July 3, 1944, and on Jan. 8, 1945, the executors assented in writing to the vesting of Devonian in Leonard Soper Mardon, the residuary legatee. There was no assent in writing of the benefit of the restrictive covenant in the 1923 conveyance. The business of ironmonger had been carried on by Mrs. Mardon, or by her son, Leonard Soper Mardon, on her behalf, until her death, and thereafter Leonard Soper Mardon continued to carry on the business until 1948.

On May 22, 1948, by an agreement in writing he agreed to sell to the Bovey Tracey Co-operative Society the business of ironmonger carried on by him and to grant to the society a lease of Devonian for twenty-one years. This transaction was completed by two deeds, viz., an assignment dated June 14, 1948, between Leonard Soper Mardon and the society, whereby, in consideration of £1,825, Leonard Soper Mardon assigned the goodwill of the business to the society, and by cl. 2 he assigned the benefit of the covenant in the 1923 conveyance in these terms:

"For the consideration aforesaid and in pursuance of cl. 6 of the agreement the assignor (so far as he can legally assign the same) hereby assigns to the society the benefit of the covenant on the part of George Mardon Reginald Charles Wynne Mardon and Ralph Albert Victor Mardon contained in a conveyance dated May 9, 1923, and made between John French of the first part Bessie Mardon of the second part and the said George Mardon Reginald Charles Wynne Mardon and Ralph Albert Victor Mardon of the third part being a conveyance of numbers 25 and 27 Fore Street Bovey Tracey aforesaid and the dwelling-house gardens and appurtenances situate at the rear thereof and known as Swiss Cottage a copy of such covenant being set out in the schedule hereto."

I do not think I need refer in detail to the schedule which was, as stated, merely a copy of the covenant. The other document in this transaction was a lease of the same date and made between the same parties whereby Leonard Soper Mardon granted a lease of the premises Devonian to the society for twenty-one years from June 14, 1948, at the annual rental of £338. The society continued to carry on the business of ironmongers on the premises Devonia until they were amalgamated with the plaintiffs, an amalgamation which became effective on Apr. 6, 1949. I need not say more about that for it is admitted that the plaintiffs, who have carried on the business there ever since, stand for all purposes in the shoes of the Bovey Tracey Co-operative Society.

Now, turning to the defendants, after the conveyance to them of the defendants' premises in 1947, they continued to carry on the business of grocers there under the style or title of Slade & Sons, but at some time thereafter (the exact date does not appear) they began to expose for sale on such premises articles of ironmongery and hardware, and, after some informal conversations in the matter, on Mar. 17, 1950, a formal complaint was made by the plaintiffs' solicitors. Correspondence followed which I need not read, for it merely sets out the respective contentions of the parties and ultimately the writ in this action was issued on Apr. 6, 1951. The statement of claim, after setting out the title of the plaintiffs, alleges that the right to enforce the covenant became vested in the plaintiffs. They allege that the defendants went into possession of the defendants' premises with notice of the restrictive covenant and that in breach of that covenant the defendants have carried on the business of an ironmonger, that the plaintiffs have thereby suffered damage, and that the defendants threaten and intend to carry on such business. The plaintiffs claim an injunction and damages for breach of covenant. The defendants by their defence admit that they have sold ironmongery, hardware and similar articles, that they intend to continue so to do unless restrained by injunction, and that such sale and exposure for sale is within the prohibition contained in the 1923 conveyance. They further admit that the restrictive covenant contained in the 1923 conveyance is binding between the parties thereto, but conclude their defence in these words:

"But the defendants will contend that the plaintiffs (whether or not the benefit of the said covenant is or purports to be vested in them as alleged in the statement of claim) are not and never have been entitled to enforce the covenant against the defendants."

Thus, the sole issue before me is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the benefit of the restrictive covenant, and, if so, whether they are entitled to enforce it against the defendants. I will deal with the first point first. Counsel for the plaintiffs submitted, first, that the benefit of the restrictive covenant was annexed to Devonia so as to pass with the assignment of Devonia in equity without any express mention in such subsequent assignment—in other words, that the covenant runs with the land. Alternatively, he said that the plaintiffs are the express assigns of the benefit of the covenant, and as such are entitled to enforce it. In this difficult branch of the law one thing, in my judgment, is clear, viz., that in order to annex the benefit of a restrictive covenant to land so that it runs with the land without express assignment on a subsequent assignment of the land, the land for the benefit of which it is taken must be clearly identified in the conveyance containing the covenant. That has been established in a number of cases of high authority, and I need only refer shortly to two. In Renals v. Cowlishaw (1) JAMES, L.J., said (11 Ch.D. 868):

"I am of opinion that the decision of HALL, V.-C., is correct. It is impossible, as it seems to me, to distinguish this case from the cases to which he has referred. To enable an assign to take the benefit of restrictive covenants there must be something in the deed to define the property for the benefit of which they were entered into. Supposing I were now framing the deed afresh, I should not have the remotest idea how the covenant ought to be framed, as I cannot tell what the property was which the parties intended to be protected, and within what limits."

The second case, Re Union of London & Smith's Bank, Ltd., 's Conveyance (2), is also a decision of the Court of Appeal. ROMER, L.J., delivering the judgment of the court, said ([1933] Ch. 627):

"Now the defendants are not the original covenantees, and it therefore becomes necessary to ascertain what person other than the original covenantee is entitled to the benefit of a restrictive covenant affecting land. This question was put to himself by HALL, V.-C., in Renals v. Cowlishaw (1), and the answer was given in a judgment so well known that it is unnecessary to refer to it at length. It is a judgment that has received the approval both of this court and of the House of Lords, and has always been regarded as a correct statement of the law upon the subject. Stated shortly it laid down this: that, apart from what are usually referred to as building scheme cases (and this is not a case of that sort), a purchaser from the original covenantee of land retained by him when he executed the conveyance containing the covenant will be entitled to the benefit of the covenant if the conveyance shows that the covenant was intended to enure for the benefit of that particular land."

Looking at the 1923 conveyance, I can find nothing whatever which identifies the land for the benefit of which the covenant is alleged to be taken. Counsel for the plaintiffs relies on the fact that Mrs. Mardon is described as of Devon, Fore Street, but that, in my judgment, is quite insufficient to annex the benefit of the covenant to those premises. There is no other mention whatever of Devon in the conveyance. In my judgment, therefore, the plaintiffs fail on this point.

I turn, then, to his second submission, viz., that the plaintiffs are express assigns of the benefit of the restrictive covenant. Counsel for the defendants contends that, even if his submissions (with which I shall deal later) are wrong and the covenant was taken by Mrs. Mardon for the benefit of Devon to enable her to dispose of it to better advantage, yet there is here no complete chain of assignments vesting the benefit in the plaintiffs. He says that there was never any assignment of the benefit of the covenant by the executors of Mrs. Mardon to Leonard Soper Mardon, and, therefore, he was not in a position to assign the benefit of the covenant to the plaintiffs' predecessors in title. He relied on Ives v. Brown (3) and Lord Northbourne v. Johnston & Son (4). In my judgment, those authorities do not support his contention. The position as I see it was this. On the footing that the restrictive covenant was not annexed to the land so as to run with it, the benefit of the covenant is capable of passing by operation of law as well as by express assignment and formed part of Mrs. Mardon's personal estate on her death: see Ives v. Brown (3). It follows, therefore, that when her estate was duly wound up and administered—and this case has been argued before me on the footing that that happened many years ago—the benefit of the covenant was held by the executors as bare trustees for the residuary legatee, Leonard Soper Mardon, who was himself one of the executors. He, therefore, became entitled to the benefit of this restrictive covenant in equity, and, in my judgment, he was entitled to assign the benefit in equity on an assignment of Devon. No doubt, had the covenant been assigned to him by the executors, he could also have assigned it at law. That this is the position is, in my judgment, made clear by the passage in the judgment of SARGANT, J., in Lord Northbourne v. Johnston & Son (4) where the learned judge said ([1922] 2 Ch. 317):

"Mr. Grant for the defendants put the first of these defences thus: He admitted that if by the indenture of July 25, 1884, the trustees had conveyed to Lady Northbourne not only the unsold portions of the Shipcote Estate, but also the benefit of the restrictive covenants relating to the sold portions, she and those entitled under her would have been in a position to enforce these covenants so far as this defence is concerned. But he maintained that, when once the trustees had conveyed the land to Lady Northbourne without the benefit of the covenants, there was a complete and final severance; that the covenants remained in the trustees as mere covenants in gross unconnected with the protection or benefit of land; that they were incapable of being enforced in equity as against an assign of the covenantor: Formby v. Barker (5) and London County Council v. Allen (6), and that this defect could not be cured either by Lady Northbourne or her devisees joining with the trustees in an action, or by any subsequent assignment of the covenants by them or their assigns to Lady Northbourne or her devisees. In my judgment, however, this argument is unduly technical, neglects the substance of the matter and is unsustainable. It is of course clear that these restrictive covenants were entered into for the benefit, not of the trustees, but of Lady Northbourne, and that they were as much trustees for her of the benefit of these covenants as of the beneficial interests in the unsold portions of the estate. If, before the execution of the conveyance of July 25, 1884, they had capriciously refused to enforce the covenants, she would have been entitled to compel them to allow her to use their names in an action for the purpose on proper terms. And she could, undoubtedly, had the question arisen, have insisted on the inclusion in the conveyance to her of an express assignment of the benefit of these covenants. The circumstance that by the conveyance Lady Northbourne became the legal owner of the unsold land could not destroy her existing equitable right to have the restrictive covenants enforced for the protection of that very land. And a subsequent assignment by the trustees or their successors in title to Lady Northbourne or her devisees would merely restore matters to the position in which Lady Northbourne was throughout entitled to have them placed, and reunite, as legal rights, those equitable rights that were subsisting together originally. The case differs widely from either of the two reported cases last referred to—Formby v. Barker (5) and London County Council v. Allen (6)—and appears to me to be completely covered by the reasoning in the judgment of HALL, V.-C., in Renals v. Cowlishaw (1) and in my own recent decision in Ives v. Brown (3), a case which has many points of similarity to the present one."

The second main point was the question whether the defendants are liable to have the covenant enforced against them. This was the defendants' main defence in this action and counsel says that the restrictive covenant was not taken for the benefit of Devonian. He puts his case in this way. First, he says that in any event this was not taken for the benefit of any land, but was a covenant with Mrs. Mardon personally, solely for the benefit of her business. Secondly, he says that in order that an express assign of the benefit may sue an assignee of the burden of a covenant there must be some reference in the conveyance creating such covenant to the land for the benefit of which it was taken. It will be convenient to deal with the first point first.

Counsel for the defendants strongly urged that the covenant was taken solely to protect the goodwill of the business carried on at Devonian, that it had no reference to the land itself, and that it was not taken for the benefit of such land—in brief, that it was a covenant in gross incapable of assignment. He urged that taking such a covenant would benefit the business in that an enhanced price could be obtained for the business, but no such enhanced price would be obtained for the land. He relied on the fact that the covenant did not mention the vendors' assigns and that it was a covenant against competition. Further, he pointed out that when Leonard Soper Mardon assigned to the Bovey Tracey Co-operative Society the benefit of the covenant was assigned in the deed which assigned the business and not in the lease of Devonian. If that be the right view, then he said there could be no right to enforce the covenant against the defendants because the mere fact that the defendants took with notice is not sufficient to bind their consciences in equity, and he relied on Formby v. Barker (5) and

London County Council v. Allen (6). Those cases show, he submitted, and I agree with him, that in order to enforce a covenant such as this against an assign of the covenantor, you must show that the covenant created something in the nature of an equitable easement. You must find something in the nature of a dominant tenement for the benefit of which the covenant was taken and a servient tenement which was to be subject to that covenant. Here he says there was no dominant tenement. The covenant was taken, not for the benefit of any land, but for the benefit of the business. I do not accept this view of the transaction in 1923. In that year Mrs. Mardon was carrying on the business of an ironmonger at Devonian. No doubt, the covenant was taken for the benefit of that business and to prevent competition therewith, but I see no reason to think, and there is nothing in the 1923 conveyance which leads me to believe, that that was the sole object of taking the covenant. Why should not Mrs. Mardon have sold her land and the business and the benefit of the covenant in such manner as to annex the benefit of the covenant to Devonian, for, by so doing, she would get an enhanced price for the totality of the assets she was selling? A purchaser would surely pay more for a property which would enable him to pass on the benefit of the covenant and to sue in equity assigns of the defendants' premises taking with notice, than for a property which would only enable him to sue the original covenantor, for that is the result of the view urged on me by counsel for the defendants. Further, Mrs. Mardon may well have had it in mind that her own business might be closed down or the goodwill thereof sold to someone who was going to carry it on on some other premises. She would then be left with Devonian, and Devonian could be sold at an enhanced price to someone intending to carry on the business of an ironmonger because, if as part of the sale transaction he obtained the benefit of the covenant, he could prevent competition from the defendants' premises opposite in that trade. In my judgment, it was always open to Mrs. Mardon, when she desired to dispose either of the land or the business, to assign the benefit of the covenant with the one or the other or both as she chose. By taking this covenant, she was thereby enabled to sell her premises, or her business, to better advantage as she thought fit. In my judgment, Mrs. Mardon was in the position of the vendor in the example given by COZENS-HARDY, M.R., in Reid v. Bickerstaff (7), where he says ([1909] 2 Ch. 320):

"For example, I sell a piece of land with a covenant that no public-house shall be erected thereon. I sell the adjoining lot to a purchaser who is ignorant of the existence of the covenant. I am at full liberty to release the covenant, or to assign the benefit of it to any particular purchaser, or to deal with the rest of my land as I think fit."

Accordingly, in my judgment, the defendants fail on this point.

Counsel's second point was that in order that the benefit of the covenant may be assignable the land for which the benefit of the covenant is taken must in some way be referred to in the conveyance creating the covenant, and I was naturally pressed with the headnote in the Union of London & Smith's Bank case (2), which reads as follows:

"Where on a sale otherwise than under a building scheme a restrictive covenant is taken, the benefit of which is not on the sale annexed to the land retained by the covenantee so as to run with it, an assign of the covenantee's retained land cannot enforce the covenant against an assign (taking with notice) of the covenantor unless he can show (i) that the covenant was taken for the benefit of ascertainable land of the covenantee capable of being benefited by the covenant, and (ii) that he (the covenantee's assign) is an express assign of the benefit of the covenant."

In my judgment, BENNETT, J., says ([1933] Ch. 625):

"In my judgment, in order that an express assignee of a covenant restricting the user of land may be able to enforce that covenant against the owner of the land burdened with the covenant, he must be able to satisfy the court of two things. The first is that it was a covenant entered into for the benefit or protection of land owned by the covenantee at the date of the covenant. Otherwise it is a covenant in gross, and unenforceable except as between the parties to the covenant: see Formby v. Barker (5). Secondly, the assignee must be able to satisfy the court that the deed containing the covenant defines or contains something to define the property for the benefit of which the covenant was entered into: see JAMES, L.J., in Renals v. Cowlishaw (1)."

With all respect to the statement of the learned judge, I am unable to agree that where a person is suing as an assign of the benefit of the covenant there must necessarily be something in the deed containing the covenant to define the land for the benefit of which the covenant was entered into. In the first place, the passage in the judgment of JAMES, L.J., in Renals v. Cowlishaw (1), which I have already read, on which the learned judge relies, does not, in my judgment, support the statement of the law for which it was cited. In Renals v. Cowlishaw (1) there was no question of there being any express assignment of the benefit of the restrictive covenant: see the statement of fact (9 Ch.D. 127); and when JAMES, L.J., says that to enable an assign to take the benefit of restrictive covenants there must be something in the deed to define the property for the benefit of which they were entered into, he is, I think, dealing with the case where it is contended that the benefit of the covenant has been annexed to the land so as to run with the land. When he uses the word "assign" he is using the word as meaning an assign of the land and not an assign of the benefit of the covenant. Secondly, the views expressed by BENNETT, J., appear to me to be inconsistent with the views expressed in some of the earlier decisions. I do not propose to quote them, but I refer to the following observations on the law on this point, viz., the observations of COLLINS, L.J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Rogers v. Hosegood (8) ([1900] 2 Ch. 407); those of VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., in Formby v. Barker (5) ([1903] 2 Ch. 551); and to the observations of COZENS-HARDY, M.R., in Reid v. Bickerstaff (7) ([1909] 2 Ch. 319) and the words of BUCKLEY, L.J., in the same case (ibid., 325). Finally, in the Union of London & Smith's Bank case (2) itself, ROMER, L.J., reading the judgment of the Court of Appeal, having considered the cases where the benefit of the covenant is annexed to land so as to run without express mention, says ([1933] Ch. 628):

"In all other cases the purchaser will not acquire the benefit of the covenant unless that benefit be expressly assigned to him—or, to use the words of [HALL, V.-C., in Renals v. Cowlishaw (1) (9 Ch.D. 130)], 'it must appear that the benefit of the covenant was part of the subject-matter of the purchase'."

Later, he says (ibid., 631):

"It is plain, however, from these and other cases, and notably that of Renals v. Cowlishaw (1), that if the restrictive covenant be taken not merely for some personal purpose or object of the vendor, but for the benefit of some other land of his in the sense that it would enable him to dispose of that land to greater advantage, the covenant, though not annexed to such land so as to run with any part of it, may be enforced against an assignee of the covenantor taking with notice, both by the covenantee and by persons to whom the benefit of such covenant has been assigned, subject however to certain conditions. In the first place, the 'other land' must be land that is capable of being benefited by the covenant—otherwise it would be impossible to infer that the object of the covenant was to enable the vendor to dispose of his land to greater advantage. In the next place, this land must be 'ascertainable' or 'certain,' to use the words of ROMER, L.J., and SCRUTTON, L.J., respectively. For, although the court will readily infer the intention to benefit the other land of the vendor where the existence and situation of such land are indicated in the conveyance or have been otherwise shown with reasonable certainty, it is impossible to do so from vague references in the conveyance or in other documents laid before the court as to the existence of other lands of the vendor, the extent and situation of which are undefined."

In my judgment, therefore, the problem which I have to consider is, first, when Mrs. Mardon took the covenant in 1923, did she retain other land capable of being benefited by the covenant? If not, cadit quaestio. Secondly, was such land "ascertainable" or "certain" in this sense, that the existence and situation of the land must be indicated in the conveyance or otherwise shown with reasonable certainty. Apart from the fact that Mrs. Mardon is described as of Devonian, there is nothing in the 1923 conveyance to define the land for the benefit of which the restrictive covenant was taken, and I do not think that carries one very far, but, for the reasons I have given, I am, in my judgment, entitled to look at the surrounding circumstances to see if the land to be benefited is shown "otherwise" with reasonable certainty. That is a question of fact, and, on the admitted facts, bearing in mind the close juxtaposition of Devonian and the defendants' premises, in my judgment, the only reasonable inference to draw from the circumstances at the time of the 1923 conveyance was that Mrs. Mardon took the covenant restrictive of the user of the defendants' premises for the benefit of her own business of ironmonger and of her property Devonian where at all material times she was carrying on that business, which last-mentioned fact must have been apparent to the purchasers in 1923. I should, perhaps, mention that at the date of her death, Mrs. Mardon owned other property in Fore Street, but counsel on neither side founded any argument on that circumstance. It follows, therefore, in my judgment, that Mrs. Mardon could on any subsequent sale of her land Devonian, if she so chose, as part of the transaction of sale, assign the benefit of the covenant so as to enable the purchaser from her and his assignees of the land and covenant to enforce it against an owner of the defendants' premises taking with notice and her legatee, Leonard Soper Mardon, was in no worse position. I do not regard the fact that he assigned the covenant in the deed containing the assignment of the business as affecting the matter. I say nothing as to the position when the plaintiffs' lease expires so that their estate in Devonian comes to an end, nor whether Leonard Soper Mardon, having apparently assigned away the entire benefit of the covenant, will then be in any position further to enforce it.

Counsel for the defendants took one further point. He submitted that a covenant restrictive of business could not be annexed to land unless it was a covenant not to carry on a business so as to be a nuisance or annoyance to an adjoining occupier, but he cited no authority for that proposition, and, in my judgment, it cannot be maintained: see Nicoll v. Fenning (9). Accordingly, in my judgment, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in this action and to an injunction as claimed and to costs.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Stileman, Neate & Topping, agents for Herbert Priscott & Co., Newton Abbot (for the plaintiffs); H. W. & S. Patey, agents for Hutchings & Hutchings, Torquay (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WATSON AND OTHERS v. PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCIATION, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Devlin, J.), January 15, 16, 1952.]

Inn—Damage to guest's property—Extension of hospitium—Permission by innkeeper to park motor coach at petrol station—Petrol station owned by inn, but separated by public road—Garages and car park at inn.

A A hotel comprised within its curtilage several lock-up garages for the use of guests and a car park open on one side to a public road, while across the road was a petrol station in the same ownership on the runway of which the hotel manager permitted hotel guests to park their cars when the station was closed in the evening. The driver of an empty motor coach belonging to the plaintiffs, who had engaged a room at the hotel for the night, was unable to put the coach in the car park because it was full of cars belonging to the hotel's customers. The manager suggested he should leave the coach on the runway of the petrol station and bring it to the car park when the customers' cars were gone. The driver left the coach on the runway, and during the night it was removed and damaged by some unauthorised person.

C HELD: (i) as the petrol station was separated from the inn by a public road, as there was accommodation for vehicles in the garages and car park at the hotel, and as the runway was not designed as a car park and could not be so used when the petrol station was open, the petrol station was not actually or constructively a part of the hotel or within its hospitium.

D (ii) having regard to the nature of the language he used, the hotel manager had merely given permission, and not an invitation, to the driver to leave the coach on the runway, and by giving such permission he did not extend the area of the hospitium so as to bring the runway within it.

(iii) the proprietors of the hotel, therefore, were not liable as innkeepers at common law for the plaintiffs' loss resulting from the damage to the coach.

E AS TO LIABILITY OF INNKEEPER IN RESPECT OF GUEST'S PROPERTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 18, pp. 150-159, paras. 208-217; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 29, pp. 10-17, Nos. 128-213.

Cases referred to:

(1) Williams v. Linnitt, [1951] 1 All E.R. 278; [1951] 1 K.B. 565.

(2) Harland's Case, (1641), Clay. 97; 29 Digest 5, 42.

(3) Jones v. Tyler, (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 522; 3 L.J.K.B. 166; 110 E.R. 1307; 29 Digest 12, 151.

ACTION for damages for loss sustained through the removal of and damage to a motor coach alleged to have been left within the precincts of an inn by a guest staying at the inn.

G The defendants were the owners of the Norman Cross Hotel, situated at the junction of a road to Peterborough with the Great North Road. The hotel's outbuildings included lock-up garages intended for the use of guests and a car park enclosed on three sides by the hotel, other buildings, and a wall with a gate opening on the Great North Road, being open on the fourth side to the Peterborough road. A notice board stated that this was a free park "at owner's risk only." Across the Peterborough road was a petrol station with a runway from the Great North Road to the Peterborough road, there being petrol pumps on both sides of the station and an office on the side opposite to the Great North Road. The petrol station was owned by the defendants, but there was no evidence of how far it was managed in conjunction with the hotel or under the superintendence of the hotel manager. It was open only during the day, closing at 5.30 p.m. On July 29, 1949, the plaintiffs, motor coach proprietors, sent an empty coach (except for two persons who paid no fares) from their headquarters in Dundee to London to pick up a party for a trip to Dundee. During the journey, at 9.30 or 10 p.m., the driver stopped the coach for the night at the Norman Cross Hotel. After taking the two passengers to another hotel (there being insufficient rooms at the Norman Cross Hotel) and engaging a single room for himself at the Norman Cross Hotel, he drove the coach to the entrance to the car park in the Peterborough road, but he found it full of cars belonging to the hotel's customers. The manager told him that the coach could not be put there as it would prevent customers getting their cars away, and he suggested that it should be put in the runway of the petrol station and should be brought back to the car park when the customers' cars had gone. There were already cars of other customers on the runway, it being the practice of customers, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the hotel manager, to put their cars there after the petrol station had closed. The driver put the coach into the runway. Shortly after 11 p.m. he looked at the coach to make sure it had not been damaged by any of the cars belonging to the hotel's customers leaving. All the cars in the runway and the car park had then left, but he did not move the coach. Later, he told the hotel manager the coach was still there. During the night the coach was removed by a man who was later convicted of taking it away without the owner's consent and who so seriously damaged it that for some time it could not be used.

The plaintiffs contended that, by virtue of the absolute liability of the defendants as innkeepers at common law for the custody and protection of the coach while it was placed at the petrol station, the defendants were liable for damages in respect of the loss which the plaintiffs had sustained. The defendants denied that the petrol station was part of the hospitium of the hotel to which the principle applied, and alleged that the plaintiffs' driver had been negligent in not properly immobilising the coach.

Stephen Chapman for the plaintiffs.

Elwes, K.C., and Head for the defendants.

DEVLIN, J., stated the facts and continued: The principle in law is not in dispute. By an ancient custom of the realm an innkeeper who has accommodation is obliged to take in any guest who presents himself, his luggage, and his horse. The horse has now been extended to include a carriage and a motor car. Whether it ought to be extended to include a motor coach is a matter which I have not got to decide, because the defendants did take in the coach and there is no doubt on the authorities that they thereby came under the same liability towards it as if, in the first instance, it had fallen within the category of things which they were bound to receive.

As I have said, an innkeeper is absolutely liable in respect of goods, whether baggage or a conveyance, which he receives within the inn. In the case of baggage there is very little difficulty about determining that those words mean receiving within the inn buildings. In the case of the horse the stables that adjoined were part of the inn buildings for this purpose. It was said in the old cases that the innkeeper who took them into his buildings took them infra hospitium. When the categories were extended to include the carriage, and after that the motor car, the position was not quite so clear. Since Williams v. Linnitt (1), and probably before that case, it has been clear that the hospitium of the inn not only includes the inn buildings themselves with the stables that adjoin it, but that it may also include a yard or other open space, such as a car park, which is within the precincts of the inn, or (putting it more accurately) which is actually or constructively to be regarded as part of the inn.

The test to be applied to determine what parts of the inn are or are not infra hospitium has been laid down by the Court of Appeal in Williams v. Linnitt (1) where Asquith, L.J., said ([1951] 1 All E.R. 287):

“The absolute liability of the innkeeper for the safety of the plaintiff's goods only attaches where such goods are ‘infra hospitium’, namely, within

A the inn buildings themselves or within precincts so intimately related to those buildings as to be treated for this purpose as forming part of them. Stable buildings or garages annexed to the inn, or inner courts enclosed by its walls, have been so treated. Goods placed within these limits by the traveller are 'infra hospitium' . . . If, on the other hand, the traveller places his property in some outlying area which is not actually or constructively part of the inn—if he, for example, deposits his luggage in what was called in Harland's Case (2) an 'outyard' adjacent to the inn, the 'hospitium' has been held in some of the older cases not to extend to these things. The innkeeper is not absolutely liable for their loss . . . though, if it is not the guest, but the innkeeper himself, who puts the guest's goods in such an outlying area, or invites the guest to put them there, he may by his act extend the 'hospitium' to cover that area, as, for example, in Jones v. Tyler (3), where the innkeeper left the guest's gig in a public street outside the inn."

C That test, therefore, gives rise to two questions—(i) Is the petrol station within the hospitium of the inn in the sense that it is actually or constructively a part of the inn? (ii) If it is not, is it an outlying area which the innkeeper on this occasion, and, it has been put, pro hac vice, included within the hospitium for the benefit of the plaintiffs in this particular case?

D Dealing with the first question, the petrol station and the inn are not adjacent. They are separated by a public road. They are owned by the same people and may be run in conjunction, though how far that is so the evidence did not clearly show. But, however useful it may be as an adjunct of the inn, in my judgment, the petrol station is not an actual part of the inn, or to be regarded constructively as part of it. I do not rest that merely on the fact that they are not adjacent, but are separated by a public road. In certain circumstances a car park may well belong to an inn and be part of the hospitium of the inn although it is separated from it by a public road, but other considerations must be taken into account. The first is whether such a part is the only accommodation provided for cars and vehicles. Were that so, one might well hesitate to say that it was not to be regarded as part of the hospitium of the inn merely because it was on the opposite side of the road. But this place does not provide the only accommodation for vehicles. Adjacent to the inn, and clearly a part of the inn premises, are, not merely a garage with lock-up accommodation for cars, but also a yard which is proclaimed as a car park. There is, therefore, no inducement for the innkeeper to look elsewhere for a place to provide accommodation for cars and so make it part of the hospitium. Again, this space is not designed in any way for use as a car park. It is a runway, and, though cars can be left on a runway, it is not intended to be a place where cars can be parked. In Williams v. Linnitt (1) LORD TUCKER said ([1951] 1 All E.R. 284):

G "The liability of the innkeeper, in my view, extends to the goods of his guest which are placed by the guest in that part of the premises in which such goods are usually taken in the inn."

Then he says, as indicating the reasonable test (ibid., 285):

" . . . is the place in question a part of the inn premises intended and suitable for user in connection with some part of the innkeeper's business . . . "

H I apprehend that, if the suggested place is to be part of the hospitium, it must be so because it is plain from its situation in relation to the inn that it is so, and it cannot depend on somebody asking the innkeeper on each occasion whether it is so. In this case anyone could drive a car into the car park and assume, quite rightly, that he was putting the car where the innkeeper obviously intended that he should put it, but no one would take it for granted that he was intended to leave his car on the runway while he was in the inn. Thirdly, the runway could not be used as a car park during the hours when the petrol station was open as it would interfere with the work there, and there is no evidence that it was so used. The petrol station closed at 5.30 p.m. The hotel bar opened at 6.0 p.m., and, no doubt, it was very convenient for customers resorting to the bar that the petrol station should then be closed and be used for putting their cars there, but I find it very difficult to conceive that a place would be actually or constructively within the inn premises from 5.30 p.m. onwards and not before 5.30 p.m. On these grounds, therefore, I consider that the first submission fails, and that the petrol station and its runway were not actually or constructively a part of the inn, and, therefore, not part of the hospitium in that sense. A

The second question was whether the hospitium was extended pro hac vice to embrace the runway. The answer to that question must depend on the conduct at the time of the parties—the manager of the hotel and the driver—and on the words they used. Naturally, there is doubt in their recollection of the exact words used, and it would, in my judgment, be very unwise to attach too much importance to specific words to which one or other of them now deposes. They had no reason to remember with any precision exactly what passed between them because it would never have occurred to either of them that what they were saying affected the legal position at all. It is no use, therefore, asking oneself what either the manager or the driver intended. One has to try to draw the right legal inference from the facts as a whole and from the substance of the conversations which took place between the parties. B
C
D
E
F
G
H
I
J
K
L
M
N
O
P
Q
R
S
T
U
V
W
X
Y
Z AA AB
AC
AD
AE
AF
AG
AH
AI
AJ
AK
AL AM AN AO
AP
AQ
AR
AS AT AU
AV
AW AX
AY
AZ
BA
BB
BC
BD BE BF
BG
BH
BI BJ
BK
BL
BM
BN
BO
BP
BQ
BR
BS
BT
BU
BV BW BX
BY BZ
CA
CB
CC
CD
CE
CF
CG
CH
CI
CJ
CK
CL
CM
CN
CO
CP
CQ
CR
CS
CT
CU
CV
CW CX
CY CZ
DA
DB
DC
DD
DE
DF
DG
DH
DI
DJ
DK
DL
DM
DN
DO DP DQ
DR
DS
DT
DU DV DW
DX
DY
DZ
EA
EB
EC
ED
EE
EF
EG
EH
EI
EJ
EK
EL EM
EN EO
EP
EQ ER
ES ET EU
EV
EW
EX
EY
EZ
FA
FB
FC
FD
FE FF
FG
FH
FI
FJ
FK
FL
FM
FN
FO
FP
FQ
FR
FS
FT
FU
FV
FW
FX
FY FZ
GA
GB
GC
GD
GE
GF
GG
GH GI
GJ
GK
GL
GM
GN GO
GP
GQ
GR
GS
GT
GU
GV
GW
GX
GY
GZ
HA
HB
HC HD
HE HF
HG
HH
HI
HJ
HK
HL
HM
HN HO
HP
HQ
HR
HS
HT
HU
HV
HW
HX
HY
HZ
IA
IB
IC
ID
IE
IF IG
IH
II
IJ
IK
IL
IM
IN IO
IP
IQ
IR IS IT
IU
IV
IW
IX
IY
IZ
JA
JB
JC JD
JE
JF
JG JH
JI
JJ
JK
JL
JM
JN
JO
JP
JQ
JR
JS
JT
JU JV JW
JX
JY
JZ
KA
KB
KC
KD
KE
KF KG KH
KI
KJ
KK
KL
KM
KN
KO
KP
KQ
KR
KS
KT KU
KV
KW
KX
KY
KZ
LA
LB
LC
LD
LE
LF
LG
LH
LI
LJ
LK
LL
LM
LN
LO
LP
LQ
LR
LS
LT
LU
LV
LW
LX
LY LZ
MA
MB
MC
MD
ME
MF
MG
MH
MI
MJ MK
ML MM
MN MO MP
MQ
MR
MS
MT MU
MV
MW
MX
MY MZ
NA
NB
NC
ND
NE
NF
NG
NH
NI NJ
NK
NL
NM NN NO
NP
NQ
NR
NS
NT
NU NV
NW
NX
NY
NZ
OA
OB
OC
OD
OE
OF OG
OH
OI OJ
OK
OL
OM
ON OO
OP
OQ OR OS
OT OU
OV
OW
OX
OY
OZ
PA
PB
PC
PD
PE
PF
PG
PH
PI
PJ PK
PL PM
PN
PO
PP
PQ
PR
PS
PT PU
PV
PW
PX
PY
PZ
QA
QB
QC
QD
QE QF
QG
QH
QI
QJ
QK
QL QM
QN
QO
QP
QQ
QR
QS
QT
QU
QV
QW
QX
QY
QZ
RA
RB
RC
RD
RE
RF
RG
RH
RI
RJ
RK
RL
RM
RN
RO
RP
RQ
RR
RS
RT
RU
RV
RW
RX
RY
RZ
SA
SB SC
SD
SE
SF SG
SH
SI
SJ
SK
SL
SM
SN SO
SP
SQ
SR
SS
ST
SU
SV
SW
SX
SY SZ
TA
TB
TC
TD
TE
TF
TG
TH
TI
TJ
TK
TL
TM
TN
TO TP
TQ
TR
TS
TT TU
TV
TW
TX
TY
TZ
UA
UB
UC UD
UE
UF
UG
UH UI UJ
UK
UL
UM
UN
UO
UP
UQ
UR
US
UT
UU
UV UW UX UY
UZ
VA
VB
VC
VD
VE
VF
VG
VH
VI
VJ
VK
VL
VM
VN
VO
VP VQ
VR
VS
VT
VU
VV
VW
VX
VY
VZ
WA
WB
WC
WD
WE WF
WG
WH
WI
WJ
WK
WL
WM
WN
WO
WP
WQ
WR
WS
WT
WU
WV
WW
WX
WY
WZ
XA
XB
XC
XD
XE
XF
XG
XH
XI
XJ
XK
XL
XM
XN
XO
XP
XQ
XR
XS
XT
XU
XV
XW
XX
XY
XZ
YA
YB
YC
YD
YE
YF
YG
YH
YI
YJ
YK
YL
YM
YN
YO
YP
YQ
YR
YS
YT
YU
YV
YW
YX
YY
YZ
ZA
ZB
ZC
ZD
ZE
ZF
ZG
ZH
ZI
ZJ
ZK
ZL
ZM
ZN
ZO
ZP
ZQ
ZR
ZS
ZT
ZU
ZV
ZW
ZX
ZY
ZZ

There appear to be three possible ways in which the area of the hospitium can be extended by the conduct of the parties or by what they say. There is, first, the conduct of the innkeeper in actually taking charge of the guest's vehicle and himself disposing of it somewhere. If he does that, on the authorities, and, in particular, Jones v. Tyler (3), he is acting in such a way as to extend the area of the hospitium. The headnote in Jones v. Tyler (3) reads:

"An innkeeper on a fair day, upon being asked by a traveller, then driving a gig of which he was owner, 'whether he had room for the horse?' put the horse into the stable of the inn, received the traveller with some goods into the inn, and placed the gig in the open street, without the inn yard, where he was accustomed to place the carriages of his guests on fair days. The gig having been stolen from thence, held, that the innkeeper was answerable."

That is plainly the first and simplest way in which the hospitium could be extended. Secondly, the hospitium could be extended by the invitation of the innkeeper—I suppose, express or implied. Thirdly, it is said that the hospitium can be extended by mere permission given by the innkeeper. The only authority on the matter is Jones v. Tyler (3), and it was the view of at any rate two of the four judges who decided that case that it went to the limit. LORD DENMAN, C.J., said (1 Ad. & El. 524): "... This case certainly comes very near to the distinguishing line." LITLEDAL, J., said (ibid., 525): "This case is on the extreme limit . . ." Counsel for the plaintiffs has argued that those expressions must be taken to refer to the fact that the gig was placed on the public highway and not to the question of the extension of the area of the hospitium. However that may be, there is no decided case which goes so far as to say that there is an extension of the hospitium where the guest himself puts the vehicle into the outlying area on the permission of the innkeeper. The passage which I read from the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J. ([1951] 1 All E.R. 287) in Williams v. Linnitt (1) refers plainly to the two methods of extension, i.e., the innkeeper putting the guest's vehicle in the outlying area or inviting the guest to put it there. He does not refer to permission and there is no authority, and no dictum which goes so far as to say, that the innkeeper extends the area merely by giving permission.

It is not suggested that the facts of the present case fall within Jones v. Tyler (3) in the sense that the innkeeper himself put the vehicle in the runway and the case has been argued on the footing of either permission or invitation. Counsel for the plaintiffs says that there was an invitation, but that, in any event, permission is sufficient for him. What I have ultimately to determine is whether I ought to draw the inference that the hospitium was extended, but it is important to see towards which of those two ends, permission or invitation, the language and conduct of the parties go. It seems to me that it is difficult to infer an extension merely on the giving of permission. That is a passive act done by the landlord and something in which he has got no interest. The essence of permission is that one allows something to happen, but does not invite it. I am disposed to think that, when it comes to ascertaining whether an innkeeper has taken on himself the very heavy liability which the custom of the realm imposes in respect of the additional area, one ought not in the ordinary way to infer that he has done so merely on the passive act of giving permission. In the case of an invitation, however, the matter is a little different. One gives an invitation because one wants it to be accepted. If it was a commercial invitation, as it would be in this case, it is because there is a commercial reason for giving it and accepting it and the innkeeper hopes to get something out of it.

It is, therefore, of value, though not decisive, to determine whether the manager was merely giving permission or was going further and giving something in the nature of an invitation. One has to look at all the circumstances for that. I can well imagine that, even where language is on the face of it no more than permissive, something in the nature of an invitation may be intended. There is obviously a motive for an innkeeper to extend an invitation to the driver of an ordinary car to use another part of his premises when the car park itself is full. If people were in the habit of arriving at the hotel between 6.0 and 10.0 p.m., they would expect to find a place where they could leave their cars, and if, on arriving, they found the car park full and had to go away again or risk having trouble with the police for leaving their cars in the road, their custom would be deterred and the inn would suffer. An innkeeper might well have an interest in giving an invitation in such case. But this is not a case of that type. A motor coach—I think it is reasonably apparent from the driver's evidence—is not always a very welcome visitor at roadside inns. I gathered that a coach driver was lucky to be taken in without trouble on occasions of this sort and would not want to look a gift horse in the mouth. Clearly a landlord has no particular interest in putting up one person for the night in a room and going out of his way to accommodate a large motor coach. He would have been quite within his rights if he had said at 10.0 p.m. "The yard is still full. I am sorry, but I have got no room for this coach in the car park and I am not going to bother about it. You must either find somewhere to leave it yourself or you can go away and find accommodation elsewhere." Merely because he is obliging enough not to do that it does not mean that he is inviting the motor coach to stay. Again, the language which was used, although it does not amount exactly to an invitation, may be language of encouragement. It seems to me that it would not be right to construe what was said in the present case as an invitation on the part of the innkeeper to put the coach into the runway. It was, in my view, no more than a mere permission and it ought not to be regarded as an extension by the innkeeper of the hospitium.

I do not think that the hotel manager's remark about the coach being brought back to the car park when the cars there had gone was intended to make the permission conditional or to impose something on the driver. The permission he gave was an unqualified permission, and not permission to use the runway "provided you bring the coach back into the car park when the cars have gone." It was a permission in these terms: "You may put the coach in the runway" (assuming, no doubt correctly, that the driver would prefer to put it in the car park), and: "You may also put it in the car park once the cars have gone and not until then." Similarly, if it was an invitation, it was not a qualified or conditional invitation. That conclusion disposes of the case. Once I have reached the conclusion that the coach was not within the hospitium, the innkeeper is not liable for it as an innkeeper and no other liability is suggested. Accordingly, the claim must fail.

[HIS LORDSHIP held, further, on the evidence that the driver of the motor coach had not been negligent in failing to immobilise the coach and gave judgment for the defendants.]

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Fowler, Legg & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Hair & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

POCOCK AND ANOTHER v. A.D.A.C., LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J.), December 12, 1951.]

Contract—Memorandum or note—Contract of service—"Consultant"—Need to specify nature of duties—Minute of company directors' meeting—Statute of Frauds, 1677 (c. 3), s. 4.

ACTION for sums claimed to be due to the plaintiffs under agreements of personal service and for declarations that the said agreements were enforceable against the defendant company.

By an agreement, dated Oct. 27, 1944, the defendant company agreed to employ the first plaintiff

"in such capacity as the directors may from time to time require and [the first plaintiff] agrees to serve the company upon and subject to the terms of this agreement."

The first plaintiff also agreed to "use her best endeavours to promote the interests of the company and . . . give her whole time and attention to the business of the company and . . . not without the consent in writing of the company first obtained be interested either directly or indirectly in any other business or occupation."

She was to be paid a sum of £250 a year. It was further provided that:

"This agreement shall continue in force until either party shall give to the other one month's notice in writing to determine the same. In the event of the termination by the company otherwise than under (b) of this clause, or if the company shall be wound-up by a member's voluntary winding-up, the company will pay to [the first plaintiff] the sum of £2,000. (b) The company shall be entitled to determine this agreement by giving six months' notice in writing to [the first plaintiff] if she shall become physically or mentally incapable of carrying out her duties, or forthwith if she shall be guilty of any misconduct or shall commit a breach of the terms of this agreement."

On Oct. 16, 1948, it was mutually decided that this agreement should be cancelled at that date, neither party to have any claim against the other in respect of any matter arising thereout, and under a further agreement of the same date it was agreed

A "that, [the first plaintiff] having resigned her position as a director of the company, the company hereby appoints [the first plaintiff] and she agrees to accept the appointment as a consultant for the period from the date hereof until Oct. 31, 1964, or for the period of her life, whichever shall be the shorter period."

B A minute of the defendant company in a book signed by the directors read:

"It was resolved that [the first plaintiff] be appointed as a consultant to the company at a salary of £150 per annum for the period to Oct. 31, 1964, or until her death, whichever is the earlier."

By an agreement under seal entered into by the parties, dated Oct. 27, 1944, the second plaintiff agreed to resign the office which she then held as managing
C director of the defendant company as from Oct. 31, 1944, and to continue in the employment of the company as an assistant managing director for ten years at a salary of £750 a year and a commission equal to ten per cent. of the net profits of the company to be paid in a specified manner. By cl. 2 of the agreement the second plaintiff undertook that she

D "will give all proper attention to the business of the company and will at all times give to the company the benefit of her knowledge and experience and use her best endeavours to promote its interests. During such employment, [the second plaintiff] will not without the consent of the company be interested either directly or indirectly in any business competing in any way with the business of the company."

E On Oct. 18, 1949, by a further agreement:

"It has been agreed between the [defendant company] and [the second plaintiff] that, [the second plaintiff] having resigned her appointment as assistant managing director and as a director of the company with effect as from Sept. 30, 1949, as from Oct. 1, 1949, she shall act as consultant to the company for the balance of the said term of ten years and at the F salary and on the terms referred to in [the agreement of Oct. 27, 1944]."

Case referred to:

(1) James v. Thomas H. Kent & Co., Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 1099; 2nd Digest Supp.

Beecroft for the plaintiffs.

G A. F. M. Berkeley for the defendants.

LORD GODDARD, C.J., said that the claim of the first plaintiff concerned an agreement, namely, that of Oct. 16, 1948, for a period of more than two years so that the Statute of Frauds, 1677, s. 4, applied to it. There was no reference in the agreement to the first plaintiff's remuneration, but that was stated in a minute of the defendant company in the book signed by all the H directors. To decide whether there was a sufficient memorandum under the Statute of Frauds, 1677, s. 4, it seemed to him that he need not look at more than that minute which meant that the first plaintiff was appointed from Oct. 16, 1948, to Oct. 31, 1964. Nothing was said as to how the salary was to be paid, but that was not necessarily fatal. The agreement did not define the first plaintiff's duties. It simply said "as a consultant." In that way it differed from the agreement of the second plaintiff, which incorporated the clause in the original agreement under which she had already undertaken, if she were further employed by the defendant company, to use all her best endeavours for and put her experience at the service of the defendant company. His LORDSHIP found the greatest difficulty in distinguishing the case from James v. Thomas H. Kent & Co., Ltd. (1), which related to the appointment, recorded in the minutes of the company, of a person as one of two "first directors of the company." SOMERVELL, L.J., there said ([1950] 2 All E.R. 1102):

"... I think it clearly appears that the minute was not a sufficient memorandum because it gave no indication, special or general, as to the nature of the duties which the plaintiff was to perform. Under a service agreement a man may often have to do many things on orders which he receives from his employers, but, it seems to me, to satisfy the statute, there must be some indication of the general nature of the duties he has to perform and his position as an employee in the company's service. I, therefore, think that the learned judge was right in saying there was no sufficient memorandum."

He could not disregard that ruling which was agreed to by ROMER, J., who was sitting as a member of the court but did not deliver a separate judgment. He would have thought that, if a company agreed to employ a man as a director, his duties were sufficiently indicated by the use of the word "director", but that case apparently decided the contrary, and he was bound by it. The present case was a fortiori. The position of the first plaintiff, who was employed merely as a consultant, differed from that of the second plaintiff who had already agreed to give the defendant company the benefit of her advice and undertook during her further employment to continue to serve the company, giving them the benefit of her advice, not to enter into any other employment, and so forth. He did not know what work the first plaintiff would have to do, or, if she were consulted, on what she could be consulted. It was too vague to appoint a person as a "consultant", but in any case he was bound by James v. Thomas H. Kent & Co., Ltd. (1).

In the second action the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum claimed. She was to act as a consultant, an expression which, when read in conjunction with cl. 2 of the original agreement expressly incorporated, meant that she was to give the defendants the benefit of her knowledge and experience. He thought, therefore, that for this purpose the expression "act as consultant" was not so vague as to entitle the defendant company to say that there was no enforceable contract.

Orders accordingly.

Solicitors: McKenna & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Forsythe, Kerman & Phillips (for the defendant company).

F.A.A.

BAKER v. BAKER.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), January 11, 1952.]

Divorce—Desertion—Parties living under same roof—House owned by both spouses—No allowance paid to wife—Provision of meals separately—Occupation of separate rooms—Other parts of house shared.

On an undefended petition for divorce brought by a husband against his wife on the ground of desertion it was proved that for more than three years before the presentation of the petition the parties had lived in the same house, which belonged to them both, but each occupied a separate bedroom and sitting-room and cooked their own food separately. During that time the husband had not paid any allowance to the wife. They shared the kitchen and the passages and other parts of the house and did not speak except for the business necessities of the day.

HELD: on these facts it could not be said that the parties had ceased to be one household and had become two separate households, and, therefore, desertion had not been proved.

Observations of DENNING, L.J., in Hopes v. Hopes ([1948] 2 All E.R. 925), applied.

AS TO WHAT CONSTITUTES DESERTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 835, para. 1338; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 307-310, Nos. 2840-2880, and p. 322, Nos. 3000-3013, and Digest Supps.

Case referred to:

- (1) Hopes v. Hopes, [1948] 2 All E.R. 920; [1949] P. 227; [1949] L.J.R. 104; 113 J.P. 10; 2nd Digest Supp.

UNDEFENDED PETITION by the husband for divorce on the ground of desertion. It was conceded that the parties lived in the same house throughout the three years before the presentation of the petition.

K. G. I. Jones for the husband.

WILLMER, J.: In this extremely difficult case relief is being sought on the ground of desertion, although it is conceded that the parties have continued throughout to live under the same roof. There have been cases of parties living under the same roof in which it has been held that they have been sufficiently separated to give ground for a decree for desertion, but those cases were exceptional and the facts were very strong.

I do not think I can do better than to refer to the words of DENNING, L.J., in Hopes v. Hopes (1) where he said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 925):

“That line [i.e., the line between desertion and gross neglect or chronic discord] is drawn at the point where the parties are living separately and apart. In cases where they are living under the same roof, that point is reached when they cease to be one household and become two households . . .”

I have to ask myself the question: Is it proved to my satisfaction that these two parties have ceased to be one household and have become two households? One reason why parties sometimes continue to live under the same roof, although separated, is that it is impossible to find accommodation elsewhere. If that is proved, it goes to negative the inference which would naturally be drawn from the fact of two people living in the same house—the inference that they are living together. Another fact which goes to negative the inference of cohabitation is that one party or the other has installed a lock on the door of his or her part of the house or taken some other step to cut off physical access between one party and the other.

Nothing of that sort has been proved in this case. I gave permission for the husband to be recalled so that he could explain why the parties were still living in the same house. The only explanation he offered was that the house belongs to both of them. No attempt has been made by either party to buy out the other. It seems to me, therefore, that nothing has been proved to assist in rebutting the natural inference which is normally drawn from the fact of two people living in the same house. All that has been proved is that ever since the husband returned from the war the wife has been neglectful of him, as is instanced by the fact that on the night of his return from the war she put him in a separate room, which he has occupied ever since. The husband said that in March, 1948, he stopped paying his wife any allowance, and that since then he has bought and cooked his own food. I am asked to say that that brought about a factum of separation which was thereupon superimposed on an already existing intention to desert on the part of the wife. The husband says that since that date he has occupied and looked after his own bedroom and his own sitting-room. The wife also has her own bedroom and her own sitting-room. They do not speak except for the business necessities of the day, but, although they live in their separate rooms, they still continue to share the house. They share the kitchen. They do not very often meet there, because they try to avoid each other, but they share the passages, the stairs, and the other offices of the house.

When I ask myself the question whether, in those circumstances, I am satisfied that this outwardly one household has in fact become two households, I can only say that I am not satisfied. I find it impossible to say, therefore, that desertion for three years preceding the presentation of this petition has been proved to my satisfaction, and I must dismiss the petition.

Petition dismissed.

Solicitors: Sidney Davidson & Co. (for the husband).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NATIONAL TRUST FOR PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR NATURAL BEAUTY v. MIDLANDS ELECTRICITY BOARD AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), December 13, 14, 17, 1951.]

Real Property—Restrictive covenant—Restriction of matters "which shall injure prejudice affect or destroy the natural aspect and condition of the land"—Validity.

Electricity Supply—Powers of undertakers—Erection of poles to carry supply line—Necessity for consent of local authority—Persons entitled to be heard—"Parties concerned"—Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899 (c. 19), schedule, s. 10 (b)—Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919 (c. 100), s. 21, s. 22 (1)—Electricity Act, 1947 (c. 54), s. 57 (2), sched. IV, Part III.

By a deed, dated Apr. 28, 1936, and made between the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, of the one part, and the National Trust for Places of Historic Interest, of the other part, it was recited that the commissioners had agreed to impose on certain "common land" belonging to them the restrictive covenants thereafter contained for the benefit of Midsummer Hill and for the purpose of preserving the amenities of the Malvern Hills. It was witnessed that the commissioners covenanted with the National Trust that (inter alia) "No act or thing shall be done or placed or permitted to remain upon the land which shall injure prejudice affect or destroy the natural aspect and condition of the land . . ." The restriction was registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (1). By virtue of the Church Commissioners Measure, 1947, the functions and property of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners were vested in the Church Commissioners for England. The Midlands Electricity Board having entered on the common land and erected thereon poles to carry an overhead electricity supply line, the National Trust claimed an injunction against the Church Commissioners and the board to restrain the erection or maintenance of the poles.

HELD: (i) it was impossible to ascertain the limits of the prohibition contained in the restrictive covenant, which was, therefore, void for uncertainty.

(ii) notwithstanding the provisions of the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899, schedule, s. 10 (b), and the incorporation thereof in the Electricity Act, 1947, by s. 57 (2) of the latter Act, having regard to the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, s. 21, it was not incumbent on the board to obtain the consent of the appropriate local authority to the erection of the poles.

(iii) the words "otherwise lawful" in the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, s. 22 (1) (which empowers authorised undertakers to place any electric line below ground across any land, and above ground across any land in cases where the placing of such lines above ground is otherwise lawful), related to some direct infringement of some statutory power or some obviously wrong and illegitimate use of the power given by the section, and not to the private rights of any individual, but the National Trust, as the body entitled to enforce the restrictive covenant, were "parties concerned" within the proviso to s. 22 (1), and, as such, were a body to whom, under s. 22 (1), an opportunity of being heard should be given.

AS TO RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 125-129, paras. 110, 111; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 40, pp. 310-328, Nos. 2648-2768.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Wood v. Cooper, [1894] 3 Ch. 671; 63 L.J.Ch. 845; 71 L.T. 222; 31 Digest, Replacement, 176, 3095.
- (2) Paddington Corpn. v. A.-G., [1906] A.C. 1; 75 L.J.Ch. 4; 93 L.T. 673; 70 J.P. 41; 33 Digest 50, 303.
- (3) Zetland (Marquess) v. Driver, [1938] 2 All E.R. 158; [1939] Ch. 1; 107 L.J.Ch. 316; 158 L.T. 456; Digest Supp.
- (4) Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co. Meux's Brewery Co. v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., [1895] 1 Ch. 287; 64 L.J.Ch. 216; 72 L.T. 34; subsequent proceedings, [1895] 2 Ch. 388; 28 Digest 415, 408.
- (5) Clark v. London School Board, (1874), 9 Ch. App. 120; 43 L.J.Ch. 421; 29 L.T. 903; 38 J.P. 101; 11 Digest 137, 233.
- (6) Kirby v. Harrogate School Board, [1896] 1 Ch. 437; 65 L.J.Ch. 376; 74 L.T. 6; 60 J.P. 182; 11 Digest 145, 297.
- (7) Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill, (1881), 6 App. Cas. 193; 50 L.J.Q.B. 353; 44 L.T. 653; 45 J.P. 664; 38 Digest 44, 256.

ACTION by the National Trust for Places of Historic Interest or Natural Beauty for a declaration that they were entitled to enforce certain restrictive covenants contained in a deed dated Apr. 28, 1936, against the Midlands Electricity Board and the Church Commissioners for England. They also claimed an injunction to restrain the erection or maintenance of certain poles erected by the electricity board for the purpose of supporting an overhead electricity supply line on land subject to the said restrictive covenants, and a mandatory order to demolish and remove some of the said poles.

M. Browne for the plaintiffs, the National Trust for Places of Historic Interest or Natural Beauty.

Pennycuik, K.C., and Bourke for the first defendants, the Midlands Electricity Board.

F. G. King for the second defendants, the Church Commissioners for England.

VAISEY, J.: These proceedings relate to a place both of interest and also, more particularly, of natural beauty, namely, the Malvern Hills. They consist, as is well known, of a short and narrow range with about twenty summits varying in height from nine hundred to fourteen hundred feet and forming the watershed between the Severn and the Wye. One of these heights, known as Midsummer Hill, is and has at all material times been owned and occupied by the National Trust, and it has been declared inalienable under certain provisions of the National Trust Act, 1907. At the date of the deed next to be mentioned the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England were the owners of certain lands in the neighbourhood of Midsummer Hill known as Castlemorton Common, Shady Bank Common, and Holly Bed Common, to which I will refer as "the common lands." By that deed, which is dated Apr. 28, 1936, and made between the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, of the one part, and the National Trust, of the other part, after recitals which inter alia state that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners had agreed to impose on the common lands the restrictive covenants thereafter contained for the benefit of Midsummer Hill and for the purpose of preserving the amenities of the Malvern Hills, it is witnessed that in pursuance of that agreement the Ecclesiastical Commissioners

"with intent and so as to bind as far as practicable [the common lands] into whatsoever hands the same may come and to benefit and protect Midsummer Hill aforesaid" covenanted with the National Trust at all times thereafter to observe the stipulations and restrictions contained in the schedule thereto. I turn to the schedule, and read the first two of the four paragraphs of which it consists:

"(1) No act or thing shall be done or placed or permitted to remain upon the land which shall injure prejudice affect or destroy the natural aspect and condition of the land except as hereinafter provided. (2) No building shall at any time hereafter be erected upon any part of the land by or with the consent of the covenantors [the Ecclesiastical Commissioners]."

On May 1, 1936, the said restrictions were duly registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (1), as a land charge affecting the common lands. By virtue of the Church Commissioners Measure, 1947, the functions and property of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners were vested in the second defendants, the Church Commissioners for England, who thereupon became, and still are, the owners of the common lands.

The first defendants to this action, the Midlands Electricity Board, are one of the area boards constituted by or under the Electricity Act, 1947, s. 1, s. 2 and s. 3, and the area which they are concerned to administer consists of the counties of Hereford and Worcester and parts of Gloucestershire, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire and Warwickshire (including Birmingham). Shortly before the commencement of this action, the board entered on a small part of the common lands and erected or began to erect some poles to carry an overhead electricity supply line across part of the common lands. These poles are wooden poles in pairs connected by cross-struts, and are about forty-two feet in height. Lines of cable are carried across the top of the poles and link them together in a continuous line. The National Trust alleges that the erection, existence and maintenance of these poles and this electric supply line constitute a breach of the restrictive covenants. They plead that they have thereby suffered damage, that their enjoyment of Midsummer Hill has been seriously disturbed, and, in particular, that the view from Midsummer Hill over the common lands is prejudicially affected. They claim a declaration that they are entitled to enforce the restrictive covenants against both the defendants, and are entitled to an injunction to restrain the erection or maintenance of certain of the poles and the suspended supply line. They claim also a mandatory order to pull down and remove some of the said poles.

The first and fundamental point to be considered is the meaning and effect of the restrictive conditions. Let me deal first with the second, which reads as follows:

"No building shall at any time hereafter be erected upon any part of the land by or with the consent of the covenantors," a word which now, in the events which have happened, means the Church Commissioners. In my judgment, these poles are certainly not buildings though they may well be erections or structures, and for that proposition I rely on Wood v. Cooper (1) and Paddington Corp'n. v. A.-G. (2). Even if they are buildings, they have not been erected by or with the consent of either the Ecclesiastical Commissioners or the defendants, the Church Commissioners.

A The matter, therefore, in my view, rests on the first of the restrictions, which it will be remembered is to this effect:

"No act or thing shall be done or placed or permitted to remain upon the land which shall injure prejudice affect or destroy the natural aspect and condition of the land except as hereinafter provided."

B The exceptions do not throw any light on the point which has arisen here. In my judgment, the wording of this restriction is extremely inapt and ill-considered. It may, perhaps, be paraphrased thus: "No act shall be done and no thing shall be placed or permitted to remain on the land which shall injure prejudice affect or destroy the natural aspect and condition of the land." It would be difficult to find wider, vaguer and more indeterminate words than those. "Affect" following the word "prejudice" cannot, I think, mean

C "prejudicially affect" and must, therefore, mean "affect whether prejudicially or otherwise," that is to say, change or alter. Who is to say and what is to be the criterion of such an alteration of the natural aspect and condition of the land? There is no such qualification as might have been introduced by such words as "in the opinion of the National Trust" after the words "which shall," a qualification which would appear to have been accepted as sufficient in Marquess of Zetland v. Driver (3) where the words were

D "no act or thing shall be done or permitted [on certain lands] which in the opinion of the vendor may be [inter alia] prejudicial or detrimental to the vendor and the owners or occupiers of any adjoining property or to the neighbourhood."

E It is, no doubt, easy to suggest some acts and things which would come within the prohibition—if, for example, the land were ploughed up or turned into a car-park or building estate. The difficulty here is to ascertain the limits of the prohibited acts. The burning of bracken, for instance, would, I should have thought, obviously affect the aspect and condition of the land. During the hearing counsel for the National Trust was driven to admit that the placing of a basket for litter on a short pole or a seat or a bench would amount to a breach

F of the condition. It is to be noted that it is both the aspect and the condition of the land which must be injured, prejudiced, affected, or destroyed. What does "aspect" mean? Presumably the appearance, but viewed from what point? If a man chooses to stand with his eye against one of these poles, obviously he would be able to see nothing of the land, but that cannot be what is meant. What does "condition" mean? I construe that as referring to

G the presence or absence of cultivation. How do these poles affect the condition of the land? It remains just the same as before. My garden remains a garden even though the post office erect a telegraph pole on it. In my judgment, the omission of any criterion by which these vague and uncertain words can be brought under some control is fatal to the validity of the restriction. I think it is void for uncertainty. It is so vague that it is really impossible of apprehension or construction, and, in my judgment, it is wholly unenforceable, but,

H whether it be wholly unenforceable or not, in my view, the erection of these poles does not come within the prohibition at all. They do, it is true, "affect" to some extent the "aspect" of the land, but how and to what extent they affect the "condition" of the land I fail to see. The land remains in the same condition now that it was before the poles were erected except possibly in regard to the few square inches on which the poles stand. The land remains open country, heath or scrub exactly as it was before the poles were put on it. This extraordinary combination of "aspect" and "condition" seems to me to involve an interference with the land both in its appearance and in its condition which what has been done and what it is proposed to do do not come anywhere near satisfying.

If, however, I am wrong both as to the unenforceability of the condition and as to the absence of any relevance in its terms to what has actually happened, there is the further difficulty how any restriction so worded can be said to benefit or protect Midsummer Hill. The nearest of these poles to Midsummer Hill is at least eleven hundred yards distant from it. No doubt, the poles are visible from Midsummer Hill on a reasonably clear day, but the effect of their presence or absence from the landscape must be quite infinitesimal. I may here observe that the National Trust has now obtained statutory powers to impose and enforce restrictions in gross, but the present case is not within those powers. I have here to deal with the ordinary case of protected and restricted land, assuming, contrary to my view, that the common lands have been validly restricted by the deed of Apr. 28, 1936. I think that Midsummer Hill has not been validly protected in the circumstances and it is only as the owners of Midsummer Hill that the National Trust can have any right of action in respect of these covenants.

If I am wrong on all these points, the further question arises whether the first defendants, the electricity board, have acted within and are proposing to act within their statutory powers and thereby are relieved from any obligation to observe the restrictions and excused for any breach of them which the erection of these poles would otherwise entail. In my judgment, this question must be answered in the affirmative. In their defence the electricity board claim that by virtue of the provisions of the Electricity Act, 1947, and of those provisions of preceding Acts which are incorporated therein, and pursuant to consents of the Minister of Fuel and Power dated respectively Sept. 14 and 26, 1951, they have statutory power to place electricity poles on and above the common lands, and they say they will refer to such consents for their full meaning and intentment. They further say that, if it is necessary, they have obtained the express consent of the rural district council of Upton-upon-Severn.

The statutory justification for what the electricity board have done, are doing, and are proposing to do has to be ascertained from the actual terms of the legislative enactments. These are very largely what is called referential legislation and are not easy to follow. In the circumstances I do not propose to examine with any great degree of particularity the foundation and nature of these statutory powers. Counsel were good enough to refer me to a very large number of sections which are relevant in this connection, and I will first mention s. 17 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882, which provides:

"Compensation for damage. In the exercise of the powers in relation to the execution of works given them under this Act, or any licence, order, or special Act, the undertakers shall cause as little detriment and inconvenience and do as little damage as may be, and shall make full compensation to all bodies and persons interested for all damage sustained by them by reason or in consequence of the exercise of such powers, the amount and application of such compensation in case of difference to be determined by arbitration."

It is not denied that the National Trust has or may have some right to be compensated under that section, which is still in force, although the amount of compensation which they are likely to recover, and the grounds on which their claim can be based, do not at the moment concern me. I merely state in passing that I think that the electricity board are justified in having pleaded as they do in their defence that under that section a remedy by way of compensation is provided for damage (if any) sustained as a result of the exercise of their powers by the electricity board, and that no other remedy is available to the plaintiffs. I am, of course, familiar with the principles laid down in Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co. (4) which limits to some extent the grounds on which such damage can be claimed, but that, in my judgment, is a matter with which I am not here concerned.

A Next, I want to refer to s. 1 of the schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899, which (as amended by the Electricity Act, 1947, s. 57 (2)) directs that the provisions of that schedule are to be read and construed in all respects subject to the provisions of inter alia the Electricity Act, 1947. The Acts and parts of Acts subject to which the schedule is to be read are collectively referred to in the schedule as the principal Act, and then follow a certain number of definitions. Section 10 (b), as amended by the Electricity Act, 1947, s. 57 (2), and sched. IV, Part III, provides:

B "The undertakers [the electricity board] shall not, without the express consent and authorisation of the Minister of Fuel and Power and the express consent of the local authority also, place any electric line above ground except within premises in the sole occupation or control of the undertakers . . ."

A curious point arises there, because the Electricity Act, 1947, s. 57 (2), provides:

C "The schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899, shall, as from the vesting date, be incorporated with this Act, and shall have effect, as so incorporated, subject to the adaptations and modifications specified in Part III of the said sched. IV."

D But before that enactment took effect, the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, s. 21, had come into operation and is now binding on and can be taken advantage of by the electricity board. That section provides:

E "Where the consent of the Board of Trade [now the Minister of Fuel and Power] is obtained to the placing of any electric line above ground in any case, the consent of the local authority shall not be required, anything in the Electric Lighting Acts, or in any order or special Act relating to the undertaking to the contrary notwithstanding . . ."

F The effect of those enactments, in my judgment, is to excuse the Midlands Electricity Board in the present case from obtaining the consent of the appropriate local authority, the Upton-upon-Severn Rural District Council. Supposing I am wrong in that, I hold that express consent has been given by virtue of two letters written by the clerk of that authority to the chairman of the electricity board.

The Electricity Act, 1947, s. 9 (1), relates to the compulsory purchase of land, and provides:

"The Minister may authorise any electricity board to purchase compulsorily any land which they require for any purpose connected with the discharge of their functions . . ."

G The Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946, with an immaterial exception, is to apply. That section obviously deals with an entirely different matter. First, it may well be that "land" includes easements, and, indeed, s. 9 (2) expressly so states, but this is not a compulsory purchase at all, and, in my judgment, s. 9 in no way limits the generality of the provisions to which I am now about to refer, i.e., s. 21 and s. 22 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1919, which is incorporated in the Act under which the electricity board in this case are acting. [His LORDSHIP again read s. 21 of the Act of 1919 and continued:] Section 22 (1) provides:

" . . . any authorised undertakers [in this case, the electricity board] may place any electric line below ground across any land, and above ground across any land other than land covered by buildings or used as a garden or pleasure ground in cases where the placing of such lines above ground is otherwise lawful, and where any line has been so placed across any land the . . .

undertakers may enter on the land for the purpose of repairing or altering the line."

What does "otherwise lawful" mean? In my judgment, it means in every case in which there is not some direct infringement of some statutory right or some obviously wrong and illegitimate use of a power—such, for instance, as putting electric cables too low down across a foot-path, river, road, or railway. I do not think it is possible to regard those words, "otherwise lawful," as referring to the private rights of any particular individual. The proviso to s. 22 (1) is:

"Provided that, before placing any such line across any land, the . . . undertakers shall serve on the owner and occupier of the land notice of their intention, together with a description of the nature and position of the lines proposed to be so placed; and if, within twenty-one days after the service of the notice, the owner and occupier fail to give their consent or attach to their consent any terms or conditions or stipulations to which . . . the undertakers object, it shall not be lawful to place the line across that land without the consent of [the Minister] . . ."

I thought at one time (and I now reject the idea) it could be argued that the owner and occupier of these common lands consisted of the combination of all persons whose consent is necessary in order to convey the unencumbered and unrestricted fee simple of the property to another person—in other words, it would include the Church Commissioners for the purpose of dealing with the freehold and the National Trust for the purpose of releasing their right or easement, assuming that such a right exists, and that the two would be co-owners for the purpose of this proviso. I do not think that is possible.

I think that the objection which was taken—that no proper notice had been served on the National Trust—is a false point. The proviso continues:

". . . and [the Minister] may, if after giving all parties concerned an opportunity of being heard [he thinks] it just, give [his] consent either unconditionally or subject to such terms, conditions, and stipulations as [he thinks] just; and in deciding whether to give or withhold [his] consent, or to impose any terms, conditions, or stipulations (including the carrying of any portion of the line underground) [the Minister] shall, among other considerations, have regard to the effect, if any, on the amenities or value of the land of the placing of the line in the manner proposed."

At one time the electricity board took the view that the National Trust, in their capacity of persons entitled to enforce these restrictions, was not a "party concerned" to whom opportunity should be given. In my judgment, that view is wrong. Assuming, of course, that the restrictions are valid, and that the National Trust are in a position to enforce them, then I think in that respect they are "parties concerned" who should have been heard. No harm has been done in this case, because they were heard at the inquiry which took place previous to the sanction by the Minister of this scheme, but I put it on record that, in my view (so far as the point is material in the present case), persons entitled to enforce restrictive covenants for land are "persons concerned" to whom an opportunity of being heard should be given. On all the points to which I have referred I am bound to hold that this action fails and must be dismissed.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors: A. A. Martineau (for the plaintiffs); Sydney Morse & Co., agents for G. P. Wilson, Solicitor to the Midlands Electricity Board; Milles, Day & Co. (for the second defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES, LTD. v. REGEM.

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Porter, Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord Asquith of Bishopstone and Lord Cohen), November 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 1951, January 21, 1952.]

A Negligence—Contracting out of liability—Lease containing clauses exempting lessor from liability for damage to property leased or goods therein and providing indemnity against claims by third parties—Need of express language to exempt from liability for negligence—Existence of other ground of damage.

By a lease, dated Nov. 18, 1940, the Crown leased to a shipping company a shed for storing freight situated on the bank of a canal in the city of Montreal. Clause 7 of the lease provided that "the lessee shall not have any claim . . . against the lessor for . . . damage . . . to the . . . said shed . . . or to any . . . goods . . . placed . . . in the said shed." By cl. 8 the Crown undertook to maintain the shed. Clause 17 provided that "the lessee shall at all times indemnify . . . the lessor . . . against all claims and demands, loss, costs, damages, actions, suits or other proceedings by whomsoever made, brought or prosecuted, in any manner based upon, occasioned by or attributable to the execution of these presents, or any action taken or things done or maintained by virtue hereof, or the exercise in any manner of rights arising hereunder." On May 5, 1944, while repairs to the shed, involving the use of an oxy-acetylene torch, were being carried out by the Crown's employees, a spark from the torch was negligently allowed to fall on some bales of cotton waste, which caught fire and the shed and its contents were destroyed. In a claim by the company against the Crown for damages for negligence, the Crown relied on cl. 7 as relieving them from liability, and under cl. 17 claimed from the company to be indemnified against claims by the owners of goods destroyed by the fire.

E HELD: a clause purporting to exempt a party to a contract from liability for negligence must contain express language to that effect; in the absence of such language, but if the words used were wide enough, in their ordinary meaning, to cover negligence, the existence of a possible ground of damage other than that of negligence might deprive the party of the protection of the clause on a claim for negligence; on construction, cl. 7 and cl. 17 were not expressed in such clear terms as would exempt the Crown from liability for the negligence of its servants or entitle it to an indemnity from the company for such negligence in the course of carrying out the obligation of the Crown under cl. 8; under the provisions of the Civil Code of Lower Canada the damage might be based on some ground other than negligence; and, therefore, the Crown had failed to establish its defence under cl. 7 or its claim for indemnity under cl. 17.

G Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., in Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry, Ltd. ([1945] 1 All E.R. 245), applied.

AS TO CONDITIONS LIMITING LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, p. 670, para. 952.

Cases referred to:

- H (1) Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 244; [1945] K.B. 189; 114 L.J.K.B. 196; 172 L.T. 153; 2nd Digest Supp.
(2) Glengoil S.S. Co. v. Pilkington. Glengoil S.S. Co. v. Ferguson, (1897), 28 S.C.R. 146; 41 Digest 200, l.

APPEAL by Canada Steamship Lines, Ltd., from a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada dated June 23, 1950, reversing in part an order of the Exchequer Court of Canada (ANGERS, J.) maintaining petitions of right against the Crown for damages for negligence.

The Crown had leased to the steamship company a warehouse which, through the negligence of the Crown's servants, was destroyed together with its contents by fire. In claims by the company and other owners of the property destroyed, the Crown sought to rely on a clause in the lease purporting to exempt the Crown as lessor from any claims for damage to the warehouse or goods contained therein. Under a further clause the Crown claimed the right of indemnity from the company against the claims of the other owners. The company contended that, on the true construction of the clauses in question, the company was entitled to enforce their claim, and the Crown was not entitled to an indemnity. ANGERS, J., found that the fire and resulting damage were caused by the gross negligence of the Crown's servants and held that by the law of Quebec no clause would extend to relieve the Crown of liability for such negligence. The Supreme Court held that the Crown's negligence did not amount to gross negligence and that, on construction, the clauses barred the company's action and entitled the Crown to indemnity. A

Cross, K.C., Hazen Hansard, K.C. (of the Canadian Bar), and R. O. Wilberforce for the shipping company. B

A. J. Campbell, K.C., D. W. Mundell, K.C. (both of the Canadian Bar) and Gahan for the Crown. C

Jan. 21. LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: It will be convenient to refer to the appellant company as "the company" and to the respondent as "the Crown."

This is an appeal by special leave from six judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada dated June 23, 1950, reversing in part a like number of judgments of the Exchequer Court of Canada (ANGERS, J.), which had maintained petitions of right against the Crown for damages arising out of a disastrous fire. In the first of these six cases the company was suppliant, claiming from the Crown $40,713.72 as the value of the property of the company destroyed in the fire. In the remaining five cases the suppliants were owners of other property destroyed by the fire. The suppliants in these five cases and the amounts respectively claimed by them from the Crown were as follows:—J. H. Heinz Co. of Canada, $38,430.88; Canada & Dominion Sugar Co., Ltd., $108,310.83; W. H. Taylor, Ltd., $3,670.25; Raymond Copping, $1,662.37; and Cunningham & Wells, Ltd., $15,159.83. In addition to the present six cases, petitions of right were instituted against the Crown in some 250 other cases involving additional claims arising out of the fire to a total amount of $325,636.05, which petitions of right have remained in abeyance pending the outcome of these proceedings. D

The events leading up to all these claims must now be set out. By an indenture of lease (hereafter called "the lease") dated Nov. 18, 1940, the Crown leased to the company a piece of land on the western side of St. Gabriel Basin No. 1 of the Lachine Canal in the city of Montreal "together with the right and privilege to occupy, use and enjoy, for the purpose of receiving and storing therein freight and goods loaded onto and/or unloaded from vessels owned and operated by the lessee," the whole of a shed known as St. Gabriel Shed No. 1 and hereafter referred to as "the shed." The shed occupied the greater part of the said piece of land. The company was also granted "the right and privilege to construct, maintain and use, at its own cost and expense and over and/or across the said land, along the whole length of the southerly face of the said shed, a loading platform approximately fourteen feet in width, and a canopy extending approximately twenty feet beyond the southerly edge of the said platform." Between the land demised to the company and the St. Gabriel Basin No. 2 there lay a strip of land thirty feet in width. The term of the lease was twelve years from May 1, 1940, and the rent was over $12,000 per annum. The lease was expressed to be E

"made and executed upon and subject to the covenants, provisos, conditions and reservations hereinafter set forth and contained, and that F

H

the same and every one of them, representing and expressing the exact intention of the parties, are to be strictly observed, performed and complied with namely . . . ”

Then follow a number of clauses some of which must be set out, as the decision of this appeal ultimately turns on the construction of cl. 7 and cl. 17, and these two clauses must be considered in the light of the lease read as a whole. The

A more important clauses are as follows:

“ 1. That the lessee will pay all rental herein reserved at the time and in the manner in these presents set forth, without any abatement or deduction whatever . . . 5. That the lessor, his servants or agents, shall at all times and for all purposes, have full and free access to any and every part of the said land, the said shed and the said platform. 6. That the said land shall be used for purposes in connection with the lessee's business only, and for no other purpose or purposes whatever. 7. That the lessee shall not have any claim or demand against the lessor for detriment, damage or injury of any nature to the said land, the said shed, the said platform and the said canopy, or to any motor or other vehicles, materials, supplies, goods, articles, effects or things at any time brought, placed, made or being upon the said land, the said platform or in the said shed. 8. That the lessor will, at all times during the currency of this lease, at his own cost and expense, maintain the said shed, exclusive of the said platform and the said canopy. 9. That the lessee shall, in addition to the payment of the yearly rental hereunder, at its own sole cost and expense, insure, concurrently with the execution of this lease or as soon thereafter as possible, and thereafter keep insured during the currency of this lease with an insurance company or companies satisfactory to the Minister of Transport the said shed against fire and other casualty in the sum of forty-eight thousand dollars ($48,000.00) . . . 10. That the lessee shall before constructing or erecting the said platform, the said canopy or other structures, including alterations to the said shed, on the said land, submit to the general superintendent plans or drawings showing the location and design and nature of construction of the said platform, the said canopy or such structures, and obtain his approval of such plans or drawings, and shall construct or erect the said platform, the said canopy or such structures on the location and in accordance with the designs as shown on the plans and drawings approved by the general superintendent, and thereafter maintain the said platform, the said canopy or such structures in accordance with the designs respecting the same, and shall carry on the work of such construction and maintenance of the said platform, the said canopy and such structures at its own cost and expense and under the control and direction of the general superintendent and to his entire satisfaction . . . 12. That it is distinctly understood and agreed that this lease is granted subject to the condition that the said platform and the said canopy shall forthwith, upon termination of this lease in any manner, except as provided for in cl. 18 hereof, be and become vested in title in the lessor without any payment of compensation to the lessee in respect of the said platform and the said canopy . . . 16. That the parcel or tract of land, thirty (30) feet in width, situated between St. Gabriel Basin No. 2 and the said land may be used by the lessee in common with the public generally, it being understood and agreed, however, that the lessee shall, in the discretion of the superintending engineer and in accordance with his direction, have preference in the use thereof. 17. That the lessee shall at all times indemnify and save harmless the lessor from and against all claims and demands, loss, costs, damages, actions, suits or other proceedings by whomsoever made, brought or prosecuted, in any manner based upon, occasioned by or attributable to the execution of these presents, or any action taken or thing done or maintained by virtue hereof, or the exercise in any manner of rights arising hereunder."

Pursuant to the lease the company took possession of the leased premises and continued to occupy them at all times material to the present litigation. A few days prior to May 5, 1944, the Department of Transport in Montreal, representing the Crown, received a request from the company to effect certain minor repairs to the premises, including the doors of the shed. An inspection was made and the work undertaken by the employees of the Department of Transport almost immediately. At this time the shed contained a large variety of merchandise awaiting shipment, other goods stored there by third parties, and a quantity of equipment belonging to the company. A number of trucks and motor vehicles were on the wharf delivering or about to deliver further goods for transport. The shed was constructed of corrugated iron on a steel frame and the shipping doors were hung on hinges bolted to the uprights of the frame. These uprights were in the form of steel "H-Beams", the flanges of which were one-quarter to three-eighths of an inch thick. The Crown's employees, having almost completed their work on the afternoon of May 5, had removed and straightened the upper hinge of one of the shipping doors which had to be replaced. These hinges had originally been affixed to the "H-Beam" with three-eighths inch bolts. When they came to replace the hinge in question the Crown's employees found that they had no three-eighths inch bolts with them, the smallest size being one-half inch in diameter. They elected to enlarge the three-eighths inch hole in the "H-Beam" so that it would take the half-inch bolt. Inside the door, immediately opposite and a few feet distant from the "H-Beam" in question were piled a number of bales of cotton waste. Having decided to enlarge the hole, the Crown's employees proceeded to make use of an oxy-acetylene cutting torch for this purpose. The operation of this torch involved the use of oxygen and acetylene gas which are combined in a cutting-head under pressure and, when ignited, produce extremely high temperatures of from 5,500° to 6,300° Fahrenheit. The flame of the torch, at such temperatures, will cut through steel. The use of such a torch in the vicinity of inflammable material is dangerous, since, apart from the heat of the torch itself, the operation of cutting the metal necessarily produces a shower of sparks or particles of molten metal which fly off at a tangent from the point of cutting. The Crown's employees directed the torch from the exterior into the interior of the shed. For the purpose of preventing sparks from entering the shed, they placed a board on the inside across the opening of the "H-Beam". This board was some three feet shorter than the beam and did not fit closely at the top because it was cut square whereas the roof of the shed sloped. There were, accordingly, openings at both the top and bottom of the beam through which sparks might escape. One of the workmen was stationed on the top of the bales of cotton waste and a pail of water was placed inside the shed. The operation of enlarging the hole involved using the torch for about three or four minutes. Sparks escaped into the shed. The bales of cotton waste caught fire and the flames spread rapidly to the other contents of the shed and consumed the whole. Hence the claims, already mentioned, by the company and others, against the Crown.

ANGERS, J., after hearing the evidence, found as a fact that the fire and resulting damage were caused by the gross negligence of the Crown's servants while acting within the scope of their duties or employment. The Crown had denied negligence and had pleaded that the company's claim was in any event barred by the provisions of cl. 7 of the lease. In third party proceedings the Crown relied on cl. 17 of the lease as giving rise to a right of indemnity from the company against the claims of the other five suppliants. The learned trial judge did not express any view as to the meaning of cl. 7 and cl. 17 of the lease. It was not necessary for him to do so because, basing himself on the law of Quebec, which he reviewed exhaustively, he found that no clause would extend to relieve the Crown of liability for damage resulting from the gross negligence (faute lourde) of its servants. He, accordingly, refused to regard cl. 7 as a bar to the company's action or to hold that cl. 17 gave the Crown a right to indemnity in the other five cases. In the result, he condemned the Crown to pay to the company and to the other five suppliants the damages respectively claimed by them, and he dismissed the third party proceedings brought by the Crown against the company. The amount of the damages was agreed and is not in issue.

- A The Supreme Court of Canada (RINFRET, C.J., and RAND, KELLOCK, ESTEY, LOCKE, CARTWRIGHT and FAUTEUX, J.J.) by a majority of six to one (LOCKE, J., dissentiente) reversed the trial judge in the company's own case and unanimously reversed the trial judge in the cases of the other five suppliants in so far as the third party proceedings of the Crown against the company were concerned.
- B The Supreme Court concurred in the finding of the trial judge that the Crown's servants were negligent, but declined to hold that such negligence amounted to gross negligence (faute lourde). On the interpretation which they placed on cl. 7 (LOCKE, J., dissentiente) and cl. 17 of the lease, they held that such clauses must be read as barring the company's action and as entitling the Crown to indemnity in the other actions. They, accordingly, dismissed the company's
- C petition, confirmed the judgments maintaining the petitions in the five other cases, and condemned the company to indemnify the Crown in respect thereof.

In view of the findings of the Supreme Court, the Crown does not now seek to deny that its servants were negligent, but contends that their negligence was not gross negligence. Thus, the issues arising on this appeal are whether the Supreme Court rightly construed cl. 7 and cl. 17 of the lease, whether the Crown's servants were guilty of gross negligence, and, if so, whether, by the law of Quebec, clauses stipulating immunity from or limitation of liability for the gross negligence of one of the contracting parties or his servants, or indemnity against such liability, are illegal and void. Counsel for the company conceded that such clauses were legal and effective if they applied only to negligence which did not amount to faute lourde. He opened the appeal by submitting that, even if the negligence of the Crown's servants did not amount to faute lourde, on the true construction of cl. 7 and cl. 17 of the lease, cl. 7 afforded no answer to the company's claim against the Crown, and cl. 17 did not entitle the Crown to the indemnity claimed in the third party proceedings. As this submission, if successful, would dispose of the appeal, their Lordships thought it well to hear it argued fully before hearing argument on the other issues in the case.

- D In considering this question of construction their Lordships have had in mind art. 1013 to art. 1021 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada and also the special principles which are applicable to clauses which purport to exempt one party to a contract from liability. These principles were stated by LORD GREENE, M.R. ([1945] 1 All E.R. 245), in Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry, Ltd. (1), as follows:

- E " . . . where the head of damage in respect of which limitation of liability is sought to be imposed by such a clause is one which rests on negligence and nothing else, the clause must be construed as extending to that head of damage, because if it were not so construed it would lack subject-matter. Where, on the other hand, the head of damage may be based on some ground other than that of negligence, the general principle is that the clause must be confined to loss occurring through that other cause to the exclusion of loss arising through negligence. The reason for that is that if a contracting party wishes in such a case to limit his liability in respect of negligence, he must do so in clear terms, and in the absence of such clear terms the clause is to be construed as relating to a different kind of liability and not to liability based on negligence."
- G
- H

It appears to their Lordships that none of the learned judges of the Supreme Court regarded this passage as being in any way in conflict with the law of Lower Canada, and KELLOCK, J., observed:

"It is well settled that a clause of this nature is not to be construed as extending to protect the person in whose favour it is made from the consequences of the negligence of his own servants unless there is express language to that effect or unless the clause can have no operation except as applied to such a case."

Their Lordships think that the duty of a court in approaching the consideration of such clauses may be summarised as follows: (i) If the clause contains language which expressly exempts the person in whose favour it is made (hereafter called "the proferens") from the consequence of the negligence of his own servants, effect must be given to that provision. Any doubts which existed as to whether this was the law in the Province of Quebec were removed by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Glengoil S.S. Co. v. Pilkington (2). (ii) If there is no express reference to negligence, the court must consider whether the words used are wide enough, in their ordinary meaning, to cover negligence on the part of the servants of the proferens. If a doubt arises at this point, it must be resolved against the proferens in accordance with art. 1019 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada: "In cases of doubt, the contract is interpreted against him who has stipulated and in favour of him who has contracted the obligation." (iii) If the words used are wide enough for the above purpose, the court must then consider whether "the head of damage may be based on some ground other than that of negligence" to quote again LORD GREENE, M.R., in the Alderslade case (1). The "other ground" must not be so fanciful or remote that the proferens cannot be supposed to have desired protection against it, but, subject to this qualification, which is, no doubt, to be implied from LORD GREENE'S words, the existence of a possible head of damage other than that of negligence is fatal to the proferens even if the words used are, prima facie, wide enough to cover negligence on the part of his servants.

With these principles in mind, their Lordships turn to a consideration of cl. 7, and they will first consider its language apart from the contents of cl. 8 which immediately follows it. The claim of the company in the present case is "a claim . . . against the lessor for damage to . . . goods . . . being . . . in the said shed", and would, therefore, prima facie, be barred by cl. 7. It is, however, a claim for damage admittedly caused by the negligence of the Crown's servants. Their Lordships must, therefore, consider the third question stated above, and, in considering this question, it is necessary to bear in mind that the only liability of the Crown in the Province of Quebec in respect of claims arising ex delicto is based on s. 19 (c) of the Exchequer Court Act, R.S.C., 1927, c. 34, as amended in 1938 (c. 28). That section is in the following terms:

"The Exchequer Court shall . . . have the exclusive original jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters . . . (c) Every claim against the Crown arising out of any death or injury to the person or to property resulting from the negligence of any officer or servant of the Crown while acting within the scope of his duties or employment."

Thus, the field for claims against the Crown, not based on negligence and coming within cl. 7, is not a very wide one, but counsel for the company has given the following instances of such claims: (i) Claims under art. 1614 of the Civil Code for

"defects or faults in the thing leased which prevent or diminish its use, whether known to the lessor or not."

There might be, says counsel, a defect in the construction of the roof of the shed, not known to the Crown, and as a result of this defect the roof might fall down and injure chattels in the shed which belonged to the company. A claim for damage to these chattels resulting from this breach of the lessor's obligation under art. 1614 is not a claim based on negligence and it would be barred by cl. 7. (ii) Claims under art. 1612 (3) of the Civil Code. Suppose, for example, says counsel, that the Crown were to authorise a third party to carry out some operation on adjacent land which caused damage to the shed. In that event, again, the company would have a claim for damages, not based on negligence, which would be barred by cl. 7. (iii) Claims for a reduction of the rent, by the joint operation of art. 1617 and art. 1660 of the Civil Code, if, for instance, a trespasser caused damage to the shed by setting part of it on fire and the lessee's right of action for damages against the trespasser proved to be ineffectual.

A Counsel for the Crown contended that a claim for a reduction of the rent would not fall within cl. 7, but their Lordships think that such a claim, although it would not be a claim for "damages" might fairly be described as "a demand against the lessor for . . . damage . . . of any nature . . . to the said shed" within the meaning of cl. 7.

B It was contended on behalf of the Crown that these instances of possible claims for damages were fanciful and remote, and would not have been within the contemplation of the parties when the terms of the lease were agreed. No doubt, there may be cases in which it may be difficult to draw the line. In the present case, however, their Lordships are not prepared to assume that the obligations imposed on lessors by the Civil Code were not in the minds of the parties. They think that the Crown may well have desired to protect itself from claims for damage arising out of any breach of these obligations, and yet may not have intended to go so far as to stipulate for protection from claims for damage resulting from the negligence of its servants.

C So far, cl. 7 has been considered apart from cl. 8, but these two clauses must be read together, according to the ordinary principles of construction. So reading them, it appears to their Lordships most unlikely that cl. 7 was intended to protect the Crown from claims for damage resulting from the negligence of its servants in carrying out the very obligations which were imposed on the Crown by cl. 8. It is difficult to imagine the Crown saying to the company when the lease was being negotiated: "Notwithstanding that the Crown agrees to maintain the shed at its own expense throughout the term of the lease and notwithstanding that such an agreement implies an obligation to use due care in its performance, if the Crown's servants set about the work of repair in such a negligent manner that the shed and all the goods therein are destroyed, you are to have no claim for damages against the Crown." If the Crown had made such a suggestion, it seems unlikely that the company would have accepted it. Counsel for the Crown submitted that inconsistency between cl. 7 and cl. 8 would be avoided if the former clause were read as barring claims for damages for non-feasance or misfeasance under cl. 8, but leaving open to the company any claims for specific performance which it might make as a result of non-feasance under art. 1641 (1) and (2) of the Civil Code. This is not an impossible construction of cl. 7, but it appears to their Lordships to be a somewhat strained and artificial construction. Counsel for the Crown also relied on the fact that under cl. 9 the company was bound to insure the shed as an indication that the Crown did not intend to be liable for any damage to the shed, howsoever such damage might arise. This argument is not without force, as applied to the shed, but cl. 9 makes no reference to goods within the shed. Their Lordships will shortly consider how far the construction of cl. 7 is affected by cl. 17, for they entirely agree with the view expressed by the majority of the Supreme Court as to the close interrelation of these two clauses. If, however, cl. 7 were to be considered apart from cl. 17, their Lordships would conclude that, even if the case is put at its highest in favour of the Crown, the Crown has failed to limit its liability in respect of negligence in clear terms. They would, therefore, decide against the Crown in accordance with the principles already stated.

H Their Lordships now turn to cl. 17, and observe at the outset that, if the Crown's contention as to this clause is correct, it imposes a very remarkable and burdensome obligation on the company. However widespread may be the destruction caused by the negligence of the Crown's servants in carrying out the Crown's obligations under cl. 8, the whole of the damage must be paid for by the company. In the present case the claims are heavy, and it is obvious that the damage caused by a fire such as this might be even greater. Such a liability for the negligence of others must surely be imposed by very clear words, if it is to be imposed at all. The opening words of cl. 17 are certainly very wide:

"That the lessee shall at all times indemnify and save harmless the lessor from and against all claims and demands, loss, costs, damages, actions, suits or other proceedings by whomsoever made, brought or prosecuted . . ."

They are, however, considerably narrowed in their scope by the words which follow. These words limit the application of the clause to claims, etc., "in any manner based upon, occasioned by or attributable to" any one of three specified matters, namely, (i) "the execution of these presents," (ii) "any action taken or things done or maintained by virtue hereof," (iii) "the exercise in any manner of rights arising hereunder." Are these words, in their ordinary meaning, wide enough to cover the negligent act of the Crown's servants, which caused the damage now under consideration? The learned Chief Justice appears to have placed some reliance on the words "occasioned by or attributable to the execution of these presents," treating "execution" as synonymous with "performance," but their Lordships are unable to take that view. They think that the words "execution of these presents" refer only to the signing and sealing of the lease. This is the usual meaning of these words, and the word "executed" is used in the same sense at the end of the document, where it is stated that "the lessee has executed these presents." Their Lordships think that by this phrase the Crown must have desired to protect itself against third parties claiming that they had contractual rights against the Crown which had been violated by the execution of the lease and the resulting grant of various rights to the company.

The remaining part of cl. 17 gives rise to questions of great difficulty. Counsel for the Crown submitted that the negligent act of the Crown's servants was covered by the words "any action taken or things done . . . by virtue hereof." They contended that the words "by virtue of" may fairly be construed as meaning "in consequence of" and that the act of the Crown's servants in enlarging the hole was done in consequence of the lease, none the less so because it was negligently done. They pointed out, quite rightly, that the intent of the clause was to protect the Crown against claims by third parties and submitted (a) that the only acts which could involve claims against the Crown by third parties would be acts of the Crown's servants, and, therefore, the words in question must refer to, or at least include, acts of the Crown's servants, and (b) that the acts contemplated must be negligent acts, otherwise they would give rise to no liability to third parties. Counsel for the company contended that this argument involved a strained and unnatural construction of the words in question and that the phrase "any action taken or things done by virtue hereof" would naturally refer to the doing of an act in pursuance of some right or privilege conferred by the lease rather than to the doing of an act in performance of some obligation imposed by the lease. They further contended that even if the words in question could cover an act properly done in performance of an obligation imposed by the lease, they could not extend to cover an act negligently done in the course of carrying out such an obligation. They submitted the following argument on the construction of cl. 17. By the phrase "occasioned by or attributable to the execution of these presents" the Crown was seeking to protect itself against the possible claims already mentioned, while by the rest of the clause the Crown was seeking to protect itself against possible liability to third parties occasioned by or attributable to acts of the company. The reference to the execution of the lease is closely linked up with the words which follow it. In executing the lease the Crown was conferring a large number of rights and privileges on the company. The party who is likely to "take action"

A or "do things" or "exercise rights" under the lease is the company. By cl. 17 the Crown is saying, in effect to the company, "Nothing that you do under the lease is to involve the Crown in any liability. Third parties may consider that they have a claim against the Crown by reason of the Crown's act in granting to you the right of occupying the shed, or by reason of acts done by you with the sanction of the Crown, such as the erection of the loading platform and canopy in accordance with plans approved by the Crown under cl. 10 of the lease, or the exercise of 'preferential' rights under cl. 16. If any such claim is made against the Crown, and succeeds, you must indemnify the Crown." In support of this argument counsel referred to the latter part of art. 1618 of the Civil Code as showing that the Crown might become a party to an action by a third party claiming some "right in or upon the thing leased."

B The choice between these two contentions is not an easy one, but their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the company's contention is to be preferred, for the following reasons. First, it gives the more natural construction to the words "any action done by virtue hereof." It is at least doubtful whether these words can be applied to a negligent act done in the course of carrying out an obligation. Secondly, even if the words are wide enough to include such a negligent act, the principle laid down in the Alderslade case (1) must be applied and their Lordships are inclined to think that, on the company's construction, "the head of damage may be based on some ground other than that of negligence," although the possible grounds are somewhat limited in extent. Thirdly, their Lordships think it is manifest that the meaning and effect of cl. 17 are far from clear, and, if this is so, the Crown has failed to impose in clear terms the burdensome obligation which has already been described. There would have been no difficulty in inserting an express reference to negligence of the Crown's servants in cl. 7 and cl. 17, if these clauses had been intended to protect the Crown against the consequences of such negligence.

D If their Lordships had agreed with the Supreme Court that cl. 17 extended so far as to cover negligent acts of the Crown's servants, they might well have had to re-consider the provisional view already expressed as to cl. 7, but, as they have arrived at the contrary opinion, their provisional view as to cl. 7, so far from being disturbed, is strengthened. It would seem unlikely that, if negligent acts by the Crown's servants are outside the scope of one clause, they are within the scope of the other. The result is that, after hearing an able argument as to the construction of the lease from both sides, their Lordships find that the Crown has failed to establish either its defence under cl. 7 or its claim for indemnity under cl. 17. This being so, no other question arises for decision on this appeal. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, the orders of the Supreme Court on the petition of the company against the Crown and in the five third party proceedings should be set aside, and the orders of ANGERS, J., restored.

E
F
G Appeal allowed.
Solicitors: Lawrence Jones & Co. (for the company); Charles Russell & Co. (for the Crown).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BANK VOOR HANDEL EN SCHEEPVAART Reversed. C.A. [1952] 2 All E.R. 99

(sued as CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY) AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Devlin, J.), October 29, November 7, December 7, 12, 1951, January 18, 1952.]

Crown—Servants—Custodian of Enemy Property—Liability for income tax—Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 7 (1)—Income Tax Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 42, sched. IV, Part I.

On July 3, 1940, gold belonging to a Dutch banking company was transferred from safe deposit in London to the Custodian of Enemy Property by a vesting order made by the Board of Trade under the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, s. 7 (1) and the Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1939. On July 24 the Custodian sold the gold and retained the proceeds as enemy property. He subsequently used the proceeds to purchase Treasury bills at a discount and paid income tax on the profits made. In April, 1950, on a demand by the Administrator of Hungarian Property, made under art. 1 (5) (e) of the Treaty of Peace (Hungary) Order, 1948, he transferred the proceeds to the Administrator. On July 30, 1951, the Dutch banking company obtained judgment for the amount of the proceeds of the gold against the Administrator, and it was conceded by the Administrator that any sums earned by the proceeds while in the hands of the Custodian should go with the proceeds. On an application in the action to determine whether such sums should be paid without deduction of the income tax paid by the Custodian in respect of the profits on the Treasury bills, HELD: the Custodian of Enemy Property used the income of the proceeds of the sale of the gold as a person having Crown status, or, at least, he received it for a Crown purpose, and, therefore, apart from the provisions of the Income Tax Act, 1944, s. 42, sched. IV, Part I, he was exempt from liability to income tax and the Dutch company were entitled to the sums earned by the proceeds without deduction of tax.

FOR THE TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT, 1939, s. 7 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 26, p. 337.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Munster, [1920] 1 Ch. 268; 89 L.J.Ch. 138; 28 Digest 95, 561.
- (2) Williams v. Singer. Pool v. Royal Exchange Assurance, [1921] 1 A.C. 65; 89 L.J.K.B. 1151; 123 L.T. 632; 7 Tax Cas. 387; 28 Digest 78, 425.
- (3) Kelly v. Rogers, [1935] 2 K.B. 446; 104 L.J.K.B. 616; 153 L.T. 428; 19 Tax Cas. 692; Digest Supp.
- (4) Austrian Property Administrator v. Russian Bank for Foreign Trade, (1932), 48 T.L.R. 37; Digest Supp.
- (5) Tamlin v. Hannaford, [1949] 2 All E.R. 327; [1950] 1 K.B. 18; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) International Ry. Co. v. Niagara Parks Commission, [1941] 2 All E.R. 456; [1941] A.C. 328; 111 L.J.P.C. 55; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Mersey Docks v. Cameron. Jones v. Mersey Docks, (1865), 11 H.L. Cas. 443; 35 L.J.M.C. 1; 12 L.T. 643; 29 J.P. 483; 11 E.R. 1405; 38 Digest 466, 286.
- (8) Coomber v. Berks JJ., (1883), 9 App. Cas. 61; 53 L.J.Q.B. 239; 50 L.T. 405; 48 J.P. 421; 2 Tax Cas. 1; 28 Digest 14, 69.
- (9) Tunnickliffe v. Birkdale Overseers, (1888), 20 Q.B.D. 450; 59 L.T. 190; 52 J.P. 452; 38 Digest 471, 323.
- (10) London County Territorial & Auxiliary Forces Assn. v. Nichols, [1948] 2 All E.R. 432; [1949] 1 K.B. 35; [1948] L.J.R. 1600; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (11) Re Ferdinand (Ex-Tsar of Bulgaria), [1921] 1 Ch. 107; 90 L.J.Ch. 1; 11 Digest 514, 152.

(12) Fox v. Newfoundland Government, [1898] A.C. 667; 11 Digest 582, c.

(13) Metropolitan Meat Industry Board v. Sheedy, [1927] A.C. 899; 137 L.T. 782; Digest Supp.

APPLICATION in an action by the plaintiffs, a Dutch banking company, claiming inter alia (i) a declaration that the first defendant, the Custodian of Enemy Property, was a trustee for the State of the Netherlands and for the plaintiffs of gold deposited in London of which the plaintiffs were the owners immediately before May 24, 1940, and of balances due at that time to the plaintiffs from certain banks in London, and that he was liable to account to the plaintiffs for the same and all interest and dividends accruing thereto; (ii) damages against the first defendant for conversion of the gold; (iii) a declaration that sums transferred by the first defendant to the second defendant, the Administrator of Hungarian Property, in April, 1950, being the sum received by the first defendant on the sale of the gold and the sum total of the bank balances (less a fee retained by the Custodian under the Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1939, art. 7) were not subject to any charge imposed by the Treaty of Peace (Hungary) Order, 1948, and that the plaintiffs were absolutely entitled to them; and (iv) an order for recovery of the sums with interest thereon.

On July 3, 1940, the gold was transferred from safe deposit in London to the Custodian of Enemy Property under a vesting order made by the Board of Trade under the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, s. 7 (1), and the Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1939. On July 24, under an order made under the said Act and order, the Custodian sold the gold and retained the proceeds as enemy property. He acquired the bank balances from banks holding them under instructions contained in letters from him, dated Jan. 19, 1950, as moneys held by the banks since May 20, 1940, for his account and subject to his direction. In April, 1950, on a demand by the Administrator of Hungarian Property, made under art. 1 (5) (e) of the Treaty of Peace (Hungary) Order, 1948, the Custodian transferred the proceeds and the bank balances to the Administrator.

On July 30, 1951, DEVLIN, J., gave judgment in the action for the Custodian against the plaintiffs and judgment for the plaintiffs against the Administrator of Hungarian Property for the sums claimed and interest thereon at four per cent., with liberty to apply if the amount due in respect of the sums earned by the proceeds of the sale of gold by the Custodian were not agreed (which, it had been conceded, should go to the plaintiffs with the proceeds if they were successful in the action) ([1951] 2 All E.R. 779). The amount was not agreed, and the plaintiffs now applied to the judge to determine the amount due. The plaintiffs claimed that judgment should be entered for £2,224,367 6s. 11d. The Administrator contended that the sum should be £2,148,041 8s., the difference of £76,325 18s. 11d. being income tax paid by the Custodian in respect of profits made from the purchase by the Custodian of Treasury bills at a discount. The plaintiffs contended that the Custodian was a servant of the Crown and was exempt from income tax and should not have paid the tax.

Littman (Foster, K.C., with him) for the plaintiffs.

J. P. Ashworth and R. J. Parker (Upjohn, K.C., with them) for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 18. DEVLIN, J., read the following judgment. When, in April, 1950, the Custodian of Enemy Property, pursuant to the Administrator's certificate, handed over to him the sum of £1,962,852 14s., that sum was no more than the proceeds which the Custodian had actually received from the sale of the gold bars ten years before and the balances in the banks which he had taken over. He did not add—the certificate did not require it—any interest or other money which these sums had earned while in his hands. The certificate might have been framed to include that, for art. 1 (3) (i) of the Treaty of Peace (Hungary)

Order, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 116) covers "... the net proceeds of the sale, liquidation or other dealings" by a Custodian with any property in his possession. In the course of the argument before me, counsel for the plaintiffs contended that these "fruits", as he called them, ought to go with the property, and the Solicitor-General intervened to concede the point. I recorded this in my judgment as follows ([1951] 2 All E.R. 800):

"The interest payable on the proceeds of the gold bars has not been separately earmarked, but the Custodian says that while it was in his hands it would have earned on the average from 1940 to 1950 about $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum. The Solicitor-General is willing to treat these fruits as part of the proceeds in the hands of the Administrator, and, accordingly, the judgment which I give will be for the amount which the Administrator actually received increased by that addition."

I gave liberty to apply if the amount of the "fruits" could not be agreed. The amount has not been agreed, and so there has resulted the application which I now have to consider. The plaintiffs contend that judgment should be entered for a total sum of £2,224,367 6s. 11d., and the Administrator contends that it should be for £2,148,041 8s. The difference between those two sums amounts to £76,325 18s. 11d. and is the income tax paid by the Custodian. He purchased Treasury bills at a discount, and it is conceded that the profits which he made by so doing are taxable under the Income Tax Act, 1918. The plaintiffs, however, contend that the Income Tax Acts do not bind the Crown, and that the Custodian is a servant of the Crown, and as such is exempt from taxation; accordingly, he was wrong in paying the tax; and the plaintiffs are entitled under the terms of the concession made by the Solicitor-General, or under my judgment (which is based on it) to have all the fruits which the money earned without deduction. It is not disputed that the Income Tax Acts do not bind the Crown, and so the only point which I have to determine is whether this income was exempt from tax because it was received by the Custodian as a servant of the Crown. But, before I proceed to consider that, I must deal with a number of preliminary points so as to show how in the end the issue has been fined down to this one matter.

In the first place, it was contended by the plaintiffs that the point did not really arise at this stage. The proper course, they said, was for the Administrator, if he thought the Custodian was right in having paid tax, to allow judgment to be entered for the larger sum, and to seek to satisfy that judgment as to £76,325 by tendering certificates that tax had been paid. An issue would then arise on the question whether the defendants were entitled to tender certificates in part satisfaction of the judgment. The Administrator objected to that because he thought that on an issue so raised he might conceivably be at a disadvantage in that he could not contend that tax had been deducted by the Custodian as the plaintiffs' agent. My only duty is to determine for what sum I shall enter judgment. It appears to me that the Custodian could not have been compelled to hand over to the Administrator more than he was entitled to retain, and if, out of the profits he made, he properly paid tax, he could not be compelled to do more than hand over the balance. That balance would, therefore, be all that the plaintiffs would be entitled to obtain on a judgment against the Administrator. If, therefore, the Administrator is right on the tax point, he is, I think, entitled to have the judgment against him entered for the smaller sum. So I think that the point does arise for consideration at this stage. The objection was not strongly pressed by the plaintiffs, since they agreed that it was one of form only, and that the substance of the matter must be argued somewhere and at some time.

Next, I must observe that the contention that the Custodian is a servant of the Crown was not one which was advanced by the plaintiffs in the course of the case. I do not say that by way of criticism. The argument did not inevitably call for its submission. But the Custodian and the Administrator were treated in the case as separate legal entities, and I think that I so refer to them in my judgment. It can hardly be disputed that, if the Custodian is a servant of the Crown, the Administrator is also (indeed, on the authorities his case is a fortiori), and on this view the action might well have been differently constituted. However, it is not suggested that the plaintiffs have precluded themselves from taking the point at this late stage.

A It is convenient to consider next what is common ground about the Custodian's position. He is not a corporation sole, and so one must think of him simply as an individual who for the time being holds the office. It would, of course, be surprising if he were taxed as an ordinary individual. His income as Custodian must be very large, and under current rates of taxation there would
B not be enough of it left to be worth worrying about. But his position is not, on any view, that of an ordinary individual. In Re Munster (1) it was decided by RUSSELL, J., that the effect of the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914, on property vested in the Custodian was to remove it from the control and beneficial ownership of the enemy, leaving the beneficial ownership in statutory suspense or abeyance, the Custodian having meanwhile such powers
C of dealing with the property as were given to him by statute. Thus, the Custodian is a creature of statute of a type not otherwise known to our laws. He is a trustee with no beneficiary; he holds the legal property only, and the beneficial interest is temporarily non-existent. The Administrator contends that the result from the tax point of view is that he falls to be taxed as a trustee in accordance with the principles laid down in Williams v. Singer (2) ([1921]
D 1 A.C. 71), by VISCOUNT CAVE, and in Kelly v. Rogers (3) by LORD HANWORTH, M.R. ([1935] 2 K.B. 462) and ROMER, L.J. (ibid., 466). He is liable to pay income tax only at the standard rate, and he is neither entitled to tax reliefs nor obliged to pay surtax, because reliefs are obtainable and surtax is payable only by the beneficial owner. He comes within r. 1 of the Miscellaneous Rules to sched. D as a person who is entitled to or in receipt of income. The plaintiffs
E admit that, but for Crown exemption, he would fall within that rule, although they do not, I think, accept that the decisions to which I have referred are applicable. The Custodian has, therefore, whether rightly or wrongly, always regarded himself as liable to pay income tax on this basis. But by the Finance Act, 1944, sched. IV, Part I, his position was specifically regulated. Paragraph 1 provides that where income from enemy property

F " . . . becomes payable to a Custodian, the same assessments to income tax (other than surtax) shall be made for that year on the Custodian . . . " as would have been made on the enemy owner. Paragraphs 2 and 3 provide that, where an assessment is made on a Custodian under para. 1, or where any income which is paid subject to deduction of income tax is received by a

G Custodian, the Custodian is to obtain the same relief, or to pay the same amount of surtax, as the enemy owner would have obtained or paid. By para. 13 these provisions are retrospective to 1939. The Administrator says, however, that they do not apply to the Custodian's income in this case, and naturally the plaintiffs do not contend that they do. I do not, as at present advised, see why they do not apply. But since the Administrator, with the assistance,
H I gather, of the Inland Revenue Department, has come to the conclusion that the point is unarguable, I take it that the point would have failed. So the statute is not relied on, and comes only incidentally into the question which I have to determine. Both sides suggest that it sheds a little light on what the tax position was before it was passed. I do not think I can get any help from speculation about whether Parliament did or did not think that apart from the Act the Custodian would be liable to income tax in the way in which the Administrator now contends.

The next point I must consider is how matters stand if the plaintiffs are right in their contention that the Custodian is not liable to tax. The plaintiffs claim that they must then succeed by virtue of the concession made by the Solicitor-General and the judgment which resulted from it. The Solicitor-General conceded that the "fruits" should be handed over. No one then had in mind any question of income tax. But, the plaintiffs say, whether or not its full effect was foreseen, the concession is binding. If the Custodian is not liable to tax, then the "fruits" are the gross sum and cannot be diminished because the Custodian has erroneously paid part away. The Crown contends that the concession is not binding, and that the plaintiffs are back where they were before it was made and must show some right to the "fruits." If this is the correct view of the matter, the plaintiffs might technically be in a difficulty, since the Treaty of Peace (Hungary) Order, 1948, if it is interpreted literally, gives to the plaintiffs a right of recovery only from the Administrator and only to the extent that he has money in his hands. I think that the Administrator acted wisely and properly in the end when, at the conclusion of the argument, he intimated that, if on the true view of the law the Custodian was not liable to tax, he would concede that judgment should be for the higher sum. Indeed, for the reasons which I expressed in the course of the argument (and which I need not now repeat) I do not think that a public servant could fittingly have acted otherwise.

The last matter to which I need refer is this. The Custodian, from September, 1939, until Aug. 10, 1948, was the same person as he who held the office of Public Trustee. Thereafter the office has been held by an official of the Board of Trade. The Board of Trade appears always to have acted on the view that the Custodian is not the servant of the Crown, and I daresay that view has been generally accepted. For example, although there is no special provision with regard to suing the Custodian, he has always been sued in the ordinary way. This is a little surprising, since the only close authority suggests the contrary. In Austrian Property Administrator v. Russian Bank for Foreign Trade (4) the Court of Appeal held that the Administrator was the servant of the Crown. There is at first sight a similarity between the two positions of Custodian and Administrator. The defence contend that the similarity is superficial only, and that when the positions of both are analysed, material differences will be found. Before me (although they reserved their rights in any higher court) they accepted the view that the Administrator was a servant of the Crown. I think that there are differences between the two offices, and that it is not possible for me to decide this case simply on the authority of the Court of Appeal. The argument before me has been detailed and exhaustive, and quite rightly so having regard to the amount involved and the importance of the case in relation to the practice which has up to now been followed. I shall, therefore, approach the matter de novo, though the Austrian Administrator case (4) must necessarily remain of the first importance among the authorities which I have to consider.

The most recent decision on this topic is that of the Court of Appeal in Tamlin v. Hannaford (5) in which the court ([1949] 2 All E.R. 328) formulated the question as being whether the person or body claiming Crown privilege was properly to be regarded as the servant or agent of the Crown. In the earlier cases looser expressions had been used and references made to "emanations" of the Crown, "shields," "arms and hands," and even in one case to the "contagion" of Crown immunity. These expressions were criticised by the Privy Council in International Ry. Co. v. Niagara Parks Commission (6) ([1941] 2 All E.R. 462) as well as in Tamlin v. Hannaford (5). Both tribunals expressed a preference for the term "servant or agent" over such undefined words as "emanation." I, of course, accept this view, but I would respectfully observe that the term "servant or agent" gives an appearance of precision which may on this subject-matter be misleading. Before the days of the constitutional monarchy, it would have been easy to ascertain who were the King's servants by looking in each case to see whether the ordinary incidents of the relationship of master and servant were present. Most of the great offices of State have their origin in the appointment by the King of men who owed to him personally the same duty of obedience that every servant owes to his master. But from the time that the King became constitutionally bound to act on the advice of his Ministers the ordinary master and servant relationship ceased. It is no longer practicable or useful to inquire whether a Secretary of State has to do what the King tells him to do. Meticulous devotion to theory might have kept the relationship alive as a legal fiction, but even as a fiction it has been largely ignored and overlaid. When the powers and duties of the executive had in the nineteenth century to be extended to match the increasing complexity of government, the process was not performed by adding to the powers and duties of the Sovereign which he would be presumed to instruct a Minister to exercise for him, but by bestowing the power or imposing the duty directly on the appropriate Minister. Instead of expressly extending the limits of the prerogative to cover such matters as, for example, education and health, it was simpler to provide for the appointment first of boards and then of Ministers, and to give to them the necessary powers. Similarly, since Parliament could not, without openly disregarding the theory of the King's supremacy and making him answerable to Parliament, require him to discharge specific duties. It was necessary to lay the task on the Minister or servant.

This has produced some uncertainty about what exactly a lawyer means when he talks of "the Crown." There are passages in MAITLAND'S CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND (1920), pp. 415 to 421, which are illuminating on the topic. As MAITLAND says, the Crown is a convenient term, but one which is often used to save the asking of difficult questions. It is a description of the powers that formerly at common law were exercised by the King in person, and that latterly have been bestowed by statute on the King in Council or on various Ministers. There is, I think, uncertainty about what is meant by the Crown and uncertainty about who are its servants or agents. The only thing that is reasonably certain is that service or agency is not in this connection to be ascertained in the ordinary way. This is clear from the fact that in what is the first and leading authority on this topic, Mersey Docks v. Cameron (7), the term is plainly not used in any precise sense. BLACKBURN, J. (11 H.L. Cas. 464), treated the exemption as extending not only to servants of the great departments of State who "might strictly be called the servants of the Crown," but also to persons who "might be considered in consimili casu". Those he defined (ibid., 465) as persons whose occupation (the case was concerned with exemption from rates) was for purposes which were all public purposes

"of that kind which, by the constitution of this country, fall within the province of government, and are committed to the Sovereign . . ."

The claim is wide enough to include such persons as justices of the peace, who are not in any sense servants of the Crown, but whose occupation of courts, etc., is for public purposes within BLACKBURN, J.'s description: see Coomber v. Berks JJ. (8). In Mersey Docks v. Cameron (7) LORD WESTBURY, L.C. (11 H.L. Cas. 505), described the public purposes as

"such as are required and created by the government of the country, and are therefore to be deemed part of the use and service of the Crown"; and LORD CRANWORTH (ibid., 508) spoke of extending

"the shield of the Crown to what might more fitly be described as the public government of the country."

In Coomber v. Berks JJ. (8) LORD BLACKBURN referred (9 App. Cas. 70) to

". . . purposes of the administration, or those purposes of the government which are, according to the theory of the constitution, administered by the Sovereign."

Earlier he had referred (ibid., 67) to preservation of order and prevention of crime as among "the most important functions of government," and had said that "by the constitution of this country these functions do, by common right, belong to the Crown." In Tunncliffe v. Birkdale Overseers (9) (20 Q.B.D. 455) LORD ESHER, M.R., refers to

"... persons who must be considered as servants of the Crown, because entrusted with the performance of duties forming part of the functions of the Sovereign . . ."

These citations, and the considerations which I have earlier set out, satisfy me that the expression "servants or agents of the Crown," when used in Tamlin v. Hannaford (5) and other authorities, is used notionally or descriptively and not definitively. The description "servant of the Crown" has a meaning, of course, just as "public servant" has a meaning, but it has no longer a precise legal meaning. It appears at first sight to afford an exact criterion for determining Crown privilege, but on inspection the apparition fades into the same insubstantiality that has dissolved the "emanation" and other metaphors which have emerged from the nebula. I respectfully think that the best and most accurate descriptive phrases are those used by SCOTT, L.J., in London County Territorial & Auxiliary Forces Assn. v. Nichols (10), and I shall return to them later.

I have said enough to show that I cannot accept the first submission of counsel for the plaintiffs that the Custodian is a servant of the Crown in the strict sense. The submission fails because there is not, in my view, any strict sense at all, and I have dwelt on the matter because I think that the submission confuses the inquiry. It makes one suppose that the problem can be solved by looking for what are normal incidents of ordinary service and counting their presence or absence as determinative. Submission to orders lies at the heart of service or agency, and, if the obligation to obey cannot be discovered, I do not think it avails to search for other quite usual incidents of ordinary service. The plaintiffs point out that the Custodian is appointed by the Board of Trade. So are many other functionaries, such as the Public Trustee and the Official Receiver, and, if there be a doubt whether such functionaries are servants of the Crown, there can be none in the case of those judges and magistrates who are appointed by the Lord Chancellor and can be removed by him. Likewise, the servants of many public boards and corporations are appointed by a Minister of the Crown. The Custodian, like any civil servant, is paid out of the Consolidated Fund—so also, I suppose, are the Speaker of the House of Commons and all judicial officers. So, a private person may appoint a trustee for a certain purpose, pay him, and reserve the right to direct him on a number of matters, but he does not thereby make him his servant. The plaintiffs rely chiefly on the large measure of control over the Custodian that the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, gives to the Board of Trade. While I regard that as relevant on another aspect of the question, I do not think it proves the relationship of master and servant, but rather the contrary. When the Board of Trade appoints an assistant principal, it does not need an Act of Parliament to say that he must do what the President tells him. Though the board's powers to give directions to the Custodian are wide, they are not unlimited, for the directions must be within the scope and purpose of the Act. Since the power to direct a servant how to perform his duties is normally at large, any limitation on it tends to negative the inference of service.

In Territorial Forces v. Nichols (10) SCOTT, L.J. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 434), used the term "Crown status" to apply to those persons who, by virtue of their position in the State, enjoy Crown immunity, and "Crown purpose" to apply to those functions of government which extend pro tanto Crown immunity to the persons discharging them. Crown status is clearly enjoyed by all those officers of State who obtain it by virtue of the fact that their predecessors were once truly servants of the King; likewise it extends to their subordinates. It must extend also to those new officers created by Parliament who, by the designation that it confers on them, such as Minister of the Crown, Parliament clearly intends shall have the same status. It is when Parliament creates a new office without any clear designation that the difficulty arises. As SCOTT, L.J., says (ibid.), there is no line that can be precisely drawn. Is the "province of government" that attracts Crown immunity co-extensive with the general executive government of the country? Or is the immunity restricted to those discharging duties which, judged by some historical test or otherwise, fall peculiarly within the functions of the Sovereign? There are authorities which point either way, and some of the dicta which I have cited above may be used to support either contention.

- A I have reached the conclusion that I need not attempt to decide this question, nor to explore the extremities of Crown status. If the Custodian is an officer of the executive at all, I think he must have Crown status, for his duties bring him within the sphere of two of the most ancient and peculiar prerogatives of the Crown—the power to make war, including the power to take for itself the property of an enemy found within the realm, and the power to make peace.
- C The Custodian is appointed under the Act of 1939, s. 7 (1),

" . . . with a view to preventing the payment of money to enemies . . . " which is a measure of war, and

" . . . of preserving enemy property in contemplation of arrangements to be made at the conclusion of peace . . . "

- D On this aspect of the case, I regard the Austrian Administrator's case (4) as conclusive. Speaking of the Administrator, SCRUTTON, L.J., says (48 T.L.R. 38):

" Now, in my view, he is an agent of the Crown to carry out the promises which the King has made by virtue of his prerogative."

- E GREER, L.J., says (ibid., 39):

" . . . the Crown gets the rights, which are to be administered by the Administrator, entirely by reason of its prerogative as the war-making power and the peace-making power . . . What the Administrator is doing is, as agent of the Crown, distributing the funds which the Crown has obtained by reason of its prerogative."

- F The main argument for the Administrator amounts, I think, to a submission that the Custodian is not an officer of the Executive at all. He is, it is said, a creature of Parliament. The Crown could, by virtue of its prerogative and after compliance with due formalities, take for itself all enemy property and do with it what it pleased. It needs no Parliamentary sanction for that. Re Ferdinand (Ex-Tsar of Bulgaria) (11) decided that the trading with the enemy legislation in operation in the 1914 war conferred powers so inconsistent with the exercise of the prerogative that it must be treated as temporarily superseded. In the Act of 1939 the prerogative is, by s. 16, expressly preserved. The two things exist together, the machinery of the prerogative, if the Crown chooses to exercise it, and the machinery set up by Parliament, of which the Custodian is the hub. How then can it be said, the argument inquires, that the Custodian emanates from the prerogative? On the contrary, he is a trustee set up by Parliament to hold the property in medio, keeping it out of the grasp of the Crown and holding it, as it were, for Parliament, so that Parliament may determine ultimately what is to be done with it. On this view, it is said, the case of the Austrian Administrator (4) becomes clearly distinguishable. Before Administrators are appointed, peace has been made. The Crown has entered into treaties which provide for the distribution of enemy assets. Parliament has ratified the treaties, and thus sanctioned what the Crown proposes to do with enemy property. There is no longer any need for a trustee to hold in medio. Parliament can safely release the property to the Crown so that through its servants, the Administrators, the Crown can distribute it in accordance with its treaty obligations. The contrast is between the functions of the Administrators as distributing agents, and the function of the Custodian as trustee. It cannot be under the provision of some statute. It is not, therefore, surprising to find Parliament providing for the use of the Crown more convenient machinery than that afforded by the common law right of seizure, which is obsolescent, cumbersome, and not favourably regarded in international law. I do not think it much matters that the common law right is in the Act expressly saved. That does not indicate to me that Parliament contemplated that it was likely to be exercised, or that some rival machinery to it was being set up. What Parliament was doing (as it has done in so many cases in the past) was to define and modernise the prerogative power, though preserving the common law right for use, one might suppose, in some quite exceptional case. This view of the matter is supported to some extent by the judgment of WARRINGTON, L.J., in Re Ferdinand (11) ([1921] 1 Ch. 141), where he refers to the Custodian without discrimination as an officer of the Crown and as an officer designated by the Act. It is also supported by the passage I have cited from the judgment of GREER, L.J., in the Austrian Administrator case (4) (48 T.L.R. 39), which refers to funds which the Crown had obtained by reason of its prerogative. These funds must have been obtained through the machinery of the Trading with the Enemy Act.

Secondly, the feature of close control by the Board of Trade, to which I have already referred, is in this connection important. It does not show service in the strict sense, but it does show that the Custodian is intended to be an instrument of government. In the case of a commercial corporation, control may be unimportant: see Tamlin v. Hannaford (5) ([1949] 2 All E.R. 330). In the case of an official who has functions of a governmental character, it is, I think, a matter to be given considerable weight. In Fox v. Newfoundland Government (12) ([1898] A.C. 672) and Metropolitan Meat Industry Board v. Sheedy (13) ([1927] A.C. 904), it was pointed out that the existence of discretionary powers showing independence of the government was a factor for consideration. If Parliament intended the Custodian to act, as it were, in opposition to the prerogative, it is hardly likely he would have been subordinated in so many matters to the Board of Trade.

Lastly, I do not think the argument that the Crown could not take the Custodian's holdings for any purpose it wanted and as freely as any of its own property is as impressive as at first sight it appears. That is one of the reasons why I have sought to labour the unreality of the master and servant test. It is certainly difficult to imagine a master or principal who cannot demand the unconditional delivery of any property held on his behalf. If, however, one thinks of the Custodian, not as a servant, but as a public official with Crown status, the difficulty disappears. The property held by the Custodian cannot, of course, be Crown property in any ordinary sense because the beneficial interest is temporarily extinguished. We are concerned only with legal property. This last conception is also difficult if one tries to personify the Crown and its servants. If the Custodian holds the legal property on behalf of the Crown, then it is certainly putting the Crown in an unusual position to imagine it as a trustee of property for persons still undetermined. But again, if one thinks of the Custodian not so much as a servant, but as an official with Crown status, there is no reason why he should not hold property in such a manner. Finally, under this head it must be remembered that the Custodian, in deciding under the general direction of the Board of Trade, what property he shall take and what release, is much more than a trustee; he is acting then as an instrument of war-making government.

Rule 1 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D provides that “Tax . . . shall be charged on and paid by the persons or bodies of persons receiving or entitled to the income . . .”

Admittedly, the Custodian received the income. The question which I have to determine is whether he received it as a servant of the Crown, or, as I put it, as a person having Crown status. I am satisfied that he did receive it as a person having Crown status, or, at the least, that he received it for a Crown purpose. Accordingly, I hold that the Custodian is, apart from the Income Tax Act, 1944, sched. IV, exempt from tax. There must, therefore, be judgment for the plaintiffs for £2,224,367 6s. 11d. with interest thereon at the rate of four per cent. per annum as already determined, and costs to include the costs of the further argument before me.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors: Hardman, Phillips & Mann (for the plaintiffs); Solicitor, Board of Trade (for the Administrator).

[Reported by F. A. AMES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re ST. GEORGE'S, SOUTHALL.

[CONSISTORY COURT OF THE DIOCESE OF LONDON (The Chancellor (J. P. Ashworth, Esq.)), December 15, 1951, January 12, 1952.]

Ecclesiastical Law—Ornaments—Candlesticks—Legality of six candlesticks on the Holy Table or retable—Exercise of discretion in grant of faculty.

As part of a scheme for the reconstruction and improvement of a church the parochial church council resolved to provide six candlesticks for the high altar. On July 17, 1951, an application was made for a faculty for their use, and on July 20 the candlesticks were purchased and placed on the altar. On Oct. 4 the bishop dedicated the candlesticks, being unaware that the application for the faculty was sub judice. Evidence was given that the candlesticks were memorials and that their removal would cause distress to the parishioners. The vicar took the view that the six candlesticks would lend greater dignity to solemn occasions. They were not intended to be used for ceremonial purposes.

HELD: the granting of the faculty was a matter within the discretion of the court, and, although the action taken by the vicar in anticipation of the granting of the faculty was to be deprecated, in all the circumstances the faculty would be granted.

Re St. Hilary, Cornwall ([1938] 4 All E.R. 147) and Re St. Saviour's, Walthamstow ([1950] 2 All E.R. 812), considered.

Per THE CHANCELLOR: I treat the present petition as an exceptional case, and it must not be thought for one moment that articles can be introduced into churches as memorials and later dedicated without application to the court and that a faculty will then be granted merely on the ground that their removal would cause distress. The Dean of Arches [in Re St. Saviour's, Walthamstow ([1950] 2 All E.R. 815)] emphasised the value of observing the normal English use concerning candlesticks on an altar, and the fact that I am allowing a faculty in full in the present case should not be taken as an indication that I am prepared to exercise my discretion except with the extreme care which the Dean of Arches recommended.

AS TO THE USE OF LIGHTED CANDLES ON THE HOLY TABLE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 11, p. 802, para. 1463; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 19, pp. 439, 440, Nos. 2810-2818.

Cases referred to:

(1) Re St. Hilary, Cornwall. Roffe-Silvester v. King, [1938] 4 All E.R. 147; [1939] P. 64; 159 L.T. 546; Digest Supp.

(2) Re St. Saviour's, Walthamstow, [1950] 2 All E.R. 812; 2nd Digest Supp.

PETITION for the grant of a faculty for the use, inter alia, of six candlesticks on the high altar of the Church of St. George, Southall.

At the first hearing, the case was adjourned for argument whether the decision of the Court of Arches in Re St. Saviour's, Walthamstow (2) was in conflict with that in Re St. Hilary, Cornwall (1).

Wigglesworth for the petitioners.

The petition was unopposed.

THE CHANCELLOR: The vicar and churchwardens of St. George's, Southall, have asked for leave to carry out certain work of which the material item is the placing of six candlesticks on the altar. There has been no opposition to the petition for a faculty.

When the application was first heard, on Dec. 15, 1951, it seemed that there were two quite distinct issues. The first one was whether, in view of the decision of the Court of Arches in Re St. Hilary, Cornwall (1), I was bound as a matter of law to hold that six candlesticks on an altar were illegal, or whether, on the other hand, in view of the decision of the same court in Re St. Saviour's, Walthamstow (2), I was entitled to treat the application for a faculty as a matter of discretion. Would the decision in the latter case have been the same if the St. Hilary decision (1) had been brought to the notice of the Dean of Arches?

It is necessary, therefore, to examine so far as possible what were the issues in the St. Hilary case (1) and what were the contentions put before the Court of Arches when the appeal was heard. I was counsel for the respondents in the St. Hilary case (1), and Mr. Vaisey and Mr. Geoffrey Hutchinson appeared for the appellants. It is, therefore, a matter of relief and satisfaction to be able to say that, as a result of the information obtained by counsel for the petitioners from those who had acted as counsel for the appellants as well as from my recollection and note of the proceedings, there are no substantial differences between us on the issues raised in that appeal. The learned chancellor of the Diocese of Truro made an order directing the removal of four of the six candlesticks at St. Hilary on the basis that six candlesticks were illegal. There was an appeal against the order. The argument in support of the appeal was not simply as to legality. Mr. Vaisey supported the view that, whether they were illegal or not, the appellants wished to retain them, and Mr. Hutchinson contended that the test of illegality was the use made of the articles. I now have to consider whether the result of the decision in Re St. Hilary (1) should persuade me that I am faced with two irreconcilable decisions of the Court of Arches.

In those circumstances, in my judgment, one is entitled to ask whether the Dean of the Court of Arches in Re St. Saviour's, Walthamstow (2) would have reached the same decision had the result of the St. Hilary appeal (1) been brought to his notice. I do not think that a clash between the two cases exists and it is clear from Re St. Saviour's, Walthamstow (2) that the question whether the faculty now before the court could be granted is one for my discretion.

The church of St. George, Southall, is forty-two years old. Mr. Parker, one of the churchwardens, in his evidence told the court that he had been connected with the church for twenty-six years and that it had always had a high church tradition. The present vicar has only been the incumbent there for eighteen months, and there was no change on his arrival. The altar was destroyed by fire shortly before the present vicar was appointed. Up to that time there had been no decoration behind it. The vicar told the court that he conceived the idea of giving more light and colour to the east end of the church. There was, apparently, no war memorial in respect of the war of 1939-45 in existence at St. George's, but the parochial church council later passed a resolution concerning a suggested scheme for improving the church by making certain additions to the fabric. An order was placed for a reredos and six candlesticks that they might be exhibited at the Lambeth Palace Exhibition of Church Art which was held in connection with the Festival of Britain. After this a general parish meeting was called to approve the scheme, which was also submitted to the diocesan advisory committee. The committee was not opposed to the triptych reredos, but it did not signify its approval either. Its decision seems to have been an expression of non-opposition. The matter went forward, the reredos was completed, and the candlesticks were bought on July 20, 1951. [THE CHANCELLOR referred to the legal formalities which were put into operation concerning the application for a faculty, and to the registrar's advice to the vicar when it was known that the Bishop of London intended to visit the church to dedicate the new ornaments, and continued:] Despite this the candlesticks were allowed to remain on the altar, and when the bishop visited St. George's on Oct. 4, 1951, he dedicated them. It is quite clear that, had the bishop known that a question relating to the six candlesticks was sub judice, he would not have dedicated the candlesticks on that occasion.

The six candlesticks were individual memorials—two were in respect of sidesmen, one was in respect of a server, one was in respect of a churchwarden, and the remaining two were in respect of members of the parochial church council. I was told by Mr. Parker, the churchwarden, that refusal of a faculty would cause very real distress in the parish, especially among the donors of the candlesticks. So far as the vicar's evidence was concerned, he said that he could not remember whether he asked for six candlesticks or whether Faith Craft, Ltd., the contractors responsible for the improvement scheme, suggested six. The vicar also said that he did not attach any importance to the number of candlesticks. He had always worked in churches where there were six on the altar. He preferred to use an English altar in his church, or an altar with six candlesticks provided. He did not like flowers. The vicar told me that normally the candles would all be lit for sung eucharist and choral evensong. Two would be lit for other occasions, and six on any solemn occasions, as the lighting of six added dignity. In the lady chapel of St. George's four candlesticks had been placed on the altar. These had been given as a memorial to someone who had died before the general scheme was conceived. The vicar had a scheme in mind incorporating the four candlesticks and a tabernacle for the lady chapel, but the time was not yet ripe for this to be brought forward. What was material to the present case was the fact that the candlesticks had been placed on the altar of the lady chapel without the sanction of a faculty. No reference was made to them when the present petition was lodged, although the candlesticks had been placed on the altar of the lady chapel.

It seems to me that when I approach the question of discretion two issues present themselves. What would have been the right decision supposing the application had come before me in March, 1951? Have the events that have taken place since then affected the matter in any way? St. George's, Southall, was not a case of the replacement of candlesticks to which the Dean of the Arches had attached some importance when he heard Re St. Saviour's, Walthamstow (2). On the other hand, there would have been the positive evidence of the church council's resolution and the vicar's evidence that, in his view, the candles added greater dignity to more solemn occasions. At that time I would have been satisfied, as I am now, that the six candlesticks would not have been the subject of ceremonial use. I have come to the conclusion that I would have granted the faculty in March, 1951, i.e., before the purchase of the candlesticks. Has anything happened since then to cause me to change my mind? It is not an agreeable task to have to comment on what has been done in this case. If I thought for a moment that anyone had challenged the court or that there was any question of this court being approached in the spirit of the work having been done, and, therefore, a fait accompli achieved, I would not have any hesitation in dismissing the application out of hand, but I acquit the vicar of any intention of forcing my hand by carrying out work in advance.

None the less, I feel it incumbent to express in restrained, but emphatic, terms my disapproval of the course that was taken. As I see it, the bishop was induced to dedicate memorials which were the subject-matter of proceedings before this court. Moreover, the vicar introduced into the lady chapel candlesticks for which a faculty was required. The evidence by the vicar that he would wait and see the result of the present petition is not attractive. The vicar has tendered the court an expression of regret, which I am satisfied was sincere and which I am prepared to accept. I regard this as important. These matters cannot be allowed to pass unnoticed. I have been giving anxious consideration to the question whether the court ought to give further weight to what has happened, but I have come to the conclusion that, in all the circumstances, I shall not vary the decision I would have reached in March, 1951, namely, to allow the faculty. One of the reasons to move me considerably is that to remove the candlesticks now would cause great pain and distress in a parish where the vicar is doing good work. It has been said that congregations have increased and that the church is prospering. It would be unfortunate if, through some act of forgetfulness on the vicar's part, the value of the work he is doing were imperilled. I treat the present petition as an exceptional case, and it must not be thought for one moment that articles can be introduced into churches as memorials and later dedicated without application to the court and that a faculty will then be granted merely on the ground that their removal would cause distress. The Dean of Arches emphasised the value of observing the normal English use concerning candlesticks on an altar, and the fact that I am allowing a faculty in full in respect of St. George's, Southall, should not be taken as an indication that I am prepared to exercise my discretion except with the extreme care which the Dean of Arches recommended. I express no view on the possible outcome of a further application. The mere fact that I am allowing six candlesticks on the high altar is not to be taken as involving permission to have four on the lady chapel altar.

Faculty granted for use of six candlesticks.

Solicitors: Trollope & Winckworth.

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. C.A. [1952] 2 All E.R. 64.

SAYCE v. AMEER RULER SADIQ MOHAMMAD ABBASI BAHAWALPUR STATE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (McNair, J.), October 19, 1950, January 11, 21, 1952.]

Foreign State—Ruler of—Liability to be sued—Partial dependency on another Power—State of fact to be taken as at date of decision by court—Conclusiveness of certificate of government department—British Nationality Act, 1948 (c. 56), s. 1 (1) (3).

On May 24, 1950, a writ was issued in an action for damages for breach of contract against the Ameer Ruler Sadiq Mohammad Abbasi Bahawalpur State. The Ameer entered a conditional appearance and took out a summons asking that the service of the writ be set aside on the ground that he was entitled to immunity as the ruler of a sovereign State. In a certificate to the court the Commonwealth Relations Office stated that the Ameer "executed on Oct. 3, 1947, an instrument of accession, [to the Federation of Pakistan] and he executed further instruments or agreements on Oct. 1, 1948, Aug. 2, 1949, and Apr. 29, 1951." The certificate stated that the federal legislature of Pakistan (of which the Ameer was not a member) had power to make laws for Bahawalpur with respect to certain matters, some concurrently with the Bahawalpur State legislature, while the State legislature had exclusive power in other specified matters. Executive authority was exercisable in federal matters through the Ameer and his officers or by officers of the federal government. Other executive authority in the State remained in general with the Ameer. The federal court had prescribed jurisdiction in the State. By the instrument of 1951 the Ameer had agreed to be bound by future changes in the Constitution Act, but his sovereignty and, subject to the instruments, his powers, authority, rights and jurisdiction as ruler were preserved. The certificate concluded: "The government of Pakistan have informed the Secretary of State that the State of Bahawalpur did not, on accession to the Federation of Pakistan, become a part of His Majesty's dominions, and that the view of the government of Pakistan is that the Ameer has continued to be a sovereign ruler and is entitled to immunity before the courts both within and outside Pakistan in civil cases . . . The State of Bahawalpur is not a part of His Majesty's dominions, and . . . the Ameer, within the limitations imposed upon him by the constitutional arrangements set out above, is sovereign ruler of the State."

HELD: (i) the application to set aside the service of the writ must be determined on the state of fact existing at the date when the court made its decision and not at the date of the service of the writ.

(ii) the certificate of the Commonwealth Relations Office was conclusive as to the fact that the State of Bahawalpur was not within His Majesty's dominions: see per ATKIN, L.J., in The Fagernes ([1927] P. 324); and that, within the limits imposed by the constitutional arrangements set out therein, the defendant was the sovereign ruler of that State: see dicta of VISCOUNT CAVE, VISCOUNT FINLAY, LORD DUNEDIN, and LORD CARSON in Duff Development Co. v. Kelantan Government ([1924] A.C. 808, 815, 820, 831), and of LORD ATKIN in The Arantzazu Mendi ([1939] 1 All E.R. 722).

(iii) it was consistent with sovereignty that the sovereign in certain respects was dependent on another Power; the limitations on the defendant's sovereignty imposed by the constitutional arrangements set out in the circular had no application over a very substantial sphere; and, therefore, the defendant was entitled to succeed.

Semble: the statement in the concluding part of the certificate was not inconsistent with the Ameer having the status of a British subject under the British Nationality Act, 1948, s. 1 (1) (3).

AS TO OFFICIAL CERTIFICATES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 661-664, paras. 731-733; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 22, p. 318, Nos. 3118-3126.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Statham v. Statham & Baroda (Gaekwar), [1912] P. 92; 81 L.J.P. 33; 105 L.T. 991; 1 Digest 48, 388.
- (2) Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A.M. Luther v. Sagor (James) & Co., [1921] 3 K.B. 532; 90 L.J.K.B. 1202; 125 L.T. 705; 11 Digest 309, 17.
- (3) The Fagernes, [1927] P. 311; 96 L.J.P. 183; 138 L.T. 30; Digest Supp.
- (4) Duff Development Co. v. Kelantan Government, [1924] A.C. 797; 93 L.J.Ch. 343; 131 L.T. 676; Digest Supp.
- (5) The Arantzazu Mendi, [1939] 1 All E.R. 719; [1939] A.C. 256; 160 L.T. 513; sub nom. Spain Republic Government v. Arantzazu Mendi, 108 L.J.P. 55; Digest Supp.
- (6) Kahan v. Federation of Pakistan, [1951] 2 K.B. 1003.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of a master dated Oct. 13, 1950, setting aside the service of a writ issued on May 24, 1950, in an action for damages for breach of contract, on the ground that the defendant was entitled to immunity as the ruler of a sovereign State.

The question arose whether the application to set aside the service of the writ should be determined on the state of fact existing at the time of the service of the writ or at the time of the decision of the court. The defendant contended that a certificate of the Commonwealth Relations Office was conclusive as to the fact that at the later date the defendant was the sovereign ruler of a foreign State which could not be questioned by reason of limitations on sovereignty set out therein or be made the subject of a further inquiry addressed to the Commonwealth Relations Office designed to ascertain whether the defendant was a British subject by virtue of the Pakistan Citizenship Act, 1951, s. 3, and the British Nationality Act, 1948, s. 1 (1).

Blackledge, K.C., and J. Chinna Durai for the plaintiff.

Scott Henderson, K.C., and H. G. Garland for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 21. McNAIR, J., read the following judgment. This case raises the interesting question of the position in these courts of the ruler of an Indian State which has acceded to the Federation of Pakistan. On May 24, 1950, the plaintiff issued a writ claiming damages for breach of contract against the defendant, described as the Ameer Ruler Sadiq Mohammad Abbasi Bahawalpur State. The writ was served and a conditional appearance was entered by the defendant, who forthwith took out a summons asking that the service of the writ be set aside. In due course the summons came before Master GRUNDY who, on Oct. 13, 1950, ordered that the service of the writ be set aside on the ground that the defendant was entitled to immunity as the ruler of a sovereign State. In reaching this conclusion, the master had before him a letter dated Aug. 3, 1950, from an official of the Commonwealth Relations Office addressed to the defendant's solicitors. By notice of appeal dated Oct. 16, 1950, the plaintiff appealed to me as judge in chambers asking that this order be reversed and that service of the writ on the defendant should stand. On the appeal coming on for argument before me I reached the conclusion that the information contained in this letter was incomplete. I caused further inquiries to be made, and after some delay a further communication addressed to the court was received from the Commonwealth Relations Office. As the question involved seemed to me to be one of public importance I adjourned the matter into open court for further argument. This took place on Friday, Jan. 11, 1952.

The further communication from the Commonwealth Relations Office is in the following terms. It is dated Sept. 4, 1951, and says:

"(1) I am directed by Mr. Secretary Gordon-Walker to refer to your letter dated Nov. 13, 1950, addressed to the Attorney-General, and to express his regret for the delay in replying . . . (2) I am to request you to inform McNAIR, J., that until Aug. 15, 1947, His Highness the Ameer of Bahawalpur was recognised by His Majesty as the ruler of the State of Bahawalpur, which was under the suzerainty of His Majesty. The territory of the State was not part of British India or of His Majesty's dominions, and neither the Ameer nor his subjects were subjects of His Majesty. Although the Ameer was not wholly independent, he exercised as ruler of his State various attributes of sovereignty including internal sovereignty, and his position was similar to that of the Gaekwar of Baroda who was held in Statham v. Statham & Gaekwar of Baroda (1) ([1912] P. 92), to be a sovereign ruler entitled to immunity from suit. (3) The position of the State of Bahawalpur as a State under the suzerainty of His Majesty was altered by the Indian Independence Act, 1947, and the Government of India Act, 1935, as modified under the provisions of the 1947 Act. Section 1 of the 1947 Act set up as from Aug. 15, 1947, two independent dominions to be known as India and Pakistan. The territories of the dominion of Pakistan were, by s. 2 (2), defined as certain named provinces of British India, which formed part of His Majesty's dominions. The Act provided in s. 8 that the dominion should be governed as nearly as might be in accordance with the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935, subject to any orders made by the Governor-General under s. 9 of the 1947 Act and to any other provisions made by or in accordance with a law made by the Constituent Assembly of the dominion. Copies of the Acts of 1935 and 1947, as modified by the Governor-General's orders and by laws passed by the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan, are enclosed. (4) The Government of India Act, 1935 (as so modified) created by s. 5 a federation to consist of the aforesaid territories of the dominion (including the capital) and such Indian States as might accede to the federation under s. 6. In pursuance of this section His Highness the Ameer of Bahawalpur executed on Oct. 3, 1947, an instrument of accession, and he executed further instruments or agreements on Oct. 1, 1948, Aug. 2, 1949, and Apr. 29, 1951."

Pausing there for a moment, I refer again to the fact that the writ in this action was issued on May 24, 1950. Accordingly, it was issued before the fourth instrument of accession. To continue with the letter:

"As a result of these instruments and of the provisions of the Acts of 1935 and 1947, the constitutional position of the Ameer and of his State is now as follows:—(a) The federal legislature of Pakistan (of which the Ameer is not a member) has power to make laws for Bahawalpur with respect to the matters set forth in Parts I and II of the schedule to the instrument of Apr. 29, 1951, although in respect of the matters set forth in Part II the Bahawalpur State legislature has a concurrent legislative power. The subjects on which the State legislature has exclusive power are set out in Part III of the schedule. (b) Executive authority in the State in relation to federal subjects is exercisable in accordance with ss. 8 and 124 and 125 of the Act of 1935, and art. 3 (b) of the instrument of Apr. 29, 1951, that is, either through the Ameer and his officers, or by officers of the federal government, as the Governor-General may provide by order made after consultation with the Ameer. Otherwise executive authority in the State remains in general with the Ameer. (c) The federal court has the jurisdiction within the State conferred on it by ss. 204 and 207 of the Act of 1935, and as provided by cl. 6 of the 1951 instrument. (d) By cl. 7 of the instrument of accession of Oct. 3, 1947, it was provided that the Ameer was not committed to accept any future constitution of Pakistan, and that his discretion to enter into agreement with any future government of Pakistan was not fettered, but by cl. 4 and 5 of the 1951 instrument he has agreed to be bound by future changes in the Constitution Act. (e) Clause 8 of the instrument of accession and cl. 9 of the 1951 instrument provide that nothing in the instrument is to affect the ruler's sovereignty in and over the State nor (save as provided by or under the instruments) the exercise of any powers, authority, rights and jurisdiction enjoyed by him as ruler. (f) Under the Pakistan Citizenship Act, 1951, the subjects of the Ameer have now in general also become citizens of Pakistan, while remaining subjects of the ruler; they are therefore now British subjects, or Commonwealth citizens, under s. 1 of the British Nationality Act, 1948. (5) The government of Pakistan have informed the Secretary of State that the State of Bahawalpur did not, on accession to the Federation of Pakistan, become a part of His Majesty's dominions, and that the view of the government of Pakistan is that the Ameer has continued to be a sovereign ruler and is entitled to immunity before the courts both within and outside Pakistan in civil cases. (6) In these circumstances I am to say that the State of Bahawalpur is not a part of His Majesty's dominions, and that the Ameer, within the limitations imposed upon him by the constitutional arrangements set out above, is sovereign ruler of the State."

Inasmuch as this letter refers to, and the conclusion stated in para. 6 appears to be in part based on, events which have taken place since the service of the writ herein, the first question which I have to determine is whether an application of this nature must be determined on the state of fact existing at the time of the service of the writ or on the state of fact existing at the date when the court is called on to make its decision. So far as I am aware, there is no precise authority on this point, though the decision of the Court of Appeal in Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A.M. Luther v. James Sagor & Co. (2), reversing the decision of ROCHE, J., on the basis of the recognition by His Majesty's government of the Soviet government as the de facto government of Russia given subsequent to the hearing before ROCHE, J., lends some support to the view that the latter is the material date. In principle, too, it seems to me that I should decide the matter on the basis of fact as existing today since it is today that I have to decide whether or not the defendant is entitled to the immunity claimed.

In my judgment, the final paragraph of the letter of Sept. 4, 1951, contains a clear and unequivocal statement made on behalf of His Majesty on two points: (i) that the State of Bahawalpur is not a part of His Majesty's dominions and (ii) that the Ameer within the limitations imposed on him by the constitutional arrangements set out in the letter is sovereign ruler of the State. As to (i), it is, in my judgment, settled by authority binding on me that a statement made on behalf of the Crown that a particular area is not within His Majesty's dominions is conclusive on this point: see per ATKIN, L.J., in The Fagernes (3) ([1927] P. 324):

"What is the territory of the Crown is a matter of which the court takes judicial notice . . . Any definite statement from the proper representative of the Crown as to the territory of the Crown must be treated as conclusive."

As to (ii), it seems to me also to be settled by authority that a statement made on behalf of the Crown that a particular person is (or possibly is recognised to be) a sovereign of a particular State is also conclusive on this point, and that this is the only method by which the court can inform itself of the material fact whether the party sought to be impleaded is a foreign sovereign State or the sovereign ruler of a foreign State: see Duff Development Co. v. Kelantan Government (4), and, in particular, the speeches of VISCOUNT CAVE ([1924] A.C. 808), VISCOUNT FINLAY (ibid., 815), LORD DUNEDIN (ibid., 820) and LORD CARSON (ibid., 831) and the speech of LORD ATKIN in The Arantzazu Mendi (5) ([1939] 1 All E.R. 722).

Accordingly, I approach the question which I have to decide on the footing that it has been conclusively established that the defendant, within the limits imposed on him by the constitutional arrangements set out in the letter of Sept. 4, 1951, is sovereign ruler of the State of Bahawalpur, which State is not part of His Majesty's dominions. Though to understand this statement it is necessary to examine the constitutional arrangements in order to comprehend the extent of the limitations, it is not, in my view, legitimate for the court as the result of such examination to question the fact that the defendant is sovereign ruler of such a State. As was pointed out by LORD FINLAY in Duff's case (4) ([1924] A.C. 814), it is quite consistent with sovereignty that the sovereign may in certain respects be dependent on another Power. An examination of the constitutional arrangements set out in the letter satisfies me that today the limitations imposed on the Ameer's sovereignty have no application over a very substantial sphere. I, accordingly, hold that on the basis of the certificate before me the defendant is entitled to succeed.

At the hearing before me, counsel for the plaintiff appellant suggested that the court should refer the matter back to the Commonwealth Relations Office for further information on the question whether or not the ruler was himself a British subject as the result of the Pakistan Citizenship Act, 1951, and the British Nationality Act, 1948. Section 3 of the former Act provides:

- A “At the commencement of this Act [viz., Apr. 13, 1951] every person shall be deemed to be a citizen of Pakistan (a) who or any of whose parents or grandparents was born in the territory now included in Pakistan and who after Aug. 14, 1947, has not been permanently resident in any country outside Pakistan . . .”
- B “Territory now included in Pakistan” there includes the territory of acceded States. Section 1 (1) of the British Nationality Act, 1948, provides:
- “Every person . . . who under any enactment for the time being in force in any country mentioned in sub-s. (3) of this section is a citizen of that country shall by virtue of that citizenship have the status of a British subject.”

- C The countries mentioned in s. 1 (3) include Pakistan. It was, accordingly, suggested that further inquiries should be made to ascertain whether the defendant or any of his parents or grandparents was born in the territory now included in Pakistan. I have, however, no reason at all to infer that this aspect of the matter was not considered by the advisers of His Majesty before the letter of Sept. 4, 1951, was sent to the court, and I do not regard it as any part of the court's function to cross-examine the executive in matters of this nature. Nor am I satisfied that the statement in the concluding paragraph of the letter is in any way inconsistent with the ruler having the status of a British subject
- D under the British Nationality Act, 1948, s. 1 (1). For completeness I may add that I consider that the statement that the defendant is sovereign ruler of the State of Bahawalpur precludes me from considering the difficult question of the status of component parts of a federation or the question how far the recognition accorded in this case is consistent with the recognition accorded to Pakistan as reported in Kahan v. Federation of Pakistan (6). In my judgment, the appeal
- E fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Stanley Johnson & Allen (for the plaintiff); Seagrove, Woods & Simmons (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

F
MACLEOD ROSS & CO., LTD. v. COMPAGNIE d'ASSURANCES
GENERALES L'HELVETIA OF ST. GALL.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell and Denning, L.JJ.), January 11, 21, 1952.]

- G Insurance—Open policy—Certificate of insurance issued in respect of particular goods—Condition in policy that claim be referred to local tribunal of commerce—Jurisdiction of English court.

- H On Mar. 25, 1949, D. & Co., a French firm of forwarding agents, took out an open policy of insurance with the defendants, a Swiss insurance company, to cover shipments by customers of D. & Co. from France and the Saar to all parts of the world. The policy contained a number of conditions, including one specifying that, in the event of a dispute, the defendants could only be sued before a tribunal of commerce of the place where the contract was entered into. In February, 1951, the plaintiffs, a firm carrying on business in London, contracted to buy from a firm in the Saar a quantity of hams to be shipped c.i.f. London. The defendants issued to D. & Co., as agents for the plaintiffs, two certificates each headed: “Addendum to insurance policy” in respect of the shipment of the goods. The certificates, which purported to have been issued pursuant to the open policy, referred to many of the conditions incorporated in the open policy, but also contained conditions as to certain risks not referred to in that policy, and no reference was made in the certificate to the condition conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the Swiss courts. In a claim by the plaintiffs against the defendants in respect of damage alleged to have been covered by the insurance, the defendants moved to stay the action.

HELD: on construction, the open policy and the certificates were separate contracts; the plaintiffs were only bound by those conditions which were specifically referred to in the certificates; and, therefore, the condition ousting the jurisdiction of the court was not available to the defendants on an application by them to stay the action.

Phoenix Insurance Co. of Hartford v. De Monchy (1929) (141 L.T. 439), applied.

AS TO RULES OF CONSTRUCTION OF MARINE POLICIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 18, pp. 187-190, paras. 248-252; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 29, pp. 68-71, Nos. 262-290.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Phoenix Insurance Co. of Hartford v. De Monchy, (1929), 141 L.T. 439; 35 Com. Cas. 67; Digest Supp.
- (2) Thomas & Co., Ltd. v. Portsea S.S. Co., Ltd., [1912] A.C. 1; 2 Digest 331, 141.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs from an order of McNAIR, J., dated Nov. 20, 1951, whereby he held that the plaintiffs' claim under certificates of insurance should be stayed under s. 4 (1) of the Arbitration Act, 1950, on the ground that by the contract of insurance sued on the parties had agreed that all claims against the defendants should be determined by the tribunal of commerce for the place where the contract was entered into.

The plaintiffs contended that a clause in an open policy, signed in Switzerland, giving exclusive jurisdiction to the Swiss courts, did not apply to two certificates issued under that policy. The defendants contended that the open policy and the certificates comprised one contract, and, therefore, that the plaintiffs were precluded from proceeding in England.

Mocatta, K.C., and M. R. E. Kerr for the plaintiffs.

Scott Cairns, K.C., and T. G. Roche for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 21. The following judgments were read.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: On Mar. 25, 1949, a French firm of forwarding agents, whom I will call Danzas, entered into a contract with the defendants, who, as their name indicates, are Swiss insurers. The contract was referred to as a floating policy. Subject to various conditions, alternatives and declarations, it was to cover shipments by customers of Danzas from France and the Saar to all parts of the world from Mar. 20, 1949. If Danzas were required by a customer to insure such a shipment, then the business was to go to the defendants under this policy. Although the object was to affect insurances in futuro of customers' goods, Danzas as principals had rights and obligations under this contract. It is obvious that at the moment when it was signed there might have been no customers requiring insurances under it. Danzas were described as acting for whom it may concern.

In February, 1951, the plaintiffs agreed to buy from Fleischwerke Ernst Schofer of Saar Louis in France (hereinafter called Schofer) a quantity of French canned hams to be shipped c.i.f. to London. It seems clear that Schofer was a customer of Danzas who had required them to insure the hams. Under art. 2 of the special conditions of the floating policy Danzas had to make declarations in a certain way and at a certain time. These conditions were, no doubt, complied with, as on Feb. 8 and 22, 1951, the defendants issued two sets of insurance documents in respect of two shipments of the canned hams which were being delivered to the plaintiffs under their contract. In due course these with the other documents were tendered to and accepted by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claimed from the defendants in respect of damage which, as they said, was covered by the insurance. The defendants refused to admit liability. The plaintiffs issued a writ. The defendants have moved to stay on the ground that there is in the floating policy a clause—No. 31 of the general conditions—

A of which the agreed translation reads as follows:

“Article 31. 1st. As an exception to all contrary provisions of the laws relating to competency, underwriters, even in cases where there is more than one defendant or of actions regarding indemnity for guarantee, can only be sued before tribunals of commerce of the place where the contract was entered into. However, a company which enters into a contract through an agent or an attorney may also be sued before the tribunal of commerce of the place at which it has its head office. 2nd. If more than half of the insurance value of the articles covered has been underwritten at one and the same place, the assured may sue the other insurers, in order to have the said action adjudicated in respect of them,

C before the tribunal of commerce of that place where an action has already been commenced. 3rd. The assured, even when not a merchant, shall always be sued by underwriters before the tribunal of commerce of the place where the contract was entered into, the assured electing domicile thereat.”

McNAIR, J., stayed the proceedings and the plaintiffs appeal.

D The first question is whether the clause conferring exclusive jurisdiction on a tribunal of commerce was a term of the contract between plaintiffs and defendants. If it is, then a further question arises as to what is the “contract”, the place of entering into of which determines the jurisdiction. Is it the floating policy? Is it the declaration? Is it the insurance document covering the contractual goods?

E I will now consider what I have so far, using a neutral expression, called the insurance documents issued in February, 1951. I will first take that issued on Feb. 8 because its wording is, possibly, more favourable to the defendants' contention than that issued on Feb. 22. Under the defendants' name the description of the document is “Avenant d'assurance.” The agreed translation of this is “Addendum to insurance policy.” One doubts if “addendum” is the F best English equivalent, but the nature of the document can be gathered from its terms. It proceeds:

“At the request of Danzas & Co., Transports Internationaux Office, in Sarrebruck, we hereby state that in accordance with the declaration No. 32 under the open policy No. 648 we have insured on its general and special

G conditions for the sum of £17,091 10s. (Seventeen thousand and ninety-one pounds sterling and ten shillings) the goods described hereinafter, loaded or to be loaded on board ship . . . for the voyage from Paris to London via Dunkirk.”

Then the numbers of the goods, the number and kind of packages and the insured value are stated. The number of the foreign currency bond is given

H and the number of the insurance licence dated July 20, 1950.

“The insurance has been effected on terms called ‘all risks’ in accordance with s. 2 of cl. 2 of the marine insurance printed form, including theft and pilferage, breakage, leakage, loss and damage. The risk of strike is covered on conditions of the printed form of Dec. 23, 1948, attached hereto. The risk of war and sea-mines is covered on conditions of the printed form of Jan. 1, 1947, attached hereto. Any loss is payable at destination. Payments made on terms other than those stipulated in the circular of the Ministry of Finance No. 233838 of Nov. 2, 1948, will not be binding for the insurance company. Loss and damage is to be ascertained by the company's London representatives, Messrs. Wendt & Co., 16-17, Devonshire Square, Bishopsgate, London, E.C.2, who are to be asked to deal with the matter and whose certificate is to be produced in support of the claim. Any indemnity in respect of the goods mentioned above is solely payable to the holder of this addendum to the insurance policy, endorsed by Danzas & Co. Transports Internationaux Office in Sarrebruck and on the production of this document. This original is not valid should a duplicate be produced earlier. Colmar, Feb. 8, 1951."

That document is signed by the defendants. Then there is a note at the bottom "See back for extracts from printed conditions."

Before considering the further provisions, it seems plain to me that this is a contractual document. It is the document which records the defendants' undertaking to insure these particular goods for so much against various risks and for a defined transit. It is the document issued by the defendants to Danzas as agents for the shipper of these goods. This does not, of course, mean that additional terms and conditions may not have to be sought in the floating policy.

On the back of the document are to be found a large number of clauses headed:

"French Marine Insurance Policy on Cargo Interests. Extract from the printed form of Aug. 17, 1944."

The clauses deal, for example, with (i) object and extent of the insurance, (ii) excluded risks, (iii) duration of risks, (iv) determination of damage and losses, (v) settlement of damage and losses. There is no reference anywhere to the exclusive jurisdiction of any tribunal de commerce. What appeared on the face of the document is aptly described as special conditions. It is with general conditions that the argument is concerned. It seems clear that if, as stated on the face, the general conditions of the insurance are those of the open policy No. 648, then what is printed on the back must be general conditions of that policy. In fact they are. On the back of the document are some eighteen articles out of thirty-seven, including the cl. 2 referred to on the face, which appear as general conditions of the floating policy.

Passing from the addendum itself to the documents annexed, the provisions as to strike risks are set out in six articles and the provisions as to war risks in ten. This, then, is a set of documents with detailed special and general provisions which, having regard to the opening words, are to be regarded, it seems to me, as those special and general conditions of policy No. 648 which are relevant to this particular insurance. The general conditions which are not set out are not, I think, made part of the contract. If the defendants wished others to be applicable they should have made it clear that what appeared to be a complete recital of relevant terms was not. So far as art. 31 is concerned, it seems to me difficult to believe it was not deliberately intended to exclude it. The document itself refers to the payment of losses at destination, and their ascertainment by the company's London representative. If, however distant the destination of the goods, the only tribunal to which witnesses would have to be brought was in France or Switzerland that would be a matter which the defendants would be at special pains to make clear. If any general condition was to be printed it would be that one.

I am fortified in the conclusion to which I have come by the decision and reasoning of the House of Lords in Phoenix Insurance Co. of Hartford v. De Monchy (1). There was there an insurance document called a certificate which referred to and was issued under an earlier continuing and floating policy. The floating policy contained, and the certificate did not, a limitation clause which it was sought to enforce against buyers. It was held that, although the policy and the certificate must be read together so far as was necessary to make the certificate constitute a complete contract of marine insurance, the clause limiting the time in which action could be brought dealt with a matter which was merely collateral and could not be read into the certificate. In the certificate in that case there was the following clause on which reliance was naturally placed:

- A "This certificate represents and takes the place of the policy, and conveys all the rights of the original policy holder . . . as if the property was covered by a special policy . . ."

The learned Lords did not, I think, base their opinions solely on this clause. LORD DUNEDIN uses the following words (141 L.T. 442):

- B "The condition in question is a collateral stipulation imposing a condition precedent. It has nothing to do with insurance particularly, but might be applied to any contract. Common sense and fairness revolt against the idea of this being enforced against the holder or indorsee of the certificate. Neither the holder, as here, nor a possible indorsee could ever have seen the policy. There is not even expressed in the certificate a right to ask for exhibition of the policy. Against them it may be fair to assume ordinary insurance clauses, but not to assume a collateral agreement of this sort."
- C

- That seems to me applicable here. In any case, although the "addendum" contains no such express words as these I have cited, the detailed provisions which it contains lead substantially to the same position. The other addendum refers to the "open policy 648", and the number of the declaration under it, but does not contain the express reference to special and general conditions. Apart from that difference, which I do not think really affects the issue, the form is similar. We have not the advantage of a note of the learned judge's reasons. He gave leave to appeal. I have, for the reasons given, come to a different conclusion. I think in principle the case is governed by the Phoenix case (1), although in some respects there the argument was easier and in other respects more difficult for the plaintiff. I think, therefore, the appeal should be allowed.
- D
- E

- DENNING, L.J.: It was argued on behalf of the defendants that there was only one contract between the defendants and the forwarding agents, namely, that contained in the policy No. 648. I do not think that argument is correct. In my opinion, in respect of each of these parcels of goods, there were two contracts between the defendants and the forwarding agents: (i) The police d'abonnement or "open cover" whereby the defendants agreed to insure all goods of which the forwarding agents took charge, provided that their customers had asked them to effect insurance of them. In order that the goods should be covered the forwarding agents, on taking charge of them, had to enter details in a book and send corresponding declarations to the defendants. (ii) The avenant d'assurance or "certificate of insurance" whereby the defendants implemented the contract contained in the open cover. Each of these certificates was, I think, a new contract in respect of the goods covered by it. That is shown by the fact that the certificate covered strike risks and war risks on conditions which are not to be found in the open cover. It also contained the special provision that every indemnity for the goods mentioned would only be paid to the holder of the certificate of insurance endorsed by the forwarding agents and against presentation of the certificate, and the original certificate would be of no value if the duplicate were presented before it. That provision did not appear in the open cover. Indeed, the open cover contained no reference whatever to certificates of insurance. This provision, that the indemnity was only payable to the holder of the certificate, was obviously intended to facilitate the transfer of the certificate and to make it freely assignable. It was a new provision of a new contract which was intended to be acted on, not only by the forwarding agents, but also by the customer on whose behalf they were acting and any holder to whom it was duly indorsed.
- F
- G
- H

The next question is: What are the terms of the contract contained in the certificate of insurance? The defendants say that the certificate was issued subject to all the conditions of the open cover, and, in particular, that it incorporated art. 31 of the general conditions, with the result that it is compulsory for every holder of every certificate to bring his claim in the Swiss courts. I do not agree with this contention. I do not think that the certificate did incorporate all the conditions of the open cover. For instance, the certificate clearly did not incorporate art. 12 of the special conditions which required the forwarding agents to pay the premiums by monthly account. I think that the certificate only incorporated some of the conditions, and, to ascertain what those conditions were, I think that we should look to the conditions which were printed on the back of the certificate itself. It must be remembered that the defendants issued this certificate with the intention that it should be indorsed to the holder and be acted on by him. When the defendant printed conditions on the back, they presumably printed all those which concerned the holder and omitted those which did not concern him. I do not think it would be right to hold him bound by other conditions which were not drawn to his attention at all, especially procedural conditions which do not affect the insurance itself, but only the way of enforcing it. Article 31 of the general conditions was just such a condition. It was not printed on the back of the certificate and it related only to the competence of the courts. In my opinion, it was not incorporated into the certificate.

This view is supported by the fact that art. 31 is perfectly intelligible when applied to the open cover, but not at all a reasonable condition to apply to the certificates. It is quite reasonable for the forwarding agents to agree that, if they themselves have any dispute with the defendants under the open cover, they will bring their action before the Commercial Court of St. Gall in Switzerland, but it would not be at all reasonable to expect every holder of every certificate to bring his action there. It seems to me that in the circumstances of this case the "contract" referred to in art. 31 is the open cover and not the certificate of insurance. The defendants carry on business in England and must expect to meet claims here as well as in Switzerland. The cases to which we were referred, Thomas & Co., Ltd. v. Portsea S.S. Co., Ltd. (2) and Phoenix Insurance Co. of Hartford v. De Monchy (1), are not directly in point, but our decision is quite in line with them. I agree, therefore, that this action should not be stayed, and that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Ince & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless (for the defendants).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MAHON v. AINSCOUGH.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins and Hodson, L.JJ.), January 14, 15, 1952.]

Sale of Land—Warranty—Preliminary inquiry before contract—War damage—Untrue reply.

A Before a contract for the purchase of a dwelling-house was entered into the purchaser's solicitor sent preliminary inquiries to the vendor's solicitor one of which was: "Has the property suffered war damage? If so, please state the date and nature of the damage, the steps which have been taken under the War Damage Acts, and the reference number of any claim made." The vendor's solicitor (in good faith) replied: "I understand not." The form containing the inquiries ended with a note stating: "It is still necessary to make inspection of the property..." In due course the contract was signed and requisitions on title were delivered asking, inter alia: "Will the vendor confirm that, if the preliminary inquiries made on behalf of the purchaser and replied to on Mar. 31, 1950, were repeated herein, the replies at the present date would be the same as those already made? If not, please give full particulars of any variation." The vendor's solicitor replied "Confirmed." The sale was completed and subsequently it was found that the premises had sustained substantial war damage. The purchaser claimed damages for breach of warranty.

B HELD: there was no evidence of any intention to make such a separate contract as a warranty imported, and the question and answer relating to war damage in the preliminary inquiries was not intended to and did not constitute such a warranty.

C Dictum of ROMER, L.J., in London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd. ([1936] 2 All E.R. 1049), applied.

AS TO WARRANTY ON SALE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 52-54, paras. 64, 65, pp. 240, 241, n; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 419-421, Nos. 515-539.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Gilchester Properties, Ltd. v. Gomm, [1948] 1 All E.R. 493; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 1039; 155 L.T. 190; Digest Supp.
- (3) Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton, [1913] A.C. 30; 82 L.J.K.B. 245; 107 L.T. 769; 35 Digest 54, 486.
- (4) De Lassalle v. Guildford, [1901] 2 K.B. 215; 70 L.J.K.B. 533; 84 L.T. 549; 35 Digest 14, 79.

G APPEAL by the vendor from an order of His Honour DEPUTY JUDGE ERRINGTON, sitting at the Liverpool County Court, dated Sept. 11, 1951. The purchaser claimed damages for breach of warranty, given orally and/or contained in replies to written inquiries made before the signing of a contract for the purchase of a dwelling-house and repeated in the requisitions on title, that the dwelling-house had not suffered war damage. The county court judge held that the relevant written inquiry and the answer thereto amounted, in the circumstances of the case, to a collateral warranty by the vendor that full and proper inquiries had been made, and that the purchaser could safely rely on the answer given. He was satisfied that the vendor (who was making a "sub-sale" and had in fact no personal knowledge) had not made full inquiries and that the purchaser had been exposed to a risk of damage for which he had not bargained and which was outside the contract. He gave judgment for the purchaser, and the vendor appealed.

Gerson Newman for the vendor.

Aarvold for the purchaser.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R. : On Apr. 12, 1950, the plaintiff in the action, Mr. Edward Mahon, the purchaser, entered into a contract with the defendant, Mr. Ainscough, the vendor, for the purchase by the plaintiff at the price of £1,350 of a dwelling-house known as No. 2, Henley Avenue, Litherland, in the county of Lancaster. A few days after the date of the contract, viz., on Apr. 17, 1950, the solicitor acting for the purchaser sent requisitions on title to the solicitor for the vendor, and the second of those requisitions was as follows:

"Will the vendor confirm that, if the preliminary inquiries made on behalf of the purchaser and replied to on Mar. 31, 1950, were repeated herein, the replies at the present date would be the same as those already made? If not, please give full particulars of any variation."

The reply to that requisition was the single word "Confirmed." The form of the requisitions on title is printed and bears at the heading the words: "For use where preliminary inquiries have already been answered", and it appears from the present case and also from Gilchester Properties, Ltd. v. Gomm (1), which came before ROMER, J., in 1948, that there has grown up a practice (of what universality I know not) whereby preliminary inquiries are made by a proposing purchaser or by solicitors on his behalf, addressed to the solicitor for the intending vendor, and it is to such preliminary inquiries that the second requisition relates. On the answer given to one of the questions in that preliminary inquiry turns the question in the present action, which is whether the answer given amounted to a warranty on the part of the vendor so as to give a right of action in damages to the purchaser in the circumstances which I must presently relate. The county court judge held that such was the effect of that answer, and I am bound to say at once that I have not reached that opinion. In my judgment, there is here no room for any such warranty.

Before I discuss the matter further it is convenient for me to refer to one passage from the judgment of ROMER, L.J., sitting in this court in London County Freehold & Leasehold Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property & Investment Co., Ltd. (2). There the question did not emerge from preliminary inquiries such as are involved here, but was whether an answer to a question about tenancies amounted to a warranty. ROMER, L.J., said ([1936] 2 All E.R. 1049):

"LORD MOULTON, when advising the House of Lords in Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton (3) said ([1913] A.C. 51): 'It is, my Lords, of the greatest importance, in my opinion, that this House should maintain in its full integrity the principle that a person is not liable in damages for an innocent representation, no matter in what way or under what form the attack is made.' I do not doubt that a person can be made so liable if he warrants the truth of the representation, but it must be made abundantly clear by evidence that the warranty was in fact given. It is not permissible to infer such a warranty when the evidence does not plainly require it. To do so would be to disregard the principle to which LORD MOULTON referred. Turning to the evidence in the present case, I confess, with all respect to the learned judge, that I can find no trace of any such warranty having been asked for or given. What is meant by saying that the plaintiffs warranted the truth of the representation? Surely this, that the defendants contracted with the plaintiffs that, in the event of the representation turning out to be untrue, they would indemnify the plaintiffs against any loss which might thereby be occasioned to them."

I am proposing to apply those tests in the present case, and, as ROMER, L.J., observed in the case before him, so, as it seems to me, I can use his language here. For, turning to the evidence in the present case, I confess, with all respect to the learned judge, that I can find no trace of any such warranty having been asked for or given.

The preliminary inquiries to which allusion has been made were on a printed form which bore the heading:

- A "Inquiries before contract. Note: Approval of the draft contract for sale and purchase of the above property will be much facilitated if the vendor's solicitor will be good enough to reply to the following questions."

The questions did not lack either quantity or scope in the inquiries that they made. They were, in point of fact, eighteen in number, but that does less than justice to the curiosity of the purchaser's solicitor, for many of them contain a number of sub-questions. The inquiries related to such matters as whether the property was vacant and the amount of the sched. A income tax assessable in respect of it, and questions were asked about local authorities in regard to roads and planning authorities. Number 13, which is the vital question, was:

"Has the property suffered war damage? If so, please state the date and nature of the damage, the steps which have been taken under the War Damage Acts, and the reference number of any claim made."

- C I observe in regard to that question that it might well have been intended to elucidate for the benefit of the purchaser the knowledge whether there might be some claim outstanding against the War Damage Commission, the benefit of which would pass to the purchaser. In other words, it by no means follows, to my mind, that an affirmative answer to the question would be disadvantageous to a purchaser, and, particularly, to one who, as was the fact in this case, had inspected the property. However, the answer of the solicitor was: "I understand not," and there is no suggestion that that answer was not bona fide and true. The vendor, in fact, was himself purchasing from another, and the solicitor concerned had himself asked a similar question of the solicitor to the head vendor.

The form ends with three notes, and the third of them is:

- E "It is still necessary to make inspection of the property, inquiry of the local authority, the local planning authority, and of any occupier, and the usual searches."

I confess that anything less like asking for a warranty or the giving of a warranty than this document would be difficult to imagine. Counsel for the purchaser was driven to concede that, if he was right in saying that the vendor by his solicitor had warranted that the property had not been damaged by war damage, then all the other answers to all the other questions about the local authorities, the highway authority, and so forth, must likewise have amounted to warranties. Again, without referring for the moment to what the purchaser himself said in evidence, the suggestion that a warranty had been given in any of these answers is, I think, exceedingly difficult to fit in with the second requisition in which the purchaser repeated in effect the questions already asked and invited the vendor's solicitor to say whether the conditions were still the same. But the matter does not rest there. It is necessary to see what the purchaser himself said, according to the note of the evidence on which the learned judge appears to have founded himself. The purchaser said that, having met a certain agent, he went to see the premises:

- H "I considered purchase and consulted surveyor of Nottingham Building Society . . . I inspected property and saw repairs were required. Nothing was told about war damage, and I did not ask . . . I instructed my solicitors to make inquiries and left everything to them."

Later, he said that he consulted his solicitors, and eventually, in answer to the learned judge, I understand, he said: "I would not have bought if I had known war damage. I would not have paid £1,350." In cross-examination he said: "I inspected premises and was not satisfied until report from surveyors." Counsel for the purchaser founded himself on those two answers: "I would not have bought if I had known war damage," and "I would not have paid £1,350." But those answers are, at their highest, equally consistent with the purchaser saying that he was misled by an innocent representation, and I find nothing whatever in the evidence to which I have referred capable of supporting the suggestion that, by his solicitors or otherwise, the purchaser asked for or obtained a warranty. There seems to be no hint in the evidence of there having been any intention to make such a separate contract as a warranty must necessarily import. It is to be noted that the purchaser himself signed the contract. It does not appear that the solicitor was given any authority to make any contract, and there is no evidence whatever to suggest that the vendor's solicitor had any authority to make any contract on the vendor's behalf. A

It would, perhaps, be tedious to pile Pelion on Olympus, but, assuming such a contract existed, what are its terms? In consideration of the vendor's promise to indemnify the purchaser if there had been war damage, what did the purchaser promise to do? There was, so far as the evidence goes, no draft contract in existence. It is not the kind of case, of which De Lassalle v. Guildford (4) is an illustration, where, on a contract being prepared, the purchaser says: "I will only sign it if you assure me that such-and-such a state of affairs exists." I need not pursue the matter. The learned judge, as I follow his judgment, took the view that the document which I have read led to the inference that a warranty was asked for and given. If he found as a fact, after hearing the witnesses, that the two parties intended to make a contract, and based himself on such a finding, then this court would not interfere with that conclusion if there were some evidence to support it. But I do not think the judge based himself on any such finding of fact, and if he did, then, with all respect to him, I can find no evidence whatever capable of supporting such a conclusion. For these reasons I think that this appeal must succeed, and that the order made by the judge must be set aside and the action dismissed. B C D

JENKINS, L.J. : I agree. It seems to me abundantly plain on the face of the document headed "Inquiries before contract" that the answers to the numerous questions contained therein were not intended to constitute warranties, i.e., were not intended to constitute contracts to the effect that the answers to the inquiries were true, so as to give the purchaser a claim in damages in the event of any of the answers proving inaccurate. That applies to No. 13, the particular inquiry and answer on which the present case turns, just as much as it applies to the other numerous inquiries. The document seems to me to speak for itself and serves in itself to negative the contention that the replies constituted warranties. It emanates from the proposed purchaser. Following the heading "Inquiries before contract" is this note: E

"Approval of the draft contract for sale and purchase of the above property will be much facilitated if the vendor's solicitor will be good enough to reply to the following questions." F G

That note shows that the questions are being asked, not for the purpose of constituting a number of contracts or warranties, but merely to enable the proposed purchaser's solicitor to consider whether the contract for sale should be proceeded with, and, if so, what would be the appropriate form for it to take. The inquiries and answers are intended simply to provide preliminary information to assist in the attainment of the object I have mentioned, and not in themselves to have any contractual force. It should be noted further that at the end of the form "Inquiries before contract" there are a number of notes introduced by the letters "N.B.", and the third of those notes is: H

"It is still necessary to make inspection of the property, inquiry of the local authority, the local planning authority, and of any occupier, and the usual searches."

I think that third footnote reinforces the conclusion, if reinforcement were needed, that an inquiry such as No. 13, dealing with the state of repair of the property in the particular respect of war damage, was not intended to constitute a warranty, for, if it had been intended to constitute a warranty, the necessity for inspection of the property to secure the purchaser's position would not be apparent. The implication is that, in accordance with the usual practice, it was for the purchaser to inspect the property and satisfy himself as to condition and state of repair.

I should add that the precise purpose of inquiry No. 13 is not immediately apparent, but, having regard, in particular, to note No. 3, I suspect that its real object may have been, not to elicit information as to the state of repair of the property, which, whether there had been war damage or not, would, prima facie, be a matter for inspection, but to elicit information as to its history in regard to war damage, if any, with particular reference to any outstanding claims there might be against the appropriate commission for compensation. I agree with my Lord that requisition No. 2 is very material on the point at issue. If the answers to the preliminary inquiries had in truth been intended to constitute warranties, then requisition No. 2, which asks the vendor to confirm the replies given to the preliminary inquiries, would have been wholly inappropriate.

HODSON, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Dubovie, Freeman & Co., agents for A. D. Abrahamson, Liverpool (for the vendor) ; Isadore Goldman & Son, agents for De Cordova & De Cordova, Liverpool (for the purchaser).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WYNN'S WILL TRUSTS. PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. NEWBOROUGH (BARON) AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), January 17, 1952.]

Administration of Estates—Jurisdiction of court to control administration—Trustee authorised to determine all questions—Determination to be conclusive and binding on all beneficiaries.

By his will, dated July 31, 1931, the testator, who died on Jan. 20, 1932, gave his landed property to his trustee on trust for sale and settled the proceeds of sale. The will contained a clause whereby the testator authorised his trustee to determine, inter alia, "whether any moneys are to be considered as capital or income . . . and to determine all questions and matters of doubt arising in the execution of the trusts of this my will . . . and I declare that every such determination whether made upon a question actually raised or only implied in the acts or proceedings of my . . . trustee shall be conclusive and binding upon all persons interested under . . . my will . . .". Between 1941 and 1948 the trustee sold a quantity of timber and trees on an estate which formed part of the trust property and had not yet been sold under the trust for sale contained in the will. Applying the accepted principle which applies to trees planted for the purposes of amenity, he treated the whole proceeds of the sale as capital although not all the trees sold were planted for the purposes of amenity. On a summons taken out by him to determine whether his decision was correct, it was contended by the beneficiaries interested in capital that under the terms of the will the matter was concluded by his decision and the court had no jurisdiction.

HELD: the provision in the will which referred to the trustee the determination of all questions and matters of doubt arising in the execution of the trusts of the will and purported to make the determination of the trustee conclusive and binding on all persons interested under the will was void and of no effect, since (a) it was repugnant to the benefits conferred by the will on the beneficiaries, and (b) it was contrary to public policy as being an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the court to construe the will and to control the administration of the testator's estate, and, therefore, the question of the apportionment of the proceeds of sale of the timber and trees was not concluded by anything which the trustee had done and the matter would have to be re-considered by him according to the principles of law which were applicable. A Re Raven ([1915] 1 Ch. 673), applied.

AS TO ATTEMPT BY TESTATOR TO OUST JURISDICTION OF COURT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 162, para. 214. B

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Ridge, (1885), 31 Ch.D. 504; 55 L.J.Ch. 265; 54 L.T. 549; 34 Digest 643, 411.
- (2) Re Fenwick's Will Trusts, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1096; [1936] Ch. 720; 105 L.J.Ch. 351; 155 L.T. 199; Digest Supp.
- (3) Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl). Howe v. Aylesbury, (1802), 7 Ves. 137; 32 E.R. 56; 44 Digest 197, 265. C
- (4) Allhusen v. Whittell, (1867), L.R. 4 Eq. 295; 36 L.J.Ch. 929; 16 L.T. 695; 23 Digest 464, 5358.
- (5) Scott v. Avery, (1856), 5 H.L. Cas. 811; 25 L.J.Ex. 308; 28 L.T.O.S. 207; 10 E.R. 1121; 2 Digest 350, 263.
- (6) Philips v. Bury, (1696), Skin. 447 (90 E.R. 198); Carth. 180 (90 E.R. 709); Comb. 265, 314 (90 E.R. 468, 499); Holt K.B. 715 (90 E.R. 1294); 1 Ld. Raym. 5 (91 E.R. 900); 2 Term Rep. 346 (100 E.R. 186); 4 Mod. Rep. 106 (87 E.R. 289); 1 Show. K.B. 360 (89 E.R. 624); 21 Digest 238, 676. D
- (7) Re Raven, [1915] 1 Ch. 673; 84 L.J.Ch. 489; 113 L.T. 131; 8 Digest 303, 823. E
- (8) Massy v. Rogers, (1883), 11 L.R.Ir. 409; 44 Digest 533b.
- (9) Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co., [1922] 2 K.B. 478; 92 L.J.K.B. 81; 127 L.T. 824; 16 Digest 116, 151.
- (10) Atlantic Shipping & Trading Co. v. Dreyfus (Louis) & Co., [1922] 2 A.C. 250; 91 L.J.K.B. 513; 127 L.T. 411; 16 Digest 116, 150. F

ADJOURNED SUMMONS by the Public Trustee, acting as trustee of the will of the Honourable Frederick George Wynn, for the determination of questions arising out of the administration of the testator's estate.

In answer to the first question of the summons, DANCKWERTS, J., held that, on the true construction of the testator's will, his landed property was now subject to an immediate binding trust for sale. The second question of the summons (which is the subject of this report) was whether the proceeds of sale of timber and trees from an estate forming part of the testator's landed property should be treated wholly as capital or partly as capital and partly as income. These proceeds had been treated by the trustee as capital, and it was contended on behalf of the infant remainderman that the court had no jurisdiction in the matter as the will contained a clause whereby the testator directed that it was for the trustees to determine whether any moneys were to be considered as capital or income and that the determination of the trustees was to be conclusive and binding on all persons interested under the will. The beneficiaries interested in income contended that the clause was invalid (a) as it was repugnant to the benefits conferred by the will, and (b) as it was contrary to public policy as an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the court. G H

J. A. Wolfe for the plaintiff, the Public Trustee.

Sir Lynn Ungood-Thomas, K.C., and R. L. Edwards for the first defendant, Lord Newborough (a tenant for life).

Raymond Jennings, K.C., and H. A. Rose for the second defendant, Colonel Wynn (a tenant for life) and for the third defendant, R. C. M. Wynn (a remainderman).

M. J. Albery for the fourth defendant, R. V. Wynn (infant remainderman).

A DANCKWERTS, J.: The point I have to decide is concerned with the proceeds of the sale of trees which were cut from the estates of the testator between 1941 and 1948. The testator died on Jan. 20, 1932, and by his will, dated July 31, 1931, he made elaborate provisions which I have held to constitute, at any rate for the present time, an immediate binding trust for sale. The administration of his estate is in the hands of the Public Trustee, the only one of the executors who has proved the will and acted in the trusts. As a result of the provisions of the will there is a conflict between the interests of those interested in capital and those interested in income. Clause 30 of the will is as follows:

C "I authorise and empower my executors until they shall have assented to the bequests contained in this my will or in any codicil hereto and thereafter I authorise and empower my trustees to determine what articles pass under any specific bequest contained in this my will or any codicil hereto and whether any moneys are to be considered as capital or income and how valuations are to be made and/or value determined for any purpose in connection with the trusts and provisions of this my will or any codicil hereto and to apportion blended trust funds and to determine all questions and matters of doubt arising in the execution of the trusts of this my will or any codicil hereto and I declare that every such determination whether made upon a question actually raised or only implied in the acts or proceedings of my executors or trustees shall be conclusive and binding upon all persons interested under this my will or any codicil hereto."

E Counsel for the first defendant, a tenant for life, submits that the principles which apply to the proceeds of sale of trees are perfectly clear, and he has put forward four propositions which are accepted by all parties as being correct. The trustee is a trustee for sale, and the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 28 (2), directs how the net rents and profits until sale are to be paid and applied,

F "... except so far as any part thereof may be liable to be set aside as capital money under the Settled Land Act, 1925 . . ."

Section 66 of the Settled Land Act, 1925, deals with the cutting and sale of timber and capitalisation of part of the proceeds. By s. 66 (1) a tenant for life who is impeachable for waste may cut and sell timber ripe for cutting with the consent of the trustees or under an order of the court, and by s. 66 (2):

G "Three fourth parts of the net proceeds of the sale shall be set aside as and be capital money arising under this Act, and the other fourth part shall go as rents and profits."

Accordingly, so far as timber ripe for cutting is concerned, the matter is settled by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 66: see Re Ridge (1). The four propositions of law put forward by counsel for the first defendant are as follows. In the case

H of (a) trees which have been planted for the purposes of amenity, the proceeds of sale are capital; (b) timber which is ripe and fit for cutting, three-quarters of the proceeds are capital and one-quarter goes to income; (c) other trees, not being ornamental trees or timber, which are cut when fit for cutting, the proceeds should go to income; and (d) those trees which are cut before their due time for cutting, or windfalls, the proceeds should be allocated between capital and income so as to preserve the rights of the parties in the same manner as they would have existed if there had been no premature sale. Those propositions are accepted as the principles which apply to the proceeds of sale of the trees which have been cut in this case unless a decision made by the Public Trustee under the terms of cl. 30 of the will regarding the manner in which the proceeds should be dealt with ousts the application of those principles.

The affidavit of Arthur Gilbert Norris, sworn on Apr. 27, 1951, on behalf of the Public Trustee, states, in para. 5, what has been done in regard to the trees in this case:

"Between 1941 and 1948, while the recent war was in progress or during the period of acute shortage which followed it, the Public Trustee sold a considerable quantity of timber and trees from the park at Glynllivon. The net proceeds coming to the hands of the Public Trustee amounted to £7,050 or thereabouts. None, or virtually none, of this wood would have been sold but for the pressure of war or post-war conditions, and, although no compulsory powers were actually put into operation, the Public Trustee feels no doubt that such powers would have been exercised if he had shown any unwillingness to sell. Glynllivon is not a timber estate, and, though trees are sold when ripe, they are not cultivated for that purpose. In the circumstances aforesaid, and as all the trees sold were within the demesne occupied with the house, the trees and timber were then treated as 'amenity trees' and the whole proceeds were treated as capital. There can be no doubt, however, that some of the trees sold were so far from the house that their felling cannot be said to have affected its amenities, and the Public Trustee feels some doubt as to the correctness of his decision and desires to submit the matter for the decision of this honourable court. If a decision is given as to the principles on which the Public Trustee ought to act, he feels reasonably confident that there will be no difficulty in working out its application to the facts of the case."

It is contended by counsel for the fourth defendant, the infant remainderman, that by reason of the terms of cl. 30 of the will the matter has been concluded by the decision of the Public Trustee and that, therefore, there is no room for further argument at the present time. The Public Trustee has referred the matter of principle to the decision of the court, but, if it be the fact that he has already at an earlier date attempted to decide the matter himself in pursuance of cl. 30 and that clause is effective and binding on all the beneficiaries interested under the will, it seems to me that it is not open to the Public Trustee to go back on his decision and leave the matter now to be decided by the court, and that is particularly so, as it seems to me, in the present case, because the clause provides at the end:

"... that every such determination whether made upon a question actually raised or only implied in the acts or proceedings of my executors or trustees shall be conclusive ..."

Therefore, no formal decision, consciously taken as a decision, would appear to be a necessary factor for the matter to have been disposed of finally by the Public Trustee. If, therefore, this clause is binding on all the parties, it appears to me that the matter has been decided by the action of the Public Trustee.

The validity of the clause, however, is attacked by the beneficiaries interested in income. They contend that the clause is wholly invalid because it is repugnant to the benefits conferred by the will or is contrary to public policy as an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the court. Counsel for the infant remainderman, on the other hand, seeks to uphold the validity of the clause, and he relied on Re Fenwick's Will Trusts (2), in which no suggestion was made that a clause, which was on the same general lines as the clause in the will now before me, was invalid and ineffective. In that case, however, only matters of doubt were referred to the trustees' decision by the clause, and the judge decided that the clause did not apply because there was no question of doubt. In further support of his contention counsel for the infant remainderman pointed out that such a clause as this has appeared for many years in all the well-known books of conveyancing precedents. He referred me to KEY and ELPHINSTONE'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, 14th ed., vol. 2, p. 643, PRIDEAUX'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, 23rd ed., vol. 3, p. 767, and DAVIDSON'S CONCISE PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, 21st ed. (Part II), p. 572. It was also suggested that a clause

A on the same lines was to be found in the Statutory Will Forms, 1925 (S.R. & O., 1925, No. 780), Form 8, para. 7 (c), but it seems to me that the clause does no more than exclude the rules in Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth (3) and Allhusen v. Whittell (4), which settle the incidence of costs and expenses and other matters between beneficiaries, and it is well established, I think, that a testator may vary the rights of the beneficiaries taking under his will by excluding those rules.

B It may be said that beneficiaries under a will take their gifts under the will purely by the bounty of the testator, and, as they are not entitled to anything of right apart from the provisions of the will, they must take their benefits subject to the conditions which are contained in the will and abide by them. Therefore, it may be said, if that is so, why cannot the testator impose on the beneficiaries conditions which require them to abide by the decision of the trustees

C as to various matters? One's mind naturally turns to provisions which are often found in contracts providing for the decision of disputes by an arbitrator. After considerable doubt the position of an arbitration clause appears to have been settled by Scott v. Avery (5), where it was held that such a clause is valid, provided that it is merely a condition precedent to the bringing of proceedings on the contract that there shall have been an arbitration fixing the amounts to

D which the parties are entitled, and, on the other hand, that anything which goes beyond that and attempts to deprive the parties of their right to bring an action is unlawful as an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the court.

The matter is not entirely devoid of authority, though there are not very many authorities on the question which I have to decide. It appears, for instance, that not all disputes could be referred lawfully to the decision of an arbitrator, and

E that, in particular, in regard to real property the courts were unwilling to allow the jurisdiction of the court to be lessened or impinged on by the decisions of some outside tribunal. As long ago as 1694, in Philips v. Bury (6), there is a statement to the effect that the decision of the construction of a will cannot be referred to an arbitration. That case concerned the rights of rectors of Exeter College, Oxford, to the rector's house of the college. In his judgment EYRE, J.,

F said (Skin. 469):

" . . . a man cannot erect a jurisdiction, which shall not be examined, no more than he can appoint by his will, that if any difference arise, that this shall be determined by J.S. and his determination shall be final . . . "

That statement, on its face, seems to me to be contrary to the provisions of the kind which are to be found in cl. 30 of this will.

G In Re Raven (7), a decision of WARRINGTON, J., a clause of a will provided that " . . . if any doubt shall arise in any case to [sic] the identity of the institution intended to benefit the question shall be decided by my trustees whose decision shall be final and binding on all parties."

H It was claimed that the identity of the institution entitled to claim a legacy of £1,000 given to the National Association for the Prevention of Consumption should be decided by the trustees and should not be referred to the decision of the court, but it was held that " . . . the direction in the will so far as it purported to oust the jurisdiction of the court was void and inoperative (i) on the ground of repugnancy and (ii) as being contrary to public policy."

That decision might be said to be rather an outstanding one which might not apply to somewhat less ambitious circumstances, because, under the terms of that will, the question who was the actual beneficiary was to be referred to the decision of the trustee, but WARRINGTON, J., approved and followed Massy v. Rogers (8), an Irish case decided in 1883, which goes much further than Re Raven (7) and deals with a much wider clause than that in the will before WARRINGTON, J. It seems to me that Re Raven (7) is authority for the proposition that a testator cannot compel the beneficiaries taking under his will to have their rights decided by the trustees of the will. A

The principles on which the law proceeds are explained by the Court of Appeal in Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co. (9). In that case the contract contained a provision for arbitration, and one of the terms was:

"Neither buyer, seller, trustee in bankruptcy, nor any other person as aforesaid, shall require, nor shall they apply to the court to require, any arbitrators to state in the form of a Special Case for the opinion of the court any question of law arising in the course of the reference, but such question of law shall be determined by arbitration in manner herein directed." B

In his judgment SCRUTTON, L.J., said ([1922] 2 K.B. 489): C

"I think it is necessary to add a word about the effect of Scott v. Avery (5). I have always understood it to be a decision that while parties cannot agree to oust the jurisdiction of the King's courts, they can agree that no action shall be brought in those courts till the amount of liability has been settled by arbitration. ALDERSON, B., states this as agreed by all parties, and LORD CRANWORTH begins his judgment in the same way. I do not think the language of LORD DUNEDIN in commencing his judgment in Atlantic Shipping & Trading Co. v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (10) can have been meant to impugn the first part of this proposition. The courts always decline to recognise an agreement to refer all disputes to arbitration as compelling them to stay an action, and do so because such an agreement would oust the jurisdiction of the King's courts. I prefer the language of LORD SUMNER, concurred in by LORDS BUCKMASTER and ATKINSON, to the effect that as long as a clause does not exclude the claimant from such recourse to the courts as is always open by virtue of the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1889, but only requires certain conditions as precedent to a valid claim, it does not oust the jurisdiction. I think that LORD SUMNER would have regarded a clause depriving a claimant of the protection of the Arbitration Act as an ousting of the jurisdiction and unenforceable. And I can conceive some conditions precedent to enforcing a claim which English courts would decline to enforce." D E F

That shows the limitations which are to be imposed even on an arbitration clause in a contract, and it seems to me that, as regards the construction and administration of a will, the policy of the law is still more severe. It seems to me that I am bound to hold, on the authority of Re Raven (7), that a provision which refers to the trustees the determination of all questions and matters of doubt arising in the execution of the trusts of a will, and which attempts to make the determination of the trustees conclusive and binding on all persons interested under the will, is void and of no effect, because it is both repugnant to the benefits which are conferred by the will on the beneficiaries and also because it is contrary to public policy as being an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the court to construe the will and to control the administration of the testator's estate. No doubt, it may be said that it is convenient to have matters as regards the apportionment of capital moneys and the application of moneys in the payment of expenses referred to some informal decision, and that expense may be saved in that way which would be necessarily incurred if the matters had to G H be referred to the jurisdiction of the court, but, in my view, a clause of this kind has no effect if one attempts to use it so as to prevent the beneficiaries requiring the matter to be decided by the court. So long as the clause is not contested, the beneficiaries may be content to have the matters dealt with by the trustees in the course of their operations in the administration of the estate. The trustees may have applied their minds and carried out their duties in a perfectly proper manner, but it seems to me that any beneficiary is entitled to go to the court to have his rights considered and, if necessary, upheld, and that a testator may not by the provisions of his will exclude the right of the court to decide the matters, even though the trustees have considered them and reached a certain decision. Therefore, in my view, the insertion of a clause of this kind in wills is not very desirable because it is likely to mislead both trustees and beneficiaries as to their true position and right. Accordingly, I come to the conclusion that my right to decide this question is not concluded by anything that has been done by the Public Trustee, and the matter will have to be considered by him according to the principles which have been agreed as being the proper principles of law to apply in this case.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Whitfield, Byrne & Dean, agents for Carter, Vincent & Co., Caernarvon (for the plaintiff); Lewis & Lewis and Gisborne & Co. (for the first defendant); Robbins, Olivey & Lake, agents for Arthur Owen & Co., Pwllheli (for the remaining defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MEEK v. POWELL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Byrne and Parker, JJ.), January 24, 1952.]

Quarter Sessions—Appeal to—Conviction by court of summary jurisdiction under repealed statute—Power of quarter sessions to amend summons—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 31 (1) (vii), as substituted by Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (c. 38), s. 1—Food and Drugs (Milk, Dairies and Artificial Cream) Act, 1950 (c. 35), s. 36 (3).

The respondent was convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction on an information charging him with unlawfully selling for human consumption milk to which had been added water, contrary to s. 24 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938. At the date of the conviction s. 24 (1) had been repealed and replaced by s. 9 (1) of the Food and Drugs (Milk, Dairies and Artificial Cream) Act, 1950, which was in the same terms as the earlier section. On an appeal by the respondent to quarter sessions, quarter sessions refused to amend the information and quashed the conviction.

HELD: once there had been a conviction on a defective information the court of summary jurisdiction had no power to amend the information; quarter sessions derived its power to amend the information from s. 31 (1) (vii) of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (as substituted by s. 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933), which enabled quarter sessions to exercise any power which the court of summary jurisdiction might have exercised; and, therefore, quarter sessions had no power to amend the information and their decision to quash the respondent's conviction was right.

Per PARKER, J.: "Any document" in s. 36 (3) of the Act of 1950 referred to a document existing at the time that that Act was passed and not to a document which had come into existence subsequently, and, therefore, that sub-section did not apply to cause the reference in the information to s. 24 (1) of the Act of 1938 to be construed as a reference to s. 9 (1) of the Act of 1950.

FOR THE SUMMARY JURISDICTION ACT, 1879, s. 31 (1) (vii), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 14, p. 869.

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Taylor, (1924), 93 L.J.K.B. 912; 88 J.P. 152; 20 Digest 140, 1146.
- (2) R. v. Tuttle, (1929), 140 L.T. 701; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Monmouthshire Quarter Sessions.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Pontypool on informations laid by the appellant, a sampling officer for and on behalf of the Pontypool Urban District Council, the respondent was convicted that on May 10, 1951, he unlawfully sold to the Milk Marketing Board for human consumption milk to which had been added water contrary to the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, s. 24 (1). The respondent appealed to quarter sessions, where it was contended on his behalf that the informations were incurably defective and the convictions were bad because at the time of the convictions s. 24 (1) of the Act of 1938 had been repealed, though it had been re-enacted ipsissimis verbis by the Food and Drugs (Milk, Dairies and Artificial Cream) Act, 1950, s. 9 (1). It was contended on behalf of the appellant (i) that the informations were saved by s. 36 (3) of the Act of 1950, and that no amendment of the informations was necessary; (ii) that by pleading to the informations before the court of summary jurisdiction the respondent had waived his right to object to the form or substance thereof; and (iii) that the point taken was unmeritorious, that the court of summary jurisdiction would, in the proper and judicial exercise of its discretion, have amended the informations, had objection been taken to them, and that quarter sessions had the like power and discretion. Quarter sessions allowed the respondent's appeal and quashed the convictions.

Arthur G. Davies for the appellant.

P. E. Underwood for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: BYRNE, J., will give the first judgment.

BYRNE, J.: This is a Case stated by Monmouthshire Quarter Sessions, who allowed the respondent's appeal against two convictions by a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Pontypool on informations charging that, on May 10, 1951, at Pontypool he unlawfully sold to the Milk Marketing Board for human consumption milk to which had been added water, contrary to the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, s. 24 (1). On Oct. 26, 1950, s. 24 (1) of the Act of 1938 was repealed. The position, therefore, was that a conviction was recorded by petty sessions under a section of a statute which had been repealed. The very words of s. 24 (1) of the Act of 1938 were reproduced in s. 9 (1) of the Food and Drugs (Milk, Dairies and Artificial Cream) Act, 1950.

If a person is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction under a repealed statute, the justices, if the defendant does not object, can amend the summons forthwith, or they can adjourn the case so that the summons may be amended, putting the prosecution on whatever terms they please as the result of the adjournment, or they can dismiss the summons, leaving it to the prosecution in a fresh summons to charge the offence under the correct statute. The powers of quarter sessions on appeal are to be found in the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, which, by s. 1, substitutes the following provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 31 (1) (vii):

"Quarter sessions may by their order confirm, reverse or vary the decision of the court of summary jurisdiction, or may remit the matter with their opinion thereon to a court of summary jurisdiction acting for the same petty sessional division or place as the court by whom the decision appealed against was given, or may make such other order in the matter as they think just, and by such order exercise any power which the court of summary jurisdiction might have exercised; and any order made by quarter sessions shall have the like effect and may be enforced in the like manner as if it had been made by the court of summary jurisdiction. Quarter sessions may also make such order as to costs to be paid by either party as they think just."

The question here is whether that paragraph of the sub-section enables quarter sessions on the hearing of an appeal to exercise the power which the justices in petty sessions would have had of amending on the terms I have indicated a summons which was defective. In my view, s. 31 (1) (vii) gives no power to quarter sessions to exercise a power which petty sessions could not exercise because once petty sessions have recorded a conviction on a summons they have no power thereafter to amend the summons. The power of quarter sessions is derived through that of the justices at petty sessions, and it follows that quarter sessions have no power to amend such a summons. What was before quarter sessions in the present case was a conviction under a repealed enactment, and, in my view, that could not be cured under any statutory authority that the justices at quarter sessions had. I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: I agree. If this had been a conviction on an indictment which charged an offence under the wrong section, it seems clear that the Court of Criminal Appeal would have had no option but to quash the conviction although the court of trial would have had power to amend the indictment. That seems to have been decided in R. v. Taylor (1) where there was pleaded in an indictment a section which had been repealed and replaced by a section in a later Act and the Court of Criminal Appeal held that, as the wrong section had been mentioned in the indictment, the indictment must be quashed. Contrast that case with R. v. Tuttle (2), in which in 1929 a man was charged under s. 21 of the Larceny Act, 1916, with fraudulent conversion in March, 1916. The attention of TALBOT, J. at the trial was called to the fact that s. 21 of the Larceny Act, 1916, was not in force at the time when the conversion was alleged to have taken place, and he allowed an amendment to the indictment by substituting for the section pleaded in the indictment s. 80 of the Larceny Act, 1861, which was in force in March, 1916. The Court of Criminal Appeal upheld the conviction because they held it was within the discretion of the learned judge to allow the amendment, and the defendant was not prejudiced by the mere alteration of the name of the statute. If an indictment mentions the wrong Act and a conviction takes place on that indictment unamended, it is too late to come to the Court of Criminal Appeal and ask them to amend it. The Court of Criminal Appeal must quash the conviction. I do not see any reason why, in the absence of some statutory authority, we should give quarter sessions when they are sitting as a court of appeal larger powers than those which the Court of Criminal Appeal possesses. The reasons given by BYRNE, J., seem to be conclusive of this matter, and I agree the appeal fails.

PARKER, J.: I agree with both judgments delivered, and would only add a word in deference to the argument of counsel for the appellant. His first argument here was that no amendment was necessary as the convictions were good on their face by reason of s. 36 (3) of the Food and Drugs (Milk, Dairies and Artificial Cream) Act, 1950. Section 36 (3) provides:

"Any document referring to any Act or enactment repealed by this Act shall be construed as referring to this Act or the corresponding enactment in this Act."

It seems plain that "any document" in that sub-section must refer to any document existing at the time that that Act was passed, and not a document which has come into existence subsequently. I agree this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, agents for Everett & Tomlin, Pontypool (for the appellant); T. D. Jones & Co., agents for R. G. Davies, Abergavenny (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRADSHAW v. DAVEY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Byrne and Parker, JJ.), January 24, 1952.]

Rates—Rateable occupation—Yacht mooring.

During the six summer months the ratepayer moored a yacht in a tidal river by means of a mooring which consisted of two anchors connected by a ground chain to which was attached a riding chain, a buoy rope and buoy being attached to the riding chain. The anchors were lowered to the river bed, but were not embedded in the soil. The mooring could be raised to the deck of the yacht, like an ordinary anchor, without the use of a derrick or other machinery. It was taken up each winter and not put down again until the following summer.

HELD: the mooring was to be regarded, not as a fixture, but as a chattel which was used much in the same way as an ordinary ship's anchor, and, therefore, it was not a rateable hereditament.

Cory v. Greenwich (Churchwardens) (1872) (L.R. 7 C.P. 499) and dictum of BLACKBURN, J., in Holland v. Hodgson (1872) (L.R. 7 C.P. 335), applied.

EDITORIAL NOTE. By the Local Government Act, 1948, s. 33 (1), valuation lists are now to be prepared and amended by valuation officers of the Inland Revenue Commissioners. By s. 37 (4) an appeal from the decision of the valuation officer lies to the local valuation court, but, under s. 50 (1), arbitration is permitted if all persons concerned agree. Under s. 49 (1) of the Act of 1948 and s. 1 (3) (e) of the Lands Tribunal Act, 1949, an appeal from a decision of the valuation court lies to the Lands Tribunal, and by s. 3 (4) and s. 3 (11) of the Act of 1949, the decision of the tribunal is final subject to appeal on a point of law to the Court of Appeal.

AS TO RATEABLE OCCUPATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 27, p. 351, para. 782; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 426-450, Nos. 10-173.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Westminster Corpn. v. Southern Ry. Co., Railway Assessment Authority & Smith & Son, Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 322; [1936] A.C. 511; 105 L.J.K.B. 537; sub nom. Re Southern Ry. Co.'s Appeals, 155 L.T. 33; 100 J.P. 327; Digest Supp.
- (2) Cory v. Bristow, (1877), 2 App. Cas. 262; 46 L.J.M.C. 273; 36 L.T. 594; 41 J.P. 709; 38 Digest 451, 178.
- (3) Holland v. Hodgson, (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 328; 41 L.J.C.P. 146; 26 L.T. 709; 35 Digest 304, 538.
- (4) Cory v. Greenwich (Churchwardens), (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 499; 41 L.J.M.C. 142; 27 L.T. 150; 36 J.P. 599; 38 Digest 480, 384.
- (5) Grant v. Oxford Local Board, (1868), L.R. 4 Q.B. 9; 38 L.J.M.C. 39; 19 L.T. 378; 33 J.P. 228; 38 Digest 479, 382.
- (6) Laing (John) & Son, Ltd. v. Kingswood Assessment Area Assessment Committee, [1949] 1 All E.R. 224; [1949] 1 K.B. 344; 113 J.P. 111; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by quarter sessions under the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849, s. 11.

On Jan. 23, 1948, the rating authority for the Fareham Urban District made a proposal for the inclusion in the valuation list of a new hereditament, described as "mooring S.R.H.7 Hamble River", in the sum of £2 gross and £1 rateable value. The ratepayer objected to the proposal, and on Mar. 22, 1948, the Gosport Assessment Committee considered the proposal and the objection and decided to confirm the proposal. The ratepayer appealed to quarter sessions. Under the Local Government Act, 1948, s. 33 (1) (a), and the Local Government Act, 1948 (Appointed Days) Order, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 434), made under s. 72 (1)

A and s. 147 (3) of the Act of 1948, the assessment committee ceased to exist on Feb. 1, 1950. On Apr. 14, 1950, in exercise of the power conferred by reg. 5 of the Rating and Valuation (Transitional) Regulations, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 2313), made under s. 71 and s. 72 (2) of the Act of 1948, Southampton Quarter Sessions directed that the functions which would have been exercisable by the assessment committee in relation to this matter, had the committee continued in existence, should be exercised by G. H. Davey, the valuation officer appointed by the Inland Revenue Commissioner for the Gosport Valuation Area, who thereby became the respondent in these proceedings in place of the assessment committee. By consent of the parties and by order of PARKER, J., dated Oct. 2, 1951, a Special Case was stated for the opinion of the High Court.

B The ratepayer contended that the mooring was not a rateable hereditament, that there was no rateable occupation by him, and that the mooring should, accordingly, be omitted from the valuation list. The valuation officer contended that the mooring was a rateable hereditament, that the ratepayer was in exclusive beneficial occupation thereof, and that he was correctly rated. The question for the opinion of the court was whether the determination of the assessment committee was correct.

C Montagu, K.C., and W. L. Roots for the appellant (the ratepayer).
Scott Henderson, K.C., and Molony for the respondent (the valuation officer).

D LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Special Case stated under the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849, s. 11, the parties having agreed the facts. The question for our decision is whether a mooring for a boat in the river Hamble, which is a great yachting centre, amounts to a hereditament which can be the subject of assessment for rating purposes.

E By permission of the Southampton Harbour Board a company was allowed to put down some moorings by their ship repairing yard. One of those moorings is used by the appellant, a director of the company, to moor his five-ton cutter during the summer months. The facts, as set out in the Special Case, are as follows:

F "The mooring consists of two Admiralty pattern anchors [i.e., anchors with two flukes], each weighing approximately eighty pounds connected by two lengths $12\frac{1}{2}$ fathoms $\frac{3}{8}$ inch ground chain to the centre of which is attached a riding chain $\frac{5}{16}$ inch in thickness and about eight fathoms in length. A buoy rope and buoy are attached to the chain. A yacht owner must either rent the right to attach to moorings, or, as in the present case, own the necessary cables and weight to provide his own. A mooring as above described is normally laid in the manner of laying two anchors, namely, a laying vessel drops one anchor first, then reverses until she is in a position to lay the second anchor, and then steams half way back to the first anchor, shackles the two anchor cables together and lowers them to the bed of the river by means of the riding chain. No attempt is normally made, and none was made in the case of the particular mooring, to embed or dig the anchors in the soil of the river bed. By the terms of the licence the mooring must be kept secure, which involves the use of anchors and cable of sufficient weight to ensure that the vessel intended to be moored will ride safely and without shifting. This condition of the licence has always been fulfilled. The mooring has been ever since May, 1946, and is primarily used by the five-ton cutter called Mist, the property of the appellant. The Mist is a cutter rigged sailing vessel some twenty feet in length. She is used for pleasure purposes in and about Southampton Water and is capable of lifting the mooring on deck and has in fact done so. The vessel swings with the tides and never grounds at the mooring. The Mist carried ground tackle consisting of one anchor and cable for use when not riding at the mooring. User of the mooring by vessels other than Mist is occasional and occurs only by gratuitous permission of the appellant. The mooring is in use almost continuously during the six summer months, but each winter it is raised and brought to shore for inspection and maintenance. By the terms of the licence the mooring must be replaced at the original site and this requirement has been observed."

This court is not considering the question whether the appellant has an easement or merely a licence. Applying the principles laid down by LORD A
RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN ([1936] 2 All E.R. 329) in Westminster Corpn. v. Southern Ry. Co. (1), I will assume that he has a licence, and, therefore, he is a licensee. No doubt, in view of the Westminster Corpn. case (1), some of the cases which have been cited to us today would no longer be decided in the same way, or part of the judgments would be held to be wrong. In my opinion, in view of B the authorities, this court cannot hold that this mooring is a rateable hereditament. It is not for me to say what the Court of Appeal can do, but I very much doubt whether any court, except the House of Lords, could hold that it is rateable. There are several cases on this point, culminating in Cory v. Bristow (2). First there is Holland v. Hodgson (3), which is a decision of the Exchequer Chamber, and, therefore, binding on this court. BLACKBURN, J., delivering the judgment of the court, said (L.R. 7 C.P. 335): C

"... an article may be very firmly fixed to the land, and yet the circumstances may be such as to show that it was never intended to be part of the land, and then it does not become part of the land. The anchor of a large ship must be very firmly fixed in the ground in order to bear the strain of the cable, yet no one could suppose that it became part of the land, D even though it should chance that the shipowner was also the owner of the fee of the spot where the anchor was dropped. An anchor similarly fixed in the soil for the purpose of bearing the strain of the chain of a suspension bridge would be part of the land. Perhaps the true rule is, that articles not otherwise attached to the land than by their own weight are not to be considered as part of the land, unless the circumstances are such as to show that E they were intended to be part of the land, the onus of showing that they were so intended lying on those who assert that they have ceased to be chattels, and, that, on the contrary, an article which is affixed to the land even slightly is to be considered as part of the land, unless the circumstances are such as to show that it was intended all along to continue a chattel, the onus lying on those who contend that it is a chattel." F

That decision is well known because it is often cited on the question whether certain things are to be regarded as fixtures or not. Applying the test laid down by BLACKBURN, J., I should say that the circumstances here show that the mooring was always intended to be a chattel. It is not one of those heavy moorings which are firmly fixed and would require derricks and elaborate machinery to remove. It can be raised and carried on the deck of a five-ton cutter, and it is taken up every year for the purpose of maintenance and inspection. The fact that it is taken up in the winter months and not put down again until the summer months seems to indicate that it is not a fixture, but is to be regarded as a chattel which does no more than, and is used in the same way as, an anchor which a ship carries, except that it is left in the bed of the river when the ship puts out so that she can fasten to a mooring and slip her mooring instead of having to put down or haul up the anchor every time she comes into or leaves the river. G
H

No doubt, part of the judgment of WILLES, J., in Cory v. Greenwich (Churchwardens) (4) would not now be upheld, but the part with which we are concerned here has, I think, been approved by the House of Lords in Cory v. Bristow (2). In Cory v. Greenwich (Churchwardens) (4) a coal derrick was moored in the Thames

" . . . by two single-fluked anchors on the side nearest the shore, and by two stones on the channel side, and by two stream-anchors one at the head and the other at the stern. The anchors and stones (which could be hauled on board by the machinery on the derrick) were merely dropped into the river, no force being used for the purpose of fastening them, but only a small quantity of ballast being removed in the bed of the river to enable the stones to lie flat."

A

It will be observed that the moorings in that case were of an even more weighty kind than the mooring in the case now before us. If they were hauled up, they had to be hauled up by a derrick, which, of course, a five-ton cutter would not carry. Also, a small quantity of ballast was removed from the bed of the river to enable the stones to lie flat. WILLES, J., described the moorings, and said

B

(L.R. 7 C.P. 503):

"The anchors and stones can be hauled on board the derrick by her own machinery, and she may be moved to any other part of the river. All that that statement amounts to is, that the derrick is anchored at the spot where she floats. It is not like an immoveable thing that is susceptible of occupation; the derrick is fastened to things which are accessories to herself, and which are moveable things, whether silted over or not, and which constitute no more an occupation of any portion of the bed of the river than would the anchor of any other vessel."

C

That case came under review five years later in the House of Lords in Cory v. Bristow (2). Referring to the facts of the Greenwich case (4), LORD CAIRNS, L.C., said (2 App. Cas. 271):

D

"There was a derrick which, as regards that which was above water, appears to have been of the same character as those which I have just mentioned, and it was moored in the river, but it was moored simply in this way . . ."

E

After describing the mooring in the Greenwich case (4), LORD CAIRNS, L.C., said (ibid.):

"My Lords, under these circumstances, it was held that the moorings were not immoveable from the bed of the river, that they were only, as WILLES, J., expressed it, 'part of the equipment of the vessel itself', and that therefore there were no moorings which could be said to be fixed to the soil of the river and to be occupied as part of the soil by the plaintiffs. That, my Lords, I think, puts aside that authority, and will enable your Lordships, having regard to the facts which are found in the present case, to arrive, as I think you will, without hesitation, at the conclusion that you have here moorings which are clearly fixed into and bedded in the soil of the river Thames, just as much as if piles had been driven ten or twenty feet deep into the soil, and that if you find any person in occupation of those moorings, and that occupation is a beneficial occupation, the person so occupying is occupying hereditaments within the statutes which create chargeability to the assessment to the poor."

F

G

LORD HATHERLEY said (ibid., 278):

H

"Then the question arises, are the Messrs. Cory the owners in the sense of being occupiers of land situate within the parish? My Lords, I can have no doubt upon that point when I look at the nature and the character of these mooring chains. They are described in the papers before us, and the case is thereby at once differed from two or three of the cases which have been cited, one being with reference to a floating dock, and another being with reference to an arrangement by which these mooring chains were sunk as they were sunk here, but fixed so far less than here, that they were capable of being moved like other anchors, whereas here they were sunk and fixed, and would have to be hauled up by means of machinery in a derrick. That alters the present case from the case of a floating dock which is, as it were, a vessel floating about upon the water, and which cannot be said to have any immoveability whatever in any given parish, and so can hardly be subject to rates. The circumstance in the other case that the derrick itself, by its own instrumentality, could haul up the stones and mooring chains just as it could any anchor, reduced it again to the case of a ship, of which it could not be predicated that it occupied land situated within a parish. But here we are told by the case itself that the derrick cannot be removed at all except by slipping its chains and cables, because the stones and the rest of the apparatus are so fixed in the bed of the river as to prevent their being hauled up or got up, except by some much more energetic mode of removal."

LORD O'HAGAN's speech (ibid., 279) was to the same effect, as was LORD BLACKBURN's (ibid., 281). LORD BLACKBURN's speech was the more valuable because he was a party to the decision in Holland's case (3) and was not a party to the decision in Cory v. Greenwich (Churchwardens) (4). I can find no indication in the speeches of any of the noble and learned Lords who decided Cory v. Bristow (2) that they differed in any way from the decision to which the Court of Common Pleas had come in Cory v. Greenwich (Churchwardens) (4), and, as I read their opinions, I think they thought that the Greenwich case (4) was rightly decided. If we held that the mooring in the case now before us was rateable, our decision would be in conflict with Cory v. Greenwich (Churchwardens) (4), approved by the House of Lords in Cory v. Bristow (2). Therefore, I think we are bound to answer the question submitted to us in this case by saying that the determination of the assessment committee was incorrect and the mooring is not a rateable hereditament. The appellant will have the costs of the case.

BYRNE, J.: I agree.

PARKER, J.: I agree.

Case remitted with opinion of court.

Solicitors: Layton & Co. (for the appellant); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

YOUNG v. BUCKLES.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins and Hodson, L.J.J.), January 15, 1952.]

Building Control—Licence—Inclusion of architect's fees in amount authorised by licence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 56A (4) (6).

The plaintiff, an architect, claimed £48 10s. for professional work in respect of building operations carried out at the defendant's premises. The building licence had been granted for an expenditure of £525, but work costing £700 was executed. At the date of the issue of the plaint the defendant had paid £472 to the contractors, and so, had the plaintiff's claim been paid, the licensed amount would not have been exceeded. The defendant contended (i) that, by virtue of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 56A (4), architect's fees were included in the sum allowed to be spent under the licence, and that, as the licence limit had been exceeded, the plaintiff's claim was unenforceable: and (ii) that an architect who supervised the execution of an illegal building contract was guilty of an offence under the Defence (General) Regulations, reg. 56A (6), and could not recover his fees.

HELD: (i) assuming that the licensed amount included the plaintiff's fees, at the date of the issue of the plaint payment of the amount claimed, added to the sums already paid, would not have caused the amount limited by the licence to be exceeded; illegality only attached to the excess over the licensed amount, and a contract was only illegal in so far as it involved a claim for payment of a sum larger than that for which the licence was granted; and, therefore, when the plaintiff issued his plaint he had a cause of action, was not a party to an illegal contract, and was entitled to the sum claimed.

Dennis & Co., Ltd. v. Munn ([1949] 1 All E.R. 616), applied.

(ii) in any event, services as an architect such as those rendered by the plaintiff were not "services used for the purpose of a building operation" within the meaning of the Defence (General) Regulations, reg. 56A, and, therefore, fees payable to architects or other professional persons in connection with building operations were not included in the amount of expenditure permitted by the licence.

FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 56A, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 40, p. 1392.

Cases referred to:

(1) Dennis & Co., Ltd. v. Munn, [1949] 1 All E.R. 616; [1949] 2 K.B. 327; [1949] L.J.R. 857; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Jamieson v. Watt's Trustee 1950 S.C. 265; 2nd Digest Supp.

(3) Brightman & Co. v. Tate, [1919] 1 K.B. 463; 88 L.J.K.B. 921; 120 L.T. 512; 11 Digest 551, 537.

APPEAL by the defendant from a decision of His Honour JUDGE CROSTHWAITE, sitting at Liverpool County Court, dated Sept. 17, 1951, giving judgment for the plaintiff for £48 10s. on a claim for professional fees and work done as an architect in connection with building operations at the defendant's premises. By her defence the defendant denied that she had ever appointed the plaintiff to act for her in a professional capacity and said that the work was carried out by building contractors. In the Court of Appeal these defences were not raised, and the defendant relied on the contention that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover £48 10s. for professional services since the licence in respect of the building work covered fees for architects and surveyors, work had been done in excess of the £525 for which the licence was granted, and, therefore, the plaintiff's claim was unenforceable.

Youds for the defendant.

Rigg for the plaintiff.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: The defendant, Mrs. Alice Buckles, at all material dates appears to have been the proprietor of premises known as the Boundary Social Club, Blundellsands. The present proceedings arise out of work which was done on those premises on her behalf, and, in particular, relate to certain fees charged by the plaintiff as architect and surveyor for his professional services in connection with that work.

The writ was issued on Jan. 30, 1951. The claim is for £48 10s., and on the writ there is an indorsement, giving the following particulars:

"To professional charges for preparing full set of plans for the alterations to the club, preparing specifications, submitting the same to local authority and obtaining their approval, supervising the carrying out of the said work, registering the club with the Central Land Board re future development charges, and receiving their acknowledgment, and work done by the plaintiff as a surveyor."

Further particulars were asked of the charges, and they were given. From those particulars it appears that the sum of £48 10s. is, in fact, made up of three items—(i) A charge of eight per cent. on £525 for preparing and drawing plans for the alterations and obtaining licences, £42. The figure of £525 is the amount for which a licence was granted by the Ministry of Works. (ii) A charge of £2 2s. for making an application under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, about development charges. (iii) A charge of £4 8s., representing five per cent. on a sum of £88 8s. paid for supplying and fixing a beer pump. The value of the work which eventually was carried out, and for which the plaintiff from time to time granted certificates, was in all some £700, £175 at least in excess of the £525 which was the amount for which a licence was given under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939. Because of that excess the defendant contends that the plaintiff is now disabled from making any claim.

There have been several cases before the courts of this character. I cannot look altogether sympathetically on a case made by persons who take the benefit of work done on their premises, and then plead illegality under the Defence (General) Regulations so that they may have that benefit without the obligation of paying for it. Still, that is beside the point, for Parliament has made it plain that, save with the appropriate licences, it is not lawful to spend more than certain sums of money on building operations, and Parliament has taken that step to conserve for the national good such resources in the way of building labour and materials as are available. If people embark on building operations which offend against the prohibition which Parliament has imposed, the general principle of law must be applied, viz., that a person making a claim based on a contract tainted with illegality cannot recover in these courts.

The question here is whether the claim for professional charges which the plaintiff has made falls within that description, i.e., whether it is tainted with illegality consisting of an infringement of the Defence (General) Regulations. The licence was granted for £525, and before the plaintiff and the defendant came into any kind of commercial contact the defendant appears to have engaged the services of another professional man as a surveyor to advise her on the work which should be done to improve the attractions of the club. That gentleman's estimate came to a sum of over £1,000. For that no licence was obtainable, and the whole matter fell to the ground. Later, the defendant appears to have made the acquaintance of the plaintiff and also of a building firm which has the unusual name of the El Kebir Building Co., and the plaintiff and this firm thought that the work could be done for £535. The matter proceeded on that footing, an application for a licence for that sum was made by the plaintiff, and the Ministry of Works in due course issued a licence for £525, dated Dec. 16, 1948, and addressed to the defendant. According to the evidence the work carried out cost £700 or more, but at the date when the plaint was issued, namely, Jan. 30, 1951, the plaintiff confined his claim, as appears from the nature of it (subject to one point with which I will deal later) to his professional charges in respect of the sum of £525 for which a licence had been obtained. At that date the defendant had paid £425 to the builders and, perhaps, £47 to the electricians. It is clear, therefore, that she had not then paid more than the total of those two sums, £472, and that, if the plaintiff's claim had been met, she still would not have paid more than £525 in all.

The significance of those facts appears to me to be as follows. The cases which have been cited to us, such as Dennis & Co., Ltd. v. Munn (1), in this court, and the Scottish case of Jamieson v. Watt's Trustee (2), seem to show that where under the Defence (General) Regulations work is licensed to cost a certain figure, £x, but work is, in fact, carried out so that the total cost or value is £x plus £y, the illegality only attaches to the excess. In other words, the contract is only illegal in so far as it involves a claim for a payment of a larger figure than that for which the licence was granted. If that be right, then at the date when the plaint was issued (and assuming in favour of the defendant the point which I must come to discuss presently, namely, that the £525 comprehended the fees due to the architect) it could not be said that the amount claimed plus any sum already paid involved any excess of the amount allowed by the licence. If after the plaintiff issued the plaint the defendant paid other persons, it would be a strange result that the plaintiff's position was thereby worsened. For these reasons, therefore, on any view of it, it seems to me that when the plaintiff issued his plaint he had a good cause of action and was entitled to the sum which he claimed without involving himself in being party to, or enforcing, a contract which had then become illegal.

If that view be not correct, it becomes necessary to consider the main point which counsel for the defendant argued both here and below, namely, that fees payable to architects or other professional persons in connection with building operations are included in and cannot be paid so as to create an excess over the sum for which the Ministry of Works may grant a licence. Such a result would be surprising if it were correct. A man may engage the services of professional men to advise him in regard to his property in many ways. As JENKINS, L.J., pointed out in the argument, a man may engage the services of the most eminent architect in the country to design for him a palace or a cathedral, and the obvious fact that no licence would be granted for that work could not affect the right of the architect to claim payment for professional services. Similarly, a man who is considering doing work on his property may well have occasion to take the advice of a lawyer whether the work, if carried out in a particular way, would be liable to involve the owner in any difficulties with neighbours, e.g., as regards infringements of rights of way. It is easy to imagine many cases in which a building owner may take professional advice in regard to work which he contemplates carrying out, for which services, in the ordinary way, he would be liable to pay the proper professional fees, and it would be surprising if the Defence (General) Regulations had the effect that professional charges of that character which a building owner had rendered himself liable to pay were deemed to be covered by the amount of any licence granted, so that officials of the Ministry of Works were in a position to say how much was to be paid to lawyers, surveyors, and other professional men for the services they had rendered. Yet such, as I understand it, is the contention of the defendant.

The question must turn on the effect of the language used in the relevant part of reg. 56A (4), which is as follows:

"In computing, for the purposes of this regulation, the cost of an operation or of any work, regard shall be had to the value of any goods or services used for the purposes thereof, notwithstanding that the provision thereof did not involve the expenditure of money solely or primarily for the purpose of that particular operation or work."

It is the contention of the defendant that, according to the ordinary usage of our tongue, the work done by the plaintiff as specified in the particulars of claim was "services", and so far I agree. It is further said that they were "services used for the purposes of the operation." It is at that point that I disagree. If it had been intended by Parliament that in computing the cost of an operation there should be included the amount of fees for services rendered in connection therewith, that, or something like it, would have been the obvious form of words to use. The language is quite different. It does not say that there must be taken into account the amount of the charges. It says that regard shall be had to the value of the services. The services are not described as services rendered in connection with the operation, but as services used for the purposes of the operation. Applying the test of ordinary sense to the language, it seems to me that the services rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant in this case cannot be described as services used for the purposes of a building operation. Nor do I think that the earlier words "regard shall be had to the value of those services" are in the least apt if the intention was that an architect's normal scale of fees should be included in the amount of the licence. I think the clue to the sense and intendment of this paragraph is found in the following words:

"notwithstanding that the provision of the goods and services did not involve the expenditure of money solely or primarily for the purposes of that particular operation or work."

To my mind, but without attempting an exhaustive statement of what the paragraph includes, it is directed in the ordinary way to cases in which, for the purpose of executing the work, use is made of some goods or services which are also being made use of for the purpose of some other work so that there might be no separate charge as regards the particular work for the use of those goods or services and it is necessary to have regard to the value of those services so far as they are used for the purpose in hand. That is borne out by the fact that in reg. 56A (6) special provision is made for dealing with a professional man, as distinct from the builder, who may be party to the execution of some illegal contract, specific reference being made to architects, engineers, and other persons employed in an advisory or supervisory capacity in connection with the execution of the operation, a form of words which is obviously suitable and appropriate to professional men and which is absent from reg. 56A (4). In my judgment, therefore, the fees which the plaintiff was properly entitled to charge in respect of the work specified in the specification are not to be taken as having been comprehended in the licence figure of £525. I do not think that the licence itself is consistent with the other point of view.

That, however, is not quite the end of the matter. I have already said that the figure of £48 10s. includes the item of five per cent. on £88 8s. 4d., the cost of supplying and fixing a beer pump. It might be said in view of the particulars that that was a percentage charge on something, on the face of it, additional to the figure of £525, and, therefore, on the face of it, tainted with the illegality of an excess over the licence figure. The answer, I think, to that suggestion is that there is no sufficient evidence on which the court could come to any view on that matter save only this, that, according to the specification which I have read, the beer pump was included in the total specification for which the licence for £525 was granted. So that on the evidence it would appear that the plaintiff charged eight per cent. on the whole work, including the installation of the beer pump, and an additional five per cent. on the beer pump itself. Whether he was entitled to charge two percentages on that particular item must, perhaps, be open to doubt, though no one has challenged that fact or figure, and, therefore, it must be taken that the sum charged, £48 10s., was a proper charge. Indeed, the county court judge stated in his judgment that the charges as such were proper, and no one has suggested the contrary. The sum is small in any case, and, therefore, I need take no further time on it.

There remains a final point. Even though the argument based on reg. 56A (4), which the defendant has put before us, is erroneous, it might be said that this plaintiff had, as the architect concerned, supervised the execution of the work, granting certificates in respect of it considerably in excess of the licence figure, and, therefore, must be taken as having been, if not a party to the illegality, at least in some measure responsible for the doing of work which was illegal, and that, having so involved himself in an illegality, he cannot now come to the court and make any claim in respect of any professional services which he rendered to the defendant. The present case, however, seems to me to be of a different character. In the first place, I have considerable doubt whether the point was ever taken in the court below, and I have no doubt that it is not taken in the notice of appeal. It certainly was not pleaded. Those are matters which might be cured, and if there was an obvious illegality it might be the duty of the court to take the point in any case, but it is noted here that the charge which the plaintiff has made is limited to the percentage charges in relation only to such a sum as was properly covered by the licence. It is true that he may have issued certificates for other work, but there is no evidence of the circumstances in which that additional work was done, save only the statement of the plaintiff himself that the defendant ordered this additional work. Even if this matter were open on the pleadings and had been taken in the notice of appeal or otherwise, I am of opinion that it could not avail the defendant, having regard to the fact that the plaintiff has put on his claim a limitation to a professional charge relating exclusively to so much of the work identified in terms of cost as was covered by the licence. The result is that I think the judge correctly concluded this matter.

On the facts in this case, there being no evidence with regard to the circumstances in which the excess came to be put in hand, I think that is a correct and concise summary of the situation. I think the plaintiff was entitled to recover his professional charges, and the defendant had no just or lawful excuse for declining to pay them. I think the appeal ought to be dismissed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree that this appeal should fail on both the grounds stated by SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R. I may add that the construction placed by my Lord on reg. 56A (4)—the construction which excludes from the application of the regulation to such matters as professional fees paid to an architect or surveyor employed by a building owner—finds some support in the form of the application for a licence provided by the Ministry of Works and in the form of the licence itself. The application contains para. 4 which says: "Full description of work for which licence is required (attach specification if available)", and that is answered: "As per attached specification". The specification itself contains no reference at all to any surveyor's fees payable by the building owner. The next relevant paragraph in the application is para. 7: "Estimated cost of proposed work (include value of all materials new or second-hand) and labour", and that is answered "£535". The direction in para. 7 of the application thus, on the face of it, is not designed to elicit from the applicant anything more than the cost of the proposed work, including the value of all materials, new or second-hand, and labour. If it had been intended that the figure inserted in answer to para. 7 was to provide something for an architect's or a surveyor's fees payable by the building owner, I think it would inevitably have been necessary to include a reference to those matters in the form. As it is, I think the £535 was a figure put forward as the cost of the matters mentioned in para. 7 and nothing else. As to the licence, this was expressed to be granted to carry out the work mentioned at a total cost not exceeding £525 in accordance with the application dated Dec. 1, 1948, and specification and drawing submitted therewith. The authorised cost was £525 as compared with a sum of £535 asked for in the application, but it is plain, so far as the documents are concerned, that the licence purported to authorise the £525 as representing the estimated cost of the proposed work, including the value of all materials, new or second-hand, and labour, but not including any such matter as any fees which the building owner might pay to an architect or to a surveyor. I agree that the appeal fails.

HODSON, L.J.: The authorities to which our attention has been drawn, namely, Brightman & Co. v. Tate (3), Dennis & Co., Ltd. v. Munn (1), and Jamieson v. Watt's Trustee (2), indicate that, in so far as the licence is not exceeded, the contract may be legal. At the date of the issue of the plaint it appears that the sum of £525 had not been exceeded, and there was room for the plaintiff's claim of £48 10s. to be met before the total of £525 was reached. In those circumstances, there is an answer to the defendant's case. If that conclusion is wrong, it is necessary to consider the construction of reg. 56A (4) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939. Counsel for the defendant argued that the words "regard shall be had to the value of any goods or services used for the purposes thereof" (that is, the cost of a building operation) must be taken to cover the professional services of a surveyor. Taken in isolation, I think there is force in that argument, but when the whole of the regulation is read, particularly sub-para. (1), which deals with the execution of the operation, sub-para. (2), which refers to the carrying out of the work or maintenance work on a building, and sub-para. (6), which draws a distinction between the work of architects or other persons employed in an advisory capacity and persons who actually execute the operation, it seems to me that the contention of the plaintiff is right. Regulation 56A (4) is not apt to bring into the range of control some new type of work, and the object is to extend the control of the total cost of the operation to work done in the operation concerned, and in that connection the value of the goods and services used has to be regarded. I agree that the appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Pritchard, Englefield & Co., agents for M. J. Canter & Co., Liverpool (for the defendant); Woodcock, Ryland & Co., agents for Grundy & Cartwright, Manchester (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GOLDER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. GREAT BOULDER PROPRIETARY GOLD MINES, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Donovan, J., sitting as an additional judge of the Division), January 14, 15, 1952.]

Income Tax—Deduction against profits—Sum paid to settle action for fraud in conduct of trade—Fraud not proved or admitted—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (a).

Actions were begun against the taxpayers, a company carrying on the business of company promotion, for damages for fraud in relation to prospectuses issued by companies which they had promoted and for compensation under the Companies Act, 1929. The company did not admit the truth of the allegations, but, having in mind the heavy costs which would be payable even if they defended the actions successfully and the damages as well as additional costs which would be payable if they lost, they settled the claims for a payment of £25,000, having incurred £2,500 in legal costs. The company having sought to deduct both those sums in computing their profits for assessment to income tax,

HELD: the fraud of the company not having been either admitted or proved, it could not be said that the payment in settlement of the action and the payment of the costs were in the nature of payments in respect of damages for fraud; they were payments to avoid serious liability in costs or damages by reason of a claim arising out of the company's trade as company promoters; and evidence of those facts was sufficient to justify a finding by the Special Commissioners that both the sum paid in settlement and the costs incidental thereto were disbursements made wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade within the meaning of r. 3 (a) of Cases I and II of sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918, and so were deductible in computing the company's profits for income tax purposes.

Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Von Glehn ([1920] 2 K.B. 553), distinguished.

AS TO DISBURSEMENTS OR EXPENSES WHOLLY OR EXCLUSIVELY LAID OUT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 152-156, paras. 312-320; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 42-45, Nos. 215-226.

Cases referred to:

(1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Von Glehn, [1920] 2 K.B. 553; 89 L.J.K.B. 590; 123 L.T. 338; 12 Tax Cas. 232; 28 Digest 46, 236.

(2) Thomson (Archibald), Black & Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, 1919 S.C. 289; 56 Sc.L.R. 185; 7 Tax Cas. 158; 28 Digest 45, o.

CASE STATED by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

Before the Special Commissioners the taxpayers, Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines, Ltd., contended that payments made by them to settle actions for damages for fraud and compensation under the Companies Act, 1929, and the payment of legal costs incidental thereto, were either money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of its trade of company promotion, within r. 3 (a) of Cases I and II of sched. D, or a loss arising out of the trade, within r. 3 (e). The Crown contended that the taxpayers were not engaged in any trade of company promotion, or that, if they were so engaged, the moneys were neither expended wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade nor were a loss arising out of the trade. Evidence was given that the taxpayers had been assessed to tax on profits from the promotion of two of the three companies with which the actions were concerned, and the Special Commissioners found that they were engaged in the trade of company promoting and that the money was wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade. On appeal the Crown abandoned its contention that the taxpayers were not engaged in the trade of company promotion.

Heyworth Talbot, K.C., and Sir Reginald Hills for the Crown.
F. N. Bucher for the taxpayers.

DONOVAN, J.: In April, 1934, the taxpayers sold to a newly formed English company, known as Southern Cross Gold Development, Ltd., shares in a Western Australian gold mining company and also a gold mining reservation in Western Australia, both of which assets the taxpayers had recently bought from another concern known as Australian Machinery and Investment, Ltd.—or A.M.I. for short. On this transaction of purchase and re-sale the taxpayers made a profit of £10,000 on which they paid income tax as being a trading profit. In July, 1934, the taxpayers sold to another newly formed English company, known as Murchison Gold Development Co., Ltd., shares in another Western Australian gold mining company, which it had likewise recently bought from A.M.I. On this transaction of purchase and re-sale the taxpayers made a profit of £17,500 and paid income tax on this also as being a trading profit. In July, 1935, the taxpayers sold the investments which it held in certain gold mining concerns to another English company, also newly formed and known as the Great Boulder Mining and Finance, Ltd. These investments included shares in Southern Cross Development, Ltd., and Murchison Gold Development, Ltd., and options to take further shares in those companies, all of which formed part of the purchase consideration moving to the taxpayers when they sold assets to those two companies in 1934, as I have already described. On the transaction of sale completed with the Great Boulder Mining and Finance Company in July, 1935, it does not appear, says the Case Stated, that the taxpayers made any profit.

The taxpayers promoted the first two of the aforesaid three companies and took part in the promotion of the third. The circumstances of these promotions, in particular the contents of the prospectuses, were such as to lead to serious allegations being made against the taxpayers and others and to a legal action, the purpose of which was to recover damages from the taxpayers among others. In a word, it was alleged that the taxpayers, as promoters, or one of the promoters, of the three companies in question, had been guilty of deceit and fraud. The action was at the instance, among others, of persons who had subscribed for shares in the three newly formed companies, Southern Cross, Murchison, and Great Boulder Mining and Finance, on the faith of the respective prospectuses. They alleged that those prospectuses were deliberately misleading. There was also a claim for compensation for breach of statutory duty by the taxpayers under the Companies Act, 1949. The taxpayers, who were merely one of a number of defendants to the action, took legal advice and were told that it would be wise, if possible, to settle. The taxpayers took that advice, and in 1945 they paid £25,000 to settle. In addition, they had to disburse some £2,500 in costs. The question now is whether the taxpayers are entitled to deduct these disbursements when computing their profits for income tax purposes, the year affected being the fiscal year 1945-46 or 1946-47. The Special Commissioners have answered this question in the affirmative, and against that decision the Crown now appeals.

The Special Commissioners reached their conclusion in favour of the taxpayers in this way. They found, first of all, that the transactions whereby the taxpayers promoted or assisted in promoting the three companies, Southern Cross, Murchison, and Great Boulder Mining and Finance, were, contrary to the contention of the Crown, trading transactions. Their words are these:

"... We have come to the conclusion, on considering all the facts, that they were promotions forming part of the taxpayers' trade, and that the profits therefrom fell to be included—as they were in fact included—in the computation of the taxpayers' liability under Case I of sched. D."

When the Special Commissioners speak of profits from promotions they are obviously referring to the profits which arose when the taxpayers sold assets they had recently acquired to Southern Cross and to Murchison. The commissioners then went on to find that the £25,000 and the attendant legal costs were moneys wholly and exclusively expended for the purposes of the trade and so were deductible in computing the taxpayers' profits for income tax purposes. The commissioners do not specifically identify the purposes for which these payments were made. The decision that the taxpayers were engaged in the promotion of other companies as a trade, and that the profits of £10,000 and £17,500 were profits of that trade, is not now contested, but it is argued that the taxpayers are not entitled to deduct the £25,000 and attendant legal costs on the ground that those sums were not moneys wholly and exclusively expended for the purposes of the trade in question, as is required by r. 3 of Cases I and II of sched. D.

The first ground of this argument is that the £25,000 was really damages paid by the company for fraud and deceit on its own part or was akin to such damages, and that it is no part of its trading to be fraudulent and deceitful. If it is fraudulent and deceitful, then the penalty it pays by way of damages cannot be deducted as a trading expense any more than could the penalty in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Von Glehn (1). In that case the penalty was incurred through trading with the enemy. The answer to this argument is that the £25,000 was not damages for deceit or fraud, and I cannot say it is akin to such damages without ignoring these circumstances:—(i) that the allegations against the taxpayers, although serious and weighty, were never admitted or proved, and (ii) that in express terms the £25,000 was paid in return for an undertaking on the part of the plaintiffs not to sue or continue to sue the taxpayers. It is not possible in these circumstances to assimilate the £25,000 to the penalty paid by Von Glehn. The payment of the £25,000 in no way proved the alleged guilt of the taxpayers, which must remain an undetermined question. It was not a penalty for some proved infraction of the law. One legal adviser of the taxpayers, indeed, took the view that the allegations of fraud against them would be unlikely to succeed. For the taxpayers it was argued that, even were the £25,000 damages or akin to damages for fraud and deceit, they would still be entitled to deduct that sum in computing their taxable profits, but as this question, in my view, does not arise, I say nothing about it.

I see no difficulty in the case. The question whether a sum is or is not wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade is a question of fact, and, if there were evidence to support the commissioners' finding, I cannot interfere.

Here they had the following evidence. A trade of company promotion was carried on and profits earned by the sale of assets to the company which had been promoted. There was no evidence establishing that such a trade had been abandoned. Arising out of that trade a claim for damages was made against the company which would seriously affect its reputation as a company promoter if the claim succeeded. The company settled with its adversaries for reasons thus described by a director of the company:

A "In seeking a settlement, the board had had in mind the very large and serious liability in costs with which the company would be faced, even if it won the actions, and in costs plus damages, if it lost. Those had been the main considerations. It was a question of saving money, and they had thought it cheaper to settle for £25,000 than to run a risk."

B With that evidence before them the commissioners held that the £25,000 and the attendant costs were disbursements made wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade. I cannot say they were bound in law to hold the other way, and I, therefore, am unable to sustain the Crown's appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

C Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown); Linklaters & Paines (for the company).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

D Re HOWELL (deceased). DRURY v. FLETCHER AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), January 24, 1952.]

Estate Duty—Incidence—Real property settled by will—Direction that "all devises . . . shall be enjoyed free of death duties"—Payment out of property in respect of which charged.

E By her will a testatrix inter alia gave a freehold dwelling-house to her trustees on trust to pay the income arising therefrom to her niece A., and after her death in trust for A.'s son, B., absolutely. She directed "that all legacies and bequests both pecuniary and specific and all devises given by this my will or any codicil hereto (except the gift of residue) shall be enjoyed free of death duties." She gave all the residue of her estate to her trustees "in trust (after paying my debts funeral and testamentary expenses and death duties) for my nieces in equal shares absolutely." On the question of the incidence of the estate duty payable on the death of A.,

F G H Held: partly as a matter of convenience, the court tended to find that future duties were not payable out of the residuary estate unless there was in the will a clear indication to the contrary; in the present case the testatrix had not indicated in unmistakable terms that the distribution of her residuary estate was to be deferred in order to provide for the future estate duty; and, therefore, that duty would be payable out of the property in respect of which it was charged.

Re Laidlaw ([1930] 2 Ch. 392) and Re Shepherd ([1948] 2 All E.R. 932), applied.

Re Stoddart ([1916] 2 Ch. 444), not applied.

AS TO "FREE OF DUTY" PROVISIONS IN WILLS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, p. 299, para. 312; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 35-38, Nos. 219-243.

Cases referred to:

(1) Re Stoddart, [1916] 2 Ch. 444; 86 L.J.Ch. 29; 115 L.T. 540; 21 Digest 37, 232.

- (2) Re Palmer, [1916] 2 Ch. 391; 85 L.J.Ch. 577; 115 L.T. 57; 21 Digest 35, 220.
- (3) Re Parker, (1917), 86 L.J.Ch. 766; 117 L.T. 422; 21 Digest 37, 233.
- (4) Re D'Oyly, [1917] 1 Ch. 556; 86 L.J.Ch. 373; 116 L.T. 442; 21 Digest 35, 225.
- (5) Re Wedgwood, [1921] 1 Ch. 601; 90 L.J.Ch. 322; 125 L.T. 146; 21 Digest 36, 226.
- (6) Re Laidlaw, [1930] 2 Ch. 392; 99 L.J.Ch. 463; 143 L.T. 761; Digest Supp.
- (7) Re Shepherd, [1948] 2 All E.R. 932; [1949] Ch. 116; [1949] L.J.R. 205; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the direction contained in the will of the deceased that "all legacies and bequests both pecuniary and specific and all devises given by this my will or any codicil hereto (except the gift of residue) shall be enjoyed free of death duties" applied to exonerate settled real property from the burden of the estate duty payable in connection with the death of the life tenant.

J. H. A. Sparrow for the plaintiff, the surviving trustee.

A. F. M. Berkeley for the first to the eighth defendants, remaindermen under the settled devises.

Peter Foster for the ninth to the fourteenth defendants, residuary legatees.

VAISEY, J.: This summons raises the question whether a direction for the discharge of death duties applies exclusively to those duties payable on the death of the testatrix or whether it applies to future claims in respect of duties arising at a later period under the dispositions of her will.

The testatrix, Mrs. Hannah Maria Howell, made her will on Apr. 6, 1946. Among other dispositions she gave a freehold house known as Tobias House, Clacton-on-Sea, to her trustees on trust to pay the income arising therefrom to a niece of hers and after the niece's death in trust for the niece's son, the defendant, Leonard Fletcher, absolutely. She gave a house, No. 64 Warwick Road, Clacton-on-Sea, to her trustees on trust to pay to another niece, Ellen Dean, or to permit her to receive, the net income derived therefrom during her life and after her death on trust for her children living at her death in certain shares therein mentioned. By another clause she gave a house called York House, Clacton-on-Sea, to her trustees on trust to pay to Leonard Fletcher, or permit him to receive, the net income thereof during his life and after his death on trust for all his children in certain shares as therein mentioned. By another clause, she gave another house, called Heathfield, Clacton-on-Sea, to her trustees on trust to pay to Mildred White, or permit her to receive, the net income thereof and after her death on trust for all the children of the said Mildred White living at her death who should attain the age of twenty-one in equal shares. By cl. 14 of the will the testatrix gave the following direction:

"I direct that all legacies and bequests both pecuniary and specific and all devises given by this my will or any codicil hereto (except the gift of residue) shall be enjoyed free of death duties."

Lastly, by cl. 15, she gives all the residue of her estate to her trustees

"in trust (after paying my debts funeral and testamentary expenses and death duties) for my nieces in equal shares absolutely."

The testatrix died on July 27, 1946, and her will was proved on Dec. 4, 1946, in the Ipswich District Probate Registry. Of the two trustees whom she named in her will one died shortly after the testatrix, and this summons is issued by the other trustee asking the question which I have adumbrated. He tells me that all the testatrix' debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, except future duties not yet payable, as well as legacies, have long since been paid and satisfied. The question has arisen, or will arise, as to all the dispositions to which I have called attention and obviously the same considerations apply to each one of them. Further duty will be payable on the deaths of the life tenants, and the surviving executor is in doubt whether he ought to make provision for the payment of those future duties, or whether, having discharged the duties immediately payable, he will be in order in distributing what remains among the residuary legatees.

A This type of question has engaged the attention of the courts in a long series of cases. Those material are five in number and I will mention them in chronological order. In Re Stoddart (1) SARGANT, J., had to deal with a will which contained this direction:

B "I direct all the legacies (whether settled or otherwise) and the annuities hereinbefore bequeathed to be paid and enjoyed free of all death duties."

The real and personal estate was given in that case to the trustees on trust for sale and conversion and out of the proceeds to pay or provide, among other things, "for the legacies . . . and the duties thereon" and to invest the residue in trust for certain charities. It was held, following Re Palmer (2), that the

C words of the will threw prospective claims on the residue in relief of the settled legacies. SARGANT, J. ([1916] 2 Ch. 449) calls special attention to the reference to the enjoyment of the legacies free of duty as indicating that the testator must have desired that the gift should be, as he said, "entirely net", and the learned judge pointed out that it would be very difficult for the testator in that case to have used more comprehensive words than those found in the will. There
D the residue was given to charities, and, I think, it is not unimportant to observe that the fact that the funds were given to charities which were permanently established would have involved that the property would almost certainly have remained in existence so that recourse could be had to it without difficulty for the purpose of raising or providing for the future estate duty.

Re Parker (3) is important chiefly because of the observations of BANKES, E L.J. Referring to Re Stoddart (1), he says (117 L.T. 425) that what is to be considered is:

"the proper construction to be placed upon the language which the testator has used. He used, as it seems to me, expressions which make his intention perfectly clear. I think the intention, if I may borrow the language of SARGANT, J., in Re Stoddart (1) ([1916] 2 Ch. 449), was this: He clearly
F intended that the pecuniary legacies settled on his relations should be enjoyed by them absolutely and entirely, and that would have been the effect of the provision for payment of settlement estate duty only it unfortunately happened that there was a change in the law. That particular
G duty was abolished, and a duty was established which would lead in this particular case, and in many other cases in which wills have been similarly expressed unless they have been altered to meet the change of circumstances, to difficulties."

Having expressed approval of the view stated by SARGANT, J., in Re Stoddart (1), BANKES, L.J., in Re Parker (3) adopted a similar view, and it was held that
H the declaration exempting from duties operated so as to include and make payable out of the testator's residuary estate all legacy, estate, and other duties whatsoever thereafter arising by virtue of the limitations contained in the will by way of settlement of each of the four funds as well as all such duties as became payable on the testator's death. The reasoning of SARGANT, J., in Re Stoddart (1) was preferred by BANKES, L.J., to the reasoning of NEVILLE, J., in Re D'Oyly (4).

Re Wedgwood (5) marked a very important stage in this long-drawn-out series of decisions. There it was held by LORD STERNDALÉ, M.R., and WARRINGTON,

L.J., that future legacy duty would be payable out of the ultimate residue of the testatrix' estate, but that the estate duty "would be payable out of the corpus of the settled legacy." YOUNGER, L.J., dissented. LORD STERNDALE, M.R., points out ([1921] 1 Ch. 615):

"Future duties not chargeable by reason of the death of the testator may be charged upon the residue to the exoneration of particular settled legacies. Whether they are so charged or not depends upon the construction of each particular will, and on the construction of this will, in my opinion, they are not so charged."

WARRINGTON, L.J., says (ibid., 620):

"Neither Re Stoddart (1) nor Re Parker (3) is, in my opinion, in conflict with this view. In the former the words were 'paid and enjoyed', this last word pointing to duties affecting the beneficial enjoyment of the legacy, whether in force at the date of payment to the legatees or not. In the latter the words were 'shall be free of legacy duty, succession duty, settlement estate duty and all other death duties.' Now in that case the will was after the Finance Act, 1914, and, if the direction did not include the estate duty payable by reason of the provisions of that Act, there would be no 'other estate duty' in respect of a settled legacy except the legacy duty already specially mentioned. Moreover, there was no reference to 'payment' sufficient to suggest the time of payment as that at which the class of duties referred to was to be ascertained."

In Re Laidlaw (6) EVE, J., came to the conclusion that the direction did not extend to future duties, but was confined to duties payable at the testator's death. That depended on a rather curious circumstance in that case. The words of the direction there were that all legacies and annuities should be "satisfied paid and enjoyed free of death duties." Then there was a direction which contained certain provisions which depended on the amount of the testator's residuary estate undisposed of at the time of his death. EVE, J., found that that was an indication "that the testator must have intended and contemplated that the value of his residuary estate would be exactly ascertained within a reasonable time" probably within the executor's year, and the direction with regard to estate duty, therefore,

"applied only to such duty as would become payable on the death of the testator himself and not to any duty which might accrue due in the future by reason of the dispositions of the will."

So, on that ground the learned judge applied Re Wedgwood (5) and distinguished Re Stoddart (1).

The point came before HARMAN, J., in Re Shepherd (7) where there was a direction that "all the before-mentioned legacies and specific and pecuniary bequests whether settled or otherwise and all the said annuities whensoever payable shall be paid free of all legacy and other death duties (if any) and that all such duties shall be paid out of my residuary estate."

There was also a direction that the testator's trustees should make provision for the payment of duties on any legacies bequeathed free of duty. It was held by HARMAN, J., that there was a presumption that a testator only intended to provide for the payment of the duties arising on his own death, and to rebut it a clear intention to provide for the payment of future duties must be found.

In support of that the judgment of EVE, J., in Re Laidlaw (6) is cited. I am not quite sure that I should have put it as strongly as HARMAN, J., did as to the existence of a presumption, but I think it would be accurate to say that there is a strong tendency against coming to such a conclusion based partly on the argument of ab inconveniente. It is awkward to have to hold up the distribution of the residue, perhaps, for a number of years. Normally, when the thought of death duties crosses the mind of a testator, he thinks of the imposition which will fall on his estate at the time of his death. So that, while I should not have put it as a matter of presumption, but as a matter of strong inclination and tendency, still, I think in this case there is not enough to justify me departing from the conclusion which HARMAN, J., reached in Re Shepherd (7). In that case the testator intended the exoneration from duties to be confined to those arising on his own death. HARMAN, J., treats it as a matter of construction, and he finds that on the death of the life tenant the duty was to be paid out of the capital of the legacy and not out of the residuary estate of the testator. No question of legacy duty, I understand, arises in this case, but, however that may be, as to the future estate duty, I think this is a case where I am bound to follow Re Laidlaw (6) and Re Shepherd (7). This is pre-eminently the type of case in which there is a strong lead in the direction of the conclusion reached in Re Laidlaw (6) as against the conclusion reached in Re Stoddart (1).

I think it must be now understood that, if testators desire to provide that the distribution of their estates shall be held up to meet these future duty claims, they ought to say so in unmistakable terms. I do not find any such expression in unmistakable terms in the present will. The will provides that all the devises given thereby (except the gift of residue) "shall be enjoyed free of death duties." I agree that up to that point either view is possible, but it seems to me that the matter is governed by the words the testator uses in the disposition of his residuary estate. He first directs the duties to be paid as provided for and then says that what remains is to be held in trust for his nieces in equal shares. There is no suggestion that anything remains to be done or to be provided for by the executors or the trustee after the devises have taken effect and the first trust has come into operation. There is no suggestion in the will that any provision for future claims for duties has to be made.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Winter & Co., agents for Drury & Powis, Clacton-on-Sea (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BOTTOMLEY v. HARRISON.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Byrne and Parker, JJ.), January 24, 1952.]

Public Health—Statutory nuisance—Abatement notice—"Owner"—Person "receiving the rackrent . . . as agent"—Servant of owner receiving cheques for rent and paying them into owner's account—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 93, s. 343 (1).

During the absence abroad of the owner of premises his secretary received cheques, made payable to the owner, for the rent of the premises, and paid them into the owner's banking account. The local authority served an abatement notice under s. 93 of the Public Health Act, 1936, on the secretary as "owner" within the meaning of s. 343 (1) of that Act.

HELD: in the circumstances the secretary was not receiving the rent as agent or trustee for the owner within s. 343 (1), and, therefore, the abatement notice could not properly be served on her.

Per LORD GODDARD, C.J.: If the money had been paid into the secretary's account, or if it could be proved there was some arrangement under which, during the owner's absence, she (the secretary) had the handling of the money and not merely the cheque, it might have been different, but the only evidence here is that the tenant paid her rent to the owner.

FOR THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT, 1936, s. 343 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 19, p. 495.

CASE STATED by Morecambe and Heysham justices.

On July 20, 1951, at a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Morecambe and Heysham, a complaint was preferred by the appellant, the deputy town clerk of the borough, under s. 94 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1936, alleging that the respondent, being a person by whose sufferance a statutory nuisance arising from the disrepair of premises continued, had failed to comply with an abatement notice relating thereto.

A statutory notice to abate the nuisance was served on the respondent because the owner of the property, one Varley, had left the country for a business trip to South Africa. The tenant of the property paid the rent by cheque in favour of Mr. Varley to the respondent who paid the cheque into Mr. Varley's banking account. The receipts in the rent-book bore the initials of the respondent, and on one occasion the respondent called at the house to inspect the defects.

On the part of the appellant it was contended that the respondent was the "owner" within the meaning of s. 343 (1) of the Act of 1936, because she was a person receiving the rent of the property and acting as agent of the owner. For the respondent it was contended that (i) she was not the person by whose sufferance the nuisance continued, (ii) she had never been a rent collector, (iii) she was a secretary in the office of the owner, and in the course of her duties she received the cheques for the rent of the property, made payable to Mr. Varley, and initialled the rent-book by way of receipt. The justices being of the opinion that the respondent was not the owner of the property within the meaning of s. 343 (1), dismissed the information.

Threlfall for the appellant.

Ruttle for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices for the county of Lancaster. It seems that the local authority of Morecambe and Heysham found that a dwelling-house, 18, Norton Avenue, Heysham, was in a condition which, they contended, was a nuisance. The property is occupied by a Mrs. Harmsworth and is owned by a Mr. Varley. Mr. Varley was out of England at all material times. Mrs. Harmsworth paid her rent by cheque, which she made out to Mr. Varley, and she used to get back her rent-book with some initials against it, said to be the initials of the respondent, Miss Harrison. Mrs. Harmsworth produced a letter from the respondent which reads as follows:

"Dear Madam, I am dealing with Mr. Varley's property during his absence. On examining his records I find that the amount previously paid to you for garage and water is £3 per annum. Why is this amount now altered to £3 1s. 6d.? Yours truly, per pro F. Varley, M. Harrison."

A Section 93 of the Public Health Act, 1936, provides:

B "Where a local authority are satisfied of the existence of a statutory nuisance, they shall serve a notice (hereafter in this Act referred to as 'an abatement notice') on the person by whose act, default or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues, or, if that person cannot be found, on the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, requiring him to abate the nuisance and to execute such works and take such steps as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided that—(a) where the nuisance arises from any defect of a structural character, the notice shall be served on the owner of the premises . . ."

For the purposes of this Act "owner" is defined in s. 343 (1) as follows:

C " 'Owner' means the person for the time being receiving the rackrent of the premises in connection with which the word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if those premises were let at a rackrent."

D The local authority served an abatement notice on the respondent as the owner of the premises within that definition. The only evidence that the respondent was the owner was that Mrs. Harmsworth paid her rent by cheque in favour of Mr. Varley, and the respondent received the cheque, which is a negotiable instrument, and paid it into the bank who would credit Mr. Varley with it. I cannot see that in those circumstances it can be said that the respondent received the rent as agent or trustee for Mr. Varley. She received it as a conduit pipe between Mrs. Harmsworth and Mr. Varley's account at the bank. If the money had been paid into the respondent's account, or if it could be proved there was some arrangement under which, during Mr. Varley's absence, she had the handling of the money and not merely the cheque, it might have been different, but the only evidence here is that Mrs. Harmsworth paid her rent to Mr. Varley. The fact that the respondent sent back the rent-book with her initials on it, indicating that the rent had been paid to Mr. Varley and not her, is neither here nor there. I think the justices were right in holding that there was no evidence before them on which they could hold that the respondent was the owner of the premises. For these reasons the appeal must be dismissed.

E BYRNE, J.: I agree.

G PARKER, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, agents for Roger Rose, town clerk, Morecambe and Heysham (for the appellant); Hiscott, Troughton & Page, agents for Bannister, Bates & Son, Morecambe and Heysham (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ABSON v. ABSON.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Karminski, J.), January 15, 1952.]

Justices—Husband and wife—Maintenance—Discharge of order—Adultery by wife after dissolution of marriage—Preferable jurisdiction of Divorce Court—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 7.

On Nov. 29, 1944, justices granted the wife an order for maintenance against her husband on the ground of his desertion. In September, 1948, she obtained a decree for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground of the same desertion. In February, 1951, the husband applied to the justices, under s. 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, to discharge the order of Nov. 29, 1944, on the ground that within the preceding twelve months the wife had committed adultery with one R., a married man. The justices found that the wife had had sexual intercourse with R., but doubted whether this constituted an "act of adultery" within s. 7, she at the material time having ceased to be a married woman. Treating that question as irrelevant, they discharged the order on financial grounds.

HELD: in the circumstances of the case the justices should have exercised their discretion to discharge the order on the ground that the wife should be left to seek an order for maintenance in the Divorce Court since that court was free to consider all the circumstances of the case and to assess the true bearing of every part of the wife's conduct, whereas, under s. 7 of the Act of 1895, on proof that the wife had committed an act of adultery the justices were bound forthwith to discharge the order.

Per KARMINSKI, J.: The true test whether, when the wife had intercourse with R. she committed adultery, she being then unmarried, is: Was she then dishonouring or defiling her own marriage bed or that of R? She, being a single woman, could not be dishonouring or defiling her own marriage bed, but R. was married, and, if she had intercourse with him, she was dishonouring or defiling the marriage bed of him and his wife, and so she was committing adultery. The justices having found that she had had sexual intercourse with R. it followed that they had, in effect, found that she had committed an act of adultery within s. 7.

AS TO DISCHARGE OF MAINTENANCE ORDER, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 843, para. 1345; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 565, 566, Nos. 6237-6250, and Digest Supps.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Bragg v. Bragg, [1925] P. 20; 94 L.J.P. 11; 132 L.T. 346; 27 Digest 565, 6242.
- (2) Prest v. Prest, [1949] 2 All E.R. 790; [1950] P. 63; 114 J.P. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Mezger v. Mezger, [1936] 3 All E.R. 130; [1937] P. 19; 106 L.J.P. 1; 155 L.T. 491; 100 J.P. 475; Digest Supp.
- (4) Kirk v. Kirk, [1947] 2 All E.R. 118; 177 L.T. 151; 111 J.P. 435; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Wood v. Wood, (1949) W.N. 59; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the wife against an order of justices for the city of Bradford dated Feb. 21, 1951, whereby they discharged an order, made on Nov. 29, 1944, awarding her maintenance on the ground of her husband's desertion.

J. Stirling for the wife.

The husband was not represented.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: This appeal by a wife against the decision of the Bradford city justices to discharge an order made in her favour raises an important question. On Nov. 29, 1944, the wife obtained from the justices an order against her husband on the ground of his desertion for 25s. a week for her own maintenance, and 5s. a week for that of the child of the marriage, the custody of whom they gave to the wife. There was no resumption of cohabitation, and in due course the wife was granted a decree of divorce on the ground of the same desertion, the decree being made absolute in September, 1948. From that moment, therefore, she ceased to be the wife of the respondent, but the justices' order was allowed to stand, and she continued under it to draw her money and to have custody of the child without any other order being made by the Divorce Court. On Feb. 21, 1951, the husband made an application to the Bradford justices to discharge their order on the ground that within the preceding twelve months the wife had committed an act of adultery with a man named Rayner. Any date within the twelve months manifestly was long after that on which she had ceased to be the wife of the husband, and at the very outset of the case it was suggested that the justices had no jurisdiction to discharge the order because she had ceased to be a married woman, and, therefore, the provision with regard to the forfeiture by a married woman of her order, which appears in the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 7, no longer applied. That argument, however, was rejected by this court in Bragg v. Bragg (1), and the decision in that case that, divorce notwithstanding, justices still have a discretion to exercise their functions with regard to a pre-existing order has repeatedly been approved. The matter is fairly summarised in a judgment of this court in Prest v. Prest (2). That case raised a different point—one in connexion with the resumption of cohabitation—but we there reviewed the authorities in which Bragg v. Bragg (1) had been dealt with, and I said ([1949] 2 All E.R. 794):

"The effect of the decision in Bragg v. Bragg (1) is that it is a matter of discretion whether or not, in the circumstances of any given case, [justices should] discharge, as against a wife whose marriage has subsequently been dissolved, an order made while she was the wife of the husband. This court, however, has said over and over again that that is not a discretion to be exercised arbitrarily or capriciously. It must be exercised judicially."

I then referred to Mezger v. Mezger (3), Kirk v. Kirk (4), and Wood v. Wood (5), on the facts of which this court decided expressly or impliedly that the discretion was one which could only be exercised by discharging the order under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts.

I think that the same reasoning applies to the present case. Rayner is a married man. It was argued in the court below that, as the wife had divorced her husband, she was no longer a married woman within the meaning of s. 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, and she was not, therefore, a person who could commit adultery within the meaning of that section, or, to put it another way, that "act of adultery" for the purpose of s. 7 of the Act of 1895 meant something different from an act of adultery which, for example, would be charged against her as a woman named in a divorce suit between Mrs. Rayner and her husband. Pressed to its logical conclusion, that might cut at the root of the decision in Bragg v. Bragg (1). However, counsel for the wife has reserved the right to argue that a divorced wife cannot commit adultery with a married man within the meaning of the Summary Jurisdiction Acts.

Counsel for the wife, while maintaining his right to dispute the facts elsewhere, did not, for the purposes of this appeal, contend that there was not sufficient evidence in law to entitle the justices to find as they did. If the facts do convict the wife of adultery within the meaning of s. 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, there is no more to be said about the matter, because the obligation to set aside the order is absolute. I think, however, that, without resolving the conundrum whether there are two different meanings of "adultery" for the purposes of the Divorce Court and courts of summary jurisdiction, it can be decided whether this is a proper case, within the decisions in Bragg v. Bragg (1) and the cases in which Bragg v. Bragg (1) has been followed, for the justices to exercise their discretion whether or not to keep this order alive. If the wife, having obtained a decree of divorce against her husband, had exercised her right to apply for maintenance in the Divorce Court, it would be a matter of judicial consideration whether or not in all the circumstances it was a case in which an order should be made in the first instance, or, whether, if an order had been made in the first instance, it should be cancelled or modified in any way because of the course of conduct which was alleged against her. As between the two tribunals—the Divorce Court and the court of summary jurisdiction—it seems to me that there cannot be any reasonable doubt which should be preferred, and that is the one which has a perfectly free jurisdiction to go into all the circumstances of the case and to assess deliberately the true bearing of every part of the divorced wife's conduct on the questions of maintenance and the custody of the child. I hope that, in spite of the lapse of three years, it is not too late for that tribunal to deal with the matter having regard to the fact that an order has been in existence and has been acted on in the meanwhile until this summons by the husband was served.

The justices have found that, quite apart from whether there had been the commission of any act of adultery on the part of the wife within s. 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, this was clearly a case for setting aside the order of 1944 on financial grounds. My view of the matter is that the moment this issue appeared, at the very outset of the case, the justices should have said: "This is not a case in which we should keep this order alive. Never mind what the facts are proved to be. There is a charge of adultery against one who was a married woman when the order was obtained and is now a divorced woman. That raises all the complications inherent in the line of authorities beginning with Bragg v. Bragg (1)." They should have said that this is essentially a case, within that line of authorities, in which the court should exercise its discretion to discharge the order and leave the wife to her remedies in the Divorce Court. They did not take that view, but it is a view which is open to us if we think that they did not properly exercise their discretion within the meaning of the Bragg v. Bragg (1) line of authorities. The result is the same. In my opinion, the appeal must be dismissed and the order discharged, but for the reasons I have given. The wife is left to whatever remedies she may have under the ordinary law of divorce.

KARMINSKI, J.: I agree. The justices found that sexual intercourse had taken place between the wife and Rayner. At the time this intercourse took place it was clear that the wife was no longer a married woman, but was a feme sole because in September, 1948, she had been granted by this court a decree absolute dissolving her marriage with her husband. It was argued that in those circumstances she could not be guilty of adultery within the meaning of s. 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895. I think it is useful to look at s. 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, which provides for making an adulterer a co-respondent and, by sub-s. (2), directs that when a petition for divorce is presented by a wife on the ground of adultery the court may, if it thinks fit, direct that the person with whom the husband is alleged to have committed adultery be made a respondent. Neither sub-section of that section makes it a term that the alleged adulterer should himself or herself be a married person. In my view, the true test is this. When the wife took part in an act of sexual intercourse with Rayner, was she then dishonouring or defiling her own marriage bed or that of the man with whom the intercourse took place? Clearly, so far as the wife was concerned, she could not be defiling or dishonouring her own marriage bed, because, as a single woman, she had no marriage bed and no married home, but Rayner was a married man, and, if she had sexual intercourse with him, she was committing adultery, because she was defiling or dishonouring the marriage bed of Mr. and Mrs. Rayner. The justices having found that sexual intercourse did take place, it must follow that that sexual intercourse amounted to adultery on the part of the wife.

In a case of this kind the High Court is the suitable tribunal to investigate a claim by the wife for maintenance. The fact that a wife has committed adultery is not an absolute bar to the court awarding her maintenance on the dissolution of her marriage. The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 19 (2), lays down what facts the court is to take into consideration regarding that matter, and among them is the conduct of the parties. In many cases the wife asks for maintenance although she herself has committed adultery during the marriage and for that reason has had to seek the exercise of the discretion of the court. That factor has to be taken into consideration. Similarly, it has been held that the conduct of the parties after decree must also be considered, and there is no doubt that adultery by a petitioner wife after the dissolution of her marriage is also a matter for consideration. The High Court, therefore, has the power and the duty to consider the conduct of the parties, whereas, under s. 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, once the wife has committed adultery, her order for maintenance must be discharged. In my view, this is a case where the wife should seek permission of the Divorce Court to lodge her application for maintenance although some three years have elapsed since she ought to have done so. At the time of her decree, however, she was in the enjoyment of an order under which payments were being made. All these factors will, no doubt, be taken into account by the court to which she applies for leave to make her application out of time. I agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Ward, Bowie & Co., agents for James A. Lee & Priestley, Bradford (for the wife).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

STRINGER v. STRINGER.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Karminski, J.), January 16, 17, 1952.]

Justices—Husband and wife—Maintenance—Wilful neglect to maintain—Consensual separation—No agreement as to maintenance—Liability of husband.

The husband and wife parted by mutual consent in November, 1946, and from that date the husband had not paid the wife any maintenance nor had she demanded any maintenance until July 17, 1951, when she issued a summons for wilful neglect to maintain.

HELD: proof of a consensual separation of spouses without any agreement by the parties regarding the maintenance of the wife is sufficient to rebut the common law presumption that a husband is liable to maintain his wife, and to that extent the onus is on the wife to prove liability by the husband: observation by HILL, J., in Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos ([1930] P. 68, 69) not applied; and, in the absence of any demand by the wife before she took out the summons, the justices were not justified in making a maintenance order: Tulip v. Tulip ([1951] 2 All E.R. 91) distinguished.

AS TO MAINTENANCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 838, para. 1340; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 558, 559, Nos. 6134-6150, and Digest Supps.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos, [1930] P. 55; 99 L.J.P. 1; 142 L.T. 237; 94 J.P. 39; Digest Supp.
- (2) Markovitch v. Markovitch, (1934), 151 L.T. 139; 98 J.P. 282; Digest Supp.

- (3) Richardson v. Richardson, (1942), 167 L.T. 260; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Winnan v. Winnan, [1948] 2 All E.R. 862; [1949] P. 174; [1949] L.J.R. 345; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Churchman v. Churchman, [1945] 2 All E.R. 190; [1945] P. 44; 114 L.J.P. 17; 173 L.T. 108; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Robins v. National Trust Co., [1927] A.C. 515; 96 L.J.P.C. 84; 137 L.T. 1; Digest Supp.
- (7) Baker v. Baker, (1949), 66 (pt. 1) T.L.R. 81; 2nd Digest Supp. A
- (8) Chapman v. Chapman, unreported.
- (9) Tulip v. Tulip, [1951] 2 All E.R. 91; [1951] P. 378.
- (10) Morton v. Morton, [1942] 1 All E.R. 273; 111 L.J.P. 33; 166 L.T. 164; 106 J.P. 139; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the husband against an order of Luton justices dated Oct. 1, 1951, whereby they found that he had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for his wife and awarded her 10s. a week. B

C. T. Reeve for the husband.

K. B. Campbell for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: This is a husband's appeal from an order made by the Luton justices on Oct. 1, 1951, whereby they found that he had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for his wife as from July 17, 1951, and awarded the wife 10s. a week. The wife had also charged the husband with desertion. The justices dismissed that summons. Before them the husband opposed an order on the ground that, so far from his having deserted the wife at the time of the parting, she had deserted him. The justices did not find that. They came to the conclusion that there was no desertion on the part of either spouse. The husband had left because the wife said he had better go, but he had been just as willing to part as she had been. In other words, the justices found that it was a simple case of a consensual separation, and it is. This case has been rightly fought by the husband on the basis that that finding could not be challenged. I need not read all the reasoning which the justices have set out justifying their conclusion which was: C
D
E

"While, therefore, there was no evidence of a deliberate agreement to separate, we took the view that in all the circumstances of the case there had been a separation by mutual consent, and that neither party had been guilty of desertion in law. This state of affairs, it seemed to us, did not relieve the husband of his duty to provide reasonable maintenance for his wife and we decided on the evidence that the husband had been guilty of wilful neglect in that respect." F

I think that this is an important case, because it brings to a head a point about which there is surprisingly little authority. Counsel for the wife called our attention to a passage in the judgment of HILL, J., sitting in this court with LORD MERRIVALE, P., in Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos (1), and submitted that, where there is a separation of this sort, with nothing said one way or the other about the question of maintenance, the common law liability of a husband to maintain his wife subsists unless the contrary is shown, that it is for the husband to show the contrary, and, if the matter is left in doubt and he does not maintain his wife, that there is evidence on which the court can find that he has been guilty of wilful neglect. I think it is necessary to preface the reading of this passage, by saying that in that case it was hardly necessary to lay down any proposition about where the onus of proof lay. The main issue was whether there had been a good and lawful marriage in this country according to the laws of England between a Cypriot and a Frenchwoman, and, if so, what was the effect of certain proceedings in the Cypriot court at Nicosia purporting to set aside that marriage by a decree by consent and on certain monetary terms. On an investigation of the law on that subject the court unanimously came to G the conclusion that the whole of the proceedings in the Cypriot court were worthless and that the attempt by the husband to repudiate the marriage in this country could not succeed. That was the view that LORD MERRIVALE, P., took. I doubt whether it was necessary to say much more, but HILL, J., expressed the same thing in other words, in the course of which he said ([1930] P. 68):
H

"The question is whether the husband neglected to provide maintenance.

- A / He did not in fact provide maintenance. Neglect means failure in a duty to provide maintenance, and the question is whether he was under a duty to maintain the wife. Prima facie he was. That is the common law of England, and it was for the husband to show that he was excused from that duty. A husband may show it in various ways. For instance, he may show that his wife has been guilty of adultery, neither condoned nor
 B connived at, nor condoned to by the husband, or that she had deserted him and was continuing to desert him, or that there is a subsisting binding contract performed and not repudiated by him that she should not claim maintenance otherwise than as provided by the contract, or that a court of competent jurisdiction in a proceeding between husband and wife had
 C / already determined the rights of the wife in respect of maintenance and that he had fulfilled the obligations so imposed on him."

- With regard to the last two matters, which had been put forward in that case, if there ever had been a subsisting binding contract, it certainly had not been performed and it had been repudiated, and there was no determination by a court of competent jurisdiction of the rights of the parties, for the court unanimously held that the Cypriot court had no jurisdiction to do what it did. Finally, and D in relation to the whole of the group of examples, HILL, J., said (ibid., 69):

"But the onus is on the husband to prove the excuse."

- From that it is sought to deduce, with regard to a matter which was not mentioned by HILL, J., that, if there is a mere agreement to separate and nothing is said about maintenance, it is for the husband to prove affirmatively that there
 E was a positive agreement that there should be no maintenance and otherwise his common law liability subsists. We have to consider whether that is sound.

- Consciously or unconsciously the justices applied that passage to this case—very likely consciously for it is reasonably clear that they framed their decision either on reading this passage or on some reference to it in a text-book, for their finding is stated very much on those lines. It is right to say that the passage
 F has been cited with approval more than once. I am not going through all the various cases, but I think that on investigation it will appear that it has been cited as a very concise and accurate statement of some of the instances, as HILL, J., himself called them, in which a husband has a complete answer to a demand for maintenance. It was, for example, referred to as being a sufficient guidance for this court by a court composed of BATESON, J., and LANGTON, J., in G Markovitch v. Markovitch (2). It was cited by this court, composed of BUCKNILL, J., and HENN COLLINS, J., in Richardson v. Richardson (3) as an answer to a claim for maintenance on the part of a wife who was in a state of desertion. BUCKNILL, L.J., in Winnan v. Winnan (4), referred to it in his judgment, the question being whether there was any difference between active desertion and constructive desertion for the purposes of applying the proposition stated by H HILL, J. In the course of that judgment ([1948] 2 All E.R. 865), BUCKNILL, L.J., also cited his decision in Richardson v. Richardson (3). I think it may fairly be said that it was used in these cases, without exception, for the purpose of supporting the proposition that these various instances were all absolute defences to a claim for maintenance on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain, and that the court was not thinking in particular whether in any given instance the burden of proof lay on the one side or the other. If the fact was established, wherever the burden of proof lay, it was decisive. At any rate, I think it is open to us to say that, unimpeachable as the passage itself is, the one sentence: "But the onus is on the husband to prove the excuse", was not necessary to the decision of that case. It is just as well to bear in mind that the question where the onus of proof lies may be of very minor importance, for it will be recalled that in Churchman v. Churchman (5), in giving the judgment of the Court of Appeal, I said ([1945] 2 All E.R. 195), even with regard to the deliberate change of wording effected by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, in s. 178 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925: A

"After all, as DU PARCQ, L.J., pointed out during the argument, the incidence of the burden of proof as a determining factor of the whole case is only of importance if the tribunal finds the evidence, pro and con, so evenly balanced that it can come to no definite conclusion. Then the onus will determine the matter. In Robins v. National Trust Co. (6) VISCOUNT DUNEDIN said ([1927] A.C. 520): 'But if the tribunal after hearing and weighing the evidence comes to a determinate conclusion the onus has nothing to do with it and need not be further considered'." B

That brings me to consider this question in relation to a particular instance which was not one of those mentioned by HILL, J., in Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos (1), and that is the instance of a consensual separation where nothing is said, one way or the other, about maintenance. About that, this court made a pronouncement in Baker v. Baker (7) where I said: C

"There is no law involved in this case; it is merely an application of the principle that, if a wife is living separate and apart from her husband, it is not enough for her to give evidence that her husband had money and that she needed maintenance. The question is: What was the nature of the parting? If the wife can prove desertion, she is, of course, entitled to a maintenance order on that ground. If the separation was consensual, then, if she can prove—and Mr. Crispin accepted that the onus was on the wife—that this was on the basis, expressed or implied, that the husband undertook to be responsible for her maintenance, she is entitled either to the agreed amount (if there was an agreed amount) or to a reasonable amount under the section, although she is living apart from her husband. But unless she can show, where the separation was consensual, that the husband had accepted the liability, expressed or implied, to maintain her, she has no case at all." D

I need not read the rest of the judgment, which merely dealt with the application of that principle to the facts of the case, but I should like to say that PEARCE, J., agreed with what had been said. He said (ibid.): E

"In this case desertion has been negatived, and the wife's evidence makes it clear that there was here a separation by consent. If by her evidence she could establish that there was expressed or implied in that separation a continuing liability on the husband's part to support her, this order could stand, but her evidence has not done this, and therefore, in my opinion, there has not been wilful neglect to maintain, and the appeal should be allowed." F

There is no doubt that it does appear, subject to the qualification I have already mentioned as to the importance or unimportance of the onus of proof, that there the burden is placed differently—at any rate in this particular class of case—from the way in which it is stated in Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos (1). G

In the case now before us five years elapsed after the parting in the course of which, until this summons was served on the husband, he received, neither by word of mouth nor by writing, at the time of the parting or at any subsequent time, any request from his wife for maintenance. She had kept herself, and made it clear that she meant to go on keeping herself. She had done nothing to disabuse her husband's mind of the idea that that was a state of things with which she was content until she issued this summons asserting that he had been guilty of H wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance. I ask myself, wherever the onus may be, what is the inference which should be drawn here from that, and in the circumstances of this case I can only say that the proper inference is that during the time between November, 1946, and the date on which this summons was issued this was a consensual separation without any sort of stipulation that the husband should provide maintenance for the wife, and I do not think it is of any importance to pursue further the question of the onus of proof. In justice to this court, however, I ought to point out that the Court of Appeal have plainly accepted our statement of the matter as correct. I do not suggest that Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos (1) was brought to their notice or that it was suggested that there was any importance in the issue on whom lay the onus, but in Chapman v. Chapman (8), an appeal from a decision of this court consisting of WALLINGTON, J., sitting with me, heard by ASQUITH, L.J., BIRKETT, L.J., and HARMAN, J., the Court of Appeal gave approval to the passage to which I have just referred. I do not ignore the point that in one sense the approval may be said to be obiter, because the case was one in which, contrary to the finding of the justices, we had taken the view that the husband had, in effect, (a) consented to a separation, and (b) consented in circumstances which implied an undertaking to maintain his wife. The Court of Appeal said we were wrong on the point of fact in coming to the conclusion that there had been a consensual separation, and in that sense the second point did not arise, though they also expressed the opinion, which followed almost necessarily from what they had already said about the nature of the parting, that, even if it could be said to be consensual, it certainly was not consensual on the basis that the husband undertook the obligation to maintain his wife. The facts of the case are of no importance whatever. What is of importance is that in two passages in the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J., which was concurred in by HARMAN, J., he first of all stated the proposition that summonses for desertion and wilful neglect to maintain do not necessarily stand or fall together and then continued:

“Often two such summonses do so, and if the wife fails on desertion she automatically fails on wilful neglect to maintain, but that is not necessarily or inevitably so. Sometimes, where, for instance the evidence is that the separation was consensual she may fail on desertion and win on maintenance; in cases, that is, where the consensus impliedly includes a term that the wife should be entitled to some support from the husband.”

He concludes his judgment with this passage:

“In those circumstances [i.e., of that case], with great respect, I am of opinion that the inference of consensus cannot be supported; and, if it cannot, then there can be no possible claim to maintenance. There is, indeed, authority which has been cited to us, a case called Baker v. Baker (7) . . . which decides very clearly that, even where a separation is admittedly consensual, it has to be shown either that there was an expressed agreement to pay maintenance or that such an agreement must be implied from the circumstances. In this case I think that the conclusion that there was a consensus at all cannot be supported, and therefore the other point does not really arise.”

As I have already indicated, in the opening passage of his judgment, ASQUITH, L.J., accepted the statement of principle the affirmation of which he very briefly repeated in the passage I have just read. BIRKETT, L.J., said:

“I agree with what my Lord has said, and I do not think for my own part that, on the evidence before the justices and the evidence before the Divisional Court, this inference of consensus can really be supported; but I would just like to add a final word: Assuming for the moment that there had been, in the circumstances of this case, a consensual separation I do not think it by any means follows that an inference is to be drawn that it was upon the basis that attached to it should be an undertaking to provide maintenance. I think, on the contrary, almost everything in the case would appear to be against it . . . It does not look, as I say, upon the face of it, that any such inference could be drawn, even if there had been anything in the nature of an agreement to separate, that it should be upon the terms that he would provide maintenance."

I am prepared, supported and reinforced by that authority, to stand by what we said in Baker v. Baker (7). But, as I have said already, I do so with the feeling that in the present case it does not matter in the least which way the onus is, because on the facts, in my opinion, there is only one inference that can be drawn. The only way in which the case can be put is to say that the common law liability raises a presumption which must be rebutted, but what is necessary to rebut it? It does not advance the argument any further because, plainly, where there is an agreement to separate, with a specific agreement, whether for a nominal or a substantial payment, that agreement is substituted for the presumption. Why is it necessary, therefore, to say that there must be an express agreement before there can be any inference that there is to be no maintenance, if all the facts point to an inference that that must be the condition on which the parties separated? However, if the question of onus arises, I think that I prefer, and, indeed, I am now bound to prefer, the judgment of this court in Baker v. Baker (7), with the meed of approval which has been accorded to it in the Court of Appeal, to the inference to be drawn from one sentence in an otherwise unimpeachable passage in the judgment of HILL, J., in Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos (1).

That brings me to the only other point. It is said that, while what I have said may well be so, nevertheless, by taking out this summons the wife has re-opened the whole matter and it is still open to the court to say that an order should be made on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain. In support of that Tulip v. Tulip (9) was cited. All that the Court of Appeal there decided was, on the basis of the decision of this court in Morton v. Morton (10), that the existence of a separation agreement was not a bar to the jurisdiction of the justices, however high was the evidential value of the agreement itself, of its punctual performance, and so on, in guiding the justices in the exercise of their jurisdiction. In remitting the case for a decision on the issue whether the husband had been guilty of wilful neglect to maintain, considerable emphasis was laid on the fact that before any proceedings were taken the wife had put forward by letter a reasoned claim for re-consideration of the amount payable to her under the agreement which there existed, on the ground that circumstances, not only financial, but also physical, had changed very much for the worse for her, and financially very much in favour of the husband. It was not a case in which it was held that, without any warning, a man could be charged with wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance when, without any complaint before the issue of the summons, he had done everything that he was bound to do under the terms of the separation. I can see nothing here which justifies the wife, at the time when she issued this summons, in asserting that her husband had been guilty of this offence. It does not follow that the husband will be able to take up that position indefinitely. It is not for us to lay down what steps it may be appropriate for the wife to take to put herself in a position to claim maintenance, but it must be acknowledged that it is easier for her to do so in a case like this where there was no formal agreement to live separate and apart and no particular terms were specified as to the conditions on which they were to live apart. The result is that, in my opinion, on the facts as they stood when the justices decided this case, there was no ground for making this order. The appeal will, therefore, be allowed and the order set aside.

KARMINSKI, J.: I agree. The justices found as a fact that there had been a separation by mutual consent, and that neither party had, therefore, been guilty of desertion. With that finding of fact there has been no quarrel, and it is clearly supported by the evidence, but the justices also said:

A "This state of affairs, it seemed to us, did not relieve the husband of his duty to provide reasonable maintenance for his wife and we decided on the evidence that the husband had been guilty of wilful neglect in that respect."

It is possible that this paragraph is founded on a misapprehension as to the matter set out in STONE'S JUSTICES' MANUAL, 83rd ed., pp. 1092 to 1093. The only matter about which I have found any difficulty arises from some observations to which my Lord has referred in the judgment of HILL, J., in Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos (1), where he gave a number of examples whereby a husband was excused from his common law duty to maintain his wife. I do not think for a moment that HILL, J., meant that list of instances to be conclusive. He was merely exemplifying his proposition, because, after the words to which my Lord has referred—"But the onus is on the husband to prove the excuse"—he set out what in that case the particular excuses were supposed to be—namely

C that the husband was excused (i) by a decree of a court in Nicosia, and (ii) by an agreement between the spouses embodied in the decree of that court. HILL, J., was not considering what we have to consider here—a case where the spouses have separated by mutual consent and there has been no desertion on either side. On a careful consideration of the decision in Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos (1) together with the more recent decision by this court, in Baker v. Baker (7) I

D can find no inconsistency. The principle as set out in Baker v. Baker (7) is simply that where the separation is consensual the wife must show that the husband had accepted the liability, expressed or implied, to maintain her—otherwise she has no case to put forward on neglect to maintain. That decision, as my Lord pointed out, has recently been approved by the Court of Appeal. I find that on the facts in the present case before the justices the wife did not prove any agreement,

E expressed or implied, that her husband would maintain her, and for that reason I agree that this appeal succeeds.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard, agents for Cooke & Sons, Luton (for the husband); Machin & Co., Luton (for the wife).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

QUALITY DAIRIES (YORK), LTD. v. PEDLEY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Byrne and Parker, JJ.), January 22, 29, 1952.]

Food and Drugs—Milk—Unclean container—Milk bottled and delivered to customer by agent of distributor—Liability of distributor—Milk and Dairies Regulations, 1949 (S.I., 1949, No. 1588), reg. 26 (1).

The appellants were a company of milk retailers and "distributors" within the meaning of the Milk and Dairies Regulations, 1949. By a contract between them and Y.P. & Co., wholesale dairymen, Y.P. & Co. agreed to supply, bottle, and deliver milk to certain of the appellants' customers. Under this arrangement at no time did the appellants handle the milk or the bottles into which it was put. On Sept. 11, 1950, Y.P. & Co. delivered a bottle of milk to one of the appellants' customers which was found not to be in a state of thorough cleanliness.

HELD: regulation 26 (1) of the Milk and Dairies Regulations, 1949, imposed an absolute duty on a distributor to ensure that every vessel used for containing milk should be in a state of thorough cleanliness, and so made him liable for the acts of his servants or agents done within their authority, and, therefore, the appellants were guilty of a breach of that regulation.

Dictum of ATKIN, J., in Mousell Brothers v. London & North-Western Ry. Co. ([1917] 2 K.B. 845), applied.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Mousell Brothers v. London & North-Western Ry. Co., [1917] 2 K.B. 836; 87 L.J.K.B. 82; 118 L.T. 25; 81 J.P. 305; 8 Digest 207, 1323.
- (2) Linnett v. Metropolitan Police Comr., [1946] 1 All E.R. 380; [1946] K.B. 290; 115 L.J.K.B. 513; 174 L.T. 178; 110 J.P. 153; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by the Recorder of York.

On Oct. 9, 1950, at a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at York, the appellants were convicted on an information laid by the respondent, the deputy town clerk of York, charging them with an offence against reg. 26 (1) of the Milk and Dairies Regulations, 1949, for that they, on Sept. 11, 1950, being milk distributors, failed to ensure that a vessel used for containing milk, viz., a milk bottle, was, immediately before use by them, in a state of thorough cleanliness in that there was dirt on the inside of the vessel. By an oral agreement between the appellants and York Producers, Ltd., a firm of wholesale dairymen, York Producers, Ltd. undertook to supply and deliver milk to certain of the appellants' customers, and the bottle in question was delivered pursuant to this contract. On Mar. 21, 1951, the appellants appealed against the conviction to York quarter sessions. It was submitted for the appellants (i) that proof of use of the bottle by them was necessary before the offence charged was made out and that there was no evidence of such use, (ii) that at no time they had any control over the cleansing of the said bottle or the filling of the same with milk and had no opportunity to inspect it before it was finally sealed by York Producers, Ltd. and delivered to the customer. It was submitted for the respondent (i) that the bottle was used by the appellants to fulfil their contract with their customers, (ii) that the appellants, by reason of their contractual relationship with York Producers, Ltd., were in a position to inspect the bottle before delivery, and (iii) that the appellants, as purveyors, were under an absolute duty to ensure that the bottle was thoroughly cleansed. The recorder was of the opinion that the appellants were in such a relationship to York Producers, Ltd. that there was a duty on them to ensure that the bottle was thoroughly cleansed, and, therefore, he affirmed the conviction and the appellants appealed.

Hylton-Foster, K.C., and A. G. Sharp for the appellants.

Ahern and I. Percival for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 29. PARKER, J., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal by way of Case Stated from the decision of the recorder for the city of York dismissing an appeal by the appellant company against its conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction of an offence against reg. 26 (1) of the Milk and Dairies Regulations, 1949, made under the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, as amended by the Food and Drugs (Milk and Dairies) Act, 1944, for that it, on Sept. 11, 1950, being a milk distributor, failed to ensure that a vessel used for containing milk, namely, a milk bottle, was, immediately before use by it, in a state of thorough cleanliness, in that there was dirt on the inside of the said vessel.

Regulation 26 (1) provides, so far as is material, as follows:

"Every . . . distributor shall ensure that every vessel (including the lid) used for containing milk shall, immediately before use by him, be in a state of thorough cleanliness . . ."

The facts found by the recorder are, so far as is material, as follows. The appellant company carries on business as milk retailers in and around the city of York, and is a milk distributor within the meaning of reg. 2 (1) of the above-mentioned regulations. The appellant company had a contract with the York "A" and Tadcaster Hospital Management Committee under which it had undertaken to continue to supply pasteurised milk in bottles to certain hospitals in the area, including a hospital known as The Grange, York. Next door to the appellant company a business of wholesale dairymen was carried on by a company referred to as York Producers, Ltd., and the appellant company had arranged that for a consideration York Producers, Ltd. would supply, bottle, and deliver all the milk that might be required for delivery to The Grange. The procedure was that York Producers, Ltd. purchased the necessary milk from the Milk Marketing Board. They then cleansed, pasteurised, and bottled the milk on their own premises, using their own bottles, and under a contract with British Road Services, caused the bottles to be delivered to the hospital. From the time when the milk was received from the Milk Marketing Board to the time it was delivered to the hospital no servant of the appellant company in any way whatsoever touched the milk or the bottles in which it was put. On Sept. 11, 1950, a bottle containing milk was delivered to The Grange pursuant to the contract between the appellant company and the said hospital management committee and pursuant to the procedure outlined above. That bottle, when delivered, was not in a state of thorough cleanliness in that there was a light, fawn coloured marking down the side of and inside the said bottle.

The decision here depends on the true application to the facts of this case of the principle laid down by ATKIN, J., in Moussell Brothers v. London & North-Western Ry. Co. (1), where he said ([1917] 2 K.B. 845):

"I think that the authorities cited by my Lord make it plain that while prima facie a principal is not to be made criminally responsible for the acts of his servants, yet the legislature may prohibit an act or enforce a duty in such words as to make the prohibition or the duty absolute; in which case the principal is liable if the act is in fact done by his servants. To ascertain whether a particular Act of Parliament has that effect or not regard must be had to the object of the statute, the words used, the nature of the duty laid down, the person upon whom it is imposed, the person by whom it would in ordinary circumstances be performed, and the person upon whom the penalty is imposed."

The regulation in question comes within a group of regulations relating to the cleansing and storage of vessels, utensils and appliances used in the preparation and delivery of milk for sale, and made under s. 20 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, as amended by the Food and Drugs (Milk and Dairies) Act, 1944, s. 1 (2). These regulations, as it seems to us, were made to ensure, so far as possible, that milk delivered to the consumer should be as clean as possible, and by this particular regulation an obligation is put, inter alia, on the distributor to ensure the thorough cleanliness of all vessels used in the preparation of milk for sale, including, of course, the bottles in which the milk is delivered. It seems to us, therefore, that, applying the principle referred to above, the legislation in question has the effect of imposing an absolute duty so that a principal would be liable for the acts of his servant or agent done within his authority. Further, as was pointed out by LORD GODDARD, C.J. ([1946] 1 All E.R. 382), in Linnett v. Metropolitan Police Comr. (2), the principle set out in Mousell's case (1), as applied in the various decisions thereon, does not depend on the legal relationship existing between master and servant or between principal and agent, but depends on the fact that the person who is responsible in law, as, for example, a licensee under the Licensing Acts, has chosen to delegate his duties, powers, and authority to another. The principle applies, as it seems to us, to a case where, as here, the distributor who is selling milk in bottles sub-contracts the bottling and delivery to another.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant company, both before the recorder and before us, that, though a distributor within the regulation and though selling the milk to the hospital, it was not personally using the bottle in question, and, therefore, cannot be held guilty of an offence against the regulation. This, however, begs the question, since it can be said, and, we think, can properly be said, that the use of the bottle by York Producers, Ltd. was use by the appellant company. It may be that York Producers, Ltd. could also have been prosecuted, or that the appellant company could, when prosecuted, have raised a defence under s. 83 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, but we are not called on to decide these questions in the present case. In the premises we think that the appellants were rightly convicted, and that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Ridsdale & Son, agents for Crombie, Wilkinson & Robinson, York (for the appellants); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for T. C. Benfield, town clerk, York (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CUMMINGS v. LONDON BULLION CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Denning and Romer, L.JJ.), January 14, 15, February 1, 1952.]

Currency Control—Debt in foreign currency—Rate of exchange—Creditor resident abroad outside scheduled territories—Date when debt became payable—Date when Treasury permission obtained—Exchange Control Act, 1947 (c. 14), s. 33 (1).

In July, 1949, while on a visit to England, the plaintiff, who was resident in the United States of America, bought a brooch from the defendants for $3,200, it being a term of the contract that, if the plaintiff returned the brooch within an agreed time, the defendants would re-purchase it at the same price. Both parties knew that, under the Exchange Control Act, 1947, s. 1 and s. 6 (1), the permission of the Treasury would have to be obtained before the defendants could pay the $3,200 to the plaintiff, if required to do so. The plaintiff decided to return the brooch, and on Aug. 15, 1949, it was received by the defendants. The rate of exchange on that date was $4.02 to the pound, and the defendants were credited with £796 Os. 8d. in respect of the cheque. On Sept. 29, 1949, when the rate had altered to $2.80 to the pound, the defendants received the permission of the Treasury to obtain the dollars and to transfer them to the plaintiff, who had returned to the United States, but they failed to act on the permission. In an action against the defendants the plaintiff claimed the sum of £1,142 17s., being the sum of $3,200 converted into sterling at the rate of $2.80 to the pound. The defendants contended that the date to be taken to ascertain the rate for the conversion of the dollars into sterling was Aug. 15, when the brooch was returned, and, therefore, they were only liable for £796 Os. 8d.

HELD: under the Exchange Control Act, 1947, the permission of the Treasury was required for the performance of the defendants' promise to pay the dollars to the plaintiff and under s. 33 (1) of the Act it was an implied condition in the contract between the parties that that promise should not be performed except in so far as the permission was given; the dollars, therefore, did not become payable to the plaintiff until Sept. 29 when the permission was given; and, consequently, the plaintiff was entitled to be paid at the rate of exchange prevailing on that day.

Vionnet (Madeleine) et Cie. v. Wills ([1939] 4 All E.R. 136), applied.

AS TO CLAIM IN FOREIGN CURRENCY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, p. 173, para. 251; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 35, pp. 173, 174, Nos. 38-48.

FOR THE EXCHANGE CONTROL ACT, 1947, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 16, p. 559.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Vionnet (Madeleine) et Cie. v. Wills, [1939] 4 All E.R. 136; 161 L.T. 311; Digest Supp.
- (2) S.S. Celia v. S.S. Volturno, [1921] 2 A.C. 544; 90 L.J.P. 385; 126 L.T. 1; 35 Digest 174, 39.
- (3) Société des Hôtels Le Touquet Paris-Plage v. Cummings, [1922] 1 K.B. 451; 91 L.J.K.B. 288; 126 L.T. 513; 35 Digest 173, 36.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of SLADE, J., dated Jan. 25, 1951.

Under an agreement between the parties the defendants promised to pay $3,200 to the plaintiff, who was resident in the United States of America, on receiving back a brooch from him. The defendants received the brooch on Aug. 15, 1949, and on Sept. 29, 1949, they obtained permission from the Treasury, under the Exchange Control Act, 1947, s. 1 and s. 6 (1), to buy the dollars and to transfer them to the plaintiff, but they did not act on the permission. The plaintiff brought an action claiming £1,142 17s., being the sum of $3,200 converted into sterling at the rate prevailing on Sept. 29, 1949. SLADE, J., held that the debt became payable on Aug. 15, when the brooch was received back by the defendants, and, therefore, the sum of $3,200 should be converted into sterling at the rate which prevailed on that date.

S. Pascoe Hayward, K.C., and I. H. Jacob for the plaintiff.
T. G. Roche for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 1. The following judgments were read.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of SLADE, J. The plaintiff is a citizen of the United States of America resident in that country. In July, 1949, while on a visit to this country, he bought from the defendants, a company carrying on business in London, a platinum brooch. The agreed price was $3,200. This was paid. It was a term of the contract that, if the brooch proved unsatisfactory, the defendants would re-purchase it within ninety days for the cost price, namely, $3,200. A week later, after consultation with his wife, for whom the brooch was intended, the plaintiff decided to exercise his right to return the brooch, and he wrote to this effect from Paris on July 22. The brooch was received by the defendants on Aug. 15, 1949.

Under the Exchange Control Act, 1947, to which I will have to refer in some detail, permission had to be obtained from the Bank of England to obtain the dollars and transfer them to the plaintiff. For some reason which was unexplained, the defendants do not appear to have sought this permission until they had received a letter from the plaintiff, dated Sept. 12, 1949, and sent from the United States, to which the plaintiff had by then returned. He wrote to ask why he had not received his price. Permission was in fact obtained on Sept. 29. The defendants did not act on this permission. The reason, undoubtedly, was that on Sept. 18 the pound sterling in relation to the dollar had been devalued. When the defendants received the plaintiff's cheque, the rate was $4.02 to the pound and the defendants were credited with £796 0s. 8d. in respect of the cheque. This rate prevailed on Aug. 15 when the brooch was received. On Sept. 29 the rate was $2.80 to the pound and it would have required £1,142 17s. to obtain $3,200. There were further letters from the plaintiff demanding his dollars. The line taken by the defendants on Mar. 21, 1950, and later was that they had not agreed to refund the price in dollars. It is now conceded that they had so agreed. The writ was issued on June 20, 1950, claiming £1,142 17s. Various points were raised in the statement of claim, but the issue before the learned judge and the first issue before us is whether, for the purposes of the judgment, the sum of $3,200 falls to be converted into sterling at the rate prevailing on Aug. 15, which gives a sum of £796 0s. 8d., or at the rate prevailing on Sept. 29, which gives a sum of £1,142 17s.

There is a recent authority of this court, Madeleine Vionnet et Cie. v. Wills (1), which decides that the correct date on which to convert a debt in foreign currency sued for in this country is the date when the debt became due. In S.S. Celia v. S.S. Volturno (2) the House of Lords decided that in the case of a claim for damages for breach of contract the conversion must take place at the rate of exchange prevailing at the date of the breach: [see per LORD BUCKMASTER ([1921] 2 A.C. 548)]. It was argued in Vionnet's case (1) that a different principle should apply to a claim for a debt in foreign currency and that the conversion should take place at the rate of exchange prevailing at the date of the writ or, in that case, at the date when a sum paid into court was ordered to be paid out to the plaintiff. In the absence of a payment out of money in court, it had been suggested, for example, by ATKIN, L.J. ([1922] 1 K.B. 465), in Société des Hôtels Le Touquet Paris-Plage v. Cummings (3), that the correct date might be the date of the judgment of the English court. In Vionnet's case (1) this court rejected the contention. CLAUSON, L.J., delivering the judgment of the court, said ([1939] 4 All E.R. 138):

A "If this be the position, the only question open in this court would seem to be whether or not any distinction can in principle be drawn between the case of a claim in respect of breach of contract which results in relief by way of damages and a like claim which results in relief by way of judgment for a fixed sum. We can find no logical ground for such a distinction either in reason or in any principle which can be deduced from the decided cases. Indeed, counsel supporting the judgment below was not able to formulate any such principle, still less to point to any decided cases from which any such principle could be deduced."

B The date, therefore, in the present case is the date when the defendants were in breach in not transmitting to the plaintiff the sum in dollars which they had undertaken to pay. The learned judge found that this date was Aug. 15, when the brooch was received back.

C Counsel for the plaintiff argued, in the first place, that there was no breach, and that payment was not due, until the permission under the Exchange Control Act had been given, i.e., on Sept. 29. He sought to argue in the alternative that the decision in Vionnet's case (1) was inconsistent with the decision of this court in the Le Touquet case (3), and that it was, therefore, open to us to follow either. In the Le Touquet case (3) the debt in francs which was payable in France was incurred in 1914 and was for 18,035 francs. After a writ had been issued in November, 1919, in this country, the defendant paid 18,035 francs to the plaintiffs in France, and it was held she had thereby discharged her debt. The franc had by that time depreciated. If the action had proceeded to judgment and the date when the debt became due had been taken, the plaintiff would have obtained judgment for a sum in sterling which would have been the equivalent of a very much larger sum in francs than the amount of the original debt. It is clear from the judgments that the court did not base its decision on the principle that, if no payment in francs had been made, the francs would fall to be converted at the date of the judgment. ATKIN, L.J., stated expressly ([1922] 1 K.B. 465) that that point was open and there is a sentence to the same effect in the judgment of BANKES, L.J. In Vionnet's case (1) the court referred to the Le Touquet case (3) and clearly did not regard it as deciding the point. Their decision as to what the Le Touquet case (3) did or did not decide would, I think, in itself be binding on us, but it seems to me plain that the Le Touquet case (3) cannot be regarded as affecting or in any way impairing the authority of Vionnet's case (1), which, therefore, binds this court. Should this case go to the House of Lords, counsel for the plaintiff desired to be free to argue that Vionnet's case (1) was wrong. Counsel for the defendants objected that no reservation of the point had been made below and that, although the pleading contained contentions of law as well as allegations of fact, this was not among the former. The point is one of law on the facts as disclosed by the correspondence which was the only evidence before the learned judge, and we thought that, so far as this court is concerned, the plaintiff should be free to raise the point in the House of Lords, should there be an appeal. An amendment to the pleading was, therefore, drafted.

G I will now return to the first submission for the plaintiff, namely, that, having regard to the provisions of the Exchange Control Act, 1947, there was no breach, and the debt was not due within the meaning of the decision in the Vionnet case (1), until the permission required under that Act was granted. The learned judge, as I have said, rejected this contention, and I will come back to his reasons later. Section 1 of the Act imposes restrictions on the obtaining of foreign currency, and s. 5 and s. 6 (1) impose restrictions on making payments to persons resident outside the scheduled territories. It is agreed that the plaintiff was such a person. It is also agreed that, under the powers of delegation contained in s. 37 (4), the "permission of the Treasury", which, under s. 1, s. 5 and s. 6 (1), the plaintiff required for this transaction, could be obtained from the Bank of England. To obtain the dollars the defendants had to obtain permission under s. 1. In the form which was submitted, the purpose for which the dollars were required, namely, for payment to the plaintiff, is set out. Section 6, which is the relevant section with regard to payment, reads:

"(1) Except with the permission of the Treasury, no person resident in the United Kingdom shall, subject to the provisions of this section, make any payment outside the United Kingdom to or for the credit of a person resident outside the scheduled territories. (2) Nothing in this section shall prohibit the doing of anything otherwise lawful by any person with any foreign currency obtained by him in accordance with the provisions of Part I of this Act or retained by him in pursuance of a consent of the Treasury."

There were, therefore, two permissions which were required, one for dollars under s. 1, and a second for payment under s. 6 (1). That, at any rate, was the basis of the argument. I do not think the issue is affected if one regards the permission to be given under s. 1 as covering both the obtaining of the dollars and their use when obtained.

The next relevant provisions are contained in s. 33 (1) and s. 33 (3) which read:

"(1) It shall be an implied condition in any contract that, where, by virtue of this Act, the permission or consent of the Treasury is at the time of the contract required for the performance of any term thereof, that term shall not be performed except in so far as the permission or consent is given or is not required: Provided that this sub-section shall not apply in so far as it is shown to be inconsistent with the intention of the parties that it should apply, whether by reason of their having contemplated the performance of that term in despite of the provisions of this Act or for any other reason. (3) The provisions of sched. IV to this Act shall have effect with respect to legal proceedings, arbitrations, bankruptcy proceedings, the administration of the estates of deceased persons, the winding-up of companies, and proceedings under deeds of arrangement or trust deeds for behoof of creditors."

The proviso to s. 33 (1) does not arise here. It is not suggested that either party contemplated a contravention of the Act. It is, indeed, plain from the correspondence that both plaintiff and defendants realised the necessity of obtaining Treasury permission. The effect of the earlier words of s. 33 (1) on the contract in this case is, I think, plain. One must read into the contract a term that payment is not to be made except in so far as permission is given. The effect of this term has to be considered in the light of the provisions of sched. IV if legal proceedings are taken. Schedule IV, para. 1, applies the provisions of Part II of the Act, i.e., s. 5 to s. 7, dealing with payments to be made, to sums to be paid under any judgment or order. Paragraph 2 reads:

"Nothing in this Act shall be construed as preventing the payment by any person of any sum into any court in the United Kingdom but the provisions of Part II of this Act shall apply to the payment of any sum out of court, whether under an order of the court or otherwise, to or for the credit of any person resident outside the scheduled territories."

Paragraph 3 gives power to make rules of court. Rules have been made which provide for payment into court of sums due under any judgment, order or award in cases where permission is required under the Act and has not been given: R.S.C., Ord. 42, r. 1 (2) and r. 1 (3). There is a further rule (R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 22) which lays down the procedure enabling the plaintiff to get money paid into court, in cases covered by the Act, paid out when the necessary permission has been obtained. Paragraph 4 of sched. IV is important and reads:

"(1) In any proceedings in a prescribed court and in any arbitration proceedings, a claim for the recovery of any debt shall not be defeated by reason only of the debt not being payable without the permission of the Treasury and of that permission not having been given or having been revoked. (2) No court shall be prescribed for the purpose of this paragraph unless the Treasury are satisfied that adequate provision has been made therefor by rules of court for the purposes specified under the last preceding paragraph."

A It is agreed that the proceedings here were in a prescribed court.

These provisions disclose the purpose of the Act. Parties are free to make contracts, or, at any rate, certain contracts of which this is one, on terms the fulfilment of which, or some of which, require permission under the Act. That term cannot be performed unless or until permission is given. The effect of the provisions with regard to payment into and out of court are simpler if one considers a case where the prohibited payment is in sterling. The person entitled to the payment issues a writ. The fact that permission has not been obtained is not a defence to the action. On the one hand, the plaintiff can obtain judgment, the money due under the judgment being subject to Part II of the Act and the rules to which I have referred. The defendant, assuming that he is admitting liability, apart from the provisions of the Act, can make a payment into court.

C The Act is not to be used to enable the defendant to retain the money in his pocket, but to control its reaching its destination, namely, the plaintiff.

The question is: How does one apply the decision in Vionnet's case (1) to these provisions? SLADE, J., held that the Act did not alter the contractual obligation, but interfered only with the time of performance. I agree with this, but he then held that the debt became due on precisely the same date as it would have done under the contract apart from legislation. I agree that in one sense it became due. If a writ had been issued on Aug. 16, 1949, there would have been no defence to the action, although the defendants still could not have lawfully paid either the dollars or their equivalent, whatever that might be, to the plaintiff. A writ was not issued, and what one has to identify under Vionnet's case (1) is the date of the breach. At what date can it be said that the defendants were in default in not paying this sum in dollars? Having regard to s. 33 (1) of the Act, I think the answer is Sept. 29. At that date the rate of exchange was $2.80 to the pound. In the present case this is disadvantageous to the defendants, but it seems to me illogical to apply a rate prevailing at a time when they could not lawfully obtain the foreign exchange required.

F It was rightly pointed out that, if a writ is issued before permission is given, a further problem arises if the learned judge was wrong in holding that Aug. 15 was the date for the conversion. The combination of s. 33 and sched. IV produces a novel position. Until a writ is issued, the person liable cannot legally make the payment in dollars. Once a writ is issued, he can legally discharge his obligation by payment of whatever is the appropriate sum in sterling into court. This is an obligation created by the statute on the issue of a writ. We have not got

G to decide that point on this appeal. It was, however, suggested that it sets a problem incapable of solution, unless one applies the principle adopted by the learned judge. The problem seems to me, at any rate, capable of solution in accordance with the principles of Vionnet's case (1). If there are legal proceedings, the defendant can discharge his obligation forthwith by paying the proper sum, whatever that may be, into court. It could, I think, be said with force that an

H obligation to pay the sterling equivalent arises on that date. The defendant could, no doubt, on the authority of the Le Touquet case (3), if permission was obtained before judgment, satisfy the claim by paying the dollars to the plaintiff, though he would, presumably, be liable for costs up to that time. If, however, he pays into court, or if the case goes to judgment, I, at any rate, see no difficulty or illogicality in taking the date when the obligation could have been discharged by a payment into court as the proper date for conversion. I agree with the learned judge that the Act presents a difficult problem in its application to a transaction of this kind. For the reasons which I have given I have come to a different conclusion from that of the learned judge, and think that this appeal should be allowed, and judgment entered for £1,142 17s.

DENNING, L.J.: I take it to be clear law that, when a creditor comes to the courts to enforce a debt payable in a foreign currency, he is entitled to be put into as good a position as if the debtor had done his duty under the contract and had paid the debt in the foreign currency without the intervention of the courts. To do this, judgment must be given for the creditor for the debt turned into sterling at the rate of exchange ruling at the date when it should have been paid. The critical date is not so much the date when the cause of action arose, but rather the date when the debt should have been paid. Usually, the two coincide. The cause of action nearly always arises at the same time as the debt is payable. That is what happened in Madeleine Vionnet et Cie. v. Wills (1). But sometimes the dates diverge. The debt may be debitum in presenti solvendum in futuro. The present is an illustration of a divergence. The cause of action here arose on Aug. 15, 1949. That is shown by the fact that at any time thereafter the creditor could have brought an action in the English courts and recovered judgment: see sched. IV, para. 4 (1), to the Act of 1947. But the debt was not payable on Aug. 15, 1949. It was not payable until the debtor was given permission to buy $3,200 and pay them to the creditor: see s. 33 (1) of the Act. He was given permission on Sept. 29, 1949. It was on that day, therefore, that the debtor, if he had done his duty, would have paid the creditor $3,200. The creditor was entitled to be put in as good a position as if the debtor had paid the dollars on that day. To do this the rate of exchange must be taken on that day.

I would add one further observation. If the debtor does not ask for permission and the creditor brings an action in the English courts, under sched. IV, para. 4, the debt becomes payable as soon as the writ is served and the debtor is able to pay into court, and the rate of exchange must be taken on that day. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

ROMER, L.J.: I agree that this appeal should be allowed. In my judgment, the date for conversion of the dollars into sterling is the date when they became "payable" by the defendants to the plaintiff in the sense that the defendants could be regarded as contractually in default if they failed to make the payment. Apart from the Exchange Control Act, 1947, that date would undoubtedly have been Aug. 15, 1949, when the brooch was returned by the plaintiff to the defendants. The question, therefore, is whether the Act operated so as to postpone the defendants' liability to make this payment to the plaintiff (and I emphasise the words "to the plaintiff") beyond the time as fixed by the express agreement between the parties themselves. The defendants' promise to pay was clearly a term which required Treasury consent for its performance and was: thus within the scope of s. 33 (1) of the Act. The effect of the sub-section on the promise was to defer its fulfilment until (in the events which happened) Sept. 29, 1949, and s. 6 (1) of the Act rendered its earlier performance illegal. One, accordingly, finds that the plaintiff and the defendants entered into an agreement under which the defendants promised to pay the dollars to the plaintiff on a date which might, and probably would, precede the date when, by the law of the country which governed the contract, the payment to the plaintiff could either be enforced or lawfully made. The provisions of s. 33 (1) are to be regarded as incorporated in the agreement and constitute an implied term thereof. An implied term has just as much force as a term that the parties express themselves, and, in these circumstances, I am unable to see how, as a question of construction of the contract, the plaintiff could treat the defendants as in default of their promise to pay during such time as both parties agreed (by implication) that it should not (and lawfully could not) be performed. Taking the contract as a whole the parties agreed, in my opinion, that the promise to pay should not be performed until Treasury permission had been obtained, and there could, accordingly, be no liability or default in respect of the promise until the requisite authority was received.

I appreciate the force of the contention of counsel for the defendants (which impressed the learned judge) that on the view above expressed the defendants, although in possession of the brooch, would never become liable to repay to the plaintiff the purchase price if Treasury consent to the payment was withheld. The plaintiff would not, however, be wholly without redress. The defendants' inchoate or conditional liability to the plaintiff under the express terms of the contract is, for many purposes, treated as a "debt" by sched. IV to the Act and sufficiently preserves the character of a debt to enable the plaintiff to sue. On obtaining judgment in such an action, the sterling equivalent of the money (to be converted, I agree, in accordance with the principle which SOMERVELL, L.J., has indicated) would be brought into court and thus kept safely for the plaintiff, who could have then applied for the consent of the Treasury to payment out to himself. In the very unlikely event of the Treasury refusing his application, it is true that the plaintiff would have neither the brooch nor his money. This unfortunate result of legislation designed for the financial protection of this country cannot, however, in itself impose on the defendants a liability to the plaintiff from which, in my judgment, they are free under the terms of the contract itself.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Kaufman & Seigal (for the plaintiff); S. Rutter & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SHERWOOD (BARON) v. MOODY AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Ormerod, J.), January 24, 25, 1952.]

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Protection of sub-tenant—Tenant's counter-notice—Minister's consent to operation of notice to quit—Notice to quit by tenant to sub-tenant—Minister's consent to operation of tenant's notice to quit revoked on appeal—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 24 (1).

The landlord of an agricultural holding served a notice to quit on his tenants, who served a notice to quit expiring on the same day on their sub-tenant without referring therein to the notice they had received from their landlord. The tenants served a counter-notice on their landlord under s. 24 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, but the county agricultural executive committee, acting on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, consented to the operation of the landlord's notice. The sub-tenant also served a counter-notice on the tenants and the committee consented to the operation of the tenants' notice, but the Agricultural Land Tribunal allowed an appeal by the sub-tenant, thereby, under s. 24 (1), rendering the tenants' notice of no effect.

HELD: the notice to quit served by the landlord on the tenants, having been approved by the Minister, was a valid notice to quit which put an end to the tenancy of the whole of the property at the expiry of the notice, and, in the absence of any provision in the Agricultural Holdings Acts and the regulations made thereunder enabling a sub-tenancy to exist after the tenancy had been terminated by a notice to quit which was valid under the Acts, by the ordinary application of common law, put an end also to any sub-tenancy which had been created during the existence of the tenancy; the proceedings relating to the sub-tenant's counter-notice were of no effect; and, therefore, the notice to quit served by the landlord on the tenants effectively determined their tenancy and the sub-tenancy they had created and the landlord was entitled to possession of the whole holding.

FOR THE AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACT, 1948, s. 24 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 28, p. 46.

Case referred to:

- (1) Cow v. Casey, [1949] 1 All E.R. 197; [1949] 1 K.B. 474; [1949] L.J.R. 565; 2nd Digest Supp. A

ACTION for possession of an agricultural holding and for mesne profits and damages for trespass.

The plaintiff was the landlord of Shalcombe Farm, in the Isle of Wight. He had given notice to quit to the tenants, George and George Henry Moody, who had given notice to quit expiring on the same day to their sub-tenant of part of the farm, one Barnes, but had not stated in that notice that they had received notice to quit from their landlord. The tenants had served a counter-notice on the landlord under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 24 (1), but the county agricultural executive committee, acting for the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, confirmed the landlord's notice and the tenants did not appeal against that decision. The sub-tenant, Barnes, also served a counter-notice on the tenants under s. 24 (1), and the county agricultural executive committee subsequently confirmed the tenants' notice. The sub-tenant, Barnes, appealed against the decision to the Agricultural Land Tribunal, who allowed his appeal. For the landlord it was contended that his notice to quit, so confirmed, determined the tenancy and the sub-tenancy created by his tenants and that no provision in the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, or regulations made thereunder enabled the sub-tenant, Barnes, to remain in occupation. For the sub-tenant, Barnes, it was contended that (i) the county agricultural executive committee, when considering the counter-notice of the tenants, thought it was considering also the counter-notice of the sub-tenant, Barnes, and that when it later considered Barnes' counter-notice it was not in a position impartially to re-consider it and the decision of the Agricultural Land Tribunal should, therefore, be effective as reversing both decisions of the county agricultural executive committee; and (ii) that the sub-tenant was a "tenant" within the meaning of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 94 (1), and as such was entitled to the protection conferred by s. 24 (1) on a tenant who serves a counter-notice to any notice to quit given by his landlord and has such counter-notice upheld. It was also contended by two sub-tenants of the sub-tenant, Barnes, that they were entitled to the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. B C D E F

Lawrence, K.C., and A. P. Fletcher for the landlord (the plaintiff).

Karmel, K.C., and Aggs for the sub-tenants (the second and other defendants).

ORMEROD, J.: The landlord, Lord Sherwood, who is the owner of estates in the Isle of Wight, brings this action against a number of defendants for the possession of Shalcombe Farm, a farm of approximately 116 acres, in the Isle of Wight. The farm was let by the landlord to the first defendants, the tenants, George Moody and George Henry Moody, under an agreement in writing dated June 18, 1941. No question is raised as to the restrictions on sub-letting which it contained, it being agreed that the sub-lettings by the tenants of two parcels of this farm were within the terms of the agreement for the purpose of this action. In 1941 a portion of the farm was occupied by the tenants, thirty-four acres and the farmhouse were occupied by the defendant, Barnes, to whom they had been sub-let by the tenants, another portion of the land was occupied by the defendant, Walmesley, to whom it had been sub-let by the tenants, and two portions of the farmhouse had been sub-let by the sub-tenant, Barnes, to the defendants, Woolley and Eldridge, who were not farming the land but were merely occupying those portions of the farmhouse as a dwelling-house. On G H

Oct. 10, 1949, the landlord, in accordance with the terms of the agreement gave to the tenants notice to quit, requiring them to deliver up possession of the premises on Oct. 11, 1950. On Oct. 11, 1949, the tenants gave a notice to quit to their sub-tenant, Barnes, to deliver up possession of the premises on the same day, Oct. 11, 1950. It is not contended that that was other than a proper notice, subject to the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, and the regulations made thereunder. No evidence was called in this case, because all the evidence and documents had been admitted, but it appears that when this notice was handed to Barnes by the tenant, George Moody, on Oct. 11, 1949, Mr. Moody told Mr. Barnes that the notice was being served because he himself had received a notice to quit from his landlord. Had he incorporated that statement in writing in the notice instead of merely saying it to the sub-tenant, Barnes, the situation today would have been very different.

Apart from any statute, those notices would have involved no difficulty. By the terms of the notice which the tenants served on Barnes, Barnes would have been under a duty at law to deliver up possession of the portion of the farm which he held from Messrs. Moody, the tenants, and likewise the tenants would have been under an obligation to deliver up to the landlord possession of the whole of the 116 acres. It is submitted on behalf of the landlord and agreed by counsel for the sub-tenants that at common law, if a tenancy is terminated by notice, any sub-tenancy comes to an end simultaneously, but, it is submitted, the position has been altered by considerable statutory enactment.

Section 24 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, provides:

“Where notice to quit an agricultural holding or part of an agricultural holding is given to the tenant thereof, and not later than one month from the giving of the notice to quit the tenant serves on the landlord a counter-notice in writing requiring that this sub-section shall apply to the notice to quit, then, subject to . . . [certain provisions which do not affect this case] the notice to quit shall not have effect unless the Minister consents to the operation thereof.”

That means that, if a tenant receives a notice to quit and chooses not to accept it without protest, he may invoke the procedure of s. 24 (1) under which, if within one month he serves a counter-notice on the landlord, the notice to quit shall not be a valid notice unless the Minister consents to its operation. By s. 25 (1) the Minister may only consent to the notice if he is satisfied that one or other of certain conditions has been fulfilled. In this case the condition on which he was required to be satisfied was that the carrying-out of the purpose for which the landlord proposed to terminate the tenancy was “desirable in the interests of efficient farming . . . as respects good estate management . . . ”

The Minister is enabled to delegate his powers under these Acts, and by the Agriculture (Delegation to County Agricultural Executive Committees) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 187) (made under s. 72 of the Agriculture Act, 1947), he delegated to county agricultural executive committees his power to consent or not consent to notices to quit under s. 24 (1).

Within the prescribed time the tenants served on the landlord a counter-notice invoking the provisions of s. 24 (1). Barnes also in due course served a counter-notice on his landlords, the tenants, in his turn invoking the provisions of s. 24 (1). He was able to do that because the tenants omitted to include in the notice to quit served on him their reason for serving the notice. By reg. 9 (1) of the Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948 (S.I., 1948, No. 190), made under the repealed Agriculture Act, 1947, s. 31 (8), but which is still effective by virtue of s. 100 (1) of the Act of 1948:

“The provisions of s. 31 (1) of the Act shall not apply where notice to quit a holding or part of a holding is given to a sub-tenant thereof by a tenant who has himself been given by his landlord notice to quit that holding or that part of a holding, and the fact that he has been given such notice is stated in the notice given to the sub-tenant."

Section 31 (1) of the Act of 1947 there referred to corresponds with s. 24 (1) of the Act of 1948, and had the tenants, at the time of handing the notice to quit to Barnes, stated in the notice that they had received a similar notice from their landlord, Barnes would have had no right to serve a counter-notice within the terms of s. 24 (1). On Dec. 13, 1949, the notice served by the landlord on the tenants was confirmed by the county agricultural executive committee and the Minister's consent to the notice was given. The tenants did not exercise their right under s. 25 (4) of the Act of 1948 to appeal to the Agricultural Land Tribunal against the decision of the Minister, but they accepted the decision of the Minister and the notice became an effective notice. At the expiry of the notice the tenancy of the tenants came to an end, and they were under an obligation to hand over possession of the farm to the landlords. After some delay it was decided that it was still open to Barnes to proceed with the counter-notice which he had served on the tenants and to have the matter determined by the Minister. In July, 1950, the county agricultural executive committee considered the notice given by the tenants to Barnes and the counter-notice given by Barnes, and they approved the notice given by the tenants which, therefore, became a good one. Barnes, however, appealed against the decision to the Agricultural Land Tribunal who reversed the decision of the Minister with the somewhat anomalous result that, although the notice by the head landlord to his tenants had been upheld by the Minister and no appeal had been made against that decision, the notice by the tenants to their sub-tenant was not a valid notice.

So far as the portion of the farm sub-let by the tenants to the sub-tenant, Walmesley, is concerned, no appearance was entered by Walmesley, and in due course interlocutory judgment was signed against him. The tenants have also submitted to judgment, and they have given up possession of the portion of the farm retained for their own use, i.e., the remainder of the 116 acres not sub-let to either Walmesley or Barnes. The only questions for consideration concern the right of Barnes to remain in possession of his thirty-four acres and the farmhouse, and the right of his sub-tenants, Woolley and Eldridge, to remain in possession of the portions of the farmhouse which he had sub-let to them.

It is contended for the landlord that the notice to quit served by him on the tenants, having been approved by the Minister, is a valid notice to quit which puts an end to the tenancy of the whole of the property at the expiry of the notice, and thereby, by the ordinary application of common law, puts an end also to any sub-tenancies which have been created during the existence of the tenancy. It is agreed by counsel for the sub-tenants that that would certainly be the common law position, because a tenant is unable to grant any larger estate in the property than he has himself, and the landlord argues that there is no power in the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, or under any regulations made thereunder which enables a sub-tenant to remain in occupation of buildings, or for a sub-tenancy to exist, when the tenancy has been terminated in the proper way. By s. 26 (1) of the Act of 1948 the Minister may make regulations for certain purposes, including those mentioned in para. (e):

"for excluding the application of s. 24 (1) in relation to sub-tenancies in such cases as may be specified in the regulations, and for making such provision as appears to the Minister expedient for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of sub-tenants, including provision enabling the Minister or the Agricultural Land Tribunal, where the interest of a tenant is terminated by notice to quit, to secure that a sub-tenant will hold from the landlord on the like terms as he held from the tenant."

Under that section or the corresponding section of the Agriculture Act, 1947, the Minister has made the Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948, reg. 9 (1) of which provides that in certain circumstances s. 24 (1) shall not apply to a sub-tenant, but he has nowhere, in terms, made any regulations which, in the words of s. 26 (1) (e), "... secure that a sub-tenant will hold from the landlord on the like terms as he held from the tenant," nor has he made any provision other than that contained in reg. 9 (4) protecting the position of the sub-tenant. In those circumstances counsel for the landlord argues that there is no provision, whether express or implied, in either the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, or any regulation made under that Act or the Act of 1947, which puts the sub-tenants in a better position than they would be in at common law, and so he submits that the landlord is entitled to possession of the whole 116 acres.

- A Counsel for the sub-tenants submits that the consent of the Minister under s. 24 to the notice by the landlord to the tenants was not a valid consent, in that it did not deal effectively with the whole of the property contained in the agreement. He says that the county agricultural executive committee considered the matter under the impression that it was considering, not only the notice to quit by the landlord to the tenants, but also the notice by the tenants to Barnes, and that it was dealing with it once and for all, not only in relation to the landlord and the tenants but also in relation to the tenants and their sub-tenant, and, therefore, when the committee considered the notice given by the tenants to Barnes, it was not in a position to re-consider the matter properly. When Barnes appealed to the Agricultural Land Tribunal and the Land Tribunal reversed the committee's decision it thereby showed its disapproval, not only of that decision, but of the original decision that the notice by the landlord to the tenants should stand. It is said that in those circumstances the decision of the Land Tribunal reversing the notice to the sub-tenant should also be effective to reverse the decision with regard to the notice to the tenants. I am asked to say that the original tenancy still exists because, by virtue of the disapproval of the Land Tribunal, the landlord's notice to the tenants must be treated as an ineffective notice. I need say no more about that contention than that the county agricultural executive committee had considered the matter and had come to a decision, which was the decision of the Minister, and would stand unless the tenants, within the prescribed time and in the prescribed manner, gave notice of appeal to the Agricultural Land Tribunal. There was no appeal and, therefore, that decision stood, and, so far as that notice was concerned, I think the Minister was functus officio. When the matter came up a second time for the consideration of the notice to the sub-tenant, it went before the Agricultural Land Tribunal, and the documents of the tribunal show that it was dealing only with the notice terminating the sub-tenancy of Barnes. It is abundantly clear that the decision could only deal, as it only purported to deal, with his portion of the farm. Had the Land Tribunal purported to deal with the whole of the farm, it would certainly, in my view, have been exceeding its jurisdiction. That first submission of counsel for the sub-tenants really comes back to the central question whether, the tenancy having been properly determined by a notice which had been approved by the Minister, whatever the Minister might then say or do with regard to the sub-tenancy would make any difference to its continued existence.

- G Counsel for the sub-tenants then says that the sub-tenants are entitled to the protection of the Act in the same way as the tenants, and he bases that on s. 94 (1), the definition section of the Act, which defines "tenant" as:

"the holder of land under a contract of tenancy, and includes the executors, administrators, assigns, committee of the estate, or trustee in bankruptcy of a tenant, or other person deriving title from a tenant."

Counsel submits that a sub-tenant is clearly within that definition of "tenant," as he is the holder of land under a contract of tenancy, or, alternatively, he is a "person deriving his title from a tenant," and in those circumstances he is entitled to exactly the same protection as a tenant. That is an attractive argument, but, as has been pointed out by counsel for the landlord, the beginning of the definition section, like that of nearly every other definition section, is worded in this way:

"In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meanings hereby respectively assigned to them, that is to say . . ."

and so on. It may well be that in certain circumstances the word "tenant" in the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, will include a sub-tenant, and other persons as well, but whether it does so in any particular case must depend on the context. Although a sub-tenant may have the privileges of a tenant in certain circumstances, a tenant is a tenant of an immediate landlord, and he has rights only in relation to that landlord and not in relation to some other person. If the Act is to be read in any intelligible way at all, it would not be possible under s. 24 or s. 25 to consider a sub-tenant as being in the position of a tenant in relation to the head landlord.

It is suggested also that reg. 9 (1) of the Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948, makes certain provisions with regard to sub-tenants on a notice to quit under s. 24, and that that, by inference, puts the sub-tenant in the position of the tenant and in some way protects his tenancy in the event of the tenant's agreement being terminated. I am satisfied that neither in the definition section in the Act nor in the regulations of 1948—nor, indeed, in any other regulation to which my attention has been drawn—is there any provision which empowers a sub-tenant to remain in possession on the proper termination of the tenancy in accordance with the ordinary provisions of the law. I am satisfied that, if such provision is to be made, either it must be made in express terms, or the implication must be so clear as to be beyond any doubt, and here I find no provision either in the statute or in any regulation made thereunder which in any way carries the matter further.

The only other submission which was made by counsel for the sub-tenants was that the notice to quit must be bad because at no time could the sub-tenant act with certainty on the notice. I take it that he means that neither the tenants nor the sub-tenant could act with certainty because the provisions of the statute and the regulations made under it made it doubtful whether at any particular time either the notice or the sub-notice would be effective and would be allowed to remain in being. That comes back to the same point. If there is no statutory provision to extend the tenancy of the sub-tenant beyond the term of the original tenancy, it seems to me that the sub-tenant cannot be in any uncertain position by reason of the possibility of being able to invoke statutory regulations which cannot in any event have the slightest effect on his tenancy.

Having regard to all those matters, I am satisfied that the tenancy was properly determined by a notice to quit given by the landlord to the tenants on Oct. 10, 1949; that that notice to quit was approved by the Minister and became a valid and enforceable notice to quit; that the tenancy thereby came to an end on Oct. 11, 1950; that in those circumstances the sub-tenancies also came to an end; and that there is no provision in the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, or in any statutory regulation made thereunder to extend the tenancy of a sub-tenant for any longer period than the term of the head tenancy. It follows that the landlord is entitled to judgment.

I should just say something about the position of the two sub-tenants, Woolley and Eldridge, each of whom holds a small portion of the farmhouse as sub-tenant from Barnes. It was claimed in the pleadings that they were entitled to the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts, so that, even if the landlord was entitled to succeed against the sub-tenant Barnes he was not entitled as against these two sub-tenants to the possession of the portions of the farmhouse sub-let to them. But I think counsel for the sub-tenants now agrees that the decision of the Court of Appeal in Cow v. Casey (1) makes it clear that the Rent Restrictions Acts do not apply where the premises let are a portion only of larger premises which themselves are not within the Rent Restrictions Acts. In the circumstances it is conceded by counsel that the tenancies of the sub-tenants, Woolley and Eldridge, are not protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts, and it follows, therefore, that they stand or fall with the sub-tenant, Barnes. If Barnes has still a valid or existing tenancy, they themselves have one, but if his tenancy has come to an end, theirs has also come to an end. I am satisfied that Barnes' tenancy has come to an end, and, therefore, it follows that the tenancies of the other two have come to an end as well. There must be judgment for the landlord and an order for possession against the sub-tenant, Barnes, and also against the sub-tenants, Eldridge and Woolley.

Judgment for the landlord.

Solicitors: Withers & Co. (for the landlord); Thomas Eggar & Son, agents for Gunner Wilson & Jerome, Newport, Isle of Wight (for the sub-tenants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C POOLEY v. POOLEY.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Karminski, J.), January 21, 1952.]

Justices—Husband and wife—Maintenance order—Discharge—Petition for divorce—Application for alimony pendente lite.

Where a wife, who has in her favour a maintenance order made by a magistrate includes in a petition for divorce a claim for alimony pendente lite, she may apply to the magistrate to discharge his order since she cannot have two concurrent maintenance orders, and the jurisdiction of the magistrate in dealing with her application does not conflict with the jurisdiction of the Divorce Court.

AS TO DISCHARGE OF MAINTENANCE ORDER, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 843, para. 1345; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 565, 566, Nos. 6237-6250, and Digest Supps.

Case referred to:

(1) Bragg v. Bragg, [1925] P. 20; 94 L.J.P. 11; 132 L.T. 346; 27 Digest 565, 6242.

APPEAL by the wife against a decision of the Leeds stipendiary magistrate, dated Sept. 27, 1951, dismissing her application to discharge a maintenance order made in her favour on Nov. 26, 1946, on the ground of her husband's desertion. On Sept. 29, 1950, the wife had filed a petition for divorce on the same ground and in her petition she applied for alimony pendente lite, and she sought the discharge of the magistrate's order to avoid the existence of two concurrent orders for maintenance. The magistrate held that he had no jurisdiction in the matter because there was a petition pending in the Divorce Court.

D. H. Robson for the wife.

Stogdon for the husband.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: In a reasoned judgment the magistrate says that he does not think that he has jurisdiction to discharge this order because the wife's petition is pending in the Divorce Court and a magistrate should not exercise any concurrent jurisdiction while a suit is so pending. He took the view that even the act of considering whether or not to discharge the order would be some infringement of the jurisdiction of the Divorce Court, albeit that it was being done for the express purpose of avoiding a conflict of jurisdiction between the two courts, and that the proper way to deal with the situation, if the wife chose not to apply for an increase of the amount of maintenance under the recent amendment of the law effected by the Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1949, s. 1, whereby the maximum sum was increased from £2 to £5, was to go to the Divorce Court and apply for maintenance pending suit, disclose that the order of 1946 subsisted, ask the Divorce Court to adjourn for twenty-eight days, and, if within that time the magistrate had set the order aside, then go back to the Divorce Court and proceed for the alimony. I find this line of reasoning wholly unconvincing. In my opinion, there was no answer to the wife's application to discharge the order. A wife who has taken divorce proceedings—a fortiori, if, as in this case, she has incorporated in her petition a claim for alimony pending suit instead of making it the subject of a separate application—is entitled to pursue her rights for maintenance in the Divorce Court, provided that she gets rid of any existing order, for she cannot have concurrent orders in her favour in two courts.

Great reliance was placed on the line of decisions beginning with Bragg v. Bragg (1), which decides that even after dissolution of marriage magistrates may, in a proper case, exercise their functions with reference to a pre-existing order for maintenance. In the Divorce Court a wife can obtain an order for a secured provision of maintenance. Moreover, there is no limit, within reason, to the amount of maintenance that may be awarded by the High Court, whereas there is a statutory limit in the case of a court of summary jurisdiction. So, plainly, at the time when a divorce is granted, it may be much more advantageous for a wife, merely from the financial point of view, to get provision for her maintenance through the Divorce Court. It is elementary that she is entitled to an absolutely free hand regarding maintenance, subject always to two things—to the fact that, if she decides to apply to the Divorce Court, she must get rid of an existing order in the magistrates' court, and to the right of the magistrates' court, in a proper case, to treat the mere fact of divorce itself as being sufficient to justify the magistrates in bringing the order to an end, leaving her to whatever her rights may be in the Divorce Court.

Counsel for the husband has not attempted to dispute that, but he says that a different principle is to be applied with regard to alimony pending suit. In one sense there is a difference in that the decree may never be made at all. But that is the wife's risk, and I cannot see that it is anything else but a question whether she makes her choice sooner rather than later. She is just as much entitled to ask for her alimony pending suit in the Divorce Court as she is to ask for her ultimate maintenance in the Divorce Court, and I am completely unimpressed by the difficulty which the magistrate felt—that, by giving his mind to her wish to get rid of the order in her own favour while there is a petition on the file of the Divorce Court, he must actually be exercising a conflicting jurisdiction. Even if the course which the magistrate suggests is the proper solution of the difficulty, namely, making an application to the Divorce Court, having it adjourned for a specified period, and then going back to the magistrate's court to get the order set aside, the matter is still pending in both courts. There is no escape from it unless one thing is done, namely, that she goes to the magistrate before presenting her petition. In my opinion, there is no obligation on her to do that. Underlying the whole of this case there has been a momentary forgetfulness of the fact that by getting rid of the whole order and with it the finding of desertion, she is not doing the harm which the magistrate thought she would be doing to her case. The petition alleges that the desertion, held to have begun in 1946, had continued until the presentation of the petition. Even on the view that getting rid of the order could do her harm by cancelling a subsisting finding of desertion, it could not affect the issue before the court, provided it is done after the petition is filed. It has never been hinted or suggested, within my experience, that she is obliged to get rid of the order before presenting her petition. I must not be taken to be suggesting that, even if she did so, it would make any difference to the reality of the matter, but, for what it is worth, she would be getting rid of the advantage of being able to plead a subsisting order, and she is not obliged to do that.

A I think the whole of the suggestion that there is a conflict between the two jurisdictions in getting rid, pending suit, of the old order, is a fallacy. The truth and the reality of the matter is that the application is made to ensure there is no overlapping between the two. That cannot be said of the class of case in which this court has set its face against an overlap of the jurisdictions—cases, for example, where there is an attempt to raise a charge of adultery in the magistrates' court when the same issue is pending in the Divorce Court or there is pending in the Divorce Court a proceeding in which that same issue could properly be raised. This case does not come within any measurable distance of that sort of principle. In my opinion, the magistrate should have set this order B aside on the wife's application so that the matter might proceed under her petition, and I think that we ought to do the same. In so far as it is a matter of discretion, which I doubt since the wife herself wishes to have the order set aside, I feel no difficulty about exercising our discretion in the matter, because I think the reasons the magistrate has given for the exercise of the discretion in the way he exercised it are unsound. In my opinion, this appeal must be allowed.

C KARMINSKI, J.: I agree. I am not able to share the difficulty of the magistrate. In cases where a wife has obtained an order from magistrates and then petitions in the High Court for divorce, there is likely to be, at any rate for a time, a certain concurrence of jurisdiction, and in cases of desertion the only way out of this position would be for the wife to apply to the magistrates D to discharge her order before she files her petition. That step may be fraught with dangers for her—dangers which might not inevitably be fatal—because she would be weakening the evidence in her hand that the desertion had continued up to the presentation of the petition. Short of an active conflict on the financial side in a case of this kind I see no difficulty in the matter. The magistrate has suggested two alternatives which seem to me to be more likely to be causes of E two concurrent exercises of jurisdiction than the order which was sought from him, because he suggested that the wife, though she had a petition pending in the High Court, should apply to the magistrates' court for an increase in the existing order, or, alternatively, that she should apply to the registrar in the Divorce Court for alimony pending suit and then ask to have that application adjourned for a time so that she could go back to the magistrate to discharge F the existing order. The second alternative, without avoiding the possibility of concurrent jurisdiction, seems to me to be really a more roundabout way of approaching the matter than the wife has already undertaken. So far as the question of principle is concerned here, I entirely agree with LORD MERRIMAN, P., that the matter is of some interest, because the rights of a wife in the Divorce Court are not only greater than, but are also distinct from, those which she can G obtain in a court of summary jurisdiction. There is no limit to the amount which the Divorce Court can order. It is further of importance to recall that the Divorce Court can order secured payments for life, in proper cases, whereas no such provision exists in the court of summary jurisdiction.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Ludlow, Head & Walter, agents for Wiley, Hargrave & Co., Leeds (for the wife); Louis Godlove & Co., Leeds (for the husband).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

JACK WINDLE, LTD. v. BRIERLEY.

[LIVERPOOL ASSIZES (Lynskey, J.), November 13, 14, 15, 16, 1951.]

Agent—Estate agent—Commission—Introduction of purchaser—Purchaser unable to raise purchase price—Agency terminated by agreement—Sale subsequently effected to same purchaser—Agent's right to commission.

The defendant instructed the plaintiffs, a firm of estate agents, to endeavour to sell his bakery business and he signed a document dated Mar. 11, 1949, appointing the plaintiffs to be his agents for that purpose. The document further provided that, in consideration of the plaintiffs' agreeing to be his agents for the said purpose: "I agree that I will not revoke this authority or determine your agency for the purpose aforesaid during the period of twelve weeks from this date. If a sale is effected of the said business and property by you at any price to which I may agree or by me or anyone else at any price whatever during the said period I will pay you a commission of two per cent. of the purchase price of the property and five per cent. of the purchase price of the valuation and effects however sold and that such commission shall be paid to you together with such expenses incurred by you relevant to this sale at your offices on the day when such sale is agreed to be completed whether the purchase is in fact completed or not." The plaintiffs introduced G., and a price was agreed on, but G. was unable to raise the necessary money, no contract was signed, and the negotiations ceased. On May 12, 1949, the defendant, through his solicitor, wrote to the plaintiffs purporting to withdraw his instructions for the sale of his property, and on May 17, 1949, the plaintiffs replied regretting that the defendant had withdrawn his property and enclosing a bill for £10 10s. for expenses. On May 18, 1949, the defendant approached G., offered to reduce the price formerly agreed on and to allow a substantial part thereof to remain outstanding on the security of a second mortgage and a promissory note. G. accepted, on May 28, 1949, a contract for the sale was entered into, and on June 1, 1949, the purchase was completed by conveyance. On the same day, the defendant paid to the plaintiffs the £10 10s. claimed by them. In an action in which the plaintiffs claimed commission on the sale, the court found that the defendant had not acted fraudulently.

HELD: although, at the time of his introduction by the plaintiffs, G. had been willing to purchase, he was not then able to do so; by the time of the final agreement between G. and the defendant the plaintiffs' agency had been terminated by an agreement bona fide entered into by the defendant, and their introduction of G. had ceased to be an operating factor in the sale, the effective cause of which was the provision of financial assistance by the defendant; and, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled to commission.

AS TO REMUNERATION OF AGENTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 256-263, paras. 431-436; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 1, pp. 488-518, Nos. 1664-1801.

ACTION for payment of £310 alleged to be due to the plaintiffs, Jack Windle, Ltd., a firm of estate agents, as commission on the sale of the defendant's business and freehold premises.

The defendant desired to sell his freehold premises and the bakery business which he conducted thereon, and he signed a document, dated Mar. 11, 1949, and addressed to the plaintiffs, in the following form:

"I the undersigned Willie Brierley of 61 Bolton Street Blackpool hereby authorise you to be and appoint you to be my agent for the purpose of effecting a sale by private treaty of all that bakery business and freehold property known and nod. as 61 Bolton Street Blackpool at a price of £11,250, or alternatively at such price as I may agree to accept. In consideration of your agreeing to be my agent for the purposes aforesaid I agree that I will not revoke this authority or determine your agency for the purpose aforesaid during the period of twelve weeks from this date. If a sale is effected of the said business and property by you at any price to which I may agree or by me or anyone else at any price whatever during the said period I will pay you a commission of two per cent. of the purchase price of the property and five per cent. of the purchase price of the valuation and effects (sic) however sold and that such commission shall be paid to you together with such expenses incurred by you relevant to this sale at your offices on the day when such sale is agreed to be completed whether the purchase is in fact completed or not."

A

B

C

D

The plaintiffs introduced to the defendant, one Greatorex, as a prospective purchaser, and on Mar. 20, 1949, negotiations with regard to the price resulted in an oral agreement between the defendant and Mr. Greatorex that the latter should pay £10,300 for the premises and the business. Mr. Greatorex' offer of that sum was made (and accepted by the defendant) on the basis that Mr. Greatorex would be unable to enter into a formal contract to buy unless and until he had sold his own business premises. The plaintiffs made some attempt to sell Mr. Greatorex' premises for him, but without success, and Mr. Greatorex approached a finance company for a loan. On May 5, 1949, the company refused the loan. On May 7, 1949, Mr. Greatorex informed the defendant of the refusal, and the negotiations between them ceased. On May 12, 1949, the defendant's solicitor wrote to the plaintiffs:

"Re Brierley—61 Bolton Street, Blackpool. Mr. Brierley [the defendant] has seen me with further reference to his property and business and he has requested me to write you to withdraw the instructions for the sale of his property and business which he gave you some time ago."

On May 17, 1949, the plaintiffs replied:

E

F

"Re Brierley—61 Bolton Street, Blackpool. We are in receipt of your letter of the twelfth instant, and we regret that the vendor has now withdrawn his property and business for sale, as we feel sure we would have been able to sell it shortly. As you are doubtless aware, it is becoming increasingly difficult to effect sales of business premises, owing to the fact that the policy of the leading building societies is now not to advance money to intending purchasers of this type of property. Enclosed please find our statement of account."

A demand for charges amounting to £10 10s. was enclosed. On May 18, 1949, the defendant approached Mr. Greatorex again and offered to reduce the price and to permit £1,500 thereof to remain unpaid on the security of a second mortgage, and £3,200 on a promissory note. On May 28, 1949, a contract for sale was signed by the defendant and Mr. Greatorex, and the transaction was completed by conveyance on June 1, 1949. On the date of the completion, June 1, 1949, the defendant's solicitors sent the plaintiffs £10 10s. in settlement of their demand. On the same day the plaintiffs received information of the sale, and later claimed payment of commission in accordance with the agreement of Mar. 11, 1949.

H

Nelson, K.C., and C. Q. Henriques for the plaintiffs.
Wooll, K.C., and Somerville for the defendant.

LYNSKEY, J. (having stated the facts): The case for the plaintiffs is that there was no agreement to revoke the agency, and, in the absence of such an agreement, the agency could not be revoked; that, in fact, the ultimate purchaser was introduced by the plaintiffs, and that that introduction was the effective cause of the subsequent sale. They further say that, if they are wrong in their contention that there was no agreement to revoke, then, if there was such an agreement, the agreement was induced by fraud on the part of the defendant.

The case really depends on the circumstances. I am satisfied that the defendant's letter of May 12, 1949, was an indication to the plaintiffs that their instructions had been withdrawn and that their letter of May 17 assented to that withdrawal. They assented on the terms that they should be paid a sum which could not be claimed under the agency document, because under it their expenses were only payable in the event of their procuring a sale, and at that date they had procured no sale. They were prepared to assent to the revocation on those terms, and those terms were in turn accepted by the defendant, and he sent a cheque in compliance with the terms. It is said that there was fraud, and the fraud alleged is as follows:

"The plaintiffs claim damages for fraudulent misrepresentation in that by letter dated May 12, 1949, the defendant through his solicitor purported to withdraw the instructions for the sale of the said business and property . . . The plaintiffs, believing (as the defendant well knew) that the defendant had decided not to sell his said business and property, offered, by letter dated May 17, 1949, to agree to terminate the said agency subject to the defendant's paying their out of pocket expenses of £10 10s. The said offer was made solely on the basis that the defendant had decided not to sell the said business and property."

When particulars were asked for, the plaintiffs said that they relied entirely on the contents of the letter of May 12. Reading that letter, even with a suspicious eye, I cannot find in it any statement or representation on behalf of the defendant that he had withdrawn his business from sale on the market. That letter is simply a withdrawal of instructions. There is no representation that he has decided to continue in the business and not sell at all. It does not seem to me that by their letter of May 17 the plaintiffs are representing that their offer to accept his cancellation of the agency was based on the fact that he was not offering his business for sale to anybody else or through anybody else. I am, therefore, satisfied here that the allegation of fraud is completely false. In those circumstances, the correspondence as from May 12 amounts to an agreement to terminate the agency authority, at any rate as from May 12.

That does not dispose of the matter because the plaintiffs say: "Well, we introduced Mr. Greatorex. When we did so the arrangement was still in being, and his introduction was the effective cause of the subsequent sale. Therefore, we are entitled to commission notwithstanding the revocation of the agency." An agent is only entitled to commission if he introduces a ready, willing, and able purchaser. It is true that the plaintiffs introduced Mr. Greatorex, but at the time of the introduction and right up to May 17, although Mr. Greatorex was a willing purchaser, he was not an able purchaser. He had not the money. I am satisfied that on May 12 negotiations for the sale had ceased and the effect of the introduction, although to some degree it remained, was really no longer an operating factor in the sale of the property thereafter. Mr. Greatorex never became an able purchaser until the defendant provided the necessary finance on unsecured terms, relying for £3,200 of the purchase price on a promissory note and leaving £1,500 on mortgage. The effective cause of the subsequent sale to Mr. Greatorex was, not the introduction, but the provision of finance by the defendant which enabled the sale to take place. I am not satisfied that the introduction was the effective cause. In those circumstances I cannot find that any effort on the part of the plaintiffs was an effective cause of this sale, and this claim fails.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors: Scarr, Sons & Co., Blackpool (for the plaintiffs); Thomas Hunter, Blackpool (for the defendant).

[Reported by Miss M. D. CHORLTON, Barrister-at-Law.]

HARRIS v. HARRIS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Byrne and Parker, JJ.), January 30, 1952.]

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Discharge of order—Continued residence with husband for three months—Husband obtaining subsequent variation of order and remission of arrears under it—Husband not estopped from showing order had ceased to have effect—Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 1 (4).

After obtaining, in 1943, an order for maintenance against her husband, a wife, being unable to find other accommodation, by agreement with her husband continued for seven months to live with him, she being the joint tenant of the house, paying half the rent, and sharing the downstairs rooms, but occupying a separate bedroom. On occasion she laid the tea, lit a fire and did other housework for the husband, but she did not cook his meals. In 1948 the husband obtained a remission of £42 18s. arrears on the order, and an order reducing the sum payable. On a complaint relating to further arrears,

HELD: (i) the wife had "resided" with the husband for a period of three months after the order was made in 1943, and, therefore, by virtue of s. 1 (4) of the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, at the end of that period the order had ceased to have effect and the wife could not recover any arrears under it.

Evans v. Evans ([1947] 2 All E.R. 656), applied.

(ii) the husband was not estopped from relying on s. 1 (4) by reason of his having applied in 1948 for a variation of the order and being then granted a remission of the arrears then owing.

FOR THE SUMMARY JURISDICTION (SEPARATION AND MAINTENANCE) ACT, 1925, s. 1 (4), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 11, p. 864.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Evans v. Evans, [1947] 2 All E.R. 656; [1948] 1 K.B. 175; [1948] L.J.R. 276; 112 J.P. 23; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Thomas v. Thomas, [1948] 2 All E.R. 98; [1948] 2 K.B. 294; [1948] L.J.R. 1943; 112 J.P. 345; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Wheatley v. Wheatley, [1949] 2 All E.R. 428; [1950] 1 K.B. 39; 113 J.P. 459; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Wolverhampton justices.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Wolverhampton on July 19, Aug. 2, and Aug. 16, 1951, a complaint was preferred by the collecting officer of the court on behalf of the appellant wife that the respondent husband had not made weekly payments of £1 15s., which he had been directed to make under a separation order made under s. 5 (a) and (c) of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, by a court of summary jurisdiction on May 27, 1943, as last varied, on the application of the husband, on Mar. 11, 1948, and that the sum of £20 13s. was in arrear under the order. At the date of the original order and for seven months thereafter the wife lived with the husband in the same house, the tenancy being in their joint names and each paying half the rent. They shared the use of the downstairs rooms, but occupied different bedrooms. On occasion the wife laid the tea and lit a fire and did other housework for the husband, but she did not cook his meals. They normally occupied the same room downstairs when not at work, but in other respects they lived separately. The wife did not leave the house at the time of the original order because she had nowhere else to go and it was mutually agreed between the parties that she should remain for a time to enable her to find other accommodation if she paid half the rent. The wife contended that the husband had approbated the original order by obtaining a varying order and a remission of £42 18s. arrears in 1948 and that he could not now reprobate in regard thereto; that the original order had been superseded by the varying order; that the husband was estopped from showing that the original order was not still in force by his conduct in making the payments under the order and in obtaining a reduction in the payments and a remission of £42 18s. arrears; that the orders, not having been appealed against by the husband, should be enforced; and that the wife had not during the seven months "resided" with the husband within the meaning of the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, s. 1 (4). For the husband it was contended that the wife had resided with him during the seven months within the meaning of s. 1 (4), and, therefore, under that sub-section the original order had ceased to have effect and could not be revived. The justices held that the wife had resided with the husband for a period of more than three months after the making of the original order which, therefore, ceased to have effect under s. 1 (4) of the Act of 1925 and was unenforceable, and they dismissed the wife's application.

R. E. Chapman for the wife.

Syms for the husband.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices of the county borough of Wolverhampton before whom the husband was summoned for arrears under a maintenance order. [His LORDSHIP stated the facts and continued:] In the opinion of the justices the conditions under which the parties were living together during the seven months after the original order was made in no way differentiated this case from Evans v. Evans (1), which was distinguished in Thomas v. Thomas (2) and followed in Wheatley v. Wheatley (3). Those cases held, on the construction of the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, s. 1 (4), that if a wife, having obtained a maintenance order under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, did not leave her husband within three months, but continued to reside in the same house, although cohabitation in the full sense of cohabitation between husband and wife was not resumed, the order automatically came to an end.

The Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, enabled a woman for the first time to take proceedings against her husband while she was still living with him and without having to leave the house, but by s. 1 (4):

"No order made under the [Act of 1895] shall be enforceable and no liability shall accrue under any such order whilst the married woman with respect to whom the order was made resides with her husband, and any such order shall cease to have effect if for a period of three months after it is made the married woman continues to reside with her husband."

Observe the difference between the two parts of the sub-section. It is, apparently, contemplated that a wife who obtains an order might not be able to leave her husband forthwith, but that she must ultimately find some separate accommodation. The Act, therefore, provides that the order is to remain in force if she resides with her husband for less than three months while, for instance, she is looking for accommodation, but she cannot enforce it and obtain maintenance from her husband during that period. If that state of affairs continues for three months the order is to come to an end. As soon as she leaves her husband within the three months she can enforce the order. The words of the sub-section are perfectly clear.

On the question whether the wife continued to reside with her husband, the cases referred to are conclusive and binding on this court. "Residing" by the wife means living in the same house as her husband, and, whether they live on good terms or on bad and whether or not they speak to each other is not material. The courts which decided these cases—this may have some slight bearing on the point of estoppel which has been raised in this case—thought there was an obvious reason for Parliament putting these words into the section. It was never intended that the wife should get a double benefit by being able to enforce maintenance against her husband and at the same time live in his house, because the sum awarded is supposed to be for her board and lodging and if she is living in her husband's house she may be living rent free, though in the present case there seems to have been some arrangement by which the wife paid 10s. a week towards the rent. It is also undesirable from a public point of view that a wife

A should be living in the same house as her husband and at the same time insisting on his paying her maintenance under an order of the court. It might easily lead to serious assault and disturbance, or to the wife's being put out of the house summarily. The words "cease to have effect" in the Act of 1925 are different from the words in the Act of 1895, which, by s. 7 were:

B "If any married woman upon whose application an order shall have been made under this Act, or the Acts mentioned in the schedule hereto, or either of them, shall voluntarily resume cohabitation with her husband, or shall commit an act of adultery, such order shall upon proof thereof be discharged."

C Under the Act of 1895, if cohabitation were resumed, the husband had to apply to the court to get the order discharged. Only then would his liability under the order cease, but under s. 2 (2) of the Act of 1925 the order automatically comes to an end directly cohabitation is resumed, and under s. 1 (4) the order ceases to have effect as soon as the wife has lived in the house with her husband for three months after the making of the order.

D The justices have found here that the wife continued to live in the house with her husband, although under the conditions set out in the findings, for a period of seven months. The effect of that would be that their order automatically ceased to have effect at the end of three months. Neither party seemed to know of that provision. Both the husband and the wife went to the court, which made an order in 1948 varying the amount of the original order, but otherwise leaving it in force. We can only look on that order as an order made per incuriam and
E having no effect at all, because everything depends in this case on the original order which had ceased to operate because the wife had remained in the house for three months. We can only construe the words "shall cease to have effect" as meaning that the order becomes void and as though it had never been made. Counsel for the wife has argued that the husband is estopped from raising this point, but he cannot show us any authority for holding that a man is estopped
F from setting up that an Act of Parliament says that an order is to be of no effect. It is true that in some cases a person is entitled to waive the benefit of some provision in a statute which is inserted entirely for his particular benefit. The maxim is cui libet licet renuntiare jure pro se introductio, but we cannot take the view that public interest is altogether to be disregarded for the reasons I have given, which are fully dealt with in the cases referred to, especially Wheatley
G v. Wheatley (3).

H For these reasons we are bound to find that the justices had no jurisdiction to make this order because it was a variation of an order which under the section had come to an end. It may be, as I said in Wheatley v. Wheatley (3), that, if the attention of the legislature is called to this class of case, they may see fit to make an alteration in the law, because when the Act of 1925 was passed Parliament could not have anticipated the present great housing shortage and the difficulty of getting accommodation, and it is hard that an order should come to an end when the wife may be in a position of extreme difficulty in finding other accommodation. But we cannot alter the construction of statutes merely because there has been a change in circumstances. That is a matter for Parliament to deal with and not for the courts. The words of the statute here brought the order to an end, and it follows that the justices could not make the order they made and this appeal must be dismissed.

BYRNE, J.: In my opinion, this case is covered by the decision in Evans v. Evans (1). The result is that by virtue of s. 1 (4) of the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, the maintenance order ceased to have effect because the wife resided with her husband for seven months after the making of the order. It follows that the justices were right in holding that arrears under the order were unenforceable. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

PARKER, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Wainwright & Co., agents for Kendrick, Williams & Feibusch, Wolverhampton (for the wife); Willis & Willis, agents for A. C. Skidmore & Co., Wolverhampton (for the husband).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

KUSHNER v. LAW SOCIETY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Byrne and Parker, JJ.), January 31, 1951.]

Solicitor—Unqualified person preparing instrument—Estate agent—Lease for fourteen years determinable by tenant at end of any year—Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 47 (1), s. 47 (4) (b).

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Agreement not under seal—Validity—Term of fourteen years determinable by tenant at end of any year—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 52 (1), s. 52 (2) (d), s. 54 (2).

The appellant, an estate agent, prepared for reward an instrument which purported to be an agreement for a lease of certain property for a term of fourteen years commencing on Oct. 1, 1948. The document, which was not under seal, contained a term whereby the tenant could determine the lease at the end of any year. On being charged with an offence under the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47 (1), in that, not being a person qualified under that sub-section, he had prepared an instrument relating to personal estate, the appellant contended that no offence had been committed as (a) the instrument was an agreement under hand only, within the meaning of s. 47 (4) (b) of the Act of 1932, and (b) assuming that it was a lease and not a tenancy agreement, it was for a term which would not necessarily last for more than three years, and, therefore, under s. 52 (2) (d) and s. 54 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, it was not required to be under seal.

HELD: (i) an instrument which was void at law unless it was under seal, but, in fact, was not under seal, was not an "agreement under hand only" within s. 47 (4) (b) of the Act of 1932, and, therefore, if a person who was not qualified under s. 47 (1) drew or prepared such an instrument for reward he was guilty of an offence under s. 47 (1).

(ii) the instrument prepared by the appellant did not create a tenancy for a "term not exceeding three years", within the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 54 (2), but purported to create a lease for a term exceeding three years, notwithstanding the fact that the tenant could determine the term by notice within the three years: Ex p. Voisey. Re Knight (1882) (21 Ch.D. 442), distinguished; and, therefore, under s. 52 (1) of the Act of 1925, the instrument was void at law as it was not under seal, and the appellant was guilty of an offence against s. 47 (1).

AS TO CREATION OF LEASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 57-59, paras. 58-61; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Replacement, Vol. 30, pp. 458-460, Nos. 998-1016.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Harte v. Williams, [1934] 1 K.B. 201; 103 L.J.K.B. 108; 150 L.T. 238; Digest Supp.
- (2) Hanau v. Ehrlich, [1912] A.C. 39; 81 L.J.K.B. 397; 106 L.T. 1; 12 Digest, Replacement, 139, 869.
- (3) Ex p. Voisey. Re Knight, (1882), 21 Ch.D. 442; 52 L.J.Ch. 121; 47 L.T. 362; 30 Digest, Replacement, 459, 1006.

A

CASE STATED by County of London Quarter Sessions.

At a court of summary jurisdiction, sitting at Old Street Magistrate's Court, on informations preferred on behalf of the respondent, the Law Society, the appellant, an estate agent, was convicted of offences against the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47 (1), in that, not being a barrister or a duly qualified solicitor or other person specified in the sub-section, he had, on or about Sept. 27, 1948, prepared instruments relating to personal estate, viz., agreements for the tenancies of two flats. The appellant appealed to quarter sessions, the appeals being heard together on May 16, 1951. The instrument referred to in the first information purported to be an agreement for the lease of a flat for a term of fourteen years. It was contended for the appellant (a) that the instrument was not an "instrument" within the meaning of s. 47 (1) of the Solicitors Act, 1932, since by s. 47 (4) (b) of the Act the expression "instrument" did not include an agreement under hand only, and the instrument prepared by him was under hand only; (b) assuming that the instrument was a lease and not a tenancy agreement, it was for a term which would not necessarily last for more than three years, in that by cl. (1) (i) thereof the landlords had the right, exercisable in certain circumstances, to determine the term on five months' notice, and, by cl. (3) (d) thereof, the tenant had the right to determine the term at the end of any year, and, therefore, having regard to s. 52 (2) (d) and s. 54 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, the lease was not required to be made by deed. It was contended for the respondent that the instrument was not "an agreement under hand only", within s. 47 (4) (b) of the Act of 1932, and that the case fell within Harte v. Williams ([1934] 1 K.B. 201). Quarter sessions held that the instrument was an instrument within the meaning of s. 47 and dismissed the appeals.

Solley for the appellant.

Cumming-Bruce for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The appellant was convicted of an offence against the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47 (1), which is in much the same terms as s. 44 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and s. 60 of the Finance Act, 1921. Section 47 (1) was designed to prevent the preparation of certain documents by persons who are not legally qualified. Section 47 (1) provides:

"Any person, not being a barrister, or a duly certificated solicitor . . . who, for or in expectation of any fee, gain or reward, either directly or indirectly, draws or prepares any instrument relating to real or personal estate, or any legal proceeding, shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £50."

Section 47 (4), provides:

"For the purposes of this section, the expression 'instrument' does not include . . . (b) an agreement under hand only . . ."

The offence consists, not in procuring the execution of a document, but in drawing or preparing it. Therefore, the offence is complete as soon as the document which is drawn or prepared comes within s. 47. It seems to me that the section must be construed as meaning that, if a person draws or prepares a document which, if it is to be a valid document, must have a seal on it at the time of execution, he commits an offence, and he commits the offence none the less although the document, when executed, does not have a seal on it. Therefore, the question which the court always has to consider in these cases is whether the document which is drawn or prepared is a document which, for the purpose for which it is intended, would require to be a deed or whether it can be equally effective if it is under hand only.

That point does not seem to have emerged very clearly in Harte v. Williams (1), especially as LAWRENCE, J. (in his dissenting judgment), seems to have thought that, if the document did not have a seal when it was produced, it was an agreement under hand only and an offence had not been committed. The offence, however, lies in preparing the document, and, if it is a document which is void at law unless it is under seal, the fact that a seal is never put on it, in my opinion, makes no difference to the offence. Counsel for the appellant did not really dispute that proposition, but he contended that the document in question is of a nature which requires only to be under hand and not under seal, as it is merely an agreement and not a deed. Without going too far into the history of the matter, suffice it to say this. The Statute of Frauds, 1677, s. 3, provided, for the first time, that leases, among other things relating to estates in land, must be by deed or note in writing. By s. 1, if an interest in land was created by parol, it would have the force and effect of an interest at will only. By s. 2, leases for a term not exceeding three years were not required to be in writing. By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 52:

"(1) All conveyances of land or of any interest therein are void for the purpose of conveying or creating a legal estate unless made by deed. (2) This section does not apply to . . . (d) leases or tenancies or other assurances not required by law to be made in writing."

Therefore, those interests which the Statute of Frauds required to be in writing now have to be made by deed, but those which the Statute of Frauds did not require to be in writing need not be made by deed, and, under s. 54 (2) of the Act of 1925 (which replaces s. 2 of the Statute of Frauds), a lease for a period not exceeding three years can still be by parol.

The question which we have to determine is: Is the document which was prepared by the appellant a lease for a period exceeding three years? The document is in these terms:

"An agreement made this Sept. 27, 1948, between B. Fordyce Ltd. . . . by Sighismond Berger their duly authorised officer empowered to sign tenancy agreements under hand (hereinafter called 'the landlord') of the one part and Eric James Clarke, Esq. . . . (hereinafter called 'the tenant') of the other part whereby the landlord agrees to let and the tenant agrees to take [then the parcels are set out] for the term of fourteen years certain (determinable nevertheless as hereinafter mentioned) to commence from Oct. 1, 1948, yielding and paying therefor (a) the sum of £150 to be paid on or before the execution hereof, (b) the rent of £8 12s. 5d. to be paid in advance on the Monday of each month."

The usual tenant's covenants found in a lease of this description are set out, and then there is this provision, which was to some extent relied on by the appellant:

"In the event of the London Passenger Transport Board from whom the landlords hold the building requiring the building or any part thereof for any purposes connected with its undertaking or any other works connected therewith or with the development or improvement of its property (of which the board is to be the sole judge) and shall give notice to the landlords in that behalf the landlords shall be entitled to give to the tenant notice in writing thereof and of their desire to terminate this agreement and thereupon at the expiration of five calendar months after the service of such notice this agreement and everything herein contained shall cease and be void . . ."

That is a provision for defeasance if the superior landlords exercise rights which they possess. Then there are the landlord's covenants and a proviso:

"If the tenant shall desire to determine the term hereby granted at the end of any year thereof and shall give up to the landlord one month's previous notice in writing of such his desire and shall up to the time of such determination pay the rent and observe and perform the agreements on his part hereinbefore reserved and contained then immediately upon the expiration of such year as the case may be the present letting and everything herein contained shall cease and be void but without prejudice to the rights and remedies of either party against the other in respect of any antecedent breach or claim of agreement."

Counsel for the appellant contended that, although the term of fourteen years is the term for which the premises are stated to be let, this is not a lease for fourteen years, because the tenant has a right during the tenancy to put an end to the term. Counsel also relied on the provision that the landlord can give notice, but I do not think that that is a strong point. The notice is to be given if the superior landlords require the premises. Every tenant is liable to be disturbed by the act of the superior landlord, if there is one with a title paramount to that of the lessor, but I have never heard it suggested that that causes any uncertainty as to the term which has been granted. Prima facie, without considering any authorities, I should have thought it abundantly clear that this document purports to vest a term of fourteen years in the tenant, giving him a right to put an end to that term if he wishes to do so. It is immaterial whether the document is called an agreement or a lease, as it is the effect of the document and not what the parties choose to call it which matters. Counsel for the appellant contends that the tenancy created by the document is to be considered as a yearly tenancy because the tenant may determine the tenancy at the end of any year by giving a month's previous notice. It seems to me that we must apply to this document the same principle which has always been applied to the construction of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds which provides that contracts not to be performed within a year must be in writing. The principle of law, which is now well established and was re-affirmed by the House of Lords in 1912 in Hanau v. Ehrlich (2), is that, if the contract is for an indefinite time but can be determined by either party at reasonable notice within the year, the statute does not apply, but, if the contract is for a definite period extending beyond the year, though it may be concluded by notice within a year, the statute does apply. The agreement now before us purports to create a lease for fourteen years with a provision that it may be determined earlier. Notwithstanding that provision, the lease is for a definite period. As it is not under seal it is invalid in law, but, if it had been under seal, it would confer a title on the tenant to remain in possession of the premises for fourteen years.

The only point that has come up for serious consideration in the present case arises because of dicta in certain text-books in which it is said, on the authority of Ex p. Voisey. Re Knight (3), that s. 1 of the Statute of Frauds (which has been replaced by s. 54 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925) applies only where the tenancy, if good, must of necessity last for more than three years. The facts in Ex p. Voisey (3) were, however, different from those in the case now before us, and I do not think that the decision in that case affects the present matter where the agreement purported to create a definite term exceeding three years. In Ex p. Voisey (1) the tenancy which might eventuate was to be a tenancy from month to month. If there is a tenancy from month to month, or from quarter to quarter, or from week to week, or from year to year, it may, of course, go on for an indefinite period. There are many properties in this country which have been held by the same tenants for years on what are generally called "short period" tenancies which can be determined by the landlord giving notice. The fact that a tenancy of that kind may go on for a number of years does not make it invalid if it is not by way of deed. I think that is all that Voisey's case (3) decides. There is the additional fact, which counsel for the respondent pointed out to us, that the tenancy in that case came into existence only if default was made under a mortgage deed, and, therefore, it was not known when the tenancy would begin.

In my view, the document in the present case was one which, if it had been legally executed, would have vested a term of fourteen years in the tenant notwithstanding the fact that he could terminate the tenancy at an earlier date. The matter, in my opinion, is not affected by the clause whereby the landlord could terminate the tenancy if his superior landlord claimed possession of the whole premises. Accordingly, in my opinion, the document was prepared in breach of the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47 (1). Quarter sessions came to a right decision, and this appeal fails.

BYRNE, J.: I agree.

PARKER, J.: I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Bernard Solley & Co. (for the appellant); Hempsons (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BOUVERIE (deceased). BOUVERIE AND ANOTHER v. MARSHALL AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), January 30, 1952.]

Will—Condition—Condition subsequent—Certainty—Name and arms clause—“Disuse.”

By his will a testator settled certain freehold estates on various persons in succession and provided that every person who should under the limitations therein become entitled as tenant for life or tenant in tail male or in tail by purchase to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits of the settled freeholds “shall within one year after he or she shall so become entitled or being an infant shall within one year after he or she shall attain the age of twenty-one years and also the husband of every female so becoming entitled . . . shall within one year after such female shall so become entitled or marry whichever shall last happen assume the surname of Bouverie either with or without his or her own proper surname and apply for proper authority to bear the arms of Pleydell Bouverie . . . and in case such authority is obtained shall forthwith assume such arms . . . And if the person so entitled as aforesaid or in the case of a married woman her husband shall refuse or neglect within such year to assume such surname or to apply for such authority as aforesaid or shall at any time afterwards disuse such surname from any cause other than becoming a peer or peeress or becoming entitled to use and using by courtesy the title of a peer or peeress or shall at any time after obtaining such authority disuse such arms Then and in every such case immediately after the expiration of such year or such disuser if the person so entitled as aforesaid shall be a tenant for life he or she shall during the remainder of his or her life . . . hold the rents and profits of the settled freeholds in trust for the person or persons who would for the time being be entitled to the same if the person so entitled as aforesaid were dead . . . and if the person so entitled as aforesaid shall be tenant in tail” then his or her estate in tail should determine.

HELD: it was impossible to define what degree of “disuser” was intended to cause the defeasance of the interest vested in the tenant for life or tenant in tail, and, therefore, the defeasance clause was void for uncertainty.

Dictum of LORD ROMER in Sifton v. Sifton ([1938] 3 All E.R. 445), applied.

AS TO NAME AND ARMS CLAUSE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 789-792, paras. 1097, 1098; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 35, pp. 705-709, 711, 712, Nos. 55-80, 95-98.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Fry, [1945] 2 All E.R. 205; [1945] Ch. 348; 115 L.J.Ch. 3; 173 L.T. 282; 2nd Digest Supp.
- A (2) Re Lewis' Will Trusts, [1951] W.N. 591.
- (3) Clavering v. Ellison, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 707; 29 L.J.Ch. 761; 11 E.R. 282; 44 Digest 440, 2667.
- (4) Sifton v. Sifton, [1938] 3 All E.R. 435; [1938] A.C. 656; 107 L.J.P.C. 97; 159 L.T. 289; Digest Supp.
- B (5) Clayton v. Ramsden, [1943] 1 All E.R. 16; [1943] A.C. 320; 112 L.J.Ch. 22; 168 L.T. 113; 2nd Digest Supp.

C ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, on the true construction of the will of Henry Hales Pleydell Bouverie, deceased, and in the events which had happened, the condition contained in the name and arms clause in the said will was binding on the defendant, Patricia Marshall, the tenant for life. The relevant parts of the clause are set out in the headnote.

J. H. A. Sparrow for the plaintiffs, the trustees of the deceased's will.

Graetz for the first defendant, the tenant for life.

Peter Foster for the second defendant, an infant entitled in remainder.

D VAISEY, J.: The testator in this case, Mr. Henry Hales Pleydell Bouverie, made his will on Feb. 10, 1925, and died on Dec. 12 in the same year. By cl. 8 of his will he devised all his lands, messuages and hereditaments in the county of Somerset to trustees to the use of his nephew, Mr. Philip Hales Pleydell Bouverie, and his assigns during his life, with remainder to the use of the nephew's sons successively in tail male and in tail, with remainder to the use of the nephew's daughters successively in remainder one after the other in tail male and in tail.

E The nephew survived the testator, and died on Apr. 30, 1951, leaving issue three daughters of whom the eldest, Mrs. Patricia Marshall, is the first defendant to this application. Under the provisions of cl. 9 of the will, Mrs. Marshall, having been born in the lifetime of the testator, had the tenancy in tail conferred on her by the preceding clause cut down to a life interest. She was married on Mar. 19, 1949, to her present husband, Mr. John Marshall, and she has issue a son,

F the second, (infant) defendant, who, under the substituted limitations contained in cl. 9 of the will, is now tenant in tail expectant on his mother's life interest. The estates in the county of Somerset were sold during the nephew's lifetime and are now represented partly by investments and partly by some other real property situate in Berkshire.

G The question which now arises depends on the true construction and effect of cl. 10 of the will which is to the effect that every person who under the limitations becomes entitled as tenant for life or tenant in tail male or in tail by purchase to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits of the settled freeholds (with certain exceptions which I need not enumerate), and also the husband of any female becoming so entitled, should assume the surname and arms of Bouverie. If the person so entitled as aforesaid, or, in the case of a married

H woman, her husband, should refuse or neglect within a year to assume such surname or to apply for authority to use such arms, or should at any time afterwards disuse such surname, or should at any time after obtaining such authority disuse such arms, then and in every such case immediately after the expiration of such year or such disuser if the person so entitled as aforesaid should be a tenant for life, he or she should during the remainder of his or her life, but without prejudice to the uses estates or powers preceding or overriding his or her estate as aforesaid and to the uses and estates limited in exercise of such powers, hold the rents and profits of the settled freeholds in trust for the person or persons who would for the time being be entitled to the same if the person so entitled as aforesaid were dead. The question is as to the validity of that "name and arms clause", as it is popularly called.

The immediate question which I have to decide is whether that condition of defeasance is binding on the first defendant or not. I have had to consider similar questions on two occasions—in Re Fry (1), and in Re Lewis' Will Trusts (2). This case is, in a way, a simpler case, because of the two points which arose in those two previous cases only one emerges here. It all depends, I think, on the certitude or otherwise of one word—"disuse." If this condition subsequent is to be operative at all, its operation must be quite certain. There must be no doubt on the question whether at any given moment of time the condition has or has not taken effect, the condition in question being the disuse of the arms and the disuse of the name. In my judgment, although the meaning of the word "disuse" is sufficiently plain in the colloquial sense, it is more than doubtful whether it is of that high degree of certitude and precision which is required in the case of a condition subsequent, i.e., a condition which takes away an estate previously conferred. A
B

The leading authorities on the matter are those to which I referred in Re Lewis (2), i.e., Clavering v. Ellison (3), Sifton v. Sifton (4), and Clayton v. Ramsden (5). I said in Re Lewis (2), and I say again, that the court should lean strongly against the defeasance clause unless it is drawn with the utmost and highest degree of certitude. The way LORD ROMER put the matter in Sifton v. Sifton (4) was this ([1938] 3 All E.R. 445): C

"If the clause in question be in truth a condition subsequent . . . it can be of no validity unless, to use the words of LORD CRANWORTH [in Clavering v. Ellison (3) (7 H.L. Cas. 725)], the court—and, their Lordships venture to add, the parties concerned—can see from the beginning precisely and distinctly upon the happening of what events it is that the payments to the appellant are to cease." D

It seems to me that that observation is appropriate to the present case. Mrs. Marshall and her husband must be able, if this condition subsequent is effective, to see from the beginning precisely and distinctly on what event it is that Mrs. Marshall's estate for life is to be terminated. I am fully aware of the fact that these name and arms clauses have been used in accordance with well known precedents for a very great number of years, but, in my judgment, the cases to which I have alluded have put a very different complexion on the manner in which these conditions subsequent are approached. I am not, and I cannot, indeed, be, moved by the fact that my decision may affect a large number of other cases in which this point has not been taken. E
F

Applying the test to the present case, I ask myself: Can Mrs. Marshall and her husband say precisely and exactly what they have to do or refrain from doing in order to prevent any transfer of the lady's estate under the gift over? It does not require very much ingenuity to imagine a large number of borderline cases. Of course, if the lady ceased to use the name Bouverie altogether, and never used it again, never mentioned it, and never allowed it to be used in conjunction with her own name, then that would be an obvious case. But to what extent and for what period of time has the "disuse" referred to in the clause to take effect? Would it be a breach of it if from time to time the lady, having adopted the name of Bouverie for general purposes, occasionally referred to herself by her former name of Mrs. Marshall, and occasionally used that name when giving an order in a shop in London? How often would she have to omit the use of the word "Bouverie" to bring about the forfeiture for which the clause provides? What percentage short of one hundred per cent. of the disuser of the name would amount to a disuser of it within the meaning of the clause? Those questions, in my judgment, are incapable of being answered, and, that G being so, it seems to me that this condition is not so framed as to satisfy the exacting requirements of the law as laid down in the highest tribunals in the cases to which I have referred. It is not a question of the position if Mrs. Marshall were to omit to use the name or to omit to use the arms on five occasions, ten occasions, or twenty occasions. That is not the criterion. In my judgment, one has to construe the very uncertain and ambiguous, and, if I may say so, slippery, word "disuse." I quoted in Re Lewis (2) a sentence which I obtained from the NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY—where the statement is made by Dean Swift "... that I had disused family prayers for about five years." I daresay he had. But at what moment of time would that disuse have caused the cesser of an estate limited to Dean Swift and given over in the case of his disuse of family prayers? The answer is that nobody can tell. The whole matter is completely uncertain.
H

Although as counsel for the infant defendant pointed out, the word "discontinue" is probably in not much better case, I thought at one time that it was more descriptive of a single act than the word "disuse". I am, however, not at all certain that the word "discontinue" is not open to the same objection as the word "disuse", but I am not going to say anything further about that because that is not the word which is in question here. I think that "disuse" is a word which signifies in a vague manner the slipping of a custom or a tendency and is not referable to a definite act which would enable anybody, either prospectively or retrospectively, to say on what day and at what moment this estate was forfeited. In my judgment, it is not possible, either prospectively or retrospectively, to see the exact moment of time at which the disuse of the name or of the arms will occur to such an extent and to such a degree as would, on the true meaning of this will, cause the gift over to take effect. I propose to declare that the condition contained in cl. 10 of the testator's will is void for uncertainty.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Ellis, Peirs & Co. (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. HOLSWORTHY JUSTICES AND ANOTHER. Ex parte EDWARDS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Byrne and Parker, JJ.), January 31, 1952.]

Justices—Common assault—"Execution under the process of any court of justice"—Service of summons by county court bailiff—Jurisdiction of justices—Procedure to be followed—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 46—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 31.

The applicant, a county court bailiff, laid an information under s. 42 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, against the respondent charging him with assault while he (the applicant) was serving a default summons on him. At the hearing it was submitted for the respondent that the jurisdiction of the justices was ousted by s. 46 of the Act of 1861 and also that s. 31 of the County Courts Act, 1934, which prescribes a penalty for assaulting officers of the county court, took the case out of s. 42. The justices decided they had no jurisdiction to hear the information. On an application for an order of mandamus directing them to do so,

HELD: the service of the summons was not an "execution under the process of a court of justice" within s. 46 of the Act of 1861, and, therefore, the jurisdiction of the justices under s. 42 to hear and determine the applicant's information was not ousted; the effect of s. 31 of the County Courts Act, 1934, was not by implication to take such a case as the present out of the scope of s. 42; and, accordingly, an order would be made directing the justices to hear and determine the information.

R. v. Briggs (1883) (47 J.P. 615), applied.

Per curiam: Where, on the hearing of an information charging an assault, any question arises as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein or accruing therefrom, or as to any bankruptcy or insolvency, or as to any execution under the process of a court, or if, under a charge under the Larceny Act, 1916, a claim of right arises, justices should not dismiss the information, but should take depositions and, if they find that a prima facie case is made out, should commit the defendant for trial. A

AS TO PENALTY FOR ASSAULTING COUNTY COURT BAILIFFS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 8, p. 161, para. 247; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 13, p. 454, Nos. 43 and 53.

FOR THE OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON ACT, 1861, s. 42 and s. 46, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 5, p. 802 and p. 805, respectively; and FOR THE COUNTY COURTS ACT, 1934, s. 31, see ibid., p. 31. B

Case referred to:

(1) R. v. Briggs, (1883), 47 J.P. 615; 13 Digest 454, 53.

MOTION for an order of mandamus directing the justices of the Holsworthy (Devon) petty sessional division to hear and determine an information preferred by the applicant, Leonard Arthur Edwards, a bailiff appointed under the County Courts Act, 1934, in respect of an assault on him by the respondent, Richard Cecil Barkell, contrary to s. 42 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861. The justices declined to hear the information, holding that they had no jurisdiction by reason of s. 46 of the Act of 1861 and s. 31 of the County Courts Act, 1934. C

R. J. Parker (J. P. Ashworth with him) for the applicant. D

Besley for the respondent.

The justices did not appear.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: We are asked to grant an order of mandamus directing the justices to hear and determine a summons under s. 42 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, which relates to the penalties for common assault. The evidence shows that the applicant, a county court bailiff, went to serve a default summons on the respondent, a butcher carrying on business in Holsworthy. The respondent assaulted the applicant when he attempted to serve the summons, and the applicant thereupon laid an information under s. 42 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861. At the hearing the respondent's advocate took the point that the jurisdiction of the justices to deal with the matter was excluded by s. 46 of the Act of 1861 and also that s. 31 of the County Courts Act, 1934, deals with assaults on bailiffs, and, therefore, impliedly excludes bailiffs from the operation of s. 42. E

All these points are untenable. Section 42 deals with an assault, and if an assault has been committed, prima facie that section applies. Section 46 provides that the jurisdiction of the justices to hear and determine a charge of assault is ousted in F

" . . . any case of assault or battery in which any question shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein or accruing therefrom, or as to any bankruptcy or insolvency, or any execution under the process of any court of justice." G

Serving a summons is not an "execution under the process of any court of justice"; it is simply the commencement of process. The phrase, "execution under process" is perfectly well understood. It means here that where an execution is put in following on a process of the court and some question as to the execution arises the jurisdiction of the justices is ousted. In the present case it is impossible to say that there has either been an execution under a process or that any question arose as to an execution under a process. R. v. Briggs (1) is perfectly clear on the subject, and it also shows that there is nothing in the H argument that the existence of the remedy in the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 31, has the effect of taking the case out of s. 42 of the Act of 1861.

I take this opportunity of saying, because there is a certain amount of misapprehension sometimes in courts of summary jurisdiction, that if a claim of right arises, as it may under the Larceny Act, 1916, or if a question arises with regard to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments in an assault case, or a question arises as to any execution under the process of the court, it does not mean that the justices should dismiss the summons because they have not power to hear and determine it. They must act as if the offence was one only triable on indictment, take the depositions, and commit for trial if they find a prima facie case made out. Even if there was anything in the points submitted to the justices in this case they should not have dismissed the information, but should have sent the case for trial. The order of mandamus must go directing them to hear and determine the case, they having full jurisdiction to do so under s. 42 of the Act of 1861.

BYRNE, J.: I agree.

PARKER, J.: I agree.

Order for mandamus.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor (for the applicant); Masons (for the respondent).
[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BENNETT v. BENNETT.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Denning and Romer, L.JJ.), January 15, 16, 17, February 1, 1952.]

Deed—Unenforceability—Public policy—Divorce—Undertaking by wife petitioner not to take proceedings for maintenance.

Divorce—Maintenance—Undertaking in deed by wife petitioner not to take proceedings for maintenance—Covenant by husband to pay annuity for wife—Unenforceability of wife's undertaking—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 19 (2) (3).

On Aug. 10, 1948, a wife presented a petition for the dissolution of her marriage in which she asked for the custody of the two sons of the marriage, maintenance of the younger son, and maintenance and a secured provision for herself. The petition was not defended. On Nov. 24, 1948, the parties, in anticipation of the decree, entered into a deed by which, inter alia, the husband undertook to pay two annuities, one for the wife and one for the younger son, in consideration of the wife's covenanting "(a) to accept the provisions . . . made for her and the younger son in full satisfaction of all rights and claims" included in the petition of herself and the two children for maintenance, "(b) not to proceed further with the prayer in her petition" for such reliefs, and "(c) not to institute . . . or proceed with nor to procure suggest assist or encourage . . . either in her own right or on behalf of her said two children or either of them any . . . proceedings for" such reliefs. On the same day the prayer in the petition for maintenance was dismissed by a registrar by consent. On Dec. 6, 1948, the decree nisi was granted, and on June 19, 1949, it was made absolute. In an action by the wife for payment of instalments of the annuities, DEVLIN, J., held that the wife's promise not to take proceedings for maintenance on behalf of her child was contrary to public policy, and, therefore, the deed was void and the husband's covenants to pay the annuities unenforceable. On appeal, it was conceded by the wife that her covenants relating to the child were unenforceable, but she contended that those relating to her own maintenance were not, that they were severable from those relating to the child, and that the husband remained bound by his covenants to pay the annuities,

HELD: the whole, or main, consideration moving from the wife for the payment by the husband of her annuity was her promise not to invoke the jurisdiction of the court under s. 190 (1) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (now s. 19 (2) of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950), a promise which was contrary to public policy, and, therefore, the covenants sought to be enforced were unenforceable against the husband.

Hyman v. Hyman ([1929] A.C. 601), applied.

Per SOMERVELL, L.J.: Any application to delete, amend, or dismiss a claim in a petition for maintenance on the ground that the husband has made provision should be left to be dealt with by the judge at the hearing, and, if made to a registrar before the hearing, should be adjourned.

Per DENNING, L.J.: If the parties do not oust the jurisdiction of the Divorce Court, but preserve it by making their agreement subject to the sanction of the court, then, once it is sanctioned, it is valid: The court, however, cannot, and will not, give its sanction before decree nisi. It has itself no jurisdiction before decree nisi to deal with permanent maintenance. Its jurisdiction only arises "on" the decree. If the parties agree on a figure for maintenance, the court should be asked to make an order for that figure. If they agree on a secured provision, the court should be asked to approve the deed which contains the provision. If they agree on a lump sum in composition of maintenance, the court should be asked to dismiss an application for maintenance or to discharge the existing order, as the case may be, but it would be entitled to refuse to do so if it did not think it proper to permit the composition.

Decision of DEVLIN, J. ([1951] 1 All E.R. 1088), affirmed.

EDITORIAL NOTE. Section 190 (1) and (2) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (relating to maintenance) and s. 193 (relating to custody of children) were repealed by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, and their provisions were re-enacted respectively by s. 19 (2) and (3) and s. 26 of that Act.

AS TO CONTRACTS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE WHICH ARE CONTRARY TO PUBLIC POLICY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 157, 158, paras. 222, 223; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 221-223, Nos. 1924-1933, and Digest Supps.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hyman v. Hyman, [1929] P. 1; affd. H.L. [1929] A.C. 601; 98 L.J.P. 81; 141 L.T. 329; 93 J.P. 209; Digest Supp.
- (2) Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co., [1922] 2 K.B. 478; 92 L.J.K.B. 81; 127 L.T. 824; 16 Digest 116, 151.
- (3) Hopkins v. Prescott, (1847), 4 C.B. 578; 16 L.J.C.P. 259; 9 L.T.O.S. 223; 11 J.P. 680; 136 E.R. 634; 15 Digest 665, 7175.
- (4) Waite v. Jones, (1835), 1 Bing. N.C. 656; 27 Digest 219, 1901.
- (5) Goldsohl v. Goldman, [1915] 1 Ch. 292; 17 Digest 85, 41.
- (6) Scott v. Scott, [1921] P. 107; 90 L.J.P. 171; 124 L.T. 619; 27 Digest 510, 5486.
- (7) Mills v. Mills, [1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124; 109 L.J.P. 86; 163 L.T. 272; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Fisher v. Fisher, [1942] 1 All E.R. 438; [1942] P. 101; 111 L.J.P. 28; 166 L.T. 225; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Price v. Green, (1847), 16 M. & W. 346; 16 L.J.Ex. 108; 9 L.T.O.S. 296; 153 E.R. 1222; 17 Digest 141, 448.
- (10) Evans (Joseph) & Co. v. Heathcote, [1918] 1 K.B. 418; 87 L.J.K.B. 593; 118 L.T. 556; 12 Digest, Replacement, 324, 2497.

- (11) Wyatt v. Kreglinger & Fernau, [1933] 1 K.B. 793; 102 L.J.K.B. 325; 148 L.T. 521; Digest Supp.
- (12) Bishop v. Kitchin, (1868), 30 L.J.Q.B. 20; 12 Digest, Replacement, 314, 2424.
- (13) Kearney v. Whitehaven Colliery Co., [1893] 1 Q.B. 700; 62 L.J.M.C. 129; 68 L.T. 690; 57 J.P. 645; 12 Digest, Replacement, 330, 2553.
- A (14) Gaisberg v. Storr, [1949] 2 All E.R. 411; [1950] 1 K.B. 107; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (15) Combe v. Combe, [1951] 1 All E.R. 767; [1951] 2 K.B. 215.

APPEAL by the wife from an order of DEVLIN, J., made on Apr. 27, 1951, and reported [1951] 1 All E.R. 1088, in an action for the payment of instalments of two annuities alleged to be due under a deed.

- B The plaintiff was the former wife of the defendant from whom she had obtained a divorce. In a deed entered into by the husband and the wife in anticipation of the decree the husband had covenanted, inter alia, to pay the wife two annuities in consideration of her undertaking not to proceed with the prayer in her petition for alimony, maintenance, and other relief for herself and her younger son and not to take other proceedings for those reliefs. DEVLIN, J.,
- C held that it was contrary to public policy for the wife to promise not to apply to the court for maintenance for her son, and, therefore, the deed was void and the husband's covenants to pay the annuities were unenforceable. On appeal, it was conceded by the wife that so much of her covenant as related to the son was unenforceable, but it was contended that this did not make the whole agreement void, that the wife's covenant with regard to her own maintenance was not contrary to public policy, and, therefore, the husband was not
- D relieved from his obligations under the deed.

Cross, K.C., and Fairweather for the wife.

Sachs, K.C., and Brodbrick for the husband.

Cur. adv. vult.

- E Feb. 1. The following judgments were read.

- SOMERVELL, L.J.: In this case the plaintiff claims £262 10s. as instalments due under a deed. The plaintiff and the defendant were previously wife and husband respectively, having been married in 1926. On Aug. 10, 1948, the wife presented a petition for dissolution of the marriage. In the petition she claimed, inter alia, maintenance for a son born in 1935, and maintenance and
- F secured provision for herself. There was another son born in 1928 with whom we are not concerned. On Nov. 24, 1948, the deed sued on, to which the wife, the husband, and two trustees were parties, was signed. On the same day the registrar, on being told of the deed, dismissed the application for maintenance in the petition. On Dec. 6, 1948, the matter came on for hearing and a decree nisi was granted. The petition was not defended. The decree was made
- G absolute on June 19, 1949. The defence is, first, that the consideration, or part of the consideration, moving from the wife was an undertaking not to invoke the jurisdiction of the court in respect of maintenance for herself or for her child and this was void as being contrary to public policy: Hyman v. Hyman (1). Therefore, it was said, the whole deed was void. In Hyman v. Hyman (1) the House of Lords decided that a covenant with regard to a wife
- H not applying to the court was unenforceable. The House did not have before it the question whether the existence of this covenant voided the whole deed so that the husband could, as he seeks to do here, have repudiated liability on his covenants. They held that the jurisdiction conferred on the court to order maintenance was not only in the interest of the wife but also in that of the public.

Before the learned judge the main argument appears to have been that no part of the clause in this case was contrary to public policy. The learned judge held that, in so far as the wife had promised not to apply to the court in respect of maintenance for her son under s. 193 (1) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, this was contrary to public policy. He then proceeded on the basis that, if part of the consideration for a promise was contrary to public policy, the whole promise was unenforceable, and he gave judgment for the husband. Before us it was conceded by counsel for the wife that so much of the wife's covenant, which I will consider in detail later, as related to the son was unenforceable. On this basis his argument was, first, that the fact that part of the consideration was unenforceable as contrary to public policy did not in a case of this kind make the whole agreement void. Reliance was placed by way of analogy on the decision in Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co. (2). In that case this court held that part of an arbitration clause which purported to preclude an application to the court for a "consultative case" was void and contrary to public policy as involving an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the court. It seems, however, clear that the court did not regard that as making void the arbitration clause generally, still less the agreement in which it was contained. Counsel, assuming he established this, further argued that, apart from the promise with regard to the son, the promise with regard to the wife's own maintenance was, having regard to its terms, not contrary to public policy. On that basis, or, possibly, in any event, he argued that the husband was not relieved from his obligations, but that the agreement should stand, the court striking out only that part of the wife's promises which were objectionable.

Before considering the terms of the deed, I will state what seem to me to be the principles to be extracted from the cases. The area is a difficult one in that there are, undoubtedly, general observations in some cases which, if taken in their generality, appear inconsistent with other decisions. The principle applied by the learned judge—that, if part of the consideration for a promise is "illegal" as being contrary to public policy, the agreement as a whole cannot be enforced—is in accord with statements to be found in more than one reported case. For example, COLTMAN, J., in Hopkins v. Prescott (3) (4 C.B. 596) and TINDAL, C.J., in Waite v. Jones (4), so stated. In the latter case TINDAL, C.J. (1 Bing. N.C. 662) said:

" . . . a party cannot enforce a contract where the consideration is illegal, either in the whole or part."

It is to be noted that the subject-matter of the promise in the former case was in part the sale of a public office which was a misdemeanour under the Sale of Offices Act, 1809, and in the latter it was alleged that part of the consideration was for a future separation of spouses. For spouses to separate was not, of course, a criminal offence, but consideration for a future separation was regarded, like future cohabitation, as contra bonos mores.

I have already referred to Czarnikow's case (2) where a different principle was applied. In restraint of trade cases there are many decisions under which part only of the restraint has been treated as unenforceable and contrary to public policy. This has not vitiated the rest of the clause. A recent example is Goldsoll v. Goldman (5). There was an agreement for the sale of a business which contained a covenant by the vendor not to deal in real or imitation jewellery in the United Kingdom or in various countries abroad. The covenant was restricted by the court to the United Kingdom and dealings in imitation jewellery, the remaining provisions being unenforceable. It was held in accordance with a long series of authorities that the covenant could be severed, part being enforceable and part unenforceable as contrary to public policy. In these cases, therefore, part is held to be contrary to public policy, the remainder being enforceable. It is to be noted that the severability is one-sided. If in Goldsoll's case (5) the purchase price had been split up, so much for the business, so much for the covenant not to trade in the United Kingdom in (a) real jewellery,

(b) imitation jewellery, and so on, there could have been true severability. The court in effect, however, strikes out some of the promises while leaving the consideration on the other side unaffected. This would only be justified if what was struck out was subsidiary to the main purpose. In Goldsoll's case (5) the purchaser got the business, and what the court held to be reasonable protection against competition. What was struck out was plainly subsidiary to the main purpose. If the purchaser had notionally allocated part of the purchase price to promises held to be contrary to public policy he had to abide the consequences. In this class of case the restraint is subsidiary either to a purchase or to a contract of service. If promises in restraint of trade were the sole subject-matter, and those promises were wholly or in the main contrary to public policy, it seems to me clear that the court would treat the whole contract as void.

The cases to which we were referred seem to me to indicate that, if one of the promises is to do an act which is either in itself a criminal offence or contra bonos mores, the court will regard the whole contract as void. In restraint of trade cases there is nothing wrong in not trading. What is objectionable is or may be a promise for consideration not to do so. It is not necessary to decide whether this is exhaustive because I, at any rate, regard Czarnikow's case (2) as an authority binding on this court that in a proper case the doctrine of severability can be applied where the objectionable promise is one purporting to oust the jurisdiction of the court. It seems to me that the court clearly expressed the view that the arbitration clause remained binding, the objectionable words in one clause of it only being, in effect, struck out.

The first question, therefore, in the present appeal is whether the whole or main consideration moving from the wife was a promise or promises purporting to oust the jurisdiction of the court. Under the deed the husband was to convey to the wife a house to be held by her on trust for herself during her life and on her death for the husband. The deed acknowledged the gift by the husband to the wife of the furniture and effects in the house formerly the husband's property. The husband covenanted to pay to the wife during her life such a sum as after deduction of income tax would leave £750. The husband covenanted with the wife and the trustees to pay a secured annuity to the trustees of such sum as after deduction of income tax would leave £300 while her son was alive and under the age of eighteen years. There were provisions as to how this should be dealt with during the wife's life and should she die while the son was under eighteen. If the proceedings for dissolution of the marriage did not result in a decree absolute, the husband had power to revoke. There were other subsidiary provisions, apart from the wife's covenants, which need not be referred to. The wife's covenants are contained in cl. 10 which reads as follows:

"Mrs. Bennett hereby covenants with Mr. Bennett: (a) To accept the provisions hereby made for her and the younger son in full satisfaction of all rights and claims of Mrs. Bennett and her said two children or any of them against Mr. Bennett in respect of alimony pending suit maintenance of her two children or either of them maintenance of herself or secured provision for herself or any like relief whether under s. 190 of the Supreme Court of Judicature [(Consolidation)] Act, 1925, or s. 10 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, or otherwise howsoever. (b) Not to proceed further with the prayer in her said petition that Mr. Bennett do pay to Mrs. Bennett alimony pending suit maintenance of the younger son maintenance and a secured provision and to consent to such prayer being dismissed. (c) Not to institute enter present or proceed with nor to procure suggest assist or encourage directly or indirectly either in her own right or on behalf of her said two children or either of them any petition summons or other proceedings for or in respect of any such alimony pending suit maintenance of her said two children or either of them maintenance of herself or secured provision for herself or any like relief. (d) Out of her own moneys (including the first annuity and the second annuity) during her life to provide and pay for the maintenance and education of the younger son during his infancy and to keep him at Felstead School until he attains the age of eighteen years. (e) At all times to save harmless and keep indemnified Mr. Bennett from and against all actions proceedings claims demands damages costs charges and expenses arising during Mrs. Bennett's life in respect of or in connection with all or any of the matters or things mentioned or referred to in this clause."

The references to alimony pending suit can for present purposes be disregarded. It is also conceded that the clause is objectionable in so far as it deals with applications for maintenance for the son.

What, then, is the effect of the promise not to proceed further with the prayer in her petition for maintenance and secured provision for herself and to consent to such prayer being dismissed? If there be any ambiguity in these words, and I will indicate the possible ambiguity later, that ambiguity was resolved by what was done, plainly by agreement, on the same day, namely, the application to the registrar resulting in his order reciting that the husband had made provision by deed and ordering that the application for maintenance should be dismissed. It was admitted by counsel for the wife that, so far as he knew, such an application before decree was unusual. With counsel's consent we made inquiries which confirmed this. What, then, was its purpose and effect? An application for maintenance for a wife has, under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 190 (1), to be made "on any decree for divorce or nullity of marriage." The construction of the similar words in s. 1 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1907, came before the court in Scott v. Scott (6). It was decided that the words "on any decree for dissolution of marriage" meant at the same time as the decree or within a reasonable time after the decree having regard to all the circumstances of the case. The order takes effect on the decree being made absolute and the word "decree" in the statute might, therefore, be read as meaning decree absolute. It seems, however, clear to me that when LORD STERNDALE, M.R., used the words "at the same time as the decree" he had in mind the hearing when the judge decides to grant a decree nisi. SCRUTTON, L.J., says ([1921] P. 126), that the matters to be considered are matters which should be in the mind of the judge at the time when he is making the decree for the dissolution of the marriage. This clearly refers to the judge who hears the case and not to the judge who under the procedure then in force made the decree absolute. No one has, so far as I know, ever suggested that the judge at the hearing, if an application is before him, cannot deal with it though his order will only come into effect if and when the decree is made absolute. It is academic to consider whether this results from construing the word "decree" in s. 190 (1) as meaning or including decree nisi or whether the court in Scott v. Scott (6) were construing the words, which might be read as indicating a moment of time, viz., on this view, the making of the decree absolute as relating back to the hearing as well as forward to a reasonable time after. Though an application can, of course, be filed or embodied in a petition and preliminary steps taken before the hearing, can it be dealt with, apart from preliminary matters, until the judge has decided to grant a decree nisi? It seems to me plain that the words "at the same time as the decree" cannot mean before the hearing. Until that time there can be no jurisdiction to deal with such an application. Now, if the words in the deed had meant that at the time for making the application on or subsequent to the hearing the deed was to be submitted to the court and the judge asked, with the wife's consent, to dismiss the application for maintenance, that clearly would not be an ouster of jurisdiction quoad that matter. It would, of course, have been a matter for the learned judge. He would not, in my view, be bound to take this course. He could have refused to dismiss the application and made an order for a nominal sum as is done on occasions. I find it difficult to believe that, if the deed had been submitted to the court, cl. 10 would have survived in its present form. If this is a possible meaning of the words, it was clearly not their intended meaning in this deed. The learned registrar could not, for reasons which I have given, dismiss on merits or for good cause an application which could not at that date be made. He must, I think, have treated the application as in substance, though not in form, an application to amend. A petitioner need not in her petition ask for maintenance, and on this basis the effect of the order was that the petition went forward as so amended, namely, as one containing no claim for maintenance. In so far as it purported to dismiss an application it was a nullity. We do not, of course, know how the matter was put to the learned registrar. The issues involved are very much clearer now than they would have been then. I think, however, that any application to delete, amend, or dismiss a claim for maintenance on the ground that the husband had made provision should be left to be dealt with by the judge at the hearing, and, if made to a registrar before the hearing, should be adjourned.

We were asked to regard what was done as in accordance with what was suggested by GODDARD, L.J., in Mills v. Mills (7). That case was, however, dealing with a quite different position. GODDARD, L.J., was considering an application after decree when jurisdiction would exist, unless in respect of an application under s. 190 (1) a reasonable time had been allowed to elapse. He was considering the form of order to be made when the court was prepared to sanction payment of a lump sum. He said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 262):

“ . . . the right procedure is for an application to be made for maintenance, and then for the court to be moved that the application be dismissed on terms which have been agreed between the parties.”

The court would have had full information as to the agreement between the parties. What was said there might have been applicable in the present case if at the hearing, after submitting the deed to the court, the parties had asked for an order in the terms suggested. If the words used by GODDARD, L.J., are read as suggesting that the court would be bound to accede to the wife's “ consent ” on being informed that the parties had agreed, I would respectfully disagree, but I do not think the learned lord justice intended any such implication. In other words, it seems to me that the wife was promising to make no application to the court under s. 190 (1) as well as under s. 193 (1). The procedure before the registrar was intended to preclude her from making any such application. As I have said, it was not disputed before us that the promise by the wife not to make, as she can from time to time, application under s. 193 (1) for maintenance for the child was unenforceable as contrary to public policy. The main argument was that she could on her own behalf consent to a once-for-all settlement, and that, so far, at any rate, as money was concerned, that was the main matter. I am not assuming that she could not have so consented at the proper time and in the proper way. The point here is that the consideration moving from her was a promise not to exercise her right to apply to the court.

I have come to the conclusion, for the reasons I have given, that the promises contained in paras. (a) to (c) were promises which purported to oust the jurisdiction of the court over the whole field of maintenance. Was it the main consideration? The indemnity in cl. 10 (e) is consequential on the undertaking to accept the provisions in full satisfaction and cannot be regarded as any, or any appreciable, degree of further consideration. Clause 10 (d) is, I think, some further consideration. The wife is, as I read it, undertaking that the boy shall remain at Felstead even though the total cost of his upkeep exceeded the amount of the second annuity. I am, however, clear that the main consideration moving from the wife in accepting this quantification of her rights was her promise not to invoke the jurisdiction of the court. I, therefore, think the covenants sought to be enforced in the present proceedings are void and unenforceable. I have limited my conclusion in this way because that is the only point before us. If the husband sought later, as he may not, to reclaim the furniture or the house, there may be an agreement on the terms of the deed that these items, particularly the furniture, are unaffected by this judgment. This point, if it be a point, was not argued before us.

I have left to this stage an argument which counsel for the wife based on certain observations in Hyman v. Hyman (1) because I have, I think, given them full force in the above reasoning. In Hyman v. Hyman (1), as I have said, the question was whether a covenant by a wife in a separation deed not to apply to the court was enforceable when, owing to an alteration of the law, she became entitled to sue for divorce. The first question was whether the covenant on its terms applied to these altered circumstances. The majority of the Court of Appeal held that it did so and was unenforceable. The House of Lords did not have to decide whether this voided the whole deed. The question whether it did was, however, referred to by counsel in argument, at any rate in the Court of Appeal. Counsel for the wife in the present case drew our attention to various passages which proceed, I think, clearly on the basis that the husband remained bound. Both LORD HAILSHAM, L.C. ([1929] A.C. 609), and LORD ATKIN (ibid., 629), use words which suggest that the husband would remain bound and that any future application by the wife could only be for an additional sum. The passages referred to above indicate what I have accepted, namely, that in this area the unenforceability or "illegality" is not of the kind which, however small a part of the consideration it may be, necessarily voids the whole agreement. I do not think it would be right to regard these observations as a final authority on a point which was not before the House. The doctrine of severability being applicable might well have prevented the whole agreement being regarded as void. The main subject of the agreement was the separation. The possibility of divorce was remote and seemed to depend on a change in the law. It might well, in these circumstances, be held to be subsidiary and "severable." In any case separation deeds raise different issues.

Counsel for the wife referred to the possible difficulty in which the wife might be in in applying for maintenance or secured provision for herself. I hope I shall not be going beyond what is proper in stating what, I think, the position would be having regard to our decision if and when she applies. She would, for reasons which I have given, be in the position of having made no application under s. 190 (1) of the Act of 1925, or its successor, s. 19 (2) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950. The question would, therefore, be whether the application was in a reasonable time. The court in Fisher v. Fisher (8) allowed an application by a wife seven years after a decree, the wife having in the interval relied on a continuance of payments of alimony and an undertaking by her former husband to settle certain property on her. Negotiations broke down and it was, as I have said, held that she ought to be given leave to apply. It would seem to me that the wife has both with regard to time and other circumstances a stronger case here to have her application entertained. Counsel for the husband said, while agreeing that it was a matter for the court, that his client would not resist any application to the court to quantify his liability. The appeal, therefore, in my opinion, should be dismissed.

DENNING, L.J.: In this case the only question to my mind is whether the wife can sue on the deed by action at law or whether her proper remedy is by application to the Divorce Court. I would not subscribe to a decision which deprived her of any remedy. When husband and wife are separated or divorced, it is often found that they have entered into a deed whereby the husband covenants to pay his wife an annuity and she in turn covenants not to apply to the courts for maintenance. When that happens there is nothing wrong in the husband's covenant to pay the annuity, at any rate, not when it is taken by itself. But there may be something wrong, or at any rate invalid, in the wife's covenant not to apply to the courts. She has a statutory right to apply to the courts for maintenance, and a covenant by which she renounces that right may be unenforceable against her as being contrary to public policy. A good instance is Hyman v. Hyman (1). The question then arises: What is the effect of this on the deed as a whole?, and, in particular: What is the effect on the husband's covenant to pay the annuity?

In solving this problem, a useful analogy may be drawn from covenants in unreasonable restraint of trade. Such covenants offend public policy just as the covenants of a wife may do. They are not "illegal", in the sense that a contract to do a prohibited or immoral act is illegal. They are not "unenforceable", in the sense that a contract within the Statute of Frauds is unenforceable for want of writing. These covenants lie somewhere in between. They are invalid and unenforceable. The law does not punish them. It simply takes no notice of them. They are void, not illegal. That is how they were described by the full Court of Exchequer Chamber in Price v. Green (9) (16 M. & W. 353), and by the Court of Appeal in Joseph Evans & Co. v. Heathcote (10) ([1918] 1 K.B. 426, 431, 436). The presence of a void covenant of this kind does not render the deed totally ineffective. That has been well shown by PROFESSOR CHESHIRE and Mr. FIFOOT in their book on THE LAW OF CONTRACT, 2nd ed., pp. 242, 243. The party who is entitled to the benefit of the void covenant, or rather who would have been entitled to the benefit of it if it had been valid, can sue on the other covenants of the deed which are in his favour, and he can even sue on the void covenant if he can sever the good from the bad: Goldsoll v. Goldman (5); even to the extent of getting full liquidated damages for a breach of the good part: Price v. Green (9). So, also, the other party, that is, the party who gave the void covenant and is not bound by its restraints, can himself sue on the covenants in his favour, save only when his void covenant forms the whole, or substantially the whole, consideration for the deed: Wyatt v. Kreglinger & Fernau (11) ([1933] 1 K.B. 808). If the void covenant goes only to part of the consideration, so that it can be ignored and yet leave the rest of the deed a reasonable arrangement between the parties, then the deed stands and can be enforced in every respect save in regard to the void covenant. That seems to me to be the explanation of Bishop v. Kitchen (12), Kearney v. Whitehaven Colliery Co. (13), and Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co. (2) ([1922] 2 K.B. 490).

If the cases on wife's covenants are examined, it will be found that they depend on the same distinction.

(i) Separation agreements.—Once parties are separated, a separation agreement (by which the husband covenants to pay his wife an annuity and she covenants to live separately and apart from him) is perfectly lawful, so long as the agreement is made because of the separation and not with a view to divorce. Sometimes in such a deed there will be found a covenant by the wife not to apply to the court for further maintenance, and that covenant, in some contingencies, is not enforceable against her. For instance, the covenant is not enforceable against her in the event of a subsequent divorce: Hyman v. Hyman (1); and it may not be enforceable against her if circumstances so change that the husband can be said to be guilty of "wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance" for her, though I would not wish to express a concluded opinion on that point. Nevertheless, those contingencies at the time of the deed usually are somewhat remote, and they can be ignored without affecting the reasonableness of the deed as a whole. They do not go to the whole of the consideration for the annuity. The substantial consideration for it is the agreement to live separate and that has been performed. The wife can, therefore, sue by action at law on the deed, notwithstanding the unenforceability of that particular covenant. That is, I think, implicit in the speeches in the House of Lords in Hyman v. Hyman (1), particularly in the speech of LORD ATKIN ([1929] A.C. 629), where he speaks of statutory maintenance as a "supplement" to the annuity granted by the deed.

(ii) Agreements for permanent maintenance on a divorce.—An award of permanent maintenance on a divorce is peculiarly a matter for the Divorce Court, and the jurisdiction of that court in regard to it cannot be ousted by the private agreement of the parties. The reason lies in public policy. First, it is in the public interest that the wife and children of a divorced husband should not be left dependent on public assistance or on charity when he has the means to support them. They should, therefore, be able to come to the Divorce Court for maintenance, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary: Hyman v. Hyman (1). Secondly, when maintenance is awarded by the Divorce Court, it is not fixed irrevocably at a named figure. It can be varied thereafter, upwards or downwards, according to the circumstances prevailing at the time, and, if the husband is unable to pay and arrears accumulate, it is in the discretion of the Divorce Court whether to enforce payment of the arrears or not. These beneficent controls would be lost if the parties could, by agreement, without the intervention of the court, fix maintenance permanently at an unalterable figure. Any private agreement of the parties which purports to make maintenance a debt enforceable at law must of necessity impliedly oust the jurisdiction of the Divorce Court to fix it, vary it or discharge it, and it is, by reason of that implication, invalid, for the ouster goes to the whole consideration. There is no consideration moving from the wife except an implied promise to accept the named figure and not to ask for more, and that is invalid, because it impliedly takes away the jurisdiction of the court to give her more. If her promise does not bind her, then his should not bind him: Gaisberg v. Storr (14); Combe v. Combe (15). Sometimes there may be an implied promise by her to prosecute the divorce proceedings, but that would be worse, for it would be collusion. In the present case, however, the ouster is not merely by implication. It is expressed in cl. 10 of the deed. That clause is invalid. It forms the whole, or substantially the whole, consideration for the husband's promise to pay the annuities. His promise is, therefore, invalid.

(iii) The sanction of the court.—If the parties do not oust the jurisdiction of the Divorce Court, but preserve it by making their agreement subject to the sanction of the court, then, once it is sanctioned, it is valid. The court, however, cannot, and will not, give its sanction before decree nisi. It has itself no jurisdiction before decree nisi to deal with permanent maintenance. Its jurisdiction only arises "on" the decree. Its sanction should, I think, be obtained in this way. If the parties agree on a figure for maintenance, the court should be asked to make an order for that figure. If they agree on a secured provision, the court should be asked to approve the deed which contains the provision. If they agree on a lump sum in composition of maintenance, the court should be asked to dismiss an application for maintenance or to discharge the existing order, as the case may be: Mills v. Mills (7) ([1940] 2 All E.R. 261, 262); but it would, I think, be entitled to refuse to do so if it did not think it proper to permit the composition. In the present case the parties seem to have sought to apply Mills v. Mills (7), but they made the mistake that they sought to apply it before decree nisi. That was quite wrong because the court had no jurisdiction before decree nisi to sanction the agreement and did not in fact do so. The agreement was recited in the consent order made by the registrar, and it was, no doubt, mentioned to the judge who heard the petition. Those circumstances go far to negative any collusion, but they do not validate the deed. They do not amount to that sanction by the court which is required to validate it. The proper way of doing it would be to ask the judge to approve the deed as a secured provision for the wife, on the ground that it secures to her an annual sum of money by way of covenant under seal. That was never done. This does not mean that the wife will go destitute. She can still apply to the Divorce

Court for maintenance. The consent order dismissing her previous application is no bar, because it was made before the case came on for hearing and there was no adjudication on the merits. At that stage it was no more than an amendment of the petition striking out her claim for maintenance. No adjudication could take place until the decree. Once the consent order is seen to be no obstacle the case is one in which the Divorce Court would, I think, readily grant her leave to apply for maintenance, notwithstanding that three years have elapsed since the making of the decree. She has a reasonable excuse for not applying earlier because she was relying on an agreement which has turned out to be invalid.

In conclusion I would say this. The avoidance of the wife's covenants in cl. 10 makes the covenant to pay the annuities ineffective, but I do not wish to suggest that it vitiates the provisions of the deed relating to the house and furniture. They are severable. When the Divorce Court comes to award maintenance it will no doubt take those benefits into account, and it will also take into account the figures stated in the deed. It may be that the wife will be no worse off. I do not know. At any rate, that is her proper remedy and not this. I agree, therefore, that this appeal should be dismissed.

ROMER, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: J. B. de Fonblanque (for the wife); Aukin, Courts & Co. (for the husband).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MOWE v. PERRATON.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Jones and Parker, JJ.), February 7, 1952.]

Street Traffic—Taking motor vehicle without owner's consent—Driver using employer's van for own purposes—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 28 (1).

A van driver, on finishing work, disobeying his instructions to take the van to the garage, without the consent of the owners, his employers, or other lawful authority, drove the van to his house and loaded a radiogram on it with the intention of taking it to the house of a relative to which he was driving when he was stopped by the police.

HELD: as the driver was in lawful possession of the van before he took it for the unauthorised purpose, he was not guilty of the offence of taking and driving away a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner or other lawful authority under s. 28 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930.

FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 28 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 24, p. 598.

CASE STATED by West Kent Quarter Sessions.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Bromley, Kent, on Apr. 28, 1951, on a charge preferred by the appellant, a police officer, the respondent was convicted of having taken and driven away a motor vehicle, a Commer goods motor van, without the consent of the owner or other lawful authority, contrary to s. 28 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930. The respondent appealed to West Kent Quarter Sessions before which court it was proved or admitted that he was a van driver employed by the Road Haulage Executive and that he was subject to the orders of the Royal Army Service Corps, Woolwich Arsenal, to whom the van was on hire. On Apr. 18, 1951, without the owner's consent or other lawful authority, he used the van to take a radiogram from his house to that of a relative. He contended that the word "take" was used in s. 28 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, in its ordinary sense and should not be given the technical meaning of "take" in the definitions in s. 1 of the Larceny Act, 1916, and that he had not "taken" the van within the meaning of s. 28 (1) because he had never relinquished control of it between finishing work and driving it to his home. The appellant contended that the word "take" in s. 23 (1) bore the same meaning as in the definition of larceny at common law; that, as a servant, the respondent had custody, and not possession, of the van while using it under the orders of the hirers; and that, when driving to his home instead of to the garage, he "took" the van within the meaning of s. 28 (1). Quarter sessions held that the respondent had not taken and driven away the van without the consent of the owner or other lawful authority and allowed the appeal, and the appellant appealed.

Buzzard for the appellant.

J. H. Gower for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by the appeal committee of the West Kent Quarter Sessions, before whom the respondent was charged with an offence against s. 28 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, in that he "did take and drive away a motor vehicle . . . without the consent of the owner or other lawful authority."

The respondent was the driver of a lorry which belonged to the Road Haulage Executive and was under hire to the Royal Army Service Corps at Woolwich Arsenal. He had standing instructions that, on finishing work at the arsenal, he should drive the van back to the garage at Woolwich Dock. He did something which, as a servant of his employer, he ought not to have done. Instead of driving to the garage when he had finished work, he drove his van to his house, picked up a radiogram, and set out with the intention of taking it in the van to the house of a relative before driving the van to the garage. His journey was not an authorised journey, and I am far from saying that it is not to be strongly deprecated, because, if an accident had happened, in all probability it would not have been covered by the policy of insurance and he might have committed the offence of driving an uninsured van, but it seems to me wrong to say that what he did was taking and driving away a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner within s. 28 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930. That section is intended to deal with the case of people who take motor cars which do not belong to them, drive them away, and then abandon them, because it is difficult to say that they intended to deprive the owner permanently of the possession, but here the respondent had taken and driven the motor vehicle as part of his work. What he did was unauthorised, but that does not make the taking or the driving away a criminal offence under s. 28 (1). I think it is only necessary to state the facts to show that quarter sessions came to a right decision, and this appeal fails.

JONES, J.: I agree.

PARKER, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor for the Metropolitan Police (for the prosecutor); Francis W. Beech & Taylor, Eltham (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

and Distinguished. Receased). THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. BELL AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), February 5, 1952.]

Trust and Trustee—Power of advancement—Trusts arising on exercise of special power of appointment—Power conferred by testamentary instrument—Death of testator before Jan. 1, 1926—Power exercised after Jan. 1, 1926—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 32 (3).

The testator made his will in 1912, and, by a codicil made on Aug. 2, 1925, he gave to the tenant for life of a trust fund a special power of appointment over the fund. On Sept. 1, 1925, the testator died. The power conferred by the codicil was exercised by a deed of appointment dated Sept. 27, 1951.

HELD: the trusts under the deed of appointment were "constituted", within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 32 (3), not by the deed, but by the codicil which created the power under which the deed was executed; the codicil came into operation on the testator's death which occurred before the commencement of the Act (Jan. 1, 1926); and, therefore, under s. 32 (3), the power of advancement conferred on trustees by s. 32 (1) did not apply to the trusts of the deed.

FOR THE TRUSTEE ACT, 1925, s. 32, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 26, p. 99.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Dickinson's Settlements, [1939] Ch. 27; 108 L.J.Ch. 40; 159 L.T. 614; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re De La Bere's Marriage Settlement Trusts, [1941] 2 All E.R. 533; [1941] Ch. 443; 110 L.J.Ch. 194; 165 L.T. 393; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Muir v. Muir, [1943] A.C. 468; 112 L.J.P.C. 39.
- (4) Re Dowie's Will Trusts, [1949] 1 All E.R. 968; [1949] Ch. 547; [1949] L.J.R. 1340; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Darby, (1943), 59 T.L.R. 418; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Taylor's Will Trusts, (1950), 66 (pt. 2) T.L.R. 507; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Re Illingworth, [1909] 2 Ch. 297; 78 L.J.Ch. 701; 101 L.T. 104; 37 Digest 426, 343.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the statutory power of advancement conferred on trustees by the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 32 (1), applied to trusts created by a deed of appointment, dated Sept. 27, 1951, and executed by the first defendant, Mrs. Kathleen Florence Bell, in exercise of a special power of appointment given to her by a codicil to the will of the testator, Richard Hamilton Batty, notwithstanding that he died before Jan. 1, 1926, the date of the commencement of the Act.

E. I. Goulding for the plaintiff, the trustee.

T. A. C. Burgess for the defendants (the appointor and the appointees).

VAISEY, J.: This summons raises the question whether or not the statutory power of advancement conferred on trustees by the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 32 (1), applies to the trusts created by a deed of appointment executed in 1951 pursuant to a special power of appointment conferred by the testamentary disposition of a testator who died before Jan. 1, 1926. The decision seems to me to rest almost entirely on the meaning which ought to be attributed to s. 32 (3), which is in these words:

"This section does not apply to trusts constituted or created before the commencement of this Act."

The "commencement" of the Act is defined in s. 71 (2) as being Jan. 1, 1926. The will in the present case was dated July 25, 1912; the codicil, under which the power of appointment was exercised, was dated Aug. 2, 1925; and the testator died on Sept. 1, 1925. Therefore, the will, the codicil and the death of the testator all occurred before the Trustee Act, 1925, commenced, but the deed of appointment which, from one point of view, was the origin of these trusts, was dated Sept. 27, 1951. By that deed the appointor, who was the tenant for life of the trust fund, appointed a part of the fund equally between her two children.

A similar question has arisen under s. 31 of the Act of 1925 which deals with maintenance. Section 31 (5), which corresponds to s. 32 (3), is in these words:

"This section does not apply where the instrument, if any, under which the interest arises came into operation before the commencement of this Act."

In Re Dickinson's Settlements (1), a decision of CROSSMAN, J., the headnote is: B

"Where a power of appointment is exercised, the document exercising the power and not the document creating the power is for the purpose of [s. 31 of the Act of 1925] the instrument under which the appointed interest arises, as a new interest is created by the appointment."

In a sense in the present case the origin of the trusts by virtue of which the power of advancement is said to arise is the deed of appointment, and not the testamentary disposition which conferred the power of appointment, but I think that a distinction has to be drawn between the expressions "trusts constituted" and "trusts created" in s. 32 (3). In my judgment, in the present case the trusts were constituted by the testator's will, i.e., they originated by reason of the constitution of the original trusts as contained in the codicil of August, 1925. No doubt, they were created in one sense when the power of appointment was exercised, but it must be noted that the language of s. 32 (3) differs very materially from that of s. 31 (5). Section 32 (3) refers to trusts "constituted or created before the commencement of [the] Act", and not to "the instrument . . . under which the interest arises." C

In Re De La Bere's Marriage Settlement Trusts (2) SIMONDS, J., held that the "instrument under which certain property was acquired", for the purpose of an after-acquired property clause, was the deed of appointment and not the original instrument which created the power of appointment. Referring to cases on which CROSSMAN, J., relied for his decision in Re Dickinson's Settlements (1), SIMONDS, J., said ([1941] 2 All E.R. 535): E

" . . . those cases are examples of a principle which seems to be perfectly clear—namely, that, where one has an instrument creating a power and an instrument exercising that power, the interest created by the exercise of the power arises under the latter instrument, for in fact there never was such an interest until the power was exercised so as to create it." F

In my judgment, however, that decision throws very little light on the present problem. G

In Muir v. Muir (3) a question arose under the Trusts (Scotland) Act, 1921, s. 9, which regulates what is known in England as the rule against perpetuities. It was held by the House of Lords that certain provisions, which were alleged to infringe the statutory prohibition against perpetuities, were "constituted", within the meaning of the Act, by the original trust disposition and the settlement conferring the power under which they were in fact created, and, accordingly, certain persons, to whom life interests had been given in exercise of the power, became entitled to the fee of the shares held for them, that being the result, according to Scottish legislation, of an attempt to give a life interest which transgressed the permissible period. It seems to me that that case throws a good deal of light on the problem which I have to decide, though, no doubt, the cases on the subject of perpetuity stand on a somewhat different footing from H cases such as the present, which depend on the meaning of a sub-section of a statute.

A I do not think that the decision of ROXBURGH, J., in Re Dowie's Will Trusts (4) helps me very much, but it certainly contains nothing which is contrary to the principles and views which I hold to be applicable in the present case. Re Darby (5) and Re Taylor's Will Trusts (6) deal with the question whether the relevant date under s. 32 (3) of the Act of 1925 is the death of the testator or the date at which the testamentary instrument is executed, but they seem to me to have little to do with the present problem because, except where there are special circumstances, as in Re Illingworth (7), it is well settled that a will is ambulatory and inchoate during the lifetime of the testator and comes into operation only at his death. In Re Darby (5) and in Re Taylor's Will Trusts (6) B it was held that the date on which a trust in a will was constituted or created was not the date of the execution of the instrument, but the date when the instrument became an operative instrument by virtue of the death of the testator.

C I think it must be noticed that s. 32 (1) is a revolutionary provision in that it has a confiscatory effect since it enables half of the property held contingently on an infant attaining the age of twenty-one to be applied for his advancement, i.e., it gives half of the capital to a beneficiary who, under the terms of the instrument creating the trust, is only entitled to that capital contingently. In my judgment, it may well be that the difference between the language of s. 31 (5) and s. 33 (2), on the one hand, and that of s. 32 (3), on the other hand, may be referable to a distinction between the three sub-sections. It seems to me that, if the legislature intended the section to apply to interests which arise under the constitution of D a testamentary instrument which came into operation, by reason of the testator's death, before the commencement of the Trustee Act, 1925, words of a much stronger character would have been employed. For these reasons, though with a certain amount of hesitation, because the point is not an easy one, I propose to declare that the statutory power of advancement conferred on the trustees by s. 32 (1) of the Trustee Act, 1925, does not apply to the trusts under the deed of appointment of Sept. 27, 1951, executed in exercise of the special E power of appointment, by reason of the fact that the testamentary instrument which created the power came into operation before and not after the commencement of the Act.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard, agents for Haines & Sumner, Gloucester (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. BELL & NICOLSON, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Donovan, J., sitting as a judge of the Division), January 15, 16, 1952.]

Profits Tax—Distribution—Capital profits dividend—Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35), s. 36 (1).

A
A capital profits dividend is a distribution for profits tax purposes within the meaning of s. 36 (1) of the Finance Act, 1947.

Lamson Paragon Supply Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1951) (44 R. & I.T. 520), applied.

FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1947, s. 36 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, p. 780. B

Case referred to:

(1) Lamson Paragon Supply Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1951), 44 R. & I.T. 520; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 723.

CASE STATED by General Commissioners of Income Tax.

C
The taxpayers, a limited company, paid a dividend out of capital profits for the chargeable accounting period ended Dec. 31, 1947. In that period their trading profits assessable to income tax and profits tax exceeded the amount of their distributions, even if the capital profits dividend were reckoned as a distribution. The company claimed non-distribution relief from profits tax, under s. 30 (2) of the Finance Act, 1947, on the difference between its profits chargeable to profits tax and the amount of its net relevant distributions to proprietors, excluding the capital profits dividend. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue allowed non-distribution relief on the basis that the capital profits dividend should be treated as a distribution, thus reducing the amount subject to relief. The company appealed to the general commissioners, who allowed the appeal. D

E
The Crown appealed.

Heyworth Talbot, K.C., and Sir Reginald Hills for the Crown.

Cyril King, K.C., and F. N. Bucher for the taxpayers.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 16. DONOVAN, J., read the following judgment. This case raises a short, but important, point of construction on certain sections of the Finance Act, 1947, dealing with profits tax. F

The facts are that on Feb. 18, 1947, this company paid a dividend of £5,625 to its shareholders out of profits which arose, not from any trade or business, but from the realisation of certain investments. This profit was, therefore, not liable to income tax or profits tax in the hands of the company, nor was it susceptible of deduction of income tax at source when distributed to the shareholders. G
The Commissioners of Inland Revenue treated the dividend as among the distributions which had to be taken into account in considering what amount of relief from profits tax was due to the company in respect of undistributed profits, of which it had some during the relevant chargeable accounting period, namely, the year ending Dec. 31, 1947. The effect of so taking this dividend into account is to diminish that relief and thus to increase the amount of profits tax H payable for the period. The company objected to the commissioners' action on the ground that, since the dividend of £5,625 was paid otherwise than out of trading or business profits, it could not be reckoned as a distribution of profits for profits tax purposes, and succeeded in establishing that contention before the general commissioners.

The point so raised is purely one of construction of the relevant statutory provisions, beginning, conveniently, with s. 36 of the Finance Act, 1947. That section defines the meaning of distribution for the purposes of profits tax, and, so far as is here relevant, enacts by sub-s. (1) as follows:

“Subject to the provisions of the next succeeding sub-section, wherever (a) any amount is distributed directly or indirectly by way of dividend or cash bonus to any person . . . there shall be deemed for the purposes of the last preceding section to be a distribution to that person of that amount . . .”

(The next succeeding sub-section, subject to which this enactment has to be read, contains nothing material for the purposes of this case.)

Here one is dealing with a dividend of £5,625 paid by the company on Feb. 18, 1947, and, despite its capital origin, being clearly “an amount distributed directly by way of dividend”, and, therefore, by s. 36 (1) (a) prima facie deemed to be a “distribution” for the purposes of s. 35 of the Act. Going to s. 35, one finds it dealing with something called “the gross relevant distributions to proprietors”, among which it includes distributions to the members of a body corporate, with certain exceptions not here material. So, the £5,625 in the present case must prima facie be treated as being among the “gross relevant distributions”. Then one looks at s. 34 of the same Act, defining what are “net relevant distributions”. They are to be, normally, a proportion of the gross relevant distributions, though in some cases they may be equal to the latter or even more. The section contains nothing, however, which on the face of things excludes the £5,625 here in question from the net relevant distributions.

Section 30 of the same Act, by sub-s. (1) prescribes the rate of profits tax. In sub-s. (2) it is provided that, if the net relevant distributions to proprietors for any chargeable accounting period are less than the profits for that period chargeable to profits tax, then the rate of profits tax chargeable on the difference shall be reduced. In other words, the undistributed profit is to bear profits tax at a lower rate. This relief is called in the Act the relief for non-distribution.

If, therefore, one treats the £5,625 as part of the net relevant distributions, the amount of relief for non-distribution is correspondingly reduced. But how is one to avoid doing so on the language of the statutory provisions I have read? On the literal construction of that language there is no escape from such a result, and, accordingly, it is argued that I must have regard to some implied limitation which prevents the Crown from reckoning this dividend as a distribution. Such a limitation, it is suggested, is to be found in the circumstance that profits from trades or businesses are alone subject to profits tax, and distributions of such profits should, therefore, it is argued, alone be taken into account in assessing the tax, even though the distribution may merely be the measure of liability. This argument would have more force than it has if the effect of taking a distribution of capital profits into account were to impose profits tax on an amount more than the business or trading profits earned by a concern. But such is not the effect. In the present case I am told that whether one takes this dividend into account as a distribution or not, the net relevant distributions would be less than the full trading profits in the chargeable accounting period in question liable to profits tax. The issue merely affects the amount of relief for non-distribution.

But the same argument would be open in a case coming within sub-s. (3) of s. 30 of the Act, and since the meaning of “distribution” must be the same in both sub-sections, I should deal with it. Sub-section (3) is concerned with the case where, using non-technical language, the distributions are greater than the trading profits for the chargeable accounting period. It is said that, if you reckon dividends of capital profits among the distributions, you will, under sub-s. (3), be taxing these profits to profits tax, whereas only business or trading profits are liable to the tax. I agree that you will, and I also think that such a result follows quite plainly from the language of s. 30 (3) (as amended by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1947, s. 7 (2)), which says this:

“Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, if, in the case of a trade or business, the net relevant distributions to proprietors . . . for any chargeable accounting period are greater than the profits thereof for that period chargeable to the profits tax, there shall be charged for that period, in addition to the other profits tax, if any, chargeable therefor, profits tax at the rate of fifteen per cent. on the amount of the difference."

That means, as plainly as words can express it, that there is to be an additional profits tax on the net relevant distributions so far as they are in excess of the profits chargeable to the "other" profits tax, that is, in excess of trading or business profits. There is no exception in favour of net relevant distributions being capital dividends. Again, if that provision stood alone, the argument that you should so construe the word "distribution" as to exclude distributions of non-trading and non-business profits would have weight. But then comes the proviso to s. 30 (3), which reads thus:

"Provided that the amount on which tax is chargeable under this subsection for any chargeable accounting period shall not, when added to the total of the amounts on which tax is charged thereunder for previous chargeable accounting periods, exceed the total of the differences in respect of which reductions have been made under sub-s. (2) of this section for previous chargeable accounting periods."

The effect of that is that an amount equal to the aggregate of the trading or business profits in current and preceding chargeable accounting periods is alone charged to profits tax. Nothing above this aggregate is taxed.

In these circumstances I see no reason for not giving the statutory definition of "distribution" its natural meaning, or for reading into the language of the relevant sections the limitation for which the taxpayers here contend. After all, it was an obvious contingency against which the legislature had to provide, that someone might try to get the best of both worlds by distributing capital instead of trading or business profits and at the same time secure the non-distribution relief for an equivalent amount of trading or business profits. Furthermore, the legislature had in other cases enacted that capital might be used, in effect, as a measure for taxing income in cases where otherwise tax on income might be avoided: see, for example, s. 21 (3) of the Finance Act, 1936, and s. 40 of the Finance Act, 1938.

The conclusion at which I have arrived is the same as that reached by HARMAN, J., in Lamson Paragon Supply Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1). There at a somewhat late stage in the proceedings the company raised the point that a dividend out of capital profits was not a distribution for profits tax purposes. There were other points in the case as well. If one reads the report in that case it rather looks at first sight as though the Crown were arguing that no additional profits tax was imposed by s. 30 (3) of the Finance Act, 1947, but that all that it did was to cancel a relief previously given. Such an argument would give the go-by altogether to the words in s. 30 (3): "There shall be charged . . . in addition to the other profits tax . . . profits tax" at such and such a rate. The financial effect of the provision is, of course, to cancel reliefs previously accorded, but that is another matter. In the circumstances it is not surprising to find counsel for the Crown in the present case disclaiming the argument that no charge to tax is imposed by s. 30 (3); he suggests that all the Crown was saying in the Lamson Paragon case (1) was that, while the form of s. 30 (3) is to impose an additional tax, the effect in money is simply to cancel reliefs from profits tax previously accorded. This was in answer to an argument by counsel for the taxpayers in that case that there was an additional tax imposed by s. 30 (3), and it ought not to be imposed on profits other than those arising from the trade or business. What the Crown successfully replied was in effect this: True, it is expressed as an additional tax, but really the effect is only to cancel previous reliefs, so that the argument of counsel for the taxpayers had not the weight it otherwise might have. This is really an expression, in different language, of the same reason which leads me in the present case to reject the invitation to impose a limitation on the language of the statute, that reason being that the amount of profits tax which the taxpayers are asked to pay is restricted to a maximum of tax on a sum equal to his business or trading profits. I, therefore, allow the appeal with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown); Burton, Yeates & Hart (for the taxpayer company).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

THOMPSTONE v. SIMPSON.

[NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE ASSIZES (Hallett, J.), January 17, 18, 1952.]

Rent Restriction—"Dwelling-house let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house"—Garage business and dwelling-house—Premises divisible into separate entities—Dominant purpose of letting the carrying on of business—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (3).

In 1927 a landlord acquired certain premises consisting of business accommodation on the ground floor and living accommodation on the first and second floors. Access to the living accommodation was gained by a separate entrance, but there was also an internal means of access between the two parts of the premises. The landlord employed the tenant as his manager and granted to him the use of the living accommodation rent free as part of the terms of his service. In 1942 the tenant took over the landlord's business, and, by a lease dated Dec. 29, 1942, the landlord let the whole of the premises to him. In 1949 the landlord gave the tenant notice to quit, but the tenant remained in possession as a statutory tenant, HALLETT, J., found as a fact that the business part and the living part of the premises were divisible into two separate entities and that the dominant purpose of the lease was for the carrying on of a business and not the provision of a dwelling-house.

HELD: on the true construction of s. 3 (3) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, the dwelling-house was "let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house" and, therefore, the Rent Acts did not apply to the premises.

Pender v. Reid (1948 S.C. 381), applied.

EDITORIAL NOTE. In Pender v. Reid (supra) the tenant carried on business as a coal merchant in premises consisting of a dwelling-house where the tenant lived and an adjacent coal yard, garage and workshop used exclusively for the tenant's business. It was argued for the tenant that the premises were protected by the Rent Acts as "land . . . let together with a dwelling-house" within the meaning of s. 3 (3) of the Act of 1939. The Second Division of the Court of Session, however, held that the mere presence of a dwelling-house in a composite letting was not enough to bring the whole premises within the Rent Acts, and, since it had been found that the letting was a business rather than a domestic one, the dwelling-house must be considered as one "let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house", and, therefore, not protected.

FOR THE RENT AND MORTGAGE INTEREST RESTRICTIONS ACT, 1939, s. 3 (3), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1078.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Pender v. Reid, 1948 S.C. 381; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Vickery v. Martin, [1944] 2 All E.R. 167; [1944] K.B. 679; 113 L.J.K.B. 552; 171 L.T. 89; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Hartell v. Blackler, [1920] 2 K.B. 161; 89 L.J.K.B. 838; 123 L.T. 171; 31 Digest, Replacement, 506, 6321.

- (4) Davies v. Bristow. Penrhos College v. Butler, [1920] 3 K.B. 428; 90 L.J.K.B. 164; 123 L.T. 655; 31 Digest, Replacement, 510, 6349.
- (5) Clarke v. Grant, [1949] 1 All E.R. 768; [1950] 1 K.B. 104; [1949] L.J.R. 1450; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Marcroft Wagons, Ltd. v. Smith, [1951] 2 All E.R. 271; [1951] 2 K.B. 496.

ACTION by the landlord for possession of a dwelling-house and business premises let to the tenant under a lease dated Dec. 29, 1942.

For the tenant it was contended that he was entitled to protection under s. 3 (3) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939. The landlord contended that the dwelling-house was let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house within the meaning of that sub-section, and, therefore, that it was outside the protection of the Rent Acts.

Waller for the landlord.

J. Charlesworth for the tenant.

HALLETT, J.: The landlord was the owner of premises in Main Street, Ponteland, which, by a lease dated Dec. 29, 1942, he demised to the tenant. He now claims an order for possession of the premises. In 1927 the landlord acquired the premises which consisted of business accommodation on the ground floor and living accommodation on the first and second floors. Before the landlord acquired it, the building belonged to a co-operative society which used the ground floor for their business purposes and allowed their manager to occupy the living accommodation. The landlord employed the tenant as his manager in a garage business which he carried on on the ground floor and he gave him the use of the living accommodation, rent free, as part of the terms of his service. In 1942 the landlord's business was not doing well, and, at his suggestion, the tenant agreed to take it over. In pursuance of that arrangement the lease to which I have referred was entered into. The demise was

" . . . as from Apr. 6, 1942, until such date as . . . the present emergency . . . shall be declared determined or the period of three years from Apr. 6, 1942, whichever period shall be the shorter . . . "

Both sides have agreed that the emergency was determined at some date later than three years from Apr. 6, 1942, i.e., later than Apr. 6, 1945. The clause continued:

" . . . and thereafter until the said term shall be determined by one calendar month's notice in writing given by either party to the other."

The tenant continued in occupation after Apr. 6, 1945, but difficulties arose between the parties and on Oct. 31, 1949, the landlord served on the tenant a notice to quit at the end of one calendar month from Nov. 1, 1949.

Assuming that the contractual tenancy had come to an end at the date of action brought, is the tenant protected from eviction by reason of the provisions of the Rent Acts? That involves a consideration of whether the decision of the Scottish courts in Pender v. Reid (1) was correct. The facts are not exactly the same, but counsel for the tenant agrees that, if that decision was correct, his contention that these premises were protected by the Rent Acts is likely to fail. In Pender v. Reid (1) it was held that, since the dominant purpose of the let was the carrying on of the business of a coal merchant and not the provision of a dwelling-house, the dwelling-house being merely an adjunct of the business part of the premises, the tenancy was not protected by the Rent Acts. Using the same language, I hold here that the dominant purpose of this let was for the carrying on of the business by a garage proprietor and not the provision of a dwelling-house, the dwelling-house being merely an adjunct of that part of the premises used for the business. Where the business part of the premises and the living part of the premises are all one entity, the position is different from cases where the two parts can be treated as separate entities. In the present case I find that the two parts of these premises can be regarded as separate entities, one reason being that there is a separate entrance giving access to the living part of the premises.

The tenant relied on s. 3 (3) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, which provides:

“ . . . the application of the [Rent Acts], by virtue of this section, to any dwelling-house shall not be excluded by reason only that part of the premises is used as a shop or office or for business, trade or professional purposes; and for the purposes of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1938, as amended by virtue of this section, any land or premises let together with a dwelling-house shall . . . be treated as part of the dwelling-house; but, save as aforesaid, the [Rent Acts] shall not, by virtue of this section, apply to any dwelling-house let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house.”

That sub-section can be regarded as containing three phrases, to use the expression which LORD MACKAY in Pender v. Reid (1) considered to be convenient. The first phrase says that a dwelling-house shall not be excluded by reason only that part of the premises is used as a shop or office or for business, trade or professional purposes. The Rent Acts were primarily intended—apart from a short period when they also applied to business premises—to protect tenants from being evicted from dwelling-houses, and, because that which was protected was a dwelling-house, there was a risk that it might be argued that premises which were partly used for business, trade or professional purposes could not be regarded as dwelling-houses, and, therefore, were outside the protection of the Acts. Accordingly, s. 12 (2) (ii) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, provided:

“ . . . the application of this Act to any house or part of a house shall not be excluded by reason only that part of the premises is used as a shop or office or for business, trade, or professional purposes.”

When the Act of 1939 came into force, bringing within the protection of the Acts houses which previously had been outside it, we find those words repeated in substance in s. 3 (3). In Vickery v. Martin (2) the premises in question to a substantial extent were used for business purposes, viz., the business of taking in lodgers. The proprietress of the business, acting as her own manageress, used for herself, from time to time, part of the accommodation as a living room and a bedroom. Counsel for the landlord in that case sought to argue that because of the business use of a substantial part of the premises the premises as a whole lost their protection as a dwelling-house, and he contended that s. 3 (3) must be construed as if it read: “shall not be excluded by reason only that a non-substantial part of the premises is used as a shop or office or for business, trade, or professional purposes.” The Court of Appeal refused to accept that construction.

If counsel for the landlord in the present case were arguing that this was not a dwelling-house because a substantial part of it was used for another purpose, my view, in the light of that decision and the construction I put on the sub-section, would be that it would fail, but his case, as did the decision of the court in Pender v. Reid (1), rests on the last phrase of the sub-section, viz., that the premises consist of a dwelling-house let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house. I recognise that the point is far from clear and that objections can be raised to whatever view one takes of the true construction of the sub-section, but I am impressed by the contrast between the wording of the other two phrases in the sub-section: “any land or premises let together with a dwelling-house shall . . . be treated as part of the dwelling-house” and “but . . . the principal Acts shall not, by virtue of this section, apply to any dwelling-house let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house.” One of the difficulties is that the last part of the sub-section refers to letting "together with land", not "together with land or premises." But, although there is that difficulty, it is not sufficient, in conjunction with the other difficulties, to prevent my coming to the conclusion—although I do so with some doubt and hesitation—that the view taken by the Scottish court was correct. Finding, as I do, that the facts here are similar to those on which the court in Pender v. Reid (1) held that the premises in that case were not protected, I come to the same conclusion and I hold that these premises were not premises to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied, and that, therefore, the tenant's claim that he was protected by those Acts fails. Accordingly, there will be an order for possession.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Wilkinson & Marshall, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (for the plaintiff);
C. D. Foster & Magee, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (for the defendant).

[Reported by G. M. SMAILES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

JONES v. PROTHERO.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Jones and Parker, JJ.), February 8, 1952.]

Street Traffic—Accident—Duty to report—"Driver"—Vehicle stationary at time of accident—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 22 (2).

The appellant stopped his motor vehicle on the near-side of a public road, switched off the engine, and remained in his seat talking to his passenger for some ten minutes. He then opened the driver's door on the off-side of the vehicle, and, in doing so, he struck a pedal cyclist who was passing. He failed to report the accident, and, on being charged under s. 22 (2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, with so failing, he contended that, as he had stopped the engine of the vehicle for a substantial time before the accident happened, he was not the "driver" within the meaning of the sub-section at the time of the accident.

HELD: for the purpose of s. 22 (2) the "driver" of a vehicle was the person who took it out on the road and he remained the driver until he finished his journey, and, therefore, the appellant was guilty of an offence under s. 22 (2).

FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 22 (2), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 24, p. 595.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Shears v. Matthews, [1948] 2 All E.R. 1064; 113 J.P. 36; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Watson v. Lowe, [1950] 1 All E.R. 100; 114 J.P. 85; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Carmarthen justices.

On Oct. 3, 1951, at a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Llanelly, the appellant was convicted on an information preferred by the respondent, an officer of police, charging the appellant for that, owing to the presence on a road of a motor car of which he was the driver, an accident occurred whereby injury was caused to one William Davies, and the appellant, not having given his name and address to any person requiring him so to do, unlawfully failed to report the accident at a police station or to a police constable, contrary to s. 22 (2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930. It was contended for the appellant, inter alia, that he was not a driver within the meaning of the section.

Scott Henderson, Q.C., and Skelhorn for the appellant.

Elson Rees for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices for the county of Carmarthen sitting at Llanelly, before whom the appellant was charged with an offence under s. 22 (2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, which provides:

"If in the case of [an accident owing to the presence of a motor vehicle on a road whereby damage or injury is caused] the driver of the motor vehicle for any reason does not give his name and address to any . . . person [having reasonable grounds for requiring them], he shall report the accident at a police station or to a police constable as soon as reasonably practicable, and in any case within twenty-four hours of the occurrence thereof."

The appellant had been driving his motor car along a road when he applied his brakes, stopped on his near-side, switched off his engine, and sat talking business with a passenger in the car for some ten minutes. He then opened the driver's door on the off-side of the car to get out, and, in doing so, he struck a pedal cyclist.

The present case is distinguishable from Shears v. Matthews (1), to which we have been referred, because all that was decided in that case was that the respondent had been summoned under the wrong part of s. 78 of the Highway Act, 1835. In the present case it is argued that if a man has stopped for something more than a mere moment the engine of a car which he has been driving he may be in charge of the vehicle, but in law he is not the driver. To give any such narrow meaning as that to the word "driver" would nullify the whole of s. 22. For the purposes of that section the "driver" is the person who takes out the vehicle, and he remains the driver until he finishes his journey. There was ample evidence here on which the justices could find that the appellant was the driver of the car—which, after all, is a question of fact—and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JONES, J.: I agree.

PARKER, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: A. J. A. Hanhart, agent for W. Davies & Jenkins, Llanelly (for the appellant); R. I. Lewis & Co., agents for Leslie Williams, Llanelly (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

BLANKLEY v. GODLEY AND ANOTHER.

[NOTTINGHAM ASSIZES (Byrne, J.), December 3, 4, 1951.]

Air Traffic—Damage caused by aircraft “taking off”—Aircraft about to “taxi” to “take off” position—Air Navigation Act, 1920 (c. 80), s. 9 (1).

ACTION for damages.

On June 12, 1949, the plaintiff's motor car was stationary on a runway of an airfield at Saltby, Lincolnshire, when it was struck and damaged by an Auster aircraft in motion on the ground which was piloted by the first defendant and owned by the second defendant, J. D. H. Radford. The plaintiff claimed £122 6s. 5d. in respect of the damage done to his car, alleging that the first defendant was negligent in his control of the aircraft and that the second defendant was liable under s. 9 (1) of the Air Navigation Act, 1920, which provides that “where material damage or loss is caused by an aircraft in flight, taking off, or landing . . . damages shall be recoverable from the owner of the aircraft in respect of such damage or loss, without proof of negligence or intention or other cause of action, as though the same had been caused by his wilful act, neglect or default, except where the damage or loss was caused by or contributed to by the negligence of the person by whom the same was suffered.” As against the second defendant, the plaintiff alleged that, at the time of the collision, the aircraft was taking off, and evidence was given that the accident occurred on a “cross-wind” runway while the pilot was about to turn his aircraft round to taxi back to the “duty runway” where he would commence his take-off run. A flying instructor gave evidence that “taxi-ing” started when the brakes of the aircraft were released until the pilot came to the “take-off” position and halted at an angle of 45° to the wind. He then did his “take-off drill” and turned into the wind when the “take-off” commenced.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Dunn v. Campbell, (1920), 4 Lloyd L.R. 36.
- (2) Cubitt & Terry v. Gower, (1933), 77 Sol. Jo. 732; Digest Supp.

H. G. Talbot for the plaintiff.Vaughan, K.C., and D. C. Thompson for the first defendant.A. J. Flint for the second defendant.

BYRNE, J., held that the plaintiff had not been negligent, that the first defendant was entirely to blame, and that the second defendant was not liable under s. 9 (1) of the Air Navigation Act, 1920, since the aircraft was not “taking-off” at the time of the accident.

Judgment accordingly.

EDITORIAL NOTE. In SHAWCROSS AND BEAUMONT ON AIR LAW, 2nd ed., p. 435, the following passage appears: “From the decision in the case of Dunn v. Campbell (4 Lloyd L.R. 36), it would seem that taking off commences when the pilot starts to taxi across the aerodrome towards the position from which the actual take-off is made, and is not restricted to the start of that run from that position (at which there is usually a halt)”. The present decision would seem to confine the definition of “taking off” to the period after the pilot has come to the take-off position.

The Air Navigation Act, 1920, has now been repealed by the Civil Aviation Act, 1949, s. 9 (1) of the Act of 1920, being reproduced in s. 40 (2) of the later Act.

Solicitors: Joynson-Hicks & Co., London (for the plaintiff); Ingram & Co., Leicester (for the first defendant); Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert, London (for the second defendant).

[Reported by D. C. THOMPSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BERTHELEMY v. NEALE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Jenkins and Hodson, L.JJ.), February 5, 1952.]

Landlord and Tenant—Shop—Renewal of tenancy—Occupation “wholly or mainly for purposes of retail trade or business”—Nine-tenths of products sold wholesale—Whole premises used from time to time for production for retail sale—Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951 (c. 38), s. 10 (1) (a), s. 20 (1).

The tenant applied under s. 10 (1) of the Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951, for the renewal of the lease of premises where he carried on a number of business activities. About ninety per cent. of the articles which he produced were sold direct to the trade and only about ten per cent. by retail, but work on articles sold by retail was done in any part of the premises,

HELD: the test whether premises were a “shop” within the meaning of the Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951, s. 20 (1), was to determine how much of the business done thereon was retail business and not how much of the space comprised in the premises was used from time to time in the production of articles for retail sale, and, therefore, the tenant’s premises were not occupied wholly or mainly for the purposes of a retail trade or business.

Per SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: The relative incomes gained by the different activities conducted on the premises is a most important (and, possibly, in some cases the most important) element for consideration, but it is not necessarily exhaustive.

FOR THE LEASEHOLD PROPERTY (TEMPORARY PROVISIONS) ACT, 1951, s. 10 (2) and s. 20, see HALSBURY’S STATUTES, Second Edn., Interim Service 1951, p. 137 and p. 147, respectively.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE DONE sitting at Clerkenwell County Court, dated Sept. 26, 1951, refusing to grant a new tenancy for shop premises under s. 10 (1) of the Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951.

M. Gore for the tenant.

S. N. Bernstein for the landlord.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: In his application, the tenant claimed the benefit of the Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951. He could claim that benefit only if he brought himself within s. 10 (2) of the Act which provides:

“This section applies to a tenancy the subject of which (a) consists of a shop . . .”

By s. 20 (1) of the Act

“‘Shop’ means premises occupied wholly for business purposes, and so occupied wholly or mainly for the purposes of a retail trade or business.”

It was necessary, therefore, for the tenant to show that the premises of which he was the tenant were a shop as so defined. The county court judge thought they were not, and, in my judgment, he was quite right in that opinion.

The tenant carried on a number of activities, some, I imagine, of a not unskilful character. They included glasswork—for example, re-silvering, smoothing, and scaling thermometer scales and cutting handbag mirrors. The products of those activities, as the judge found, were overwhelmingly sold by the applicant to trade customers. They were not sold retail. Indeed, the only articles sold by the tenant retail were some handbag mirrors. The judge found that, if regard was had to the turnover, the retail business amounted to a very small percentage of the total business done. Without closer examination of the actual language of the section, it would appear plain that the tenant’s occupation of the premises was mainly for business other than retail. The argument for the tenant, however, was that, properly construed, the words, "occupied wholly or mainly for the purposes of a retail trade or business", must be given effect to by considering the amount of space which was occupied for retail trade. It was said that, regarded, as counsel for the tenant said, "spacially", every square or cubic foot of the premises could be said to be occupied for retail trade, since any activity done in that cubic foot might result in a retail sale, or, put negatively, that it could not be said of any cubic foot that it was not occupied for retail trade.

I cannot accept the premise on which that argument rests. I observe that the definition which I have read starts by defining "shop" as meaning "premises occupied wholly for business purposes." It then goes on to restrict that first definition by the words "and so occupied wholly or mainly for the purposes of a retail trade or business." As a plain matter of English, I entertain no doubt in my mind that by the second half of that definition the question is posed: For what purposes are these premises being occupied? Are they being occupied wholly or mainly for the purposes of a retail trade? In other words, the three words "wholly or mainly" qualify those words which immediately precede and follow them. They refer to the purposes of the occupation. Counsel for the tenant said that s. 10 (2) (b), which contains similar language in regard to living accommodation, supports his argument. I think that the same considerations apply to s. 10 (2) (b) as apply to this definition.

Counsel for the tenant said that the judge appeared to have decided the question solely by reference to the income which these two activities produced, and that such a view results in absurdity. Consider, it was argued, the case of a tobacconist's retail shop which in some small corner contains a telephone. In addition to carrying on the tobacconist's trade the tenant of the shop profitably employs the telephone for the purpose of a commission agent's business, the profits of which are two or three times the profits gained from selling tobacco to the public. It was said that the conclusion of the judge, if applied to those facts, would produce the extravagant result that the shop would be held to be occupied for the purpose of a commission agent's business and not wholly or mainly for that of a retail trade or business. I do not think that any such conclusion follows from the judge's judgment. I think, if I have posed the question correctly and have correctly stated the test, the answer in any case is to be supplied by the tribunal of fact on common-sense lines. No doubt, the relative incomes gained by the different activities conducted on the premises is a most important (and, possibly, in some cases the most important) element for consideration, but it is not necessarily exhaustive.

In the present case I am satisfied on the facts as found that, if the test is applied, the inevitable answer is that the premises here in question were not occupied wholly or mainly for the purposes of a retail trade or business. The judge said:

"Can it be said that the premises are occupied 'wholly or mainly for the purposes of retail trade or business'? The advocate for the applicant says that the whole of the premises are employed for retail trade or business. The other reading of the definition is that the emphasis in the definition is not on how much of the premises is employed, but how much of the business is a retail business . . . I prefer the second construction."

So do I. I think that the judge's conclusion was correct and that the appeal fails.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree.

HODSON, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Rance & Co. (for the tenant); Stanley S. Levene (for the landlord).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re COUCHMAN'S WILL TRUSTS. COUCHMAN AND ANOTHER v. ECCLES AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), February 5, 1952.]

National Health Service—"Hospital"—"Institution for the reception and treatment of persons"—Clinic "... maintained in connection with any such institution"—Clinic maintained for treatment of out-patients—Not confined to ex-patients of any particular hospital—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 79 (1).

By his will, dated May 22, 1939, the testator, who died on Jan. 9, 1941, directed his trustees to pay the income of his residuary estate to his wife during her life and after her death he gave a legacy of £100 and a share of the residue to the Leominster Orthopaedic Clinic. The clinic was set up under a scheme formed by certain persons after the 1914-18 war to alleviate the suffering of soldiers and sailors who were invalided to their homes in Herefordshire after treatment in Oswestry and other hospitals and who required further medical treatment as out-patients. A committee, formed under the scheme, conducted the clinic, which was housed in a hut belonging to an orthopaedic hospital. A small annual sum was paid to the hospital for the use of the hut, patients connected with the hospital were treated at the clinic, and the services of nurses and surgeons were obtained from the hospital, but patients other than those connected with the hospital were treated at the clinic. After the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into operation on July 5, 1948, the Minister of Health approved a scheme under which the orthopaedic hospital was formed into a special hospital group and the clinic was treated as being included in that group. At their final meeting, the committee which had managed the clinic purported to dispose of the funds which they had in hand in connection with the clinic. The testator's wife died on June 8, 1949. On a summons by the trustees of the testator's will to determine the destination of the funds representing the gifts to the clinic under the will, the management committee of the hospital claimed to be entitled to them under s. 60 (1) (b) of the Act of 1946.

HELD: "reception", in the definition of "hospital" in s. 79 (1) of the Act of 1946, meant taking a person into a building and keeping him there, and did not refer to the treatment of an out-patient, and so the clinic was not an "institution for the reception and treatment of persons" within the meaning of the first part of the definition; as the clinic was maintained for the purpose of treating persons coming from any hospital, it was not a clinic "maintained in connection with" the orthopaedic hospital, or with any particular hospital, within the meaning of the second part of the definition; and, therefore, the clinic did not come within the definition of "hospital" in the sub-section and was not included in the terms of the Act of 1946, and the management committee of the hospital were not entitled, under s. 60 (1) (b), to the funds representing the gifts to the clinic under the testator's will.

FOR THE NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE ACT, 1946, s. 6 (1), s. 60 (1), and s. 79 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 15, pp. 339, 391, and 403.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS by the trustees of the will of Herbert Arthur Couchman to determine the destination of a legacy and share of residue given by the will to the Leominster Orthopaedic Clinic.

The clinic was founded after the war of 1914-18 for the after-care of disabled soldiers and sailors of the county of Hereford who had returned to their homes, but needed further medical treatment as out-patients. Under a scheme, approved by the Minister of Health after the National Health Service Act, 1946, had come into effect on July 5, 1948, the clinic was included in a hospital group containing the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt Orthopaedic Hospital. The management committee of that hospital claimed to be entitled, under s. 60 (1) (b) of the Act of 1946, to the funds representing the bequests to the clinic under the testator's will. The funds were also claimed by the Herefordshire branch of the British Red Cross Society.

J. A. Armstrong for the plaintiffs, the trustees.

Hesketh for the first defendant, a director of the Herefordshire branch of the British Red Cross Society.

F. E. Skone James for the second defendants, the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt Orthopaedic Hospital Management Committee.

Dennis B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

DANCKWERTS, J.: The testator made his will on May 22, 1939, and directed his trustees to pay the income of his residuary estate to his wife during her life. After the death of his wife, he gave a large number of legacies, including one of £100 to the Leominster Orthopaedic Clinic, and then he directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary estate on trust to divide the same in equal shares between four bodies, of whom the clinic was one. The residue thus left amounted to about £5,000, and, therefore, the amount with which I am concerned is the legacy of £100 and the sum of some £1,250. The testator died on Jan. 9, 1941, and his widow died on June 8, 1949, which was after the appointed day, i.e., July 5, 1948, when the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into operation for the present purposes.

The facts as regards the Leominster Orthopaedic Clinic are, briefly, as follows. After the war of 1914 to 1918 a certain number of persons, being disturbed at the suffering of soldiers and sailors who were invalided to their homes in the county of Hereford and in many cases required further medical treatment, founded the clinic for the after-care of patients in the county who had been treated at Oswestry and other hospitals, and a committee was set up to conduct the clinic. It is alleged that the clinic was, first, affiliated to the Herefordshire branch of the British Red Cross Society, but was taken over in 1927 and became a unit of that branch. However that may be, the committee which was formed carried on for many years work of the kind intended in a hut which belonged to the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt Orthopaedic Hospital, paying a small annual sum for the use of the hut and dealing with a substantial number of patients every year. When the National Health Service Act came into operation a scheme was prepared, and approved by the Minister of Health, under which the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt Orthopaedic Hospital was formed into a special hospital group and the Leominster Orthopaedic Clinic was treated as being included in that group. Thereafter, the committee held a final meeting and purported to dispose of the small amount of funds which they had in their hands.

The question now is how the legacy and share of residue bequeathed by the testator's will should be dealt with. The first defendant, Herbert Ballantyne Eccles, claims to be entitled to the funds representing the bequest as director for and on behalf of the Herefordshire branch of the British Red Cross Society. So far as that claim is concerned, I have come to the conclusion that the gift is not to the branch of the Red Cross Society. It is, in my view, a bequest for a charitable purpose which is described in the will as the "Leominster Orthopaedic Clinic." The next claim is by the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt Orthopaedic Hospital Management Committee who claim to be entitled by virtue of the provisions of the National Health Service Act, 1946, in particular, those of s. 60 (1) (b). It is, in effect, claimed by that body that either the clinic was a hospital for the purposes of the Act or that it was a clinic maintained in connection with the hospital which they now represent, and, therefore, included in the term "hospital" under the Act, and that the funds are payable to the present management committee.

Section 6 (1) of the Act provides:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, there shall, on the appointed day, be transferred to and vest in the Minister [of Health] by virtue of this Act all interests in or attaching to premises forming part of a voluntary hospital or used for the purposes of a voluntary hospital, and in equipment, furniture or other movable property used in or in connection with such premises, being interests held immediately before the appointed day by the governing body of the hospital or by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital . . ."

By s. 60 (1):

"Where property, other than property transferred to the Minister or to the board of governors of a teaching hospital or to a hospital management committee under s. 6 or s. 7 of this Act, is held on trust immediately before the appointed day, and the terms of the trust instrument authorise or require the trustees, whether immediately or in the future, to apply any part of the capital or income of the trust property for the purposes of any hospital to which s. 6 of this Act applies, the trust instrument shall be construed as authorising or, as the case may be, requiring the trustees to apply the trust property, to the like extent and at the like times, for the purpose of making payments, whether of capital or income . . . (b) in the case of [a hospital other than one designated as a teaching hospital or included in a group of hospitals so designated] to the regional hospital board for the area in which the hospital is situated or to the hospital management committee for the hospital or for the group of hospitals in which it is comprised."

It is claimed, therefore, that these funds pass as being held on trust for the purposes of the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt Orthopaedic Hospital, that being a hospital to which s. 6 applies. Section 79 (1) defines "hospital" as:

". . . any institution for the reception and treatment of persons suffering from illness or mental defectiveness, any maternity home, and any institution for the reception and treatment of persons during convalescence or persons requiring medical rehabilitation, and includes clinics, dispensaries and out-patient departments maintained in connection with any such institution or home as aforesaid, and 'hospital accommodation' shall be construed accordingly."

"Hospital accommodation" is mentioned in s. 3 (1), which provides that "hospital accommodation" is one of the services which are to be provided by the Minister of Health.

The first contention on behalf of the hospital management committee was that the clinic was a hospital within the meaning of the definition in s. 79 (1). Was it an "institution for the reception and treatment of persons suffering from illness"? I think that, presumably, "institution" means something which is set up. Possibly the clinic was something which was set up. Was it "for the reception and treatment of persons suffering from illness"? Plainly it was for the purposes of treatment of persons suffering from illness. But what about "reception"? It is said, on behalf of the management committee, that "reception" means merely that a person shall be received at a given point and there treated. On the other hand, it was argued that "reception" means taking people into a building and keeping them there, as is done in the ordinary sense of the word "hospital." On the whole I think the latter is the appropriate meaning to be applied to this definition. It is not satisfied merely by something like treatment at a dispensary or clinic or out-patients' department. It is to be observed that those outside activities are added to the definition of "hospital" under a later part of the definition in s. 79 (1). Accordingly, I conclude that this particular institution, if that be the correct term to apply to it, is not one "for the reception and treatment of persons suffering from illness."

It was then contended by counsel for the management committee that this is a clinic "maintained in connection with" the orthopaedic hospital. It appears to me that, though it dealt with patients connected with that hospital, though the services of nurses and surgeons were obtained from the hospital, and though the hut was the property of the hospital, it was not a clinic which was maintained in connection with the hospital. It was, in my opinion, maintained for the purpose of dealing with people who needed subsequent treatment, and it would have dealt with persons coming from any hospital—a hospital, perhaps, in another county—or with persons who were not connected with any hospital. The clinic was maintained to deal with persons in a particular way, but was not, as it seems to me, maintained in connection with any particular hospital. Accordingly, in my opinion, it does not come within the definition of "hospital" contained in s. 79 (1) of the Act. The conclusion, therefore, to which I come is that it is not included in the terms of the National Health Service Act, 1946.

The funds representing the bequest under the will of the testator are held on trust for a particular purpose denoted in the will and that purpose may still be carried out, though by a different body, i.e., it may be carried out by the management committee of the orthopaedic hospital. The bequest, however, is not a gift to that committee. The funds are subject to a charitable trust which will not fail even if the original purpose has come to an end by a disbandment of the committee which was formed to run the clinic. It seems to me, therefore, that there is a charitable trust which remains to be carried out by means of a scheme. Whether it is correct to call it a cy-près application, or simply a scheme for the carrying out of the original purpose, does not much matter in this case. It has been suggested by counsel for the Attorney-General that the appropriate scheme would be to direct payment of the funds to the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt Orthopaedic Hospital Management Committee on trust to apply those funds for the purpose of the Leominster Orthopaedic Clinic.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: May, May & Deacon, agents for Lloyd & Son, Leominster (for the plaintiffs); Edwin Coe & Calder Woods, agents for David Allen & Carver, Hereford (for the first defendant); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for T. H. Waterhouse, Edgbaston, Birmingham (for the second defendant); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LATIMER v. A.E.C., LTD.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Pilcher, J.), February 4, 5, 8, 1952.]

Factory—Floor—Maintenance—Floor slippery from flood water and oil—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 25 (1).Safe System of Work—Factory flooded in exceptional storm—Water mixed with oil—Floor rendered dangerously slippery—No want of care by occupiers—Accident through workman slipping—Liability of occupiers.

Owing to a downpour of rain of unprecedented character and through no want of reasonable care on the part of the occupiers a factory was flooded and oil from a cooling mixture pumped to machines through channels in the floor mixed with the water. As the water receded, the floor, which was level and structurally perfect, was left in a wet and oily and slippery state and could not be entirely cleared at once. In the course of his duty a workman slipped on a floor and was injured.

HELD: (i) the occupiers were not in breach of their duty to see that the floor was "properly maintained" under s. 25 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, since "maintained", as defined in s. 152 (1), meant maintained in good repair and not free from danger through slipperiness.

(ii) the occupiers had failed to provide a safe system of work in permitting the workman to work in the factory when they knew it to be in a potentially dangerous condition, although through no fault of theirs, and, therefore, they were liable to the workman at common law.

FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937, s. 25 (1), and s. 152 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 1017, 1116.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Smith v. Baker & Sons, [1891] A.C. 325; 60 L.J.Q.B. 683; 65 L.T. 467; 55 J.P. 660; 36 Digest 95, 633.
- (2) Paris v. Stepney Borough Council, [1951] 1 All E.R. 42.
- (3) Daborn v. Bath Tramways Motor Co., Ltd. & Trevor Smithey, [1946] 2 All E.R. 333; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION for damages for negligence and breach of statutory duty.

The plaintiff was a horizontal milling machine operator employed by the defendants at their factory at Southall. As a result of a localised and unprecedented heavy fall of rain on Aug. 31, 1951, with which neither the works drain nor the main sewer of the local authority into which it flowed was sufficient to cope, the defendants' factory was flooded. An oily liquid called "mystic" or "suds", which was pumped along channels covered with iron lids in the floor to machines for which it was used as a cooling agent, escaped and mixed with the flood water, leaving the floor slippery as the water receded. While working on the night shift the plaintiff went from the general machine room for about thirty yards along a gangway to fetch a new batch of components on which to work. The components required were stored in a metal barrel, and the plaintiff took a hand trolley, similar to those used by railway porters, to transport the barrel to the machine room. He lifted the handles of the trolley so that its forward metal lip rested on the floor and could be pushed under the base of the barrel, and then put his right foot against the trolley and pushed with his left foot to bring down the handles of the trolley so that he could wheel it. In doing so he slipped on the slippery floor and his ankle was crushed by the barrel which rolled off the trolley. The plaintiff contended that the defendants were guilty of a breach of the duties imposed on them by s. 25 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, to see that all floors and gangways were properly maintained and, by s. 26 (1), to provide a safe means of access to his place of work, and that they had failed in their common law duty to exercise reasonable care to make their factory safe for the plaintiff, in particular, in allowing him to work at the factory when it was in a potentially dangerous state. The defendants denied that they were in breach of their statutory duties or that they had been guilty of negligence, and they submitted that it was not desirable to have to stop all work at the factory because some not precisely ascertained portion of it might be in a dangerous condition without any fault on their part.

Jukes for the plaintiff.

Marven Everett for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult. A

Feb. 8. PILCHER, J., read a judgment in which he stated the facts, found as a fact that neither the defendants' failure to provide a surface water drainage system sufficient to cope with the rain which fell, nor the wet, oily and slippery condition of the gangway was due to any lack of reasonable care on their part, and continued: In this state of affairs three main submissions were advanced on behalf of the plaintiff. It was contended, in the first place, that the defendants were guilty of a breach of the absolute duty imposed on them by s. 25 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, which provides:

"All floors, steps, stairs, passages and gangways shall be of sound construction and properly maintained."

It was submitted that the passage or gangway in which the plaintiff sustained his accident was not properly maintained in that it was slippery, and, therefore, dangerous. I am satisfied that this argument cannot succeed. The marginal note to s. 25 is: "Construction and maintenance of floors, passages and stairs." The words "construction" and "maintenance" are in apposition, and I am satisfied that in its context the natural meaning of the word "maintained" is "maintained in a good state of repair." It is not suggested that the floor on which the plaintiff slipped was in any way uneven or out of repair. It is, moreover, to be observed that the definition of the word "maintained" in s. 152 (1) of the Act is as follows:

" 'Maintained' means maintained in an efficient state, in efficient working order, and in good repair."

While the words "in an efficient state" and "in efficient working order" are more appropriate to machines than to floors, I am satisfied that the floor of the gangway in question, which was level and structurally perfect, had been properly "maintained" within the meaning of this word in s. 25 (1), although at the material time its surface was wet and oily.

The second point taken on behalf of the plaintiff was that the defendants were in breach of s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, in that they had not, so far as was reasonably practicable, provided and maintained a safe means of access to the place at which the plaintiff had to work. This point was not argued with any real enthusiasm by counsel for the plaintiff for the very good reason that, on the facts, it was reasonably clear that the plaintiff was actually doing his allotted work at the place where he sustained the accident and that no question arose on the safety or otherwise of the means of access to his work.

The third point taken on behalf of the plaintiff was more formidable, namely, that the defendants had failed in their common law duty to exercise reasonable care to make their factory safe for the plaintiff who was their servant. As I have already said, I am satisfied on the facts that the concrete surface of the floor on which the plaintiff slipped became wet and oily through no fault of the defendants, that the defendants could not, by the exercise of reasonable care, have dried and cleaned the oil off all the working floor space, and that they had no particular reason to select the area of floor on which the plaintiff slipped for special attention. Both the defendants' responsible officers and the plaintiff knew that such portions of the floor of these extensive premises as had not been cleaned off with sawdust were, in varying degrees, wet, oily and slippery, and thus potentially dangerous to men working on them.

While counsel for the plaintiff did not accept the position that the defendants had exercised all reasonable care in the respects which I have mentioned, he submitted that, even on the facts as I have found them, the defendants could not escape liability to the plaintiff inasmuch as they had permitted him to work in premises which they knew to be potentially dangerous. He contended, with some force, that in such a state of affairs the defendants should, immediately it became apparent to them that the premises were potentially dangerous and could not be rendered safe for some time, have sent the night shift, including the plaintiff, home, allowing only such men to enter the premises as were prepared to volunteer to carry on with cleaning up. He submitted that, if this had been done, the volunteers would have been not only "scientes" but also "volentes" in regard to any danger which might exist, and, if any of them had sustained an accident due to the dangerous condition of the premises, the defence of volenti non fit injuria would have been open to the defendants. He further submitted—and I have no doubt the submission was correct—that the plaintiff, while undoubtedly "sciens," cannot, in the circumstances of the case and having regard to the relationship of master and servant which existed between himself and the defendants, be regarded as having been "volens" when he incurred the risk which led to his accident. In support of his argument counsel submitted that the situation which faced the defendants on the evening in question was no different from that which faces any employer who permits his servant to use a machine which is, to his knowledge, potentially dangerous owing to a defect which no care and skill on his part can remedy until, let it be supposed, a spare part not immediately available is procured and fitted. In such a case it is clear that the employer will be liable if he causes or permits the servant to use the machine and the servant is injured by an accident due to its known defective condition. It is difficult to see why the same situation should not obtain in regard to employers' premises if they are in a dangerous condition. As soon as the employer is made aware that his premises are potentially dangerous and that the dangerous condition cannot be immediately remedied by care and skill on his part, a proper regard for the safety of servants who would normally work in such dangerous premises would seem to require that some action should be taken by him. If the only course open to the employer consistent with due regard to his servants' safety is to shut his premises, then I am satisfied that he is not entitled to escape liability for a servant who is injured by the dangerous condition of the premises by saying: "These premises were rendered dangerous through no fault of mine. I knew they were dangerous, but at the time you were injured the danger could not have been removed by any care and skill on my part." While knowledge by the injured party that the premises are dangerous, or a warning of unusual danger, will serve to defeat a claim by an invitee against the occupier of premises, it has been well established since Smith v. Baker & Sons (1) that such considerations do not avail an employer against his own servant.

It was submitted by counsel for the defendants that each case must be considered on its own facts. While he did not, of course, dispute the proposition that an employer who causes or permits his servant to use a defective and potentially dangerous machine cannot escape liability by showing that no care or skill on his part could have remedied the dangerous condition of the machine, he submitted that, with regard to premises rendered potentially dangerous, the matter was one of degree and that the common law must be made to accord with common sense. In effect, he contended that the defendants' factory was not very dangerous, and he pointed to the fact that no one but the plaintiff sustained any injury. He also stressed the general undesirability of having to stop all work in a large factory merely because some portion of it, not precisely ascertained, might be in a somewhat dangerous condition without any fault on the employers' part. In support of his argument he quoted a passage from the speech of LORD NORMAND in the recent and well-known case of Paris v.

Stepney Borough Council (2) ([1951] 1 All E.R. 42). That was a case in which the appellant was employed as a fitter in the garage of the respondent borough council. To the knowledge of the respondents he had the use of only one eye. While he was using a hammer to remove a bolt on a vehicle, a chip of metal flew off and entered his good eye, so injuring it that he became totally blind. The respondents did not provide goggles for the appellant to wear, and there was evidence that it was not the ordinary practice for employers to supply goggles to men employed in garages on the maintenance and repair of vehicles. The House of Lords had to consider whether an employer was or was not responsible for taking special precautions in the case of a man who incurred no special risk of accident, but who, if an accident did occur, incurred a special risk of injury. The passage in LORD NORMAND's speech to which counsel for the defendants called attention is as follows (ibid., 49):

"The court's task of deciding what precautions a reasonable and prudent man would take in the circumstances of a particular case may not be easy. Nevertheless, the judgment of the reasonable and prudent man should be allowed its common everyday scope, and it should not be restrained from considering the foreseeable consequences of an accident and their seriousness for the person to whom the duty of care is owed. Such a restriction, if it might sometimes simplify the task of the judge or jury, would be an undue and artificial simplification of the problem to be solved. If the courts were now to take the narrow view proposed by the respondents the cleavage between the legal conception of the precautions which a reasonable and prudent man would take and the precautions which reasonable and prudent men do in fact take would lessen the respect which the administration of justice ought to command. To guard against possible misunderstanding it may be well to add here that the seriousness of the injury or damage risked and the likelihood of its being in fact caused may not be the only relevant factors. For example, ASQUITH, L.J., in Daborn v. Bath Tramways Motor Co., Ltd. & Trevor Smithey (3), pointed out that it is sometimes necessary to take account of the consequence of not assuming a risk."

On this passage in LORD NORMAND's speech counsel for the defendants argued that it would, in all the circumstances, have been unreasonable to expect the defendants to suspend all operations in their factory merely because some portion of the working floor space was rendered temporarily and inevitably dangerous. While I have some sympathy with the defendants I am not satisfied that counsel's argument is sound. Nor do I think that it derives any real support from the passage I have quoted from LORD NORMAND's speech. The plaintiff in the present case was not a man to whom, owing to his physical condition, the defendants owed any special duty of care. I have only to consider whether I am satisfied that the defendants acted with due regard to the safety of the plaintiff when they permitted him to work in premises which they knew to be potentially dangerous through no fault of their own. I am not so satisfied, and I think that in all the circumstances of the case the defendants, in permitting the plaintiff to do his ordinary work in a part of the factory where the floor was slippery, and, therefore, dangerous, took the risk that he might sustain an injury and are thus liable for the injury which the plaintiff in fact sustained owing to the dangerous condition of the premises. No doubt, they were faced with a difficult situation, and I do not shrink from the conclusion that the defendants' duty in the particular circumstances, if they desired to escape liability for accidents due to the slippery condition of the floor, may have been to send away all men who were not prepared to volunteer for cleaning work—and when I use the word "volunteer", I mean volunteer on such terms as would enable the defendants to rely, in the case of accident, on the defence of volenti non fit injuria. I, therefore, conclude that the defendants are liable to the plaintiff in respect of the accident which occurred and the consequent injuries which he sustained.

HIS LORDSHIP assessed the damages, including special damage, at £550 and gave judgment for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: Rowley, Ashworth & Co. (for the plaintiff); Carpenters (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

SIMPSON v. PEAT.

B

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Jones, Byrne, Parker and McNair, JJ.), February 1, 12, 1952.]

Street Traffic—Careless driving—Error of judgment—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 12 (1).

C

While driving a motor car at a reasonable speed along a road a driver turning into a side turning on his right collided with a motor cycle coming in the opposite direction. On a charge preferred against him under s. 12 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, of having driven the car on a road without due care and attention, the justices held that, as what he had done was the result of an error of judgment, he could not in law be guilty of having driven without due care and attention, and they dismissed the information.

D

HELD: if the driver was not exercising that degree of care and attention which a reasonably prudent driver would have exercised in the circumstances, he was guilty of the offence charged irrespective of whether or not he was committing an error of judgment, and the justices ought to have convicted.

R. v. Howell (1938) (160 L.T. 16), explained.

FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 12 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 24, p. 588.

E

Cases referred to:

(1) R. v. Howell, (1938), 160 L.T. 16; 103 J.P. 9; Digest Supp.

(2) Tidy v. Battman, [1934] 1 K.B. 319; 103 L.J.K.B. 158; 150 L.T. 90; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Essex justices.

F

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Stansted on Aug. 11, 1951, an information was preferred by the appellant, a superintendent of the Essex constabulary, charging the respondent with having on July 9, 1951, driven a motor car on a road at Stansted without due care and attention contrary to s. 12 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930. The justices were of opinion that the respondent should be convicted, but held that, as what he had done had been to commit an error of judgment, he could not in law be guilty of having driven a motor vehicle without due care and attention and they dismissed the information. The appellant appealed.

G

Milton for the appellant.

Southall for the respondent.

H

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 12. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is a Special Case stated by justices of the county of Essex before whom the respondent was charged with having driven a motor car on a road without due care and attention, contrary to s. 12 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930. The facts found by the magistrates show that the respondent was driving at a reasonable speed on the Cambridge Road at Stansted in the direction of Cambridge and was approaching a side turning to his right called Chapel Hill. At the same time a motor cyclist was driving in the opposite direction, also at a reasonable speed, and was approaching Chapel Hill, which was, of course, on his near side. The justices then find that, as the two vehicles approached, the respondent drove his vehicle to the right with the intention of entering Chapel Hill, thus crossing the path of the oncoming motor cyclist with the result that a collision took place. Having heard the evidence and arguments, the justices were of opinion that the respondent should be convicted, which can only mean that they were then satisfied that he was driving without due care and attention. In announcing their decision and in the course of passing sentence the chairman expressed the opinion of the bench that the respondent had committed an error of judgment in thinking that he had left room for the motor bicycle to get through when, in fact, he had not done so. Thereupon it was contended on behalf of the respondent that, as the bench found he had committed an error of judgment, he could not in law be guilty of the offence charged, and there was cited in support of this contention a passage in STONE'S JUSTICES' MANUAL, 83rd ed., p. 2062, which refers to R. v. Howell (1). The magistrates further considered the case and state their final decision in these words:

"(i) That the respondent had committed an error of judgment in driving in the manner set out in para. 4c of this Case; (ii) and that, as what the respondent had done was to commit an error of judgment, he could not in law be guilty of the offence of driving a motor car without due care and attention, and we accordingly held that the respondent was not guilty of the offence charged in the information and we dismissed the same."

If the true effect of Howell's case (1) is what the justices thought it was, and it is only fair to them to say that they did not see the full report, it is obvious that this case raises a question of great importance and would be cited constantly when charges of this nature were preferred. Accordingly, it was thought right, when it first came to be heard, to have it re-argued before a full court of five judges. Howell's case (1) is twice referred to in STONE'S JUSTICES' MANUAL, 83rd ed., vol. 2, each time in relation to the offence of dangerous driving, contrary to s. 11 (1) of the Act. At p. 2062, note (i), it is stated as authority for the proposition that:

"If the driving, although dangerous in its consequences, was due to a 'mere' error of judgment, the defendant is entitled to be acquitted."

At p. 2160, note (k), the quotation is:

"He is entitled to be acquitted if the dangerous driving was a 'mere' error of judgment."

The former is, perhaps, the more accurate citation of the two, but when the case is properly understood it will be seen that it laid down no principle of law, but turned entirely on what the Court of Criminal Appeal thought a jury had meant to find by their verdict. It was a case where manslaughter was charged, and, as is well known, on such a charge a jury can convict also of the offence of dangerous driving created by s. 11 (1). The jury acquitted of manslaughter and from the discussion that then took place between the foreman and the learned judge the Court of Criminal Appeal thought that what the jury meant by using the expression "mere error of judgment" was that, though a dangerous situation had, in fact, arisen, they were not prepared to hold that this was due to dangerous driving by the defendant, and, accordingly, they quashed the conviction. It is by no means impossible, and, indeed, it must on occasions happen, that a situation of danger arises in which a motorist is involved, but it cannot be said that he caused it by driving dangerously. That is what the court thought the jury meant. They were certainly not laying down that an error of judgment could not amount to carelessness.

The expression "error of judgment" is not a term of art. It is, in fact, one of the vaguest possible description. It can, colloquially, be used to describe either a negligent act or one which, though mistaken, is not negligent. When one is considering s. 12, the marginal note of which is "careless driving", it is, in our opinion, clear that a driver may not be using due care and attention although his lack of care may be due to something which could be described as an error of judgment. If he is driving without due care and attention it is immaterial what caused him to do so. The question for the justices is: Was the defendant exercising that degree of care and attention that a reasonable and prudent driver would exercise in the circumstances? If he was not, they should convict. If, on the other hand, the circumstances show that his conduct was not inconsistent with that of a reasonably prudent driver, the case has not been proved. The justices here thought that Howell's case (1) obliged them as a matter of law to dismiss the summons, but the question whether a man is driving carelessly, to use a compendious expression, raises only a question of fact.

It has often been pointed out that it is unfortunate that questions which are questions of fact alone should be confused by importing into them as principles of law a course of reasoning which has, no doubt, properly been applied in deciding other cases on other sets of facts: see, for instance, Tidy v. Battman (2), and for this purpose there can be no distinction between civil and criminal matters. We think it would be better if reference to Howell's case (1) were omitted from the books, not because we dissent from the decision, but because the case laid down no principle of law and should not be regarded as doing so. It is, in our opinion, undesirable to complicate these cases, which raise only simple questions of fact, by such loose and vague expressions as "error of judgment". Whether the charge is under s. 11 (1) or s. 12 (1), the offence can be committed although no accident takes place. Equally, because an accident does occur it does not follow that a particular person has driven either dangerously or without due care and attention. But if he has, it matters not why he did so. Suppose a driver is confronted with a sudden emergency through no fault of his own. In an endeavour to avert a collision he swerves to his right—it is shown that had he swerved to the left the accident would not have happened. That is being wise after the event, and, if the driver was, in fact, exercising the degree of care and attention which a reasonably prudent driver would exercise, he ought not to be convicted, even though another, and, perhaps, more highly skilled, driver would have acted differently.

Here, on the facts stated, the court is of opinion that the magistrates' first decision was clearly right. The defendant was turning to his off side in a main road cutting across the line of traffic coming from the opposite direction. It was not found that the motor cyclist was driving too fast or that the respondent was confronted with a sudden emergency. It is not even found that he gave a signal, but in any case it was for him to take care that he could execute the manoeuvre in safety. To use the words of the justices in their finding he thought he had left room for traffic coming in the opposite direction to get through when in fact he had not done so. In those circumstances there was no reason in law why he should not have been convicted and the case must go back to the justices with a direction to convict.

Appeal allowed.

